Mr. BYRNE of New York, Mr. RABAUT, Mr. COLE of Missouri, Mr. SMITH of Ohio, Mr. CUNNINGHAM, and Mr. LAFOLLETTE changed their votes from "yea" to "nay."

Mr. GORDON changed his vote from "nay" to "yea."

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The doors were opened.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

FURTHER MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A further message from the Senate by Mr. Koerber, its assistant enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had passed, with amendments in which the concurrence of the House is requested, a bill of the House of the following title:

H. R. 7037. An act to amend the Social Security Act and the Internal Revenue Code, and for other purposes.

CALENDAR WEDNESDAY

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that business in order on Calendar Wednesday of this week be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Speaker, I move that business in order on Calendar Wednesday of this week be dispensed with.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. MARCANTONIO) there were—ayes 150, noes 41.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present and make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Two hundred and twenty-five Members are present, a quorum.

So (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the motion was agreed to.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. CASE of South Dakota (at the request of Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts) was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an address by Governor Sharpe, of South Dakota.

Mrs. LUCE (at the request of Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts) was given permission to extend her remarks in the RECORD in three instances and include excerpts in each.

VETERANS' PENSION, COMPENSATION, OR RETIREMENT PAY DURING HOSPITALIZATION

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's desk the bill (H. R. 6811) relating to veterans' pension, compensation, or retirement pay during hospitalization, institutional or domiciliary care, and for other purposes, with Senate amendments thereto, and concur in the Senate amendments.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendments, as follows:

Page 2, line 19, after "termination", insert "or, in the event of his prior death, as provided in paragraph (2) hereof."

Page 4, lines 14 and 15, strike out "deemed by the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs to be insane" and insert "rated by the Veterans' Administration in accordance with regulations as being incompetent by reason of mental illness."

"(F) Notwithstanding any other provision of this section or any other provision of law, no reduction shall be made in the pension, compensation, or retirement pay of any veteran for any part of the period during which he is furnished hospital treatment, or institutional or domiciliary care, for Hansen's disease, by the United States or any political subdivision thereof."

Page 6, line 10, strike out "(F)" and insert "(G)."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman explain the Senate amendment?

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, in answer to the inquiry of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN], I desire to say that these amendments are largely clarifying. We took them up before the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation yesterday morning, and we decided that they improved the bill, and the committee instructed me to move to concur in them.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I yield to the gentlewoman from Massachusetts.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. There is also a humane amendment, because it provides care for those who contracted leprosy.

Mr. RANKIN. Yes. That is what they call Hansen's disease in the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendments were concurred in.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

FEDERAL PARTICIPATION IN THE COST OF PROTECTING THE SHORES OF PUBLICLY OWNED PROPERTY

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 2033) authorizing Federal participation in the cost of protecting the shores of publicly owned property, with Senate amendments thereto, and concur in the Senate amendments.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendments, as follows:

Page 1, line 12, after "cost:", insert "Provided further, That where a political subdivision has heretofore erected a sea wall to prevent erosion, by waves and currents, to a public highway considered by the Chief of Engineers sufficiently important to justify protection, Federal contribution toward the repair of such wall and the protection thereof by the building of an artificial beach is authorized at not to exceed one-third of the original cost of such wall, and that investigations and studies hereinafter provided for are hereby authorized for such localities."

Page 2, line 17, after "specifications", insert " : Provided, That the construction of improvement and protective works may be undertaken by the Chief of Engineers upon the request of, and contribution of required funds by, the interested State, municipality or other political subdivision."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

Mr. DONDERO. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I simply want to ask the gentleman from Mississippi to explain the amendment regarding the sea wall.

Mr. RANKIN. I will yield to my distinguished colleague from Mississippi [Mr. COLMER] for that purpose.

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Speaker, in answer to the inquiry of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DONDERO] this amendment simply provides that where there are already existing sea walls the Federal Government may, if the Chief of the Army Engineers thinks it is necessary to do so, provide for that work to be done by the Army engineers, the Federal Government making a one-third contribution, the same as in connection with other provisions of the bill.

Mr. DONDERO. There is no objection, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendments were concurred in.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

APPOINTMENT OF ADDITIONAL COMMISSIONED OFFICERS IN THE REGULAR ARMY

Mr. THOMASON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 6817) to provide for the appointment of additional commissioned officers in the Regular Army, and for other purposes, with a Senate amendment thereto, and concur in the Senate amendment.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendment, as follows:

Strike out lines 11 to 14, inclusive.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman explain the amendment?

Mr. THOMASON. Mr. Speaker, this is the bill which was called up earlier in the day and which I explained to the minority leader and likewise the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ARENDS]. It strikes from the House bill the number of air officers, which was fixed in the bill. In other words, this releases it from any binding obligation to name so many officers in the Air Corps, and leaves it all to the discretion of the War Department.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. It is a unanimous report of the committee?

Mr. THOMASON. Yes; the House committee is unanimously in accord with that amendment.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I withdraw my reservation of objection, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendment was concurred in.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

AMENDMENT OF FIRST WAR POWERS ACT, 1941

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 6890) to amend the First War Powers Act, 1941, with Senate amendments thereto, and concur in the Senate amendments.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendments, as follows:

Page 10, lines 15 and 16, strike out "or for just compensation in respect thereof."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. MICHENER. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman tell us briefly the effect of the Senate amendments?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, the Senate amendment on page 2 simply inserts the words "suit or" so that it will read "pending a suit or claim." I must confess I cannot appreciate the necessity for that language, but the Senate seemed to consider it of sufficient importance to include it. The administrative agencies find no objection to it, and I cannot see any. I believe my colleague has the same attitude toward it.

On page 4 there is a similar amendment in line 24. The words "suit or" are added.

In line 25, the words "or for just compensation" are stricken out. In other words, that will not be sought under the provisions of this bill, but, of course, the gentleman appreciates there are other provisions of the law under which just compensation can be sought. A similar amendment is provided on page 10. This language was stricken by the Senate and the purpose of the last amendment is the same as the previous one.

Mr. MICHENER. This bill is the one in which the Alien Property Custodian is primarily interested and it is agreed to by all of the departments of government?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. That is correct.

Mr. MICHENER. It was explained on the floor within the last couple of days.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I thank my colleague for his observations.

Mr. MICHENER. The Senate has made these changes which may seem minor. But the Alien Property Custodian and his counsel, the very able Mr. Berger, have surveyed the whole situation. While they would prefer to have the amendments eliminated, they know that there will be no bill without the amendments. Therefore, they are in favor of the bill with the amendments.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. That is correct.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent at this point to include a copy of a letter addressed to the chairman of the committee, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SUMNERS], by the Alien Property Custodian, concerning these particular amendments.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I thank my colleague. I was just going to make the same request.

(The letter referred to is as follows:)

JULY 30, 1946.

Hon. HATTON W. SUMNERS,
Chairman, Committee on the Judiciary,
House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. SUMNERS: You have requested a statement of my views as to the effect of the Senate amendments to H. R. 6890 upon the administration of this office.

I am able to advise you that, in my opinion, the bill, if finally passed with the Senate amendments, will be workable. In view of the shortness of time before the end of the session and other circumstances, I recommend that the House concur in the Senate amendments without asking for a conference, in order to insure final passage of the legislation at this time.

The amendments, with my specific comments, are as follows:

1. On page 2, line 13, insert after the article "a" the words "suit or."

Comment: I am not sure that I appreciate the purpose of this amendment and I think it tends to create confusion but it is not of sufficient importance to warrant making an issue. I would greatly appreciate, however, your making a statement on the floor to the following effect:

(a) that this amendment is not to be regarded as implying that there is judicial review under section 32; and

(b) that this amendment is not intended to interfere with or alter the doctrine of res judicata as applied to suits under section 9 (a).

2. On page 4, line 24, insert after the article "a" the words "suit or."

Comment: This is an entirely harmless amendment.

3. On page 4, line 25, strike out the words "or for just compensation."

Comment: This is, in my opinion, a justifiable amendment in view of the deletion from the bill of section 33 which expressly provided for suits for just compensation. While I do not contest the amendment, it must be recognized that the courts may still hold in pending litigation that an implied remedy of just compensation exists, although (in the absence of section 33) this would be under the Tucker Act rather than under the Trading with the Enemy Act.

4. On page 10, lines 15–16, strike out the words "or for just compensation in respect thereof."

Comment: My comment on this is the same as my comment on the last preceding amendment.

Sincerely yours,

JAMES E. MARKHAM,
Alien Property Custodian.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendments were concurred in.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PERNICIOUS POLITICAL ACTIVITIES

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's desk the bill H. R. 1497, an act to amend subsection 9 (a) of the act entitled "An act to prevent pernicious political activities," approved August 2, 1939, as amended, with a Senate amendment thereto, and concur in the Senate amendment.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendment, as follows:

Strike out line 10.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman from Alabama make a brief explanation of this bill and the amendment?

Mr. HOBBS. I would be delighted to do so, sir. This bill amends the Hatch Act, but relates only to the Territory of Alaska. The Senate amendment was simply to strike out other Government employees and limit its application to the employees of the Alaska Railroad, which, of course, is owned by the Government. It would give them the right to assume political office or run for political office in Alaska, and to engage in political activities with reference thereto. It exempts them from the Hatch Act.

Mr. SPRINGER. As I understand, the original bill embraced both the employees of the Alaska Railroad and some other civilian employees there, all of whom are Government employees.

Mr. HOBBS. That is right, sir.

Mr. SPRINGER. This amendment merely limits it to the railroad employees?

Mr. HOBBS. That is right, sir. The distinguished gentleman from Indiana is a most faithful and able member of the subcommittee and, of course, of the full committee on the Judiciary, and is thoroughly familiar with the bill.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

The Senate amendment was concurred in.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the distinguished Delegate from Alaska [Mr. BARTLETT] may extend his remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, enactment of H. R. 1497 will make it possible for employees of the Alaska Railroad to participate in the normal American manner in the activities of their communities. They will be allowed to join in everything having to do with the government of those communities along the Alaska Railroad. Heretofore, the exercising of such citizenship rights has been denied them by section 9 (a) of the so-called Hatch Act.

In many places, especially Anchorage, Alaska Railroad employees constitute a sizable percentage of the permanent residents. They are not transient in any sense of the word. They are there to stay. They are home owners, and they pay taxes, but since 1939 they have had no effective voice in the management of municipal government. That was wrong.

I am delighted to be able to report that H. R. 1497 has passed both the House and the Senate and will, I hope, be signed into law soon by the President. In its original form this bill was more inclusive, since it provided that all Federal employees living along the Alaska Railroad would be exempted from the provision of the Hatch Act referred to above. The bill as originally written passed the House without amendment, but in the Senate it was amended so that it was restricted to employees of the Alaska Railroad. Naturally, I should have much preferred that the amendment had not been adopted because municipal elections in Alaska are nonpartisan in every sense of the word, and I am convinced that the Hatch Act should not apply to them at all. However, on the theory that half a loaf is better than none at all, I hail passage of this bill as a forward step. I know its enactment will be highly pleasing to the almost 2,000 people who work for the Alaska Railroad and who now may take a fuller and more complete part in managing the affairs of the Alaska communities concerned.

STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's desk the bill H. R. 2788, an act to limit the time during which certain actions under the laws of the United States may be brought, with a Senate amendment thereto, and concur in the Senate amendment.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendment, as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

"That (a) section 16 (b) of the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938, as amended (U. S. C., 1940 edition, title 29, sec. 216 (b)), is amended by inserting at the end thereof a new sentence reading as follows: 'No action may be maintained under this subsection in any court unless such action is commenced within 3 years after the cause of action accrued, except that if at any time during such 3 years proper process may not be served on the person liable by reason of his absence from the United States, the period of such absence shall be disregarded in computing such 3-year period.'

"(b) In the case of a cause of action under section 16 (b) of the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938, as amended, which accrued 18 months or more prior to the date of the enactment of this act, and which on such date of enactment was not barred by any applicable statute of limitations, may, notwithstanding the amendment made by subsection (a) of this section, be maintained under such section 16 (b) if commenced within 6 months after such date of enactment, except that if at any time within the period of limitation under this subsection proper process may not be served on the person liable by reason of his absence from the United States, the period of such absence shall be disregarded in computing such period of limitation.

"(c) No liability for unpaid overtime compensation under section 16 (b) of the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938, as amended, accrued prior to the date of the enactment of this act, shall be predicated in any case where it shall appear by a preponderance of the evidence that the employer in good faith regarded the employees as employees with respect to whom the Interstate Commerce Commission has power to establish qualifications and maximum hours of service pursuant to the provisions of section 204 of the Motor Carrier Act, 1935.

"(d) Section 16 of the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938, as amended (U. S. C. 1940 edition, title 29, sec. 216), is amended by inserting at the end thereof a new subsection reading as follows:

"'(c) No liability under subsection (b) shall be predicated in any case on any act done or omitted in good faith in accord with any regulation, order, or administrative interpretation or practice, notwithstanding that such regulation, order, interpretation, or practice may, after such act or omission, be amended, rescinded, or be determined by judicial authority to be invalid or of no legal effect.'

"SEC. 2. (a) Section 2 of the act of June 30, 1936, as amended, known as the Walsh-Healey Public Contracts Act (U. S. C., 1940 edition, title 41, sec. 36), is amended by inserting '(a)' after 'section 2.' and by inserting at the end of thereof a new sentence reading as follows: 'No action to recover any sum representing the amount of any deductions, rebates, refunds, or underpayment of wages or overtime compensation alleged to be due to any employee engaged in the performance of any contract to which this act is applicable may be maintained under this section in any court unless such action is commenced within 3 years after the cause of action accrued, except that if at any time during such 3-year period proper process may not be served on the person liable by reason of his absence from the United States, the period of such absence shall be disregarded in computing such 3-year period.'

"(b) In the case of a cause of action under section 2 of the act of June 30, 1936, as amended, known as the Walsh-Healey Public Contracts Act, to recover any sum representing the amount of any deductions, rebates, refunds, or underpayment of wages or overtime compensation alleged to be due to any employee engaged in the performance of any contract to which such act is applicable, which cause of action accrued 18 months or more prior to the date of the enactment of this act, and which on such date of enactment was not barred by any applicable statute of limitations, may, notwithstanding the amendment made by subsection (a) of this section, be maintained under such section 2 if commenced within 6 months after such date of enactment, except that if at any time within the period of limitation under this subsection proper process may not be served on the person liable by reason of his absence from the United States, the period of such absence shall be disregarded in computing such period of limitation.

"(c) Section 2 of such act of June 30, 1936, as amended, is further amended by inserting at the end thereof the following:

"'(b) No liability under this section shall be predicted in any case on any act done or omitted in good faith in accord with any regulation, order, or administrative interpretation or practice, notwithstanding that such regulation, order, interpretation, or practice may, after such act or omission, be amended, rescinded, or be determined by judicial authority to be invalid or of no legal effect.'"

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

Mr. BIEMILLER, Mr. MARCANTONIO, and Mr. GREEN objected.

The SPEAKER. Objection is heard.

RATES OF DIVIDENDS PAID BY FEDERAL SAVINGS AND LOAN INSURANCE CORPORATION

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 4423, an act to adjust the rate of dividends paid by the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation on its capital stock and to decrease the premium charge for its insurance, with Senate amendments, and agree to the Senate amendments.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendments as follows:

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Kentucky explain the effect of the Senate amendments?

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, this bill reduces the premiums paid by the savings and loan associations to the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation from one-eighth to one-twelfth of 1 percent, making it correspond with the premiums paid by the banks to the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation.

The bill was unanimously reported by the Committee on Banking and Currency. It was passed by the House under unanimous consent and went to the Senate. It was unanimously reported by the committee in the Senate and passed the Senate by unanimous consent. The only amendment is a change in the effective date, which makes the date June 30, 1946, instead of June 30, 1945, which is an entirely proper amendment because of the delay in the passage of the bill.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. That is the only change?

Mr. SPENCE. That is the only change.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendments were agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

HEALTH PROGRAMS FOR GOVERNMENT EMPLOYEES

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 2716, an act to provide for health programs for Government employees, with a Senate amendment, and concur in the Senate amendment.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendment as follows:

Strike out all after enacting clause and to insert:

"That, for the purpose of promoting and maintaining the physical and mental fitness of employees of the Federal Government, the heads of departments and agencies, including Government-owned and controlled corporations are authorized, within the limits of appropriations made available therefor, to establish by contract or otherwise, health service programs which will provide health service for employees under their respective jurisdictions: Provided, That such health service programs shall be established only after consultation with the Public Health Service and consideration of its recommendations, and only in localities where there are a sufficient number of Federal employees to warrant the provision of such services, and shall be limited to (1) treatments of on-the-job illness and dental conditions requiring emergency attention; (2) preemployment and other examinations; (3) referral of employees to private physicians and dentists; and (4) preventive programs relating to health: Provided further, That the health program now being conducted by the Tennessee Valley Authority and by the Panama Canal and Panama Railroad Company shall not be affected by the provisions of this act: And provided further, That such health programs as are now being conducted for other Federal employees may be continued until June 30, 1947. The Public Health Service, when requested to do so, shall review the health service programs being conducted by any department or agency under authority of this act and shall submit appropriate comment and recommendations. Wherever the professional services of physicians are authorized to be utilized under this act, the definition of "physician" contained in the act of September 7, 1916, as amended (U. S. C., 1940 edition, title 5, sec. 790), shall be applicable."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. RANDOLPH]?

Mr. REES of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman briefly explain this bill?

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, this legislation, as amended in the Senate, would place final authority for the health programs within the governmental structure, under the United States Public Health Service rather than in the United States Civil Service Commission. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. REES], the ranking minority member of the Civil Service Committee, and the other members of the committee agreed that this legislation, passed by this House and approved yesterday by the Senate is highly meritorious. Its operation brings about a coordination of the health programs within the Government service. Each agency must make its case before the Appropriations Committee before the program can legally be set in motion.

Mr. REES of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I have no objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from West Virginia?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendment was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

POSTAGE RATES ON DOMESTIC AIR MAIL

Mr. O'BRIEN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 5560, an act to fix the rate of postage on domestic air mail, and for other purposes, with Senate amendments, disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference with the Senate.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. O'BRIEN]. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none and appoints the following conferees: Mr. O'BRIEN of Michigan, Mr. TRAYNOR, Mr. LYLE, Mr. BUTLER, and Mr. COLE of Missouri.

MINERAL LEASING ACT

Mr. FERNANDEZ. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of Senate Concurrent Resolution 75.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Secretary of the Senate, in the enrollment of the bill (S. 1236) to amend the Mineral Leasing Act of February 25, 1920, as amended, in order to promote the development of oil and gas on the public domain, and for other purposes, be, and he is hereby, authorized to make the following correction, namely: In the language inserted in the conference report, in respect to House amendment No. 19, after the word "limits", the first word in such language, insert the words "are found by the Secretary to"; and after the phrase "where such lease", strike out the comma and the words "or a lease for which it is exchanged" and the comma; so that the language inserted in the conference report would read as follows:

"limits are found by the Secretary to exist on the effective date of this act, and (2) any production on a lease from an oil or gas deposit which was discovered after May 27, 1941, by a well or wells drilled within the boundaries of the lease, and which is determined by the Secretary to be a new deposit; (3) any production on or allocated to a lease pursuant to an approved unit or cooperative agreement from an oil or gas deposit which was discovered after May 27, 1941, on land committed to such agreement, and which is determined by the Secretary to be a new deposit, where such lease was included in such agreement at the time of discovery, or was included in a duly executed and filed application for the approval of such agreement at the time of discovery."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. FERNANDEZ]?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman explain this resolution?

Mr. FERNANDEZ. Mr. Speaker, in the passage of the conference report on the Mineral Leasing Act an error was made. The conferees all agreed, but in the preparation of the conference report, which was prepared under the supervision of the counsel for the Department of the Interior, an error crept in and some words were left out. The only purpose of this concurrent resolution, which has passed the Senate, is to make that correction.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. All it does it correct an error?

Mr. FERNANDEZ. That is correct.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Mexico?

There was no objection.

The Senate concurrent resolution was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

AMENDING SOCIAL SECURITY ACT AND THE INTERNAL REVENUE CODE

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 7037) to amend the Social Security Act and the Internal Revenue Code, and for other purposes, with Senate amendments thereto, disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, I object.

COAST GUARD SITE AT MIAMI BEACH, DADE COUNTY, FLA.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (S. 2419) to amend further the act of April 6, 1938, as amended by the act of July 9, 1941, entitled "An act authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to exchange sites at Miami Beach, Dade County, Fla., for Coast Guard purposes."

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman explain the bill?

Mr. BLAND. This Senate bill is identical with the bill that was reported by the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries of the House. I have talked with the gentleman from Massachusetts about it and also the ranking Republican member. It is a local matter at Fort Lauderdale, Fla.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I know about this legislation. It comes from the committee with a unanimous report. I have no objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act of April 6, 1938 (52 Stat. 201), as amended by the act of July 9, 1941 (55 Stat. 580), is hereby further amended by adding a new section thereto reading as follows:

"SEC. 3. In addition to the authority granted by this act to exchange the existing Coast Guard site (commonly known as the Base Six property) located at Fort Lauderdale, Broward County, in the State of Florida, the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to sell and convey said property to the municipality of Fort Lauderdale, Broward County, Fla., at not less than its fair market value, as determined by the board of Coast Guard officers referred to in section 1 hereof, and to devote the proceeds thereof, to the same purposes for which such property may be exchanged under the provisions of this act: Provided, That the municipality of Fort Lauderdale shall consummate such purchase not less than 6 months after the property is offered to said municipality for sale."

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider and a similar House bill (H. R. 6910) were laid on the table.

AGRICULTURAL RESEARCH

Mr. FLANNAGAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 6932) to provide for further research into basic laws and principles relating to agriculture and to improve and facilitate the marketing and distribution of agricultural products, with State amendments thereto, and concur in the Senate amendments.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendments, as follows:

Page 15, line 24, after "services," insert "To the maximum extent practicable marketing research work done hereunder in cooperation with the States shall be done in cooperation with the State agricultural experiment stations; marketing educational and demonstrational work done hereunder in cooperation with the States shall be done in cooperation with the State agricultural extension service; market information, inspection, regulatory work, and other marketing service done hereunder in cooperation with the State agencies shall be done in cooperation with the State departments of agriculture, and State bureaus and departments of markets."

Page 21, line 1, after "marketing" insert "service and in marketing research."

Page 21, line 9, after "marketing" insert "services and for marketing."

Page 26, line 3, strike out all after "programs." over to and including line 3, on page 27.

Page 27, line 6, strike out all after "designate." down to and including "committee" in line 10, and insert "The committee shall consist."

Page 27, line 11, strike out all after "organizations" down to and including "committee" in line 13.

Page 27, lines 15 and 16, strike out "such advisory or executive committees" and insert "the committee."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, what is the cost of this program?

Mr. FLANNAGAN. The initial cost will be around $9,000,000. It is a bill that was unanimously reported by the House Committee on Agriculture after investigating the agricultural marketing situation for some 2 years.

The bill was unanimously passed by the House.

It went to the Senate and was unanimously reported by the Senate Committee with an amendment.

It was passed by the Senate by unanimous vote.

This bill through research, attempts to do for agriculture just what research has done for industry. It covers production research, utilization research, and marketing research. Moreover, with respect to marketing of agricultural products it brings into play all State, Federal and private agencies engaged in the distribution of agricultural products in order to reduce, as far as possible, the spread between the farm and the table. This bill was reported out after thorough study. As I said, the Committee spent some 2 years investigating agricultural marketing and distribution. Title II of the bill is the answer we found to marketing of agricultural products. I believe it is the correct answer.

We had before the committee the leading authorities in this country on agricultural marketing, as well as the farmers, the processors, and distributors, and we think we have at last approached the problem in a practical way and in such a way that we will be able to reduce the enormous spread that today exists, and has existed in the past, between the farmer and the ultimate consumer. In my opinion the program will save not only the farmers but the consumers millions of dollars each year.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. How are these funds distributed with respect to the States?

Mr. FLANNAGAN. We set up three separate and distinct research programs—production research, utility research, and marketing research—and most of the funds will go back to the States on a 50-50 matching basis.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. FLANNAGAN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House concur in the Senate amendments.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion.

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my objection to the previous request.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendments were concurred in.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

CONSERVATION OF WILDLIFE, FISH, AND GAME

Mr. FLANNAGAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's desk the bill (H. R. 6097) to amend the act of March 10, 1934, entitled "An act to promote the conservation of wildlife, fish, and game," and for other purposes, with Senate amendments thereto, and concur in the Senate amendments.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendments, as follows:

Page 6, strike out all after line 21, over to and including line 15 on page 7.

Page 8, line 1, strike out "10" and insert "9."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, as I understand it, the Senate has stricken section 7 from this bill?

Mr. FLANNAGAN. That is right.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I regret that the Senate saw fit to strike section 7 from the bill. This section, which passed the House by a unanimous vote, was vital to conservation of fish and other wildlife resources in water areas under the control of the War Department. It sought to assure adequate water levels, without injuring navigation, in pools created by dams for fish and other wildlife resources. Millions of fish have been destroyed by unnecessary draw-down of the water in pools, under orders of the War Department. The War Department has failed to fully cooperate with conservation authorities for the protection of fish, and therefore, there is a need for the provisions of section 7, which was stricken from the bill in the Senate at the instance of the War Department.

The Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry prepared amendments to section 7, which should have removed the objections of the War Department. But such amendments did not satisfy the War Department engineers, who demanded that the entire section be stricken. In this connection, I would like to state, that it is the function of Congress to legislate and determine policies for all Government departments, including the War Department. We should not tolerate dictatorial lobbying by any official, which is the case in the present instance. If Congress is not able to determine public policy, this body might as well abrogate to the executive departments, which has been largely done during the past 12 years. As a Member of this Congress I refuse to surrender my prerogatives to any official or agency of the Government on legislative matters.

If it were not for the fact that Congress is about to adjourn, and only two legislative days remain, I would insist that this bill go to conference to restore section 7. To ascertain the prospects for such a move, I have conferred with certain Senators, who advise me that there is no possible chance for the legislation to be considered by a conference committee, and be acted upon in both House and Senate before adjournment on Friday. Therefore, if such a policy is followed, the entire bill will fail of passage in the present session, and, as much as I desire the passage of section 7, I do not want to assume the responsibility for defeating the other excellent provisions of H. R. 6097.

However, I want to serve notice now, that when the new Congress begins in January, I will reintroduce the provisions of section 7, and will press for early action by both House and Senate, notwithstanding the opposition of the War Department.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman tell us what the legislation is?

Mr. FLANNAGAN. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Minnesota and the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. ROBERTSON] have taken a leading part in this legislation. May I say that one reason why I have agreed to concur in the Senate amendments is because in the opinion of the gentleman from Minnesota that is the best course to pursue at this time. I fully agree with the gentleman that new legislation should be introduced at the beginning of the next session.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I want to explain that this bill does not cost any money. It provides that the various Federal agencies in dealing with conservation and wildlife shall cooperate and have a common objective in protecting the interests of the wildlife in this Nation.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendments were concurred in.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

ADMINISTRATION OF INDIAN AFFAIRS

Mr. STIGLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's desk the bill (H. R. 4386) to facilitate and simplify the administration of Indian affairs, with Senate amendments thereto, and concur in the Senate amendments.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendments, as follows:

Page 1, line 8, after "Affairs", insert ", insofar as such powers and duties relate to action in individual cases arising under general regulations promulgated by the Secretary of the Interior pursuant to law."

Page 2, line 3, after "Affairs", insert "Such delegated powers shall be exercised subject to appeal to the Secretary, under regulations to be prescribed by him, or, as from time to time determined by him, to the Under Secretary or to an Assistant Secretary of the Department of the Interior, or to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs."

Page 2, line 9, after "law", insert ", nor shall anything in this act be deemed to convey authority to delegate any power to issue regulations."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman explain the bill and the Senate amendments?

Mr. STIGLER. All this bill does is decentralize certain powers from the Secretary of the Interior and delegating them to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and on down to the superintendent. All that the Senate amendments do is to make sure that the Secretary of the Interior retains the power of delegation.

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I yield to the gentleman from South Dakota.

Mr. MUNDT. This bill has the unanimous support of the Committee on Indian Affairs, and it passed the House overwhelmingly. We are simply clarifying the language.

Mr. STIGLER. That is all the amendments do.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendments were concurred in.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

KEETOOWAH INDIANS OF THE CHEROKEE NATION IN OKLAHOMA

Mr. STIGLER submitted conference report and statement on the bill (H. R. 341) relating to the status of Keetoowah Indians of the Cherokee Nation in Oklahoma, and for other purposes.

CONSERVATION OF FISHERY RESOURCES OF THE COLUMBIA RIVER

Mr. JACKSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (S. 2318) to amend the act of May 11, 1938, for the conservation of the fishery resources of the Columbia River and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman explain this legislation?

Mr. JACKSON. Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to authorize the official Wildlife Service to coordinate their activities and their work with the States fisheries departments of Oregon, Idaho, and Washington. The bill does not involve any expenditure of money. It is merely a piece of legislation to make that coordination legally possible.

Mr. ANGELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I yield to the gentleman from Oregon.

Mr. ANGELL. I am correct, am I not, that this is agreed to by the various State conservation departments, and it is only to secure greater cooperation?

Mr. JACKSON. That is correct. The Governors of the three States, through their fisheries departments, have requested this legislation.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I withdraw my reservation of objection, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 2 of the act of May 11, 1938 (52 Stat. 345), entitled "An act to provide for the conservation of the fishery resources of the Columbia River, establishment, operation, and maintenance of one or more stations in Oregon, Washington, and Idaho, and for the conduct of necessary investigations, surveys, stream improvements, and stocking operations for these purposes," is amended by deleting therefrom the comma after the word "construct" as it appears therein and inserting in lieu thereof the word "and" and by deleting the words "and maintain."

SEC. 2. Section 3 of said act is hereby amended to read as follows:

"In carrying out the authorizations and duties imposed by section 2 of this act, the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to utilize the facilities and services of the agencies of the States of Oregon, Washington, and Idaho responsible for the conservation of the fish and wildlife resources in such States, under the terms of agreements entered into between the United States and these States, without regard to the provisions of section 3709 of the Revised Statutes, and funds appropriated to carry out the purposes of this act may be expended for the construction of facilities on and the improvement of lands not owned or controlled by the United States: Provided, That the appropriate agency of the State wherein such construction or improvement is to be carried on first shall have obtained, without cost to the United States the necessary title to, interest therein, rights-of-way over, or licenses covering the use of such lands."

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

REGULATING COMMUNICABLE AND PREVENTABLE DISEASES IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Mr. HEALY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's desk the bill H. R. 4410, an act to amend the act entitled "An act to authorize the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to make regulations to prevent and control the spread of communicable and preventable diseases," approved August 11, 1939, with Senate amendments thereto, and concur in the Senate amendments.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendments, as follows:

Page 10, after line 22, insert:

"SEC. 11. With respect to all persons who, either on behalf of themselves or their minor children or wards, rely in good faith upon spiritual means or prayer in the free exercise of religion to prevent or cure disease, nothing in this act shall have the effect of requiring or giving any health officer or other person the right to compel any such person, minor child or ward, to go to or be confined in a hospital or other medical institution unless no other place for quarantine of such person, minor child, or ward can be secured, nor to compel any such person, child, or ward to submit to any medical treatment."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman explain this legislation?

Mr. HEALY. This legislation has been passed by both the House and the Senate. The purpose of the legislation is to strengthen the hand of the District Health Department in regard to communicable diseases; in other words, to prevent those who have such diseases from mixing with other people in the community until such time as they have been cured. It refers more particularly to venereal diseases and tuberculosis.

One amendment added by the Senate exempts members of the Christian Science Church and any other faith which does not believe in the usual medical treatment. It exempts them from taking such treatment but does require that they remain in quarantine the same as everybody else.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I withdraw my reservation of objection, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendments were concurred in.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

MOSES TENNENBAUM

Mr. LESINSKI. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 2485) for the relief of Moses Tennenbaum, with a Senate amendment thereto and concur in the Senate amendment.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendment, as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert: "That in the administration of the immigration laws, relating to the issuance of immigration visas for admission to the United States for permanent residence and relating to admissions at ports of entry of aliens as immigrant for permanent residence in the United States, the provisions of section 3 of the Immigration Act of 1917 (39 Stat. 875), as amended (U. S. C., title 8, sec.

136 (e)), which exclude from admission into the United States 'persons who have been convicted of or admit having committed a felony, or other crime or misdemeanor involving moral turpitude' shall not hereafter be held to apply to Moses Tennenbaum on account of offenses alleged to have been committed in connection with obtaining a passport or a visa for admission to the United States. If he is found otherwise admissible under the immigration laws, an immigration visa may be issued and admission granted to Moses Tennenbaum under this act upon application hereafter filed."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

Mr. REES of Kansas. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Michigan explain the bill and the Senate amendment?

Mr. LESINSKI. Mr. Speaker, it developed in the hearings that two American GI's wanted to bring their fathers to this country. Some trouble arose and certain passports were held back. It was necessary for private bills to be passed to permit them to come into this country.

Mr. REES of Kansas. There is no objection, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendment was concurred in.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

NATURALIZATION OF CERTAIN FORMER CITIZENS OF THE UNITED STATES

Mr. LESINSKI. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's desk the bill (H. R. 434) to provide that nationals of the United States shall not lose their nationality by reason of voting under legal compulsion in a foreign state, with a Senate amendment thereto, and concur in the Senate amendment.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendment, as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert: "That section 323 of the act of October 14, 1940 (54 Stat. 1149), entitled 'An act to revise and codify the nationality laws of the United States into a comprehensive nationality code,' as heretofore amended, is hereby further amended by adding thereto the following paragraph:

"'A person who, while a citizen of the United States and prior to the effective date of this amendment, has lost citizenship of the United States by voting in a political election in a foreign state other than a state at war with the United States during the Second World War may, if he so desires, be naturalized by taking, prior to 1 year from the enactment of this amendment, before any naturalization court specified in subsection (a) of section 301, or before any diplomatic or consular officer of the United States abroad, the oaths prescribed by section 335. Certified copies of such oath shall be sent by such diplomatic or consular officer or such court to the Department of State and to the Department of Justice. Such persons shall have, from and after naturalization under this section, the same citizenship status as that which existed immediately prior to its loss.'"

Amend the title so as to read: "An act to provide for the expeditious naturalization of former citizens of the United States who have lost United States citizenship through voting in a political election in a country not at war with the United States during the Second World War."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

Mr. REES of Kansas. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman explain the Senate amendment?

Mr. LESINSKI. A statement made by Senator FULBRIGHT yesterday on this matter is as follows:

The act of 1940 contained a provision to the effect that anyone who voted in a foreign election would lose his American citizenship. The fact of the matter is that immediately after the law went into effect, the war was on and there was no practical way for people living in other countries to know about this law.

There are between 30 and 40 American women who have found themselves in that class. That is the reason for this legislation. It will not affect anyone hereafter.

Mr. REES of Kansas. There is no objection, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendment was concurred in.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

CERTAIN BASQUE ALIENS

Mr. LESINSKI. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's desk the bill (H. R. 1402) for the relief of certain Basque aliens, with a Senate amendment thereto, and concur in the Senate amendment.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendment, as follows:

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

Mr. REES of Kansas. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman explain the Senate amendment?

Mr. LESINSKI. In the hearings it developed that there are several mountaineers called the Basques who have come in from Spain. These people are found out in the Rockies. They do nothing but herding. This bill passed the House, and the Senate has added two additional names to the original bill.

Mr. REES of Kansas. There is no objection, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendment was concurred in.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. KELLEY of Pennsylvania asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a letter, and further to extend his remarks on the subject of the libraries of Pennsylvania.

Mr. McGLINCHEY asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

DISCHARGE PETITIONS NOS. 3 AND 4

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Speaker, my predecessor, the Honorable Samuel A. Weiss, signed discharge petitions Nos. 3 and 4. I desire to have my name entered on those petitions and ask unanimous consent that my predecessor's name be removed so that I may sign the said discharge petitions.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. RABAUT asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. BELL asked and was given permission to revise and extend the remarks he made earlier in the day and to include an article marked "Presidential Pay by J. G. Hayden."

SPECIAL ORDER GRANTED

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the special order for 1 hour which I have for this afternoon be postponed until tomorrow following the other special orders.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. JUDD asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an article.

Mr. WHITE asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD in two instances, to include articles in each instance.

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a newspaper article.

Mr. MUNDT asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include therein a supplemental statement of the managers on the part of the House in connection with the Indian Claims Commission bill which passed the House yesterday.

Mr. GOODWIN asked and was given permission to extend his own remarks in the RECORD and include an editorial.

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Speaker, in reference to veterans' housing, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and to include a statement by a reliable contractor and a table of costs comparing previous years with the costs at the present time.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

BRITISH VIOLATE LOAN AGREEMENT

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks, and include an article from a Canadian paper.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Speaker, on June 18, I informed the House a bilateral agreement was about to be made between Canada and Great Britain for wheat. The British loan bill was then pending in the House and my prediction of a wheat agreement met with widespread denial in official circles in Britain, Canada, and the United States.

On July 25, before the ink was dry on the British loan papers, Canada and Britain announced their wheat deal. I have here in my hand a press release made jointly in Ottawa and London, describing this wheat deal. It is bilateral and exclusive in every sense of the word. It effectively takes away a large market from the United States producer. It also covers substantial quantities of flour and will have a serious effect upon our milling industry.

This deal runs until 1950 and covers 160,000,000 bushels of wheat per year in the early years. This is enough wheat to feed the 45,000,000 people in the British Isles at the rate of over 3½ bushels per capita per annum, very close to the United States consumption in normal years and probably above our present restricted consumption.

Now we hear of British missions in Argentina, Australia, and other producing countries, seeking to make similar bilateral deals. The British are going into the wheat export business with our money but not with our wheat. The trail has been blazed with the Canadian deal. A precedent has been established. All of this international fancy talk has been scrapped. Not one word of protest has been heard from our State Department. Our producers have again been sold out by the Government.

As I have stated before, it is time that the United States Government required some guaranties for the protection of our producers in these so-called loan agreements. It is about time we stopped financing the destruction of the export markets of the American farmer.

ANGLO-CANADIAN WHEAT AGREEMENT

1. Following is the text of a statement which will be made in the Canadian House of Commons by the Minister of Trade and Commerce and in the United Kingdom by the Minister of Food at 10 a. m. Washington time on July 25.

"Agreement has been reached between the Government of the United Kingdom and the Government of Canada for the purchase by the former of Canadian wheat over the 4 years beginning August 1, 1946. The agreement provides that the United Kingdom will purchase and the Canadian Government will supply the following quantities each year: 1946–47, 160,000,000 bushels; 1947–48, 160,000,000 bushels; 1948–49, 140,000,000 bushels; 1949–50, 140,000,000 bushels. The Canadian Government have undertaken that in the event of good harvests larger quantities would be provided in the first 2 years. Part of the quantity of wheat specified in the contract will be supplied in the form of flour to the following amounts: 1946–47, 500,000 tons firm with an additional quantity up to 140,000 tons dependent upon the out-turn of the crop; 1947–48, 400,000 tons firm with an additional quantity up to 140,000 tons dependent upon the out-turn of the crop; 1948–49, a minimum of 300,000 tons, the actual tonnage to be negotiated by July 1, 1947; 1949–50, a minimum of 300,000 tons, the actual tonnage to be negotiated by July 1, 1948. The price which the United Kingdom Government undertake to pay for the wheat supplied is as follows: 1946–47, a fixed price of $1.55 per bushel; 1947–48, a fixed price of $1.55 per bushel; 1948–49, a minimum price of $1.25 per bushel, the actual price to be negotiated by December 31, 1947; 1949–50, a minimum price of $1 per bushel, the actual price to be negotiated by December 31, 1948. The contract provides that its terms and conditions shall be subject to any modification or amendment which may be necessary to bring it into conformity with any international agreements or arrangements later concluded to which both Governments are parties. Nothing in the agreement will affect decisions which may be taken on the basis of recommendations of the IEFC.

"The contract is based upon commercial considerations of mutual interest. It ensures to the United Kingdom substantial quantities of wheat during the expected period of shortage at prices below those which would be payable were there to be a free market at the present time. The price specified in the contract for the first year is 30 percent below the current United States price and still more below the open market price in Argentina. This is the commercial advantage which the United Kingdom secures. In the later period of the contract, Canada receives the advantage of a guaranteed market though for a diminished quantity and a minimum price. In determining the actual price in the last 2 years, regard will be had to the extent to which the agreed price for the first 2 years falls below the world price for that period. Her farmers are therefore protected from crippling losses should there be a world slump in wheat prices. This is the commercial advantage which Canada secures. This balancing of long-term advantages with short-term advantages and vice versa is common commercial practice."

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. DIRKSEN (at the request of Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts) was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include two editorials.

Mr. MARTIN of Iowa asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix on the subject of the privilege and duty to vote on election day.

Mr. CHELF asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include an editorial from the Louisville Courier-Journal.

TRANSPORTATION FOR AMPUTEES

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, many of the Members have asked what is going to happen next on the amputee bill since it was objected to under unanimous consent. I am so grateful to the 177 Members who have signed petition 32 to bring this bill on the floor for consideration. Of course, it is too late for that before we adjourn. But the President may call the Congress back into session before the end of this year and then if the necessary number of signatures are on the petition, H. R. 6304 can be taken up for action. The chairman of the Committee on Rules, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH], told me that he was going to have a rule considered by the Committee on Rules tomorrow morning at 10:30 a. m. I spoke to the chairman of the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation for a moment about it. The Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation authorized him to use every method to bring H. R. 7171 to the floor. There is so much reason for the passage of this bill, Mr. Speaker, because it means everything to the boys to have some sort of car with which to get about when they get out of the hospital and get to work. These veterans want to work. It opens up a new world to them. Without a car, thousands will not be able to get a job.

The Army has done a perfectly magnificent job in training the amputees and paraplegics to drive automobiles up to the time they leave the hospital. The double amputees and even the triple amputees drive well. I have driven with them.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentlewoman from Massachusetts [Mrs. ROGERS] has expired.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentlewoman will state it.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I understand the Speaker has the right to recognize Members to move to suspend the rules for 6 days——

The SPEAKER. The Chair has not been granted any authority to suspend the rules this week.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. That is not my question, Mr. Speaker. The parliamentary procedure after the sine die resolution has been passed by the Senate, then any Speaker has the right to recognize to suspend the rules if he so wishes?

The SPEAKER. That is correct.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. HAYS asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and make certain comments regarding the President's appointment of E. G. Nourse to the Economic Council.

Mr. MURDOCK asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD in two instances.

WAGNER-ELLENDER-TAFT HOUSING BILL

Mr. ROWAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. ROWAN. Mr. Speaker, I should like to say a few words on behalf of those members of the Illinois delegation who have been deeply concerned over the failure of this House to act upon the Wagner-Ellender-Taft housing bill. Our constituents expected us to vote favorably upon this legislation. Our unpleasant task now is to go back with the explanation that we were denied an opportunity to vote at all.

We intend to make very clear, however, our determination to seek action on this bill at the first opportunity. This essential piece of legislation, designed to alleviate the Nation's chronic undersupply of decent housing, has not been defeated or indefinitely pigeonholed, but merely postponed for a brief period.

There is strong bipartisan support for this bill in both House and Senate. We hope that a special session will give the House an early opportunity to take up this bill and pass it. If there is no special session, the Senate may be expected to reenact it promptly in January, and the House must be alert to follow with rapid approval. With every day that passes, the need for the Wagner-Ellender-Taft bill will become more acute. The present delay in its passage is most unfortunate. That delay must not be prolonged by one unnecessary day.

This bill responds to a number of critical housing problems, and, by offering a specific solution to each of them, will assure the large-scale production of housing for veterans at all income levels. Without this legislation, of course, veterans who can afford to buy new houses costing $9,000 or $10,000 will soon be able to do so in any event. But the great mass of veterans, those who can pay no more than $5,000 or $6,000, those who are not prepared to buy at all and who need moderate-cost rental housing, and those in the lowest-income group who need public low-rent housing—for all these veterans, the Wagner-Ellender-Taft bill will remain as "must" legislation.

SPECIAL ORDER GRANTED

Mr. GORE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that after the business on the Speaker's desk and any other special orders today, I may address the House for 10 minutes and revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. RAMEY] is recognized for 30 minutes.

BUREAUCRATS

Mr. RAMEY. Mr. Speaker, a short time ago on this floor, one of our most distinguished Members arose during the debate on atomic energy control, and said:

Mr. Speaker, on this floor now there is confusion confounded. Therefore I will not speak at this time.

He was admitting defeat, at any rate temporary defeat, in a search for truth. He expressed the frustration of most of his colleagues.

What is truth? Why, truth surely is that which conforms to the facts.

But too often those who honestly seek truth in Washington get the "push around." We ask for facts, and the person at the other end of the telephone wire exhorts us to take the "broad view," or suggests we grasp the "over-all picture," and reminds us of the "long range." Or, most maddening of all, he "refers" us to someone else, or to some later date. Most of us would rather take 20 lashes than hear the slogans used so commonly in Washington as a subterfuge to answering questions.

If I could rule Washington for a day, I would discharge all those Government employees who "refer," and I would thereby cut the Federal pay roll in half without loss of work accomplished.

We in Congress, however, are not guiltless in the matter of distorting the truth. We fall into the error of labeling great groups of people with names which have come to be uncomplimentary. It would be wholesome, I believe, if we stopped using the words "demagog," "bureaucrat," "Communist," and "Fascist," except in those few isolated instances where we can use them exactly.

I have heard the quips that a demagog is the other fellow making a speech, and a bureaucrat is the fellow holding the job you want. There is a good deal of truth underlying those definitions. Actually, a demagog is one who plays an insincere role in politics. We know that there are few of those among us. The great majority of us are working hard to try to do the job as we believe it should be done. It ill befits any of us to call the others demagogs. Similarly, a bureaucrat is actually someone who works in a bureau. Subtract from their ranks the number who "refer" when they should "answer," and the remainder are hard-working servants of government. We are shading truth when we lump them together in one objectionable category.

As for Fascist and Communist, those words are probably the two most loosely used in the United States today, and almost always they are used without strict adherence to truth. Each, in its way, suggests conditions Americans dislike and distrust. The former brings to mind the starter of the recent world war. They are terrible words to use indiscreetly.

What is a Communist? By sloppy, popular definition, just about anyone. Probably you have been called one. I know I have. Anyone with a liberal idea today is in danger of being called a Communist.

Even the words "Republican" and "Democrat" have come to be distorted, so that their original meanings are hard to find in the innuendoes that slur about their use today. The original Republican was a man who could not tolerate the concept of human slavery. The original Democrat was the man who could not tolerate the idea of being governed by a system in which he had no direct voice. Both are honorable origins.

Perhaps we in Congress, who are targets for so much of this distorted language, can set an example of factual communication by pruning our own oratory to the simple pattern of truth.

The SPEAKER. Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GORE] is recognized for 10 minutes.

AMENDING THE SOCIAL SECURITY ACT

Mr. GORE. The Senate today passed H. R. 7037 with amendments. A few moments ago the Senate notified the House of this action and requested a conference with the House to the end that differences in the two bills might be resolved and legislation enacted. The distinguished gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. DOUGHTON], chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, asked unanimous consent to take the bill from the Speaker's desk and agree to go into conference with the Senate. This request, as the RECORD will show, was objected to by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KNUTSON], ranking minority member of the Ways and Means Committee.

This objection, Mr. Speaker, may mean the death knell of this bill. It may mean the death knell to the hopes of the millions of our needy old people, of our many thousands of blind persons who direly need more assistance, and of many, many dependent children who cannot yet speak for themselves. Unless in the interest of the veterans who would be benefited by passage of this bill; unless in the interest of freezing the Social Security tax rate, which in the absence of legislation will increase to 2½ percent for both employee and employer on January 1, 1947; unless in the interest of our needy old people, the blind, and dependent children whose benefits would be greatly increased by the passage of the Senate bill, particularly the needy old people, the blind, and the dependent children of the State of Minnesota, who by terms of the Senate bill would receive an increase in Federal assistance allotments for the State of Minnesota of $3,932,000; unless in the interest of our merchant seamen, who would be greatly benefited by passage of this legislation, the gentleman from Minnesota consents to withdraw his opposition, this bill cannot even be sent to conference except through a long-drawn-out parliamentary procedure which may mean its final defeat.

The bill which the Senate passed is a decided improvement over the bill which passed the House. Under the bill as passed by the House many States would not have received any additional Federal funds for the aged, the blind, or dependent children. Under the bill which passed the Senate, however, every State will receive additional Federal funds. I insert below a table which shows how the House bill and the Senate bill would apply to each State:

Comparison of increased annual Federal expenditures for old-age assistance, aid to dependent children, and aid to the blind, over current expenditures under title V of bill [1] as passed by the House and bill as passed by the Senate, and Federal matching percentages under Senate bill

[1] Maximum Federal payment of $25 for old-age assistance and aid to the blind; for aid to dependent children, $13.50 for the first child and $9 for each additional child.
[2] Based on per capita incomes of 1941–43 as reported by the Department of Commerce.
[3] Less than $500.

You will note from the above table, Mr. Speaker, that the Senate has passed a variable grant formula by which Federal Social Security assistance funds will be available to the States for matching purposes on a scale which recognizes the disparity in the abilities of respective States to finance public assistance for their needy citizens. The present 50–50 basis of Federal participation, by which the Federal Government matches dollar for dollar the amount provided by the State up to a $20 matching maximum, does not recognize differences in the ability of States to finance public assistance, nor does it recognize the relatively much greater effort now being made by the poorer States to finance public assistance than by the richer States; neither does it recognize the greater incidence of poverty in the States with the lowest per capita income.

Merely to raise the Federal matching maximums on individual payments, as would the bill which passed the House, without at the same time providing some equitable aid to the low-income States which need help most, will only increase the very inequities which we should seek to minimize in a spirit of social justice. At present, the Federal Government is paying more than three times as much to an eligible needy person in some States as in others. The House-passed bill would only widen this disparity. In other words, the House-passed bill would give more to those who are least in need and give nothing to those most in need.

The Senate bill proposes an increase in the proportion of cost borne by the Federal Government in the States with per capita income below the per capita income for the Nation. The share of the cost to be paid by each low-income State will depend upon how its per capita income compares with that for the country as a whole. The State proportion will be equal to one-half the percentage which its per capita income is of the national per capita income. For example, a State whose per capita income is only 80 percent of the national per capita income would contribute 40 percent of its expenditures for assistance; the Federal share would be 60 percent in this State. All States whose per capita income falls below two-thirds of the national per capita income will pay 33⅓ percent of assistance costs from State and local funds and will receive 66⅔ percent of such costs from Federal funds.

No change in relative State and Federal shares of assistance payments is proposed for the States with per capita income equal to or greater than that for the Nation. In no State will the increased Federal share apply to individual payments in excess of $50 in an old-age assistance and aid to the blind, and, in aid to dependent children, in excess of $27 for the first child in the home and $18 for each additional child. Though, under the Senate bill, the Federal Government stands ready to pay a larger percentage of the cost of individual payments in low- than in high-income States, it will not contribute a larger sum to any payment in low-income States than in those with relatively more resources.

This variable grant formula was recommended by the Social Security Board. It is well thought out, but not complicated. It is a step in the direction of equality of treatment of needy citizens by the Federal Government.

Another very beneficial part of the bill is title II, which gives benefits to veterans of World War II. Regarding benefits to veterans, the Senate report advises in part:

TITLE II—BENEFITS IN CASE OF DECEASED WORLD WAR II VETERANS

The purpose of this title is to bridge the gap in survivorship protection which a serviceman experiences when he shifts from wartime military service to established civilian employment. It undertakes to do this by adding a new section to the Social Security Act, section 210, which provides survivors insurance protection for a period of 3 years following discharge from the armed forces to veterans who were in active military or naval service of the United States after September 16, 1940, and prior to the termination of World War II.

In general, an individual must fulfill one of two requirements in order to be insured for survivors' benefits under the old-age and survivors' insurance program. Either he must have worked in employment under the program for approximately half of the time elapsing after 1936, or after age 21, and prior to the time of his death or he must have worked in covered employment for one-half of the 3 years immediately preceding his death. Since service in the armed forces is not credited for old-age or survivors' insurance purposes, many veterans upon discharge from service will have lost whatever protection they may have acquired under the program or by reason of their military service will have failed to gain the protection they might otherwise have acquired. Moreover, in computing a veteran's "average monthly wage" upon which old-age and survivors' insurance benefits are based, it is usually necessary under present law to include in the computation the months in which the veteran was in service, even though wages are not credited for these months. Consequently, even where the veteran does not lose his protection entirely by reason of his military service, his average wage and the benefits based on it will be reduced.

After the veteran has been back in civilian life for a reasonable period, he can be expected to have gained or regained his insurance protection. It is thought that 3 years is a reasonable time within which the veteran may be expected to acquire or reacquire old-age and survivors' insurance protection since he need only work during one-half of the 3 years immediately prior to death in order to have survivorship protection. In consequence, this section provides survivorship protection to the veteran's family for 3 years after discharge from service.

The amendment also provides for a minimum "average monthly wage" for the veteran during the 3-year period. This provision is needed to insure payment of adequate benefits.

Title I of the bill amends the Federal Insurance Contributions Act so as to fix employee and employer contribution rates at 1 percent each for the calendar year 1947. In other words, H. R. 7037 freezes the Social Security tax rate for another year. In the absence of legislation, the tax rate will advance to 2½ percent on both employee and employer on January 1, 1947. Although I am opposed to freezing the Social Security tax rate, I do not believe it should be allowed to suddenly jump from a 2 percent pay-roll tax to 5 percent. There should be an increase, in my opinion, but it should be an orderly increase, not such an abrupt jump. Indeed, the whole theory of the gradual increase provided in the original Social Security Act was to prevent such sudden shocks to the economy as would happen on January 1, 1947, without legislation as well as to build up in an orderly way sufficient funds to meet the liabilities that are sure to pyramid within a comparatively short time.

Title 3 would give unemployment compensation benefits to maritime workers. The purposes of this title are:

First. To effect permanent coverage of maritime employment under State unemployment compensation systems; and Second. To provide temporary protection for persons whose maritime employment has been with general agents of the War Shipping Administration and thus has been technically Federal employment.

To accomplish the first of these purposes the Federal Unemployment Tax Act is amended to extend coverage to private maritime employment—with the same definition of maritime employment as was used in extending old-age and survivors' insurance to maritime employment in 1939.

Our social-security program needs to be broadened and improved. The Senate bill is the very minimum that we should do now.

Unless the gentleman from Minnesota consents to withdraw his objection, this bill cannot even be sent to conference except upon passage of a resolution, or rule, for that purpose. Such a resolution would first have to be reported by the Committee on Rules. Under the rules of the House such a resolution would have to lay over for 24 hours. If the resolution was then passed by the House, the bill would go to conference but a conference report under the rules, would have to lay on the Speaker's desk for another 24 hours. Thus at best, Mr. Speaker, by this procedure a conference report upon this bill could not be brought before the House until Friday, the very day on which it is now anticipated that Congress will adjourn sine die. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, that is why I have said that this unfortunate objection may mean the death knell to this bill. I hope not. I hope it can finally pass. It means so very much to millions of American citizens who need and deserve assistance, who need and deserve better treatment than to have their problems shunted aside by a parliamentary maneuver in the closing days of this Congress.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED

Bills of the Senate of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and, under the rule, referred as follows:

SENATE

WEDNESDAY, JULY 31, 1946

(Legislative day of Monday, July 29, 1946)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

Rev. Byron W. John, of the Montgomery Methodist Church, Montgomery, W. Va., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, Thou art eternal; the same yesterday, today, and forever. Thou art the merciful Father of all mankind. We pray that Thou wilt draw near unto Thy children here to enter richly into their hearts. In response to Thy presence, enable us to open our souls to Thy spirit.

Bless, we pray Thee, this Nation, for which we have pride and the remembrance of which brings joy to our lives; but deliver us from a forgetfulness of the needs of others. Make us, and keep us, a good neighbor to all the people of the earth.

Give character to our citizenry, to the end that the sanctity of our democratic way may not be violated, and make us true to our responsibilities, ever eager to render a service that will be pleasing in Thy sight.

Supply our hearts and minds, our Father, with the motives which will keep us moving toward Christian ideals. Keep Thy people constant until the goal has been reached—even the kingdom of love and righteousness. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. BARKLEY, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of the calendar day Tuesday, July 30, 1946, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT—APPROVAL OF BILLS

Messages in writing from the President of the United States were communicated to the Senate by Mr. Miller, one of his secretaries, and he announced that on today, July 31, 1946, the President had approved and signed the following acts:

S. 920. An act to fix the salaries of certain judges of the United States;

S. 2352. An act to authorize the increases in the salary of teachers, school officers, and other employees of the Board of Education of the District of Columbia whose pay is fixed and regulated by the District of Columbia Teachers' Salary Act of 1945, as amended;

S. J. Res. 156. Joint resolution to extend the succession, lending powers, and the functions of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the junior Senator from Vermont [Mr. AIKEN] be excused from attendance upon the sessions of the Senate for the remainder of this week.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, leave is granted.

PLIGHT OF THE DOMESTIC WOOL INDUSTRY

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I desire this morning to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that the domestic wool industry in the United States faces the gravest danger of serious impairment unless Congress acts now on bills pending here and in the House.

I wish there were a larger attendance upon the Senate this morning for I was never more serious than now.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield that I may suggest the absence of a quorum?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I should be very happy to yield for a quorum call.

Mr. MAYBANK. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Andrews	Hill	O'Mahoney
Austin	Hoey	Overton
Ball	Huffman	Pepper
Barkley	Johnson, Colo.	Radcliffe
Bilbo	Johnston, S. C.	Reed
Bridges	Kilgore	Revercomb
Burch	Knowland	Russell
Byrd	La Follette	Smith
Capper	Langer	Stewart
Chavez	McCarran	Swift
Connally	McClellan	Taft
Cordon	McFarland	Taylor
Donnell	McKellar	Thomas, Okla.
Downey	McMahon	Thomas, Utah
Eastland	Magnuson	Tunnell
Ferguson	Maybank	Vandenberg
Fulbright	Mead	Wagner
George	Millikin	Walsh
Gerry	Mitchell	Wheeler
Gossett	Moore	Wherry
Green	Morse	White
Guffey	Murdock	Wiley
Gurney	Murray	Willis
Hart	Myers	Young
Hayden	O'Daniel

Mr. HILL. I announce that the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY] is absent because of illness.

The Senator from Nevada [Mr. CARVILLE] is absent by leave of the Senate.

The Senator from Missouri [Mr. BRIGGS] and the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS] are detained on public business.

The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH] is absent on official business, having been appointed a member of the President's Evaluation Commission in connection with the test of atomic bombs on naval vessels at Bikini.

The Senator from Louisiana [Mr. ELLENDER] and the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] are absent on official business, having been appointed to the commission on the part of the Senate to participate in the Philippine independence ceremonies.

Mr. WHERRY. The Senator from Maine [Mr. BREWSTER], the Senator from Delaware [Mr. BUCK], the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. HAWKES], and the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. STANFILL] are necessarily absent.

The Senator from Vermont [Mr. AIKEN], the Senator from Illinois [Mr. BROOKS], the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. BUSHFIELD], the Senator from Indiana [Mr. CAPEHART], the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. ROBERTSON], and the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY] are absent by leave of the Senate.

The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BUTLER] is absent on official business, being a member of the commission appointed to attend the Philippine independence ceremonies.

The Senator from Iowa [Mr. HICKENLOOPER] is absent by leave of the Senate on official business as a member of the Special Committee on Atomic Energy.

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. SALTONSTALL] is absent on official business, having been appointed a member of the President's Evaluation Commission in connection with the test of atomic bombs on naval vessels at Bikini.

The Senator from Iowa [Mr. WILSON] is absent on official business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Seventy-four Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I took the floor at the opening of the session in order to address the Senate upon what I regard to be one of the most important problems confronting the Congress at this time. The Senator from South Carolina was good enough to suggest the absence of a quorum in order that the largest possible number of Senators might be here to listen to what I have to say. I do not wish to dissipate the quorum by yielding, as is the custom, to a large number of Senators who desire only to put something in the RECORD or file some formal paper. I shall be most grateful if Senators will refrain from making such requests until I have at least laid down the premises of the discussion.

Mr. President, the Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER] indicated that he would like to have a conference report adopted. I know that is a matter of the utmost importance, and that it would be adopted in a jiffy, but I might lose the attendance of the Senator from Florida if I yielded to him at this moment, and I hope to keep him here.

DOMESTIC FLOCKS BEING LIQUIDATED

Mr. President, the domestic wool industry is in a desperate situation. There can be no doubt about it. During the past year and a half domestic flocks of sheep have been liquidated at such a rate that there has been a reduction of probably 25 percent of the numbers of sheep in the United States, and the annual production of wool has been reduced from 450,000,000 pounds, on the average, to scarcely more than 300,000,000 pounds during 1946, according to the estimates of the Department of Agriculture.

We are confronted with a situation which results directly from the war. The Committee on Agriculture and Forestry of the Senate and the Committee on Agriculture of the House of Representatives have both reported bills to their respective Chambers, the purpose of which is to stop the liquidation of the wool industry in the United States. But there is grave danger at this moment that these bills will not pass, and that Congress will adjourn without having acted in defense of this industry, in which there is a national interest.

IMPORTANCE OF INDUSTRY

In every State of the United States wool is produced. Farms in every State, East and West, North and South, produce sheep and market wool. But in 13 Western States, from the Mexican border to the Canadian border, the raising of sheep, lambs and wool constitutes one of the most important industries of the entire area. In these 13 different States, according to an economic review made by the Special Committee on Wool, sustained by the figures of the Department of Agriculture, the production of wool stands eighth in economic importance, among all the industries of that region. That is the average for all 13 States.

In Texas, in Idaho, and in California it ranks seventh in importance. When one considers the tremendous breadth of the economy of California and of Texas, one realizes how important raising wool is, when the cold statistics show that it stands seventh among all the industries of those two States. Mining in Idaho is of great importance; agricultural industries are important; yet in Idaho the raising of wool stands seventh in importance. In South Dakota and in New Mexico it stands fifth in importance. In Wyoming, Utah, Nevada, Montana, and Colorado, it stands third. This means that in all these States there is not a county which does not have on its tax rolls real property devoted to the raising of sheep, which does not depend upon tax returns from those ranches and from the wool industry as a most important element in maintaining community life. From the wool industry are derived taxes to support the schools, taxes to support the roads, taxes to support all public activities in these States. A most important portion of the revenue which is necessary to keep the public machine running is the product of the wool industry. Yet I say, Mr. President, that the wool industry now stands in mortal peril because of conditions that developed during the war.

DOMESTIC INDUSTRY IN WORLD PERIL

To show specifically how dangerous this condition is, I desire to call attention to some figures which were released a few days ago by the National Association of Wool Manufacturers. Mills in the United States during the first 4 months of 1946 consumed 213,800,000 pounds of apparel wool. This represents an increase of 14 percent over the amount of such wool used in the mills of the United States during the previous year. In other words, it is clear that the utilization of wool for the purpose of manufacturing clothing is increasing.

Contrasted with that increase in the use of wool for manufacturing cloth to go into garments for men and women, there has been a tremendous decline in the utilization of domestic wool. During these first 4 months of 1946, January through April, only 26,200,000 pounds of domestic wool were used in the mills of the United States—26,200,000 pounds of wool out of 213,800,000 pounds. How significant that is will be realized when I point out the average annual consumption of domestic wool in the mills of the United States during the same 4 months, January through April, for the years 1935 to 1939, inclusive, was in excess of 67,000,000 pounds.

Mr. President, I am making an appeal to the sensibilities of the Members of the Senate, and also to their intellect, because I am dealing with a subject upon which the economy of a large segment of the United States is firmly founded. I say, Mr. President, that unless, before final adjournment, Congress acts on this question, the domestic wool industry will be in danger of complete liquidation, and at the same time the dependence of the United States upon imported wool from the British dominions will be made complete.

USE OF DOMESTIC WOOL DECREASING

Mr. President, I was calling attention to a matter of great importance to every wool-growing State that the consumption of wool in the United States has increased by about 14 percent, but the use of domestic wool is decreasing. I invite the attention of western Senators, particularly that of the Senator from Texas, whose State is vitally concerned and who on more than one occasion has exhibited his keen interest.

Mr. CONNALLY. I will say to the Senator that I am supporting his bill.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I know the Senator is, and I want to strengthen him in that support.

During the first 4 months of each year from 1935 to 1939 inclusive, on the average there was consumed in the mills of the United States more than 67,000,000 pounds of domestic wool, whereas during the first 4 months of this year the consumption was only 26,200,000 pounds. This is a startling fact. No one can escape it; the Congress of the United States cannot escape it; the States which are dependent upon the wool industry cannot escape it; those who are engaged in raising sheep and in raising wool cannot escape it, and, unless the liquidation of our flocks is to be stopped, I do not know what will happen to the economy, particularly of these 13 great Western States.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I yield.

Mr. MORSE. The Senator from Wyoming mentions the point concerning the liquidation of flocks. I am sure he would like to have in the RECORD at this point the fact that since 1943 the flocks of the West have been reduced by from 25 to 50 percent. I am informed by the sheep growers of my State that in the State of Oregon they have been reduced 40 percent. A great many factors have entered into that reduction. I shall not regale the Senate at this time with my observations on the sheep industry, as I have done in the past.

One of our problems has been the pricing policy on the part of the Government. It has worked great disadvantage to the sheep industry. It has resulted in tremendous loss on the part of the sheep industry, which ought at least to have the right to enjoy a fair profit on its investment. The wool policy of the administration has been very detrimental to the industry in the West.

I wish to commend the Senator from Wyoming for bringing to the attention of the Senate at this time this very important issue, because it is of vital importance to the economy of the entire country. We cannot do irreparable damage to a large segment of the agricultural industry without affecting labor, business, and consumers throughout the entire country. We should recognize the importance of this industry to our Nation-wide economy.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I am very happy that the Senator from Oregon has made that comment, because I wish to enlist the support of every Member of this body in the effort I am about to make to force some action on the legislation affecting this subject before the Seventy-ninth Congress draws to a close.

IS WOOL GROWING AN UNECONOMIC INDUSTRY?

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. It seems to me that the Senator is proposing an absolute change in the economic policy of the country and that his proposal is of the greatest importance. Such a change should not be undertaken without every possible consideration, and ample debate. I certainly am not prepared to debate the question. As I understand what the Senator proposes, in substance, is that since the tariff is not sufficiently high to protect the American wool industry, we must subsidize that industry at a cost to the Government of between $60,000,000 and $100,000,000 a year. Am I correct in that analysis of the proposal?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I do not think it would involve that much. Of course, I did not really expect to find any support from the Senator from Ohio, because I have read the record of the hearings before the Committee on Banking and Currency, and I know that on the 7th of March, in a colloquy with Mr. Clayton, of the State Department, the Senator from Ohio referred to the wool-growing industry in the United States as an uneconomic industry. I remember the time when Members of the Senate condemned the Secretary of Agriculture, Mr. Wallace, because he was alleged to have referred to the sugar-beet industry as an uneconomic industry. I never dreamed that I should see the time when a man who is being mentioned in the public press as a possible nominee of the Republican Party for the Presidency would send a message to the woolgrowers of the West that their industry is uneconomic, and it ought to be wiped out. That is the conclusion to be drawn from the statement of the Senator before the Banking and Currency Committee.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. I neither made such a statement, nor can any such conclusion be drawn from whatever statement I made.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I shall read from the record of the hearings.

Mr. TAFT. All I said was——

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The Senator will pardon me. I have the floor. I have the record of the hearings before the Banking and Currency Committee for March 7, 1946. The Senator from Utah [Mr. MURDOCK] addressed the following question to Mr. Clayton:

> I know that one of the big issues in the campaign that I am confronting this fall is my support of the reciprocal trade agreements. Now I hope it is not improper to ask you at this time, Can I expect the same zeal and vigor on the part of the State Department in protecting an industry such as the sheep and wool industry of the West as you people exert in behalf of other industries here in this country?

Whereupon the Senator from Ohio interposed:

> Well, Mr. Clayton, I just wonder if you are unwilling, because of political reasons, to eliminate as uneconomic an industry as the wool industry of the United States as compared to most other countries, how you are ever going to increase imports into the United States.

"Eliminate as uneconomic an industry as the wool industry." Those are the words of the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. Clayton was advocating reciprocal trade agreements reducing the tariff. That was the policy, and I was criticizing that policy. I was saying to him, in effect, "Are you so inconsistent that, when you say that we must reduce all tariffs, you are going to turn around and give some special protection to the wool industry of the West?" So far as the uneconomic feature is concerned, what it means is that it costs a great deal more to produce wool in the United States than it does in Australia. So far as I am concerned, I am and always have been in favor of a tariff for wool sufficient to protect the American wool industry. I was only pointing out——

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Is the Senator willing now to take the only action that can be taken to defend the wool industry, or does he want me to carry the message to the wool growers of the West that he will not support this measure, as he just stated?

Mr. TAFT. I shall not support this measure.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The Senator's record is complete.

Mr. TAFT. I shall not undertake, as a policy in substitution for a legitimate tariff policy to protect American industries which ought to be protected, the payment of millions of dollars out of the Treasury.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I suggest——

Mr. TAFT. That is utterly inconsistent——

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I have the floor.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr O'MAHONEY. Yes; but not for the moment. I have the floor, and I desire to respond to what the Senator has just said. I say to the Senator that if that is his point of view, he had better go to work upon those Republican Senators who, when the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act was before the Senate, supported it. There were 16 Republican votes in favor of the extension of the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act. There were only 17 Republican votes against it.

So, Mr. President, when we talk about the tariff as the salvation of the wool industry, we want the wool growers of the West, who have been traditionally Republican, to know that 16 Republican United States Senators voted for reciprocal trade agreements, with all the danger of reducing tariffs, and that the great Senator from Ohio now stands upon the floor of the United States Senate and sends a message to the wool growers of the country that he is not in their camp.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. MURDOCK. It seems to me that inasmuch as the distinguished Senator from Wyoming has referred to the colloquy which took place in the Committee on Banking and Currency, in support of the position which he takes today, the remainder of the colloquy should be inserted in the RECORD.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. If the Senator has the colloquy, I shall be very glad to have it inserted in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SENATOR TAFT AND THE WOOL GROWERS

(Excerpt taken from testimony given in the hearing before the Committee on Banking and Currency, United States Senate, on the subject of Anglo-American financial agreements, March 7, 1946)

Hon. Will Clayton, Assistant Secretary of State, testifying:

Senator MURDOCK (to Mr. Clayton). I know that one of the big issues in the campaign that I am confronting this fall is my support of the reciprocal trade agreements.

Now I hope it is not improper to ask you at this time, "Can I expect the same zeal and vigor on the part of the State Department in protecting an industry such as the sheep and wool industry of the West as you people exert in behalf of other industries here in this country?"

Senator TAFT. Well, Mr. Clayton, I just wonder, if you are unwilling because of political reasons to eliminate as uneconomic an industry as the wool industry of the United States as compared to most other countries, how you are ever going to increase imports into the United States.

Mr. CLAYTON. Well, Senator, I think I can——

Senator MURDOCK. Can I have an answer to my question, Mr. Secretary?

Mr. CLAYTON. Well, Senator——

Senator MURDOCK. Senator TAFT has a habit of making his questions so much more important than any others, but I would like to have an answer to mine.

Mr. CLAYTON. Senator MURDOCK, you stated an expectation that you had. Did you intend to ask me whether that expectation was justified?

Senator MURDOCK. I think you will have a whole lot to do with it, and I just want to give my people out West the assurance, so far as the wool industry is concerned, which is such a big thing out there in our western economy, that we are not going to be shut out of the picture. I just do not want to get into any kind of a situation here that would push the wool industry of the West out of the picture.

Mr. CLAYTON. Well, Senator, I am glad to state to you in that matter just what we have said to others that have brought up the same question with respect to other industries, and that is this: that we have not at any time taken, under the Trade Agreements Act, any action or done anything which would seriously endanger any essential American industry, and we do not intend to do so in the future; and not only is that a State Department and interdepartmental policy, but the President of the United States has assured Congress, in a letter which he wrote to Speaker RAYBURN at the time the Trade Agreements Act was up, that that would be the policy throughout his administration, that no action would be taken—I think the words were, "which would endanger any essential American industry."

Mr. MURDOCK. I should like to say to the Senator from Wyoming that I enlisted under his banner long ago in the campaign which he has made for the wool industry of this country. I believe that today every Senator from the States which the Senator has mentioned is willing to continue under that banner and stay here as long as is necessary to assure the passage of the Senator's bill.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I thank the Senator.

PROGRAM CRITICALLY NECESSARY

Mr. MURDOCK. So far as I am concerned, I am willing to forego returning to my State at this time; I am willing to stay here just as long as the Senator from Wyoming thinks it is necessary for us to stay in order to have this measure passed.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. In a moment.

Mr. President, I wish to say to the Senator from Utah that I welcome very much the statement he has made. I know that throughout this fight for wool he has been a stalwart defender of this great industry of the West.

BRITISH COMPETITION

But there now lies upon the table, Mr. President, a resolution for final adjournment. When that resolution is presented, it will not be debatable. If it shall be adopted, and no action has been taken, opportunity for justice to the wool growers will have vanished. A wool bill is on the calendar of the Senate. It was objected to when the calendar was called on unanimous consent. A wool bill is on the calendar of the House of Representatives. It is very different from the bill which was recommended by the Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. The House Committee on Agriculture realized the opposition which has developed. It has arisen principally from the Boston wool trade, which desires to continue what it calls the free purchase of wool, in spite of the fact that we are confronted with a British Government state monopoly which is devoting all its time and attention to the marketing of British wool in the United States, to the disadvantage of American wool. The reason why there has been a 14 percent increase in the use of foreign wool in the United States and a decrease from 67,000,000 to 26,200,000 pounds in the use of domestic wool is that during the war we permitted Great Britain to accumulate huge stock piles of wool here, and because we in the United States have not adopted a Government policy, as the British Government has, in defense of the wool growers.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. The Senator has referred to the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act. There is nothing in that act, is there, which requires the Government to reduce the tariff on wool?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Not at all. But under that act there never has been any action upon any tariff except by way of reduction. That is why, from the very moment the reciprocal trade agreements law was first promoted in this body, I have always insisted that such agreements should not become effective until they were acted upon by the Senate and the House of Representatives.

Mr. TAFT. Is it not also true that under the general tariff act the tariff on wool may be increased by the President, as well as decreased?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Yes, of course. There is no doubt about that. But no trade agreement is now being negotiated with Great Britain and no tariff bill has been introduced in this Congress.

Oh, Mr. President, I am appealing to the intelligence of the Members of the Senate. We are not dealing with the conditions which existed in the United States before the war. We are dealing with the conditions which have arisen because of the fact that the whole world has been racked with turbulence. This is a period in which states and institutions have been falling. The great senior Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] and the great senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] have been patriotically spending their time abroad in the effort to restore order in this world. They know, as we all know, that the economic aspect of this disorder is one of its most important aspects. Are we, then, to adjourn this Congress, in the face of the action which has been taken by the British Government, and are we thus to do nothing for this segment of the agricultural industry of the United States, merely because the Boston wool trade, if you please, desires to return to the free sale and purchase of wool in the United States, although domestic wool constitutes scarcely 10 percent of all the wool that is being used in the United States? It would scarcely be a detriment of serious proportion to the Boston wool dealers, if they were to forego the whole business of dealing in domestic wool. But the bill which we brought before the Senate did not require them to do so. The Commodity Credit Corporation has always worked through the dealers and under my bill would continue to do so. The Boston wool trade will lose nothing by the passage of this bill; but, Mr. President, their customers, the ranchers and the farmers from whom they have been buying wool, will suffer, because they cannot compete with the State monopoly of Great Britain which is pouring wool into the United States.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I yield.

Mr. MEAD. I should like to say to my able colleague that within 15 minutes or less we shall be called upon to vote on a very important question, namely, the anti-poll-tax bill. I know that the able Senator said that he would not yield until he laid the ground work of his argument. I am wondering whether he has done that, and whether it will be possible for us to reserve approximately 10 minutes either before 1 o'clock or, by unanimous consent, after 1 o'clock, if we can obtain such unanimous consent now, so that we may say a word on the question of adoption of cloture, which, as the Senator from Wyoming knows, and all other Senators know, is a very important question, and the vote on it is a very important vote.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I recognize the great importance of that issue, and I am disposed to accede to the request of the Senator from New York. I did not realize that it is almost 10 minutes of 1. I have been interrupted by numerous inquiries, and therefore, I have talked longer than I intended to talk.

But there are one or two further words which I desire to say before I take my seat, following which I shall resume the discussion later.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. In view of the fact that we had a long and eloquent discourse by the Senator from New York [Mr. MEAD] last night, I do not see why the Senator from Wyoming should yield again to permit another presentation of oratory by the Senator from New York.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I yield.

Mr. MEAD. The Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY], although generally not tempted to exaggerate, nevertheless has informed the Senate that the 5-minute talk which I made last night, when the Senate Chamber was practically empty——

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, let me say to the Senator from New York that the more time he takes now, the less time there will be available to him after I take my seat.

Mr. MEAD. Very well; then I shall stop now. I know there are some Senators here who would like to prevent us from speaking; but the Senator from Wyoming is not one of them.

MINIMUM PROVISIONS PENDING

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I am sure the Senator recognizes that.

Mr. President, I should like to say that this bill has been reported by the House Committee on Agriculture in a form which is very different from that in which it was reported by the Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. It has been reduced to a minimum. It will authorize the Commodity Credit Corporation to purchase the domestic supply of wool, as it has a right to do, under the Steagall Act, with respect to other agricultural commodities at 90 percent of parity, and then it will have the right to sell that wool in competition with the wool sent into the United States by the British state monopoly. With an improving economy, it is my belief that this will not result in a loss to the Commodity Credit Corporation. However, it will result in saving the domestic wool industry. I sincerely hope that the Senate and the House will not adjourn without doing that.

Let me say to the Senator that these are 4,000,000,000 pounds of British wool now overhanging the market; I am speaking of billions. Wool is grown in Australia, New Zealand, and South Africa. Those three great Commonwealths of the British Empire grow far more wool than they can consume. They can consume scarcely one-seventh of all the wool which they produce. The wool growers of the United States produce scarcely one-third of what the people of the United States consume. The British Government has now entered into an agreement with the three Commonwealths to which I have referred by which it has undertaken to market their wool. The United States of America is the greatest market in the world for wool as for all other commodities. So we are confronted with a British state monopoly endeavoring to dispose of its surplus wool in the United States, and the bills on the calendar would enable the Government of the United States to stand behind the domestic wool grower.

For weeks and months, as chairman of the Special Senate Committee To Investigate Production, Transportation, and Marketing of Wool, I conducted a study of the problem. Copies of the printed hearings have been sent into 30 States by request. Banks and universities are still asking for copies of those hearings because of the factual information which they contain.

Mr. President, I have before me the report of the committee and I shall insert it in the RECORD later.

The Commodity Credit Corporation, throughout the war, bought domestic wool because it was necessary to have wool, and necessary to maintain the flocks in order to sustain meat production. It was a high Government policy that the liquidation of the flocks should not be permitted to take place. Therefore, the Commodity Credit Corporation purchased wool and sold it. Now, with the British Government undertaking to defend the wool growers of the Dominions, I assert that we shall be treating the wool growers of the United States, and particularly those of the 13 Western States, with scant consideration and little concern if we allow the Seventy-ninth Congress to adjourn without taking proper action.

LEGISLATIVE SITUATION DESCRIBED

In the House there are Members who are lying in wait to interpose an objection to any unanimous-consent request to take up a bill. The great Representative from Utah [Mr. GRANGER], who is in charge of the bill on the floor of the House, has been standing by day after day since the bill was reported to the House, seeking to gain recognition so as to have the bill passed. If he obtains recognition the House will pass the bill. The majority of the Members of the House and the majority of the Members of the Senate want the bill to be passed. But, without unanimous consent, the Speaker, who supports the bill, may not recognize the Representative from Utah to move its passage.

Mr. President, the time will come when, if this bill is not passed, the responsibility will be placed where it belongs, and I intend to make every effort I can to point out what has been done and what has been omitted.

I ask unanimous consent that there be printed at this point in the RECORD as a part of my remarks the full text of Senate Document No. 140, which consists of a letter from the President of the United States addressed to me, the chairman of the Special Committee To Investigate Production, Transportation, and Marketing of Wool, together with a memorandum of the proposed wool program which was worked out by the executive branch of the Government, and which is the basis of the bill approved by the Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. The document includes also a statement which I submitted to the President of the United States upon the basis of which he directed the executive departments to cooperate with me in the preparation of legislation.

There being no objection, the document was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

AN EFFECTIVE WOOL PROGRAM

MARCH 12, 1946.

(The President has sent the following letter to the Honorable JOSEPH C. O'MAHONEY, United States Senator from Wyoming:)

MARCH 11, 1946.

DEAR SENATOR O'MAHONEY: On January 5, 1946, you sent me a memorandum on wool in accordance with a suggestion I had made to you at a conference on the subject. In your memorandum you suggested that I request the interested agencies of the Government to confer and to prepare a wool program. Such a program has now been prepared and is attached. It represents the considered views of the administration on the best methods for solving a serious and difficult problem.

Your committee will, of course, be able to call on the interested agencies for any desired assistance in your further studies of the wool situation or in drafting appropriate legislation.

I trust that the Congress will find that this proposed wool program constitutes a sound and adequate basis for constructive legislation.

In closing I wish to express my agreement with you that cooperation between the Executive and the Congress is essential to the establishment of an effective wool program.

Sincerely yours,

HARRY S. TRUMAN.

PROPOSED WOOL PROGRAM

At the present time there is a serious worldwide wool situation. The United States Government must develop and carry out a wool program that will adequately safeguard the interests of growers, merchants, and consumers. Such a program must also be consistent with our general foreign economic policy.

Abroad, the war stopped trade between the principal wool-producing countries of the Southern Hemisphere and the principal wool-consuming countries on the Continent of Europe and in Asia. This has resulted in the accumulation of large stocks of raw wool in foreign countries. The distribution of these accumulated stocks and of future clips will be retarded until transportation, coal mining, manufacturing, and international trade can be rehabilitated, despite the great consumer need for wool textiles and clothing. In view of these facts, the governments of Great Britain, Australia, New Zealand, and South Africa have formed an agency called the Inter-Governmental Joint Wool Organization for the twofold purpose of protecting prices to producers in empire countries and of disposing of the accumulated surplus of empire wool. It is said that this agency will be prepared to operate for a period of 10 years, or longer if necessary, to complete the liquidation of these stocks. While the Joint Wool Organization is in operation it is understood that wool produced in these countries will be sold to the established trade in the normal manner as long as prices equal or exceed the stabilization levels established by the organization. When the wool cannot be sold to the trade at such prices it will be purchased by the organization at the stabilization prices. It is to the advantage of wool growers in the United States to have wool prices stabilized in the major producing countries abroad. Our growers are somewhat apprehensive, however, lest the desire of the Joint Wool Organization to speed liquidation might result in undue pressure to sell in the United States.

Domestically, sheep numbers have been reduced 25 percent in the past 4 years. This reduction has resulted from higher production costs, difficulties in obtaining labor, and the fact that many sheep raisers have found prices of some other farm products to be at more renumerative levels. To alleviate the situation confronting growers, the Commodity Credit Corporation has been purchasing domestic wool at ceiling prices since April 1943. However, foreign wool is being sold duty paid in the United States at prices materially below those at which the Corporation is buying from domestic producers. Accordingly, our mills have turned largely to imported wool, and although our consumption in recent years has been the largest in history, the CCC has accumulated stocks in excess of 1 year's domestic production. Since November the Corporation has been selling wool at a loss as a means of moving it into consumption in competition with imported wool.

There is general agreement that this Government must protect the incomes of wool growers on a level comparable with that afforded producers of other agricultural products. The Senate Special Committee to Investigate Production, Transportation, and Marketing of Wool during its comprehensive hearings received several alternative proposals for dealing with the wool problem. Basically, the major proposals fall into two groups—those under which the prices of foreign wool in the United States may be raised, either through higher tariffs, import fees, or import quotas, and those under which the selling prices of domestic wool would be lowered sufficiently to make domestic wool competitive with duty-paid imported wool. Some plans were also suggested which would have the effect of spreading the premium paid for domestic wool over the cost of all wool used in the United States so as to make the cost of all wool to domestic mills approximate an average between the support price paid growers for domestic wool and the duty-paid price of imported wool.

From a careful review of the entire problem it appears that it will be more desirable from a national point of view and more dependable for growers to have the Government absorb losses on sales of domestic wool rather than to raise additional trade barriers against imports. This would involve a program essentially similar to that now being carried out by the Commodity Credit Corporation but on a more permanent basis and with adequate guides to determine the amount of protection to be given growers. When the postwar wool situation becomes better clarified, it may become desirable to change the method of operation from a purchase program so as to remove the Government, insofar as possible, from participation in the wool business. In developing such program it should be kept in mind that the domestic sheep-raising industry has been experiencing a major decline in sheep numbers and therefore care should be exercised not to take action which would place additional handicaps on the industry so long as this decline continues. It would also be advisable to provide for more adequate research and development work on wool marketing and utilization and to make it possible for the industry to utilize marketing agreements and orders if that should become necessary in dealing with the wool situation in the future.

Specifically, in view of the large-scale decline of sheep numbers in the United States during recent years, the large wool surpluses now hanging over foreign and domestic markets, and the present and prospective marketing problems confronting wool growers, it would seem desirable for Congress to enact special wool legislation. Such legislation should provide that—

1. The parity price of wool be revised or established at the so-called "comparable" level so that wool parity prices will be on a level equivalent to parity prices for other farm products.

2. The Commodity Credit Corporation support incomes to wool producers through purchases, loans, or payments, at the same minimum percentage of the revised parity prices as it is directed to support prices to producers of basic agricultural commodities. This level will be not less than 90 percent of the revised parity prices until the expiration of the 2-year period beginning with the 1st day of January immediately following the date upon which the President by proclamation, or the Congress by concurrent resolutions, declares that hostilities in the pesent war have terminated.

Because of the continuing decline in sheep numbers, it should be provided (a) that no reduction shall be made in the general level of support prices from the level at which the Commodity Credit Corporation has agreed to purchase 1946 wool until the year in which the number of sheep kept for breeding purposes on January 1 first stops the decline which has been in effect continuously since 1942, except (1) that specific reductions can be made to equalize the support given on various types and qualities of wool and (2) that additional discounts could be established to reflect market values of off-quality, inferior, and poorly prepared wool and to discourage unsound marketing practices; and (b) that the reduction for any one year shall not exceed 8 percent of the average support price for the previous year.

The legislation should authorize the Commodity Credit Corporation to elect to make payments to producers in lieu of making purchases or loans. In the event of such election, such payments should equal the amount, if any, by which the United States average farm price falls below the estimated average price per pound at which the Corporation would have supported prices under a purchase or loan program.

3. The Commodity Credit Corporation be authorized to continue to sell wool at prices competitive with imported foreign wool, irrespective of other provisions of law, since existing legislation would prohibit any sales at prices below parity.

4. Funds from the gross receipts from duties collected under the customs laws during the period January 1 to December 31, both inclusive, of each calendar year be appropriated and made available to the Commodity Credit Corporation as of each following June 30, in sufficient amount to equal the losses incurred by the Corporation under purchase or loan operations, or the amount of payments made to wool producers in lieu of such purchase or loan operations, for the fiscal year ending on the respective June 30.

5. Marketing agreement and order programs under the Marketing Agreement Act of 1937, as amended, be made applicable to wool on the basis of the comparable, or revised parity, price.

6. A research and developmental program be provided for the purpose of improving the quality of domestic wool and wool-marketing practices and the processing and utilization of wool.

In addition to such legislative program, it would seem desirable to have the executive agencies undertake the development of an international wool agreement in collaboration with the various interested foreign governments to provide for coordinated action and more unified supervision of world wool-marketing and price policies from the standpoints of producers, consumers, and international trade. I am asking the executive agencies to determine the willingness of foreign governments to participate in such undertaking. In the meantime, it is hoped that consultations can be held with foreign wool agencies which will provide for a mutual understanding of objectives and activities in selling policies.

The above program will, in my opinion, afford domestic wool growers the protection and assistance to which they are properly entitled under this country's general trade and agricultural policies. The program will tend to encourage wool consumption in the United States and will be consistent with our general foreign economic policy. In accordance with the views you have so frequently expressed, this country also should cooperate with foreign producing and consuming countries in efforts to encourage wool consumption abroad.

STATEMENT OF SENATOR O'MAHONEY TO PRESIDENT TRUMAN ON WOOL PROBLEM

(The following statement was filed with President Truman on January 5, 1946, by Senator JOSEPH C. O'MAHONEY, chairman, Special Committee to Investigate Production, Transportation, and Marketing of Wool, urging Executive cooperation with the Senate Special Wool Committee to frame long-term Government policy on domestic wool:)

The four Governments of the United Kingdom and of the three Dominions, Australia, New Zealand, and South Africa, have formed a joint organization to hold and market the huge British stocks of surplus wool which overhang the world market. As much as 85 percent of the total world supply of wool, now estimated at more than 4,000,000,000 pounds, for more than a decade to come will be controlled and handled by this state-managed monopoly.

The United States is the world's greatest market for wool and woolen products, but it produces less wool than it consumes, whereas the British Dominions produce far more wool than they can consume.

The British Government not only undertakes to protect its Dominion wool producers from loss by marketing their wool for them in the United States, but it also encourages the production of wool in the British Isles by a system of bounty payments to the English wool grower.

The British also pursue a policy the objective of which is to increase the exports of woolen fabrics into the United States. In order to bring this about the British Government is seeking to restrain the consumption of woolen goods in the United Kingdom. Contrasted with this clear-cut policy intended to make the growing of wool and the manufacture of woolen fabrics a profitable enterprise for the inhabitants of England and of the British Dominions, the Government of the United States has no consistent policy with respect to its own wool growers.

The Commodity Credit Corporation has purchased the domestic clip during the war, but only on a year-to-year basis and without any assurance to the growers that the program would be continued even during the reconversion period. These purchases were made because it was recognized by the Commodity Credit Corporation that unless the Government purchased the domestic clip the liquidation of domestic flocks, which now number 20 percent less than they did in 1942, would be accelerated with a consequent serious decrease in the supply of lamb and mutton. Meanwhile, the United States Forest Service in the Department of Agriculture and the Grazing Service in the Department of the Interior have been deterred only by congressional pressure from increasing grazing fees on Government-owned lands. The Office of Price Administration has held down ceiling prices on wool in the face of increasing costs of production, while the handling of lamb prices and lamb subsidies has been both uncertain and unrealistic.

The American wool grower, therefore, faces the postwar period with a much higher level of production costs than in the British Dominions and with a price structure both on wool and on meat that does not reflect these costs, with a tremendous world surplus of wool under British state management competing with him for the domestic market, and without any reason to believe that his own Government has any real understanding of or concern for his predicament. On the contrary, he has good reason to believe that his Government will not only make a large loan to Great Britain but may even follow that loan by granting additional tariff concessions on British wool and woolen imports.

In these circumstances, the domestic wool industry is declining. Indeed, so many growers have abandoned the business that in 1946 the United States will, it is estimated, produce scarcely more than 300,000,000 pounds of wool, as compared with a normal prewar production of 450,000,000 pounds. Yet wool is an essential commodity, and both the Army and the Navy call it a strategic necessity. It was so important to have wool in the United States that at the outbreak of World War II the British Government sought and obtained from this Government the right to establish a British stock pile here. Of this stock pile there now remains 286,000,000 pounds.

It is clear that unless the Government of the United States adopts a constructive long-term policy the very existence of the wool-growing industry in this country will be threatened. Further liquidation of domestic flocks will be injurious to the economy of many parts of the United States, particulary to the area in the West stretching from Mexico to Canada.

At the November hearings of the Senate Committee on Wool, several remedies were suggested, but it was clear that there was no agreement among the executive departments of the Government.

The State Department suggested the payment of subsidies to domestic producers. The Department of Agriculture declared its opposition to subsidies upon the ground that it is the policy of the administration to abandon all subsidy programs.

Upward revision of the tariff was suggested by some growers and some manufacturers, but this remedy was opposed by the State Department on the ground that it is not in harmony with the over-all policy of reducing trade barriers.

The imposition of import quotas was also opposed as contrary to basic policy and difficult of administration. Moreover, there is no agreement among American growers and American manufacturers with respect to this suggestion.

Another suggestion, which originated with Dean J. A. Hill of the University of Wyoming, and which was presented in different forms, would make the United States Government the sole purchaser of wool to be used in the United States, both foreign and domestic, and would give it the power to market the wools. This plan was criticized on the ground that it would institute a form of state-managed economy. It was defended on the ground that domestic wool can be marketed only in competition with a state-managed economy.

Another remedy was suggested by the National Wool Marketing Corporation. Under this plan the Commodity Credit Corporation would continue to purchase the domestic clip for a period as long as the United Kingdom continues to manage the handling and sale of British wool. Domestic wool would be purchased by the Commodity Credit Corporation at prices which reflect the domestic cost of production plus a reasonable profit. It would, however, sell to American manufacturers through normal trade channels at competitive prices. This would entail a loss to the Commodity Credit Corporation, which, it was proposed, could be reimbursed from tariff duties.

Failure upon the part of the Government of the United States to meet the world situation created by the world surplus and the British monopoly plan means disaster to so large a segment of our domestic economy that it is imperative for the United States to adopt a long-term policy. Representatives of all of the Government agencies having anything to do with wool or lamb responded promptly to the request of the committee to discuss the problem at its public hearings. Discussion, however, is not enough. It is essential that we should have a program. An effective program can be obtained only by cooperation between the Executive and the Congress. I, therefore, respectfully suggest that you request the Department of State, the Department of Agriculture, the Department of Commerce, the Department of the Interior, the Office of War Mobilization and Reorganization, the Office of Price Administration, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, the United States Tariff Commission, and the Federal Trade Commission to confer during the recess of Congress and be prepared to submit to the Wool Committee a joint plan to meet what every Government agency acknowledges to be a desperate situation.

PRESIDENT TRUMAN SUPPORTS LEGISLATION

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, the President of the United States supports the bill. A majority of the Members of the House supports it, and a majority of the Members of the Senate supports it. Because we have undertaken to cut away the power of the Commodity Credit Corporation to come to the assistance of the industries which are suffering from the postwar dislocation, and because we have been eliminating subsidies and payments of this kind, we are crippling the power of the Executive to act, so if Congress fails now we shall be condemning the wool industry.

Mr. President, at a later time I shall speak again upon this subject.

(At this point Mr. O'MAHONEY yielded to Mr. MEAD to discuss House bill 7, the anti-poll-tax bill, following which, the hour of 1 o'clock having arrived, the vote was taken on the motion to close debate on House bill 7.)

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I desire to ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD, in connection with the remarks I made earlier in the day with respect to the wool problem, a copy of the bill which was reported by the Committee on Agriculture of the House of Representatives, without printing the material that was stricken out, because I think that is not necessary. My request, therefore, is that there shall be printed in the RECORD the enacting clause, line 3 of H. R. 6043, and then the material which begins with section 2 on page 9.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the matter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That this act may be cited as the "Wool Act of 1946."

SEC. 2. (a) Beginning with wool produced in 1947, Commodity Credit Corporation is directed, through loans, purchases, or other operations, to so use the funds available to it as to support, during the period beginning January 1, 1947, and expiring 2 years after the 1st day of January immediately following the date upon which the President by proclamation or the Congress by concurrent resolution declares that hostilities in the present war have terminated, a price to producers of wool in the continental United States and Territories of not less than 90 percent of the comparable price for wool as of January of the year in which the wool is produced.

(b) Notwithstanding any other provisions hereof, the Commodity Credit Corporation may adjust support prices for individual grades and qualities of wool for the purpose of bringing about a fair and equitable relationship in the support prices for the various grades and qualities of wool; may make discounts from support prices for off-quality, inferior-grade, or poorly prepared wool; and may make discounts from support prices for the purpose of discouraging unsound marketing practices.

SEC. 3. The Secretary of Agriculture shall establish a comparable price for wool and a comparable price for lambs, respectively, and the comparable price so established shall be used for the purposes of all laws in which a parity or comparable price is established or used. The comparable price for wool and the comparable price for lambs, respectively, shall be that price which bears the same relation to the average parity prices of the basic agricultural commodities, cotton, corn, wheat, rice, tobacco, and peanuts as the actual price for wool or lambs, as the case may be, bore to the actual average prices of such basic commodities during the period August 1934 to July 1939. Such comparable price for wool or lambs may be adjusted for grade, quality, season, and location.

SEC. 4. The provisions of sections 385, 386, and 388 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938, as amended, shall be applicable to operations carried out pursuant to section 2 hereof.

SEC. 5. The Commodity Credit Corporation may, without regard to restrictions imposed upon it by any law, dispose of wool at prices which will permit such wool to be sold in competition with imported wool.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the minority views filed by me in connection with the special wool investigating committee be inserted in the RECORD following the matter inserted by the Senator from Wyoming.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair could not hear the request of the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, the Senator from Massachusetts merely requested that at the conclusion of my remarks, and of the material which I am putting into the RECORD, there shall be inserted the minority views filed by the Senator from Massachusetts in connection with the report of special wool committee. Of course, I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

ASPECTS OF BRITISH PROGRAM

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, during the course of my remarks I pointed out that the British Government had adopted a specific program for the protection of the Dominion's wool industry. I should like to insert in the RECORD at this point, merely by reading, one or two of the essential portions of the report which was filed by the British Government.

I read from page 1485 of the hearings of the Special Committee on Wool:

The stock of dominion-grown wool in the ownership of the United Kingdom Government at July 31, 1945, will be transferred to the joint ownership of the United Kingdom Government and the Dominion Government concerned, and all wool subsequently acquired under this scheme will be held in joint ownership. This wool will be held and disposed of by the joint organization referred to below.

2. A joint disposals organization will be set up forthwith for the purpose of—

And I ask Senators to listen to this very significant statement of the policy of the British Government—

A joint disposals organization will be set up forthwith for the purpose of buying, holding, and selling wool on behalf of the United Kingdom and the Dominion Governments concerned. As part of the plan, it will be required—

(a) To determine total quantities of wool to be offered from time to time concurrently in the Dominions and elsewhere—

"Elsewhere" includes the United States, of course —

To be made up of all new clip wool and an appropriate proportion of wool from the organization's stock.

(b) To prepare schedules of reserve prices at which the organization itself will be willing to acquire wool.

(c) To lift from the market such quantities of new wool as cannot be sold at these reserve prices.

(d) To hold and dispose of stocks as the agent of the Governments concerned and where necessary to acquire and own stores, plant, and equipment for this purpose.

(e) To facilitate the sale of wool in every way possible with a view to stimulating demand.

It is clear, Mr. President, from this paragraph that the Government of Great Britain has entered upon a broad program of conserving the wool of the British dominions and of marketing it wherever it may throughout the world, including the United States. Their eyes are turned upon the United States. This is demonstrated by the fact—and now I quote also from this British plan, page 1478 of the Senate hearings:

The estimate made by the U. S. A. Tariff Commission of postwar consumption is 25 percent more than prewar, viz: 750,000,000 pounds (greasy) of wool from all sources including domestic production, which would necessitate annual importation of some 300,000,000 pounds of Dominions and other wool.

Here we have the evidence from the British Government itself of the fact that it is depending upon the market of the United States in which to dispose of a large proportion of the wool. When this statement was prepared by the British Government, the estimate was for the importation of 300,000,000 pounds in a year. The figures which I have already read to the Senate at the opening of my remarks today show that the mills of the United States from January through April of this year have already used 213,000,000 pounds of wool, of which only 26,200,000 pounds are domestic wool.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I yield.

Mr. GEORGE. May I ask the Senator from Wyoming when this agreement in respect to British wool was made?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The date of the plan contained in hearings is May 29, 1945. It was some time after that that the actual action was taken.

Mr. GEORGE. But surely they have abandoned that plan, have they not, now that we have made the British loan for the purpose of encouraging and developing trade?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The Senator might naturally assume that, but it is not so. The British Government is serving the interest of the British wool producer.

THIRTEEN YEARS' SUPPLY OF BRITISH WOOL

The importance of this matter to the domestic wool industry is emphasized by this estimate which I read from the British report of the time that will be required to dispose of the huge British surplus. After reviewing the program, the report says on page 1479 of the Senate hearings:

If this aim is achieved the period required to dispose of existing stocks alongside new clips, at the estimated rate of future production, would be on the average 13 years from June 30, 1945.

Here is the record: There are overhanging the market 4,000,000,000 pounds of British wool which the British Government estimated it would take 13 years to dispose of. The British Government is fostering a plan to sell a large proportion of that wool annually in the United States, and the Senate and the House of Representatives are allowing themselves to be bogged down in the closing days of the Congress, refusing to take action to defend the wool growers of America. These are the facts, Mr. President.

I say that unless the Senate and the House act before this Congress is adjourned, wool growing in the United States will suffer irreparable damage. We cannot expect the wool growers of the United States unaided and alone to fight the British state monopoly. Oh, Mr. President, it is a matter of common sense. Let us come to the aid of this industry, which is such an important segment of the economy of the whole United States, and particularly of the 13 Western States from Texas to the Canadian border. If Congress fails, the wool growers will be dependent on the Executive alone.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I yield.

Mr. SMITH. The Senator not long ago raised the point that 16 Republicans voted for the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act, and seemed to imply from that that we are under some criticism, perhaps, for our attitude.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I do not criticize any Senator for his vote, and never have; but I mention the Republican support of the Reciprocal Trade Act because I say that fact is a complete answer to the argument which is being made to the wool growers that the solution of their problem is not to be found in the program which the committee offers, but is to be found in the raising of the tariff. Now I say two things: First, there is no tariff bill pending; and second, it has been the decision of the Congress over and over again to delegate away from the Congress the power to write tariffs; and 16 Republican United States Senators voted that way. I pointed out to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry that the last Republican candidate for the Presidency, Governor Dewey, of New York, speaking in my State in his campaign in 1944, said there that it was a Republican policy to initiate reciprocal trade agreements. He took credit for it.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield so I may make my position clear?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I gladly yield to the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. SMITH. I was one of those who voted for the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act, and I did so because I thought it was a better way to determine our trade policy. I have been in touch with Mr. Clayton, and I understand from him that there is to be held a conference with the British this fall on this very subject. I challenge the State Department to protect our wool industry for that very reason. That is why we have reciprocal trade agreements. We are not abandoning our policy of protection for our industries by voting for reciprocal trade agreements. We are simply adopting a method which we think is more effective than the old method of fixing tariffs in Congress. I do not yield to anyone who says that we are not protecting our industries, and cannot do so.

RECIPROCAL TRADE AGREEMENT POLICY

Mr. O'MAHONEY. When the Senator cast that vote he cast it with the knowledge that in all the reciprocal trade agreements which had been negotiated there was not one increase in a tariff rate. He cast that vote in the knowledge that the policy of reciprocal trade agreements has been carried out for the purpose of reducing and not increasing tariffs.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Let me add another word.

Mr. SMITH. I should like to make my position entirely clear.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The Senator will have his time.

It is of the utmost importance to bear in mind the fact that not only have there been no increases in tariffs but in addition there never has been any indication that an increased tariff could be secured, nor has one been proposed.

Mr. SMITH. I should like very much to make my position entirely clear.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Of course, the Senator should.

Mr. SMITH. I voted for the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act because I felt that it was moving toward international collaboration in postwar world trade. I still believe that it is the right way to deal with the whole tariff question. There was no assurance that there would never be another increase. The law itself permits increases when increases are desirable.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. There is no doubt about it.

Mr. SMITH. The State Department has the responsibility of protecting our industries.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I appreciate the deep sincerity of the Senator from New Jersey. I respect the opinion which he holds. I myself believe that it would facilitate world trade to have the executive department negotiate these agreements. I have no objection to that. But what I have seriously objected to is the delegation away from Congress of the right to approve such agreements. Every time the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act was presented on this floor, from the time it was first presented, and every time an extension has been asked, I have urged that before the agreements become effective they should be filed with the Congress of the United States, so that the Senator from New Jersey, the Senator from Wyoming, the Senator from Oregon, and Senators from every other State in the Union may know, on behalf of their people, what is being done. But when the Senate of the United States voted down the amendment which I offered to make these agreements effective only upon approval by the Congress, the Senate voted to delegate away the constitutional power which the Congress has to levy tariffs. So as I see it, as a matter of plain ordinary common sense, it is idle to try to encourage any distressed industry in the United States by saying that reciprocal-trade agreements, negotiated by the executive department, constitute a very scientific method of handling international trade. What the wool industry needs is aid now. Congress has surrendered its power to fix tariffs, and in these circumstances there is no practical method of aiding the wool growers except through the method that I have suggested.

Mr. SMITH. That is a debatable question. I grant that.

My understanding with the State Department has been distinctly that no question will be taken up affecting any industry in my State—and we have a textile industry which involves the very question the Senator is discussing—without our having a full hearing and an opportunity to present our case. I propose to protect those industries on the floor of this Senate if necessary.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I am very happy to have the Senator say so. That prompts me to add that from 1934 up to this hour I have taken the position with the State Department that the tariff on wool should not be reduced; and I am glad to be able to say that to this moment it has not been reduced. But I am not a prophet. I do not know what will happen next year or the year after.

Mr. SMITH. I understand the Senator's position to be that because he feels that it may be reduced, he thinks the Government ought to subsidize the industry to keep it alive. Is that the position which he takes? I wish to understand the Senator's position clearly.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. If the Senator regards it as a subsidy, I shall accept that designation. I say that the Government of the United States should be authorized to continue the program which it carried on during the war, of buying the domestic clip at or near the parity price, so that the industry may be protected from the huge accumulation of foreign wool which we are teaching the mills of the United States to use, to our detriment. We allowed great accumulations of British wools to be piled up in the United States because German submarines and the Japanese Navy were threatening the Australian, South African, and New Zealand sources of wool for Great Britain. We made that concession in the interest of preserving the principle of free government in this world against Hitler and Mussolini, and those great accumulations were piled up. American mills are now using more and more foreign wool, to the detriment of the American wool producer.

I should like to be able to enlist the support of the Senator from New Jersey for the program which I have sponsored. There is no danger that it will injure free enterprise; it will not. It will preserve the free enterprise of the sheep growers of the West and of other areas of the United States. It will give them an opportunity to meet the great dangers of the postwar world. It will make it possible for them to rely to a certain limited extent upon their government, while the producers of Australia, New Zealand, and South Africa are relying upon the government of Great Britain to market their product.

Let me add that I am given to understand—I cannot say this upon final authority because I have not had the opportunity to investigate—that the British Government is trying to stimulate the production of wool in England itself, in spite of the fact that there is an accumulation of 4,000,000,000 pounds of wool.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for one further question?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I yield.

Mr. SMITH. Will the distinguished Senator agree with me that it is distinctly the responsibility of the Executive through the State Department in negotiating trade agreements to protect our American industrial position?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Of course. I have said so over and over again. I have appeared before the Committee on Finance to make that statement. There has never been a time when I denied it. I believe that the executive branch of the Federal Government should not barter away any industry. However, in the case before us the President of the United States has formally sponsored the measure which was submitted to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. That measure has been whittled down until now, upon the calendar of the House, it is but a shell of its former self, and merely means a continuation of the program which was carried on by Executive action during the war. There is certainly serious danger that it may not be continued without legislation because in our passion to cut down subsidies we are depriving Government agencies of the power to come to the financial aid of American industries which are in distress.

Mr. REVERCOMB. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I yield to the Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. REVERCOMB. As a preface to a question which I wish to ask the able Senator from Wyoming, let me say that I am one of those Senators who voted against the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act, and its extension. I spoke at length on the floor against it. I did so because I saw the very question which is being discussed here arising not only as to wool, but as to many other articles produced or manufactured in this country.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The Senator and I were in accord on that point.

Mr. REVERCOMB. The question will arise time after time when the industry and the workers of this country are brought into competition with the production of other countries. Time after time the able Senator has made reference to the fact that 16 Republican Senators supported the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act, and 17 voted against it. I was one of the 17 who voted against it.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. That is correct.

Mr. REVERCOMB. How many Democratic Senators voted for the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. O Mr. President——

Mr. REVERCOMB. Will the Senator answer the question?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Of course, the Democratic administration is responsible for the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act. I do not deny that.

Mr. REVERCOMB. How many Democratic Senators voted for it?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I do not know. I presume a majority.

Mr. REVERCOMB. More than 16 Democratic Senators voted for it.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Of course; and probably a larger proportion of Democratic Senators voted for it than was the case among the Republicans. That is not the point. I mentioned those facts not to criticize any Senator, not to criticize the Republican Party, but merely to point out that the wool growers of the United States cannot depend upon tariffs for relief. Here they are liquidating. What are we going to do about it? That is the question.

Mr. REVERCOMB. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Certainly.

Mr. REVERCOMB. The Senator made the point, time after time, about the partisan vote on that question. So I think the RECORD should be entirely clear in regard to that matter. I believe that the Senator from Wyoming now admits that more Democratic Senators than Republican Senators voted for the extension of the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act, and voted for the proposition to prevent the Senate from voting on those agreements.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Yes. And Governor Dewey, in his campaign for the Presidency on the Republican ticket stated that it was a virtue that the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act was passed, and he said it was a Republican policy.

Mr. REVERCOMB. Mr. President, will the Senator further yield?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I yield.

Mr. REVERCOMB. And the Senator also knows that the President of the United States not only said that the plan was his plan, but he came to the Senate with that plan, and it was supported by his party, Is not that correct?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Certainly that is correct. I have never denied it. The only thing that is worth noting about this matter, I say to the Senator from West Virginia, is that he and I were outvoted, and Republicans and Democrats alike declared it to be the policy of the Congress to delegate away the congressional power to fix tariff rates. This Congress declared for reciprocal agreements. That is the law.

We may like it or not. The Senator from West Virginia and I do not like it. But here it is. It is the fact that is staring us in the face. We must accommodate ourselves to the facts.

So when anyone says to me, "The proper way to save this industry which is now perishing is to increase the tariff," I say that is merely talking in illusory terms because Democrats and Republicans have voted to give up the tariff-making power of Congress.

Mr. REVERCOMB. Mr. President, will the Senator further yield?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I yield.

Mr. REVERCOMB. But when we come down to the question of votes and the question of who voted for what, inasmuch as the point has been brought up by the able Senator, we must conclude that more members of his party voted for the situation in which we find ourselves now, than did Senators on this side of the aisle. Is not that correct?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Yes, of course it is correct. But that is not the point. The point is that having given away our power over the tariff, we must use the means at hand to defend the industries of our States. I have offered the bill to defend the domestic wool industry and it has been endorsed by woolgrowers everywhere.

Mr. President, I ask to have printed at this point in the RECORD, as a part of my remarks, the report which I filed to accompany Senate bill 2033, on behalf of the majority of the Special Committee for the Investigation of the Production, Transportation, and Marketing of Wool.

There being no objection, the report was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

PROVIDING SUPPORT FOR WOOL, AMENDING THE AGRICULTURAL MARKETING AGREEMENT ACT OF 1937, AND PROVIDING FOR WOOL STANDARDS, AND FOR OTHER PURPOSES

The Special Committee for Investigation of the Production, Transportation, and Marketing of Wool, to whom was referred for preliminary report the bill (S. 2033) to provide support for wool, to amend the Agricultural Marketing Agreement Act of 1937 by including wool as a commodity to which orders under such act are applicable, to authorize the Secretary of Agriculture to fix wool standards, and for other purposes, have considered the same and report favorably thereon with amendments and recommend that the bill do pass.

This measure is an outgrowth of an intensive study of the problems of producing, transporting, and marketing wool conducted by this committee under the instruction of the Senate as contained in Senate Resolution 160, Seventy-fourth Congress; Senate Resolution 12 of the Seventy-eighth Congress; and Senate Resolution 58 of the Seventy-ninth Congress. The proceedings of this committee have developed the following facts with respect to the domestic wool industry:

1. Wool is a highly essential commodity of which the United States produces considerably less than it consumes.

2. The world supply of wool exceeding 4,000,000,000 pounds cannot be consumed, according to the best estimates, in less than 10 or 12 years.

3. Most of this world surplus of wool being the product of the British Dominions, Australia, New Zealand, and South Africa, is being handled by the British Government in cooperation with the three Dominions.

4. The United States is the world's greatest market for wool and, since the British Dominions consume only a fraction of the amount they produce, the natural objective of British Government policy is to sell British wool in the United States in the largest possible amounts.

5. Production costs in the United States are much higher than the production costs in other wool-producing areas.

6. The domestic wool industry has been declining to such an extent that sheep numbers in the United States during the past 4 years have been reduced by approximately 25 percent.

7. During the war in order to prevent the complete liquidation of the domestic industry and thereby cut off domestic supplies of wool and of lamb, the Commodity Credit Corporation, under congressional authorization, has been purchasing the entire domestic production, but only on a year-to-year basis.

In these circumstances a long-term Government program designed to support the wool industry has been regarded as essential. Wool growers normally have depended upon the tariff to equalize the costs of production at home and abroad. The present tariff, however, is not sufficient to cover that gap. No tariff legislation is under consideration by Congress and there is no present prospect of any remedy by this route. This special committee has explored every avenue of relief. Its chairman, following the thoroughgoing hearings held during November and December at which every branch of the industry was given opportunity to testify, as well as representatives of all Government departments having any function with respect to wool, requested the President of the United States to direct the Government agencies to cooperate with the committee in devising an effective and constructive wool program. The bill, S. 2033, was the result of the conferences directed by the President in response to this request.

This bill was drawn upon the basis of a memorandum transmitted to the chairman of the Wool Committee by President Truman on March 11, 1946, and set forth in Senate Document 140 (79th Cong., 2d sess.). Not only were the Government agencies consulted in the drafting of the bill, but so also were the representatives of the industry, particularly representatives of the National Wool Growers Association and of the Wyoming Wool Growers Association.

The measure has been analyzed by the committee at open public hearings and, in the form in which it is here recommended, it is laid before the Senate for consideration by the Committee on Agriculture with the official endorsement of the wool growers of the United States as represented by 37 associations representing the producing industry. Not only has the National Wool Growers Association recommended it, but so also have the following associations: Arizona Wool Growers Association, Phoenix, Ariz.; Ashley Wool Growers Association, Vernal, Utah; Baker County Wool Growers Association, Baker, Oreg.; California Wool Growers Association, San Francisco, Calif.; Carten County Wool Growers Association, Albian, Mont.; Central Wool Marketing Association, Chinook, Mont.; Chicago-Midwest Wool Trade Association, Chicago, Ill.; Colorado-Nebraska Lamb Feeders Association, Greeley, Colo.; Colorado Wool Growers Association, Denver, Colo.; Colorado Wool Marketing Association, Denver, Colo.; Cooperative Wool Growers of South Dakota and Minnesota, Minneapolis, Minn.; Garfield County Sheepmen's Association, Miles City, Mont.; Gill County Stock Growers Association, Havre, Mont.; Idaho Wool Growers Association, Boise, Idaho; Indiana Wool Growers Association, Indianapolis, Ind.; Michigan Cooperative Wool Marketing Association, Jackson, Mich.; Moffat Wool Growers Association, Craig, Colo.; Montana Wool Growers Association, Helena, Mont.; National Wool Growers Association, Salt Lake City, Utah; National Wool and Mohair Association, Oklahoma City, Okla.; National Wool Marketing Association, Boston, Mass.; North Park Wool Growers Association, Walden, Colo.; Oregon Wool Growers Association, Portland, Oreg.; Pacific Wool Growers, Portland, Oreg.; Robinette Wool Pool, Richmond, Oreg.; San Joaquin Valley District Wool Growers, Fresno, Calif.; Santa Ana Wool Association, Santa Ana, Calif.; San Juan Wool Growers Association, Aztec, N. Mex.; Texas Sheep and Goat Raisers Association, San Angelo, Tex.; United Wool Growers Association, Harrisonburg, Va.; Upper Mussel Sheep Wool Growers Association, Harlowton, Mont.; Utah Wool Growers Association, Salt Lake City, Utah; Washington Wool Growers Association, Yakima, Wash.; Western South Dakota Sheep Growers Association, Rapid City, S. Dak; Wyoming Cooperative Wool Marketing Association, Casper, Wyo.; Wyoming Production Credit Association, Casper, Wyo.; Wyoming Wool Growers Association, McKinley, Wyo.

The bill as amended is regarded by the majority of the committee as the most practicable remedy for an admittedly desperate problem.

DESCRIPTION OF THE BILL

There follows description of the bill:

Section 1 provides that the act may be cited as the "Wool Act of 1946."

Section 2 directs that beginning with the wool produced in 1947 Commodity Credit Corporation shall provide for wool through loans, purchases, support payments, or other operations. The support level until 2 years after the war will, consistent with the general support level under section 8 of the Stabilization Act of 1942 (50 U. S. C. App., sec. 968 (Supp. IV)), for the basic agricultural commodities—cotton, corn, wheat, rice, tobacco, and peanuts—be 90 percent of the comparable price of wool. Thereafter the support level will, consistent with the general support level during such period under sections 302 and 359 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938, as amended (7 U. S. C., secs. 1302, 1359 (1940)), for cotton, corn, wheat, and peanuts be not less than 50 percent and not more than 75 percent of the comparable price as determined by the Secretary of Agriculture. Until December 31, 1950, however, the level at which wool prices are supported shall not be reduced below that at which the Commodity Credit Corporation is supporting wool during 1946 under its current wool purchase program. In adjusting the support price or reducing it to the support level above stated after December 31, 1950, the support price will not be reduced more than 6 percent in any 1 year. The bill, as originally introduced, provided for support for only shorn wool. Your committee felt, however, that support should be provided for both shorn and pulled wool and has amended the bill accordingly. Furthermore, the bill, as originally introduced, provided that the present minimum support level would be continued only until sheep numbers in the United States had ceased to decline. It is felt that the present minimum support level should be continued until December 31, 1950. An amendment to this effect has been made in the bill. The original bill further provided that after the period for the present minimum support expired the rate in reduction of the support level should not be more than 8 percent in any 1 year. Your committee felt that this reduction should not exceed 6 percent and has amended the bill accordingly.

Subsection (b) of section 2 will permit the Commodity Credit Corporation to adjust support prices for individual grades and qualities of wool in order to bring about a fair and equitable relationship in the support prices for the various grades and qualities of wool. Subsection (b) will also permit the Commodity Credit Corporation to make discounts from the support prices for off-quality, inferior grade, or poorly prepared wool, or for the purpose of discouraging unsound marketing practices.

Section 3 directs that the Secretary of Agriculture shall establish a comparable price for wool and a comparable price for lambs, respectively, and that the comparable price so established shall be used for the purposes of all laws in which a parity or comparable price is established or used. The comparable price directed to be established is that price which bears the same relation to the average parity prices of the basic agricultural commodities—cotton, corn, wheat, rice, tobacco, and peanuts—as the actual price for wool or lambs, as the case may be, bore to the actual average prices of such basic commodities during the period August 1934 to July 1939. This is the same manner in which comparable prices have been established for certain nonbasic agricultural commodities, such as soybeans, under section 4 (a) of the act entitled "An act to extend the life and increase the credit resources of the Commodity Credit Corporation and for other purposes," approved July 1, 1941, commonly referred to as the "Steagall amendment." The comparable price of wool as of January 1946 was 40.4 cents per pound of grease wool and the comparable price of lambs of January 1946 was $13.10 a hundredweight. The bill, as originally introduced, did not provide for the establishment of a comparable price for lambs. However, since the agricultural problems in connection with lambs are closely connected with the wool problem, it was felt that since the bill established a comparable price for wool that a comparable price should also be established for lambs. The bill, accordingly, provides for establishment of such a comparable price for lambs. In addition, the committee has provided by amendment that the comparable price for wool and lambs is to be used for the purposes of all laws in which a parity or comparable price is established are used.

Section 4 provides that if the Commodity Credit Corporation uses support payments, the rate of the support payment shall be an amount which, together with the average farm price for wool for the 7 months—January through July—of the year, will provide producers an average return equal to the required support level. Section 4 provides further that support payments may be limited to wool sold by the producers during the year it is produced.

Section 5 makes applicable to the operations under the bill sections 385, 386, and 388 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938. Section 385 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938 provides that the facts constituting the basis for any payment or loan, or the amount thereof, when officially determined in conformity with the applicable regulations prescribed by the Secretary of Agriculture or by the Commodity Credit Corporation, shall be final and conclusive and shall not be reviewable by any other officer or agency of the Government. Section 385 provides further that in case any person who is entitled to any such payment dies, becomes incompetent, or disappears before receiving such payment, or is succeeded by another who renders or completes the required performance, the payment shall, without regard to any other provisions of law, be made as the Secretary of Agriculture may determine to be fair and reasonable in all the circumstances. Section 386 provides that if the statutes prohibiting Members of Congress from benefiting from public contracts—section 3741 of the Revised Statutes and sections 114 and 115 of the Criminal Code of the United States—shall not be applicable to loans or payments made under the act. Section 386 authorizes the use of local, county, and State committees in carrying out the act and authorizes the deduction of amounts to cover administrative expenses incurred by such committees from the payments or loans made to producers.

Section 6 provides that the Commodity Credit Corporation may, without regard to restrictions imposed upon it by any law, dispose of wool at prices which will permit such wool to be sold in competition with imported wool. Under existing restrictions, Commodity Credit Corporation is not, in general, permitted to sell agricultural commodities at less than the parity or comparable price for the commodity. Authority to sell wool below such price will be necessary in order to enable Commodity Credit Corporation to dispose of its stocks of wool.

Section 7 appropriates and makes available to the Secretary of Agriculture, to reimburse the Commodity Credit Corporation for losses sustained under the act, a portion of the proceeds derived from duties collected under the customs laws.

Section 8 amends the Agricultural Marketing Agreement Act of 1937 to include wool as a commodity to which marketing orders under such act may be made applicable.

Section 9 authorizes the Secretary to expand and intensify research and to engage in demonstration work as to all aspects of the wool and mohair problem. Some of the authority here provided is contained in the Organic Act of 1862, or other authorizing laws, but is subject to various limitations and authorization restrictions. In addition to emphasizing the research in this particular field, this section would also authorize necessary demonstration work, the establishment of new facilities, and for authority to utilize the services of existing research institutions. Section 9 also authorizes the Secretary to appoint a Wool Advisory Committee representing public and private agencies interested in any phase of the wool industry, to hold conferences with said committee or subcommittees thereof, and to receive and consider the recommendations of said committee for wool research programs and other operations under this section. The original bill did not provide for the Wool Advisory Committee. However, your committee amended the bill to include such a committee since it is felt that such a committee would be helpful in developing research with respect to wool.

Section 10 authorizes the Secretary of Agriculture, after investigation and due notice and opportunity for hearing, to fix official standards for wool and mohair. Section 10 also authorizes the Secretary of Agriculture to determine the true grade, shrinkage, or clean content of samples of wool submitted for that purpose and make reasonable charges therefor. Such determinations become binding on all officers of the United States except for the purposes of the assessment and collection of customs duties and become prima facie evidence in the courts of the United States. The bill, as originally introduced which provided that the determinations of the Secretary become binding on all officers of the United States was amended to make an exception in the case of the assessment and collection of customs duties. Section 10 authorizes the Secretary, further, to effectuate agreements with domestic, foreign, or international wool and mohair organizations for the adoption of universal standards of wool and mohair grades.

Section 11 authorizes appropriations for carrying out sections 9 and 10.

The committee also made certain amendments for the purpose of clarifying the language of the bill, which have been incorporated in the amendment in the nature of a substitute for the bill.

The report of the Secretary of Agriculture follows:

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
Washington, May 10, 1946.

Hon. JOSEPH C. O'MAHONEY,
United States Senate.

DEAR SENATOR: This is in response to your request for a report on S. 2033 a bill to provide support for wool, to amend the Agricultural Marketing Act of 1937 by including wool as a commodity to which orders under such act are applicable to authorize the Secretary of Agriculture to fix wool standards, and for other purposes.

Following the extensive hearings by your committee on the production, transportation, and marketing of wool, the President, at your request, had the interested executive agencies review the facts and proposals for dealing with the situation. The 25-percent decline in domestic sheep numbers in the past 4 years and the many other problems facing the industry show clearly that a wool program is needed. Major attention, therefore, was directed to the method of dealing with the situation. Several methods were proposed to your committee.

The study resulted in the plan submitted to you by the President in his letter of March 11. It is believed that S. 2033, which you have introduced, is consistent with the President's proposal and will afford producers effective price and income protection and other constructive assistance which is needed to bring stability into the wool growing industry. Moreover, it is believed that these benefits can be derived under the program with a minimum of Government participation in wool buying and selling operations or interference with international trade.

The general objectives of the bill may be divided into four parts; the protection of incomes of wool growers; the authorization for the issuance of orders under the Marketing Agreement Act of 1937 with respect to wool; the undertaking of research and developmental work; and the furtherance of standardization work on wool and mohair.

The incomes of wool producers would be protected through loans, purchases, or support payments at the same level as that generally afforded producers of the basic agricultural commodities. The first requirement for the accomplishment of this objective is the establishment of a comparable, or revised parity, price as provided for in section 3 of the bill. This revision is necessary to afford an appropriate basis for determining when prices to wool growers are in fair balance with prices of other agricultural commodities. The desired level of price support could be obtained through purchase programs, such as those in effect since April 1943, or loan programs, such as those in effect in 1938 and 1939. Provision is also made for insuring incomes by making support payments equal to the amounts by which the average farm price falls below the level required to be supported. This procedure may become desirable when the wool surplus is sold and conditions become sufficiently stabilized to insure uniform market support to growers without direct governmental participation in the handling of wool.

The bill aims to give wool growers the same general degree of price protection as that afforded producers of basic agricultural commodities, but two exceptions are made for the special benefit of wool growers. The first exception provides that substantially the same level of support prices provided for the 1946 clip shall be continued until sheep numbers become stabilized. The 1946 prices are approximately 100 percent of the proposed comparable price. In view of the major reduction in sheep numbers during the past 4 years, the bill proposes that the Government refrain from reducing support prices and thereby adding to the producer's difficulty until the decline has stopped. Naturally, it is not known at what level sheep numbers will become stabilized, but stability and profitable operations may occur at any level.

The reduction in sheep numbers has given assurance of future strength in the lamb part of the industry and when stock sheep numbers start to expand it may be concluded that the industry as a whole will be in as sound a position as the rest of agriculture. Naturally, after that condition is reached wool growers should be treated the same as the rest of agriculture.

The second exception provides that the price supported or return assured to producers of the wool clip shorn in any year shall not be reduced by more than 8 percent below the price supported or return assured to producers of the wool clip shorn in the immediately preceding year. This limitation on the amount of reduction that can be made in any one year recognizes the peculiar conditions confronting sheep growers and the fact that livestock industries can be expanded or contracted only slowly.

The 1946 level of wool support prices is roughly equal to the comparable price the bill would establish. Prior to the war, the level of support prices for basic agricultural commodities was generally 50 to 75 percent of parity. This has been increased to 90 percent of parity (92½ percent for cotton) for the period "* * * after December 31, 1941, and before the expiration of the 2-year period beginning with the 1st day of January immediately following the date upon which the President by proclamation or the Congress by concurrent resolution declares that hostilities in the present war have terminated, * * *" (See Stabilization Act of 1942 (56 Stat. 767 (1942), 50 U. S. C. App. sec. 968 (a) Supp IV), as amended by the Stabilization Extension Act of 1944, Public Law 383, 78th Cong., 2d sess. (June 30, 1944) sec. 204.)

An essential part of the price supporting provision is the authorization contained in section 6 for the Corporation to sell without regard to restrictions imposed upon it by law at prices which will permit such wool to be sold in competition with imported wool. Ordinarily, the Corporation is not permitted to sell its products domestically at less than parity or comparable prices. Wool is on an import basis, and through operations of the tariff prices in this country are maintained at levels well above world prices. Nevertheless, since a domestic wool program cannot fix the level of world prices and since such prices cannot be expected to maintain a constant relationship with United States parity prices, it is essential that the Corporation have the right to dispose of its wool at competitive prices within this country.

Section 7 provides that a sufficient part of the proceeds derived from duties collected under the customs laws is authorized to be appropriated and made available to the Secretary of Agriculture for payment to the Corporation to reimburse the Corporation for losses realized by it, including the amount of any support payments, in connection with operations carried out pursuant to the price and income support provisions of the bill. With this provision sheep raisers could plan their future operations with greater confidence than would be possible if they were dependent upon annual appropriations.

Section 8 of the bill would permit wool growers and handlers to utilize the marketing agreements and orders provided for in the Agricultural Marketing Agreement Act of 1937. Programs under that act may provide for volume, grade, or size regulation, and, also, prohibit unfair trade practices in order to carry out the intended purposes of the bill to reflect proper returns to growers. The act, as incorporated in the bill, would also permit the establishment of a surplus pool for wool. It is believed that growers should be authorized clearly to utilize the provisions of the Agricultural Marketing Agreement Act, including orders thereunder, if they so desire in formulating programs for the solutions of their problems during the postwar period.

In recent years the production of shorn wool has ranged from around 320 to 390 million pounds and the production of pulled wool from 65 to 70 million pounds annually. The average value of the wool clip has been around $150,000,000 per year, and the production of pulled wool accounts for a significant portion of the returns of approximately $300,000,000 annually received by growers from the sale of sheep and lambs. In view of the importance of the industry it is believed that provision should be made for adequate research and demonstration work with respect to the production, marketing, and utilization of wool and its products. Closely related products which also require such work are mohair, sheep pelts, and goat pelts. In recent years many new and improved processes and products have been introduced. These require development and exploitation in the interests of growers, manufacturers, and consumers. Work in these fields should be pressed forward continuously. It is believed that the authority granted under section 9 of the bill, when implemented, would enable the Department to carry out the research and developmental work needed by the wool and mohair industries.

The Department of Agriculture has carried out certain standardization work under existing legislation. However, the authority contained in section 10 of the bill would give a more adequate basis for such work and would place specific responsibility upon the Department of Agriculture to carry out this work. The continuing and thorough standardization work provided for under section 10 in conjunction with the work provided for under section 9 on production, marketing, and utilization, should make the standardization work more adequate in meeting the requirements of producers, handlers, and manufacturers. It should be observed that full consideration of the position of various groups is insured by the requirement that the Secretary of Agriculture give due notice and opportunity for hearing prior to the fixing or establishment of types and standards. Provision is also made for the examination and issuance of certificates of the true type, grade, or comparison of samples of wool, mohair, or tops, and for the furnishing of practical forms of official wool and mohair standards by the Department on a reimbursable basis. The Secretary of Agriculture would also be authorized to effectuate agreements with domestic, foreign, or international wool or mohair organizations for the development, adoption, and use of universal standards.

Funds for carrying out the research, developmental, and standardization work provided for in sections 9 and 10 of the bill are authorized to be appropriated annually.

There is attached a revised draft of the bill which contains certain clarifying changes in wording, suggested by the Office of the Solicitor, together with a detailed explanation of such suggested changes. With the suggested changes, the Department recommends that the bill be passed.

The Director of the Bureau of the Budget has advised this Department as follows:

"The proposed report and the bill are generally in accord with the President's program, as shown by his letter to Senator O'MAHONEY of March 11, 1946 (S. Doc. 140, 79th Cong., 2d sess.).

"There is however, one provision in the bill which was not included in the statement approved by the President with respect to the legislation necessary to carry out the proposed wool program, and which could not be considered by this office as an appropriate provision for incorporation in the measure. The last sentence of section 10 (d) (lines 16, 17, 18, and 19, p. 8) which reads as follows:

" 'The amounts collected therefrom and the amounts collected pursuant to subsection provides what is known as a permanent indefinite appropriation of receipts. Such a permanent appropriation would preclude any subsequent annual or other review of the use of these collections, by this office, by the President, by the Appropriations Committees of Congress, or by the Congress itself. Such legislation would run counter to the spirit of the Permanent Appropriation Repeal Act, and would not be in accord with the program of the President. Moreover, this provision in section 10 of the bill is inconsistent with section 11 of the bill since section 11 specifically provides that the funds for carrying out the provisions of section 10 of the bill are to be appropriated from the general fund of the Treasury."

(c) of this section shall be used by the Secretary in paying expenses of the Department of Agriculture in connection with this section.'

Sincerely yours,

CLINTON P. ANDERSON,
Secretary.

The text of the bill as recommended by the committee follows:

"A bill to provide support for wool, to amend the Agricultural Marketing Agreement Act of 1937 by including wool as a commodity to which orders under such act are applicable, to authorize the Secretary of Agriculture to fix wool standards, and for other purposes

"Be it enacted, etc., That this act may be cited as the 'Wool Act of 1946.'

"SEC. 2. (a) Beginning with wool produced in 1947, Commodity Credit Corporation is directed, through loans, purchases, support payments, or other operations to support a price or assure returns to producers of wool in the continental United States and Territories at levels as follows: The support level for wool produced each year during the period beginning January 1, 1947, and expiring 2 years after the first day of January immediately following the date upon which the President by proclamation or the Congress by concurrent resolution declares that hostilities in the present war have terminated shall be 90 percent of the comparable price for wool as of January of the year in which the wool is produced; and the support level for wool produced after the expiration of such period shall be not less than 50 per cent and not more than 75 percent of such comparable price, as determined by the Secretary of Agriculture: Provided, however, That prior to December 31, 1950, the price supported or returns assured producers of wool shall be not less than the price at which the Commodity Credit Corporation has undertaken to support wool in 1946. And provided further, That after December 31, 1950, the price supported or returns assured to producers of wool in any year shall not be reduced by more than 6 percent below the price supported or returns assured to producers of wool in the immediately preceding year.

"(b) Notwithstanding any other provisions hereof, the Commodity Credit Corporation may adjust support prices for individual grades and qualities of wool for the purpose of bringing about a fair and equitable relationship in the support prices for the various grades and qualities of wool; may make discounts from support prices for off-quality, inferior-grade, or poorly prepared, wool; and may make discounts from support prices for the purpose of discouraging unsound marketing practices.

"SEC. 3. The Secretary of Agriculture shall establish a comparable price for wool and a comparable price for lambs, respectively, and the comparable price so established shall be used for the purposes of all laws in which a parity or comparable price is established or used. The comparable price for wool and the comparable price for lambs, respectively, shall be that price which bears the same relation to the average parity prices of the basic agricultural commodities, cotton, corn, wheat, rice, tobacco, and peanuts, as the actual price for wool or lambs, as the case may be, bore to the actual average prices of such basic commodities during the period August 1934 to July 1939. Such comparable price for wool or lambs may be adjusted for grade, quality, season, and location.

"SEC. 4. If, pursuant to section 2 hereof, the Commodity Credit Corporation supports returns to producers of wool in any year through support payments, the rate of the support payment shall be an amount which, together with the average farm price for wool for the 7 months, January through July, of such year will, as determined by the Secretary of Agriculture, provide producers an average return equal to the support level. Support payments for wool produced during any year may be limited to wool sold by producers during such year.

"SEC. 5. The provisions of sections 385, 386, and 388 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938, as amended, shall be applicable to operations carried out pursuant to section 2 hereof.

"SEC. 6. The Commodity Credit Corporation may, without regard to restrictions imposed upon it by any law, dispose of wool at prices which will permit such wool to be sold in competition with imported wool.

"SEC. 7. Such part of the proceeds derived from duties collected under the customs laws on and after the enactment of this act as is necessary from time to time, as determined by the Secretary of Agriculture, to reimburse the Commodity Credit Corporation for losses realized by it, including the amount of any support payments, in connection with operations carried out pursuant to the provisions of sections 2 to 6, inclusive, of this act are hereby authorized to be appropriated and conferred upon the Secretary of Agriculture for payment to the Commodity Credit Corporation.

"SEC. 8. The Agricultural Adjustment Act, as amended and as reenacted and amended by the Agricultural Marketing Agreement Act of 1937, is further amended as follows:

"(a) By adding at the end of section 2 (7 U. S. C., 1940 edition, 602) the following:

"'(3) Through the exercise of the powers conferred upon the Secretary of Agriculture under this chapter to establish and maintain such orderly marketing conditions for wool in interstate commerce as will establish prices to producers of wool at the comparable price level for wool as set forth in section 3 of the Wool Act of 1946, but the interest of the consumers shall be protected by (a) approaching the level of prices which it is declared to be the policy of Congress to establish with respect to wool by gradual correction of the current level at as rapid a rate as the Secretary of Agriculture deems to be in the public interest and feasible in view of the current consumptive demand in domestic and foreign markets, and (b) authorizing no action hereunder which has for its purpose the maintenance of prices to producers of wool above the level which it is declared to be the policy of Congress to establish with respect to wool.'

"(b) By inserting in section 8 (c) (7 U. S. C., 1940 edition, 608c (2)) the word 'wool' immediately after the word 'hops.'

"(c) By inserting in section 8c (6) (7 U. S. C., 1940 ed., 608c (6)) the word 'wool' immediately after the word 'hops.'

"SEC. 9. The Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to expand and intensify research and studies, and to engage in demonstration work, as to problems relating to the production, processing, preparation, manufacturing, standardization, grading, marketing, and utilization of wool, mohair, sheep pelts, goat pelts, and products thereof, including studies of competing materials and manufactures and including the establishment and maintenance of laboratories and pilot plants. In carrying out such studies, research, and other operations, the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to cooperate with and enter into contracts with public and private organizations. The Secretary of Agriculture is further authorized to appoint a wool advisory committee representing public and private agencies interested in any phase of the wool industry, to hold conferences with said committee or subcommittees thereof, and to receive and consider the recommendations of said committee for wool-research programs and other operations under this section. The authority provided for herein shall be in addition to, and not exclusive of, any authority under existing law.

"SEC. 10. (a) The Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized, after investigation and due notice and opportunity for a hearing, to fix and establish types and standards of quality and condition for the grading of wool, mohair, wool tops, and mohair tops and to conduct tests for the shrinkage, clean content, length and fineness of fiber, and any other characteristics of wool, mohair, wool tops, and mohair tops. The standards fixed and established by the Secretary as provided herein shall be published in the Federal Register and 60 days after such publication shall become and be the Official Wool and Mohair Standards of the United States, and such official standards shall be substituted for and be used in lieu of any official wool or mohair standards heretofore established by the Secretary of Agriculture under the provisions of any existing law. The Secretary of Agriculture shall have the power to alter or modify, after investigation and due notice and opportunity for a hearing, such official standards whenever the necessities of the trade may require and such alterations or modifications shall likewise become effective 60 days after publication thereof in the Federal Register.

"(b) Any person who has custody of or a financial interest in any wool, mohair, or tops therefrom may submit the same or samples thereof, drawn in accordance with the rules and regulations of the Secretary of Agriculture, to such officer or officers of the Department of Agriculture, as may be designated for the purpose pursuant to the rules and regulations of the Secretary of Agriculture, for a determination of the true grade, shrinkage, or clean content, including the comparison thereof, if requested, with types or with other samples submitted for the purpose. Except for the purposes of the assessment and collection of customs duties the final certificate of the Department of Agriculture showing such determination shall be binding on officers of the United States and shall be accepted in the courts of the United States as prima facie evidence of the true type grade, shrinkage, clean content, or comparison thereof when involved in any transaction or shipment in commerce. The Secretary of Agriculture shall make rules and regulations for drawing and submitting samples of wool, mohair, or tops therefrom for a determination of type, grade, shrinkage, clean content, or comparison.

"(c) The Secretary of Agriculture may cause to be collected such charges as he may find to be reasonable for determinations made under subsection (b) of this section.

"(d) Whenever the Official Wool and Mohair Standards of the United States established under this section shall be represented by practical forms, the Department of Agriculture shall furnish copies thereof, upon request, to any person, and the cost thereof, as determined by the Secretary of Agriculture, shall be paid by the person making the request. The amounts collected therefrom and the amounts collected pursuant to subsection (c) of this section shall be used by the Secretary in paying expenses of the Department of Agriculture in connection with this section.

"(e) The Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to effectuate agreements with wool associations, wool exchanges, and other wool or mohair organizations, either domestic, foreign, or international, for (1) the adoption, use, and observation of universal standards of wool and mohair grades, (2) the arbitration or settlement of disputes with respect thereto, and (3) the preparation, distribution, inspection, and protection of the practical forms or copies thereof under such agreements.

"SEC. 11. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated annually commencing with the fiscal year 1948, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, such amount as may be necessary to enable the Secretary of Agriculture to carry out the provisions of sections 9 and 10 hereof."

INDIVIDUAL VIEWS BY MR. WALSH

I regret to state that I am unable to concur in the majority report on S. 2033. This bill would continue the Government in the business of buying and selling the domestic wool clip. The Department of Agriculture would continues to purchase the domestic wool clip at a high artificial price and sell it at a loss, which, on their present holdings and the 1946 clip which they are committed to buy, represents approximately 8 to 9 cents per pound with an estimated loss of $75,000,000 plus administrative costs and carrying charges, which at present amounts to over $500,000 per month.

I agree with the majority that the wool grower is engaged in a business which is essential to our civilian economy and national defense, and because of increased costs of operation, the grower should have assistance from the Government in order to stimuliate production. However, I believe that Government control of the domestic wool business should cease.

I am satisfied from the testimony offered by witnesses at the hearings which were held on this bill that the business of buying and selling wool is so complex that the Government cannot make its buying and selling operations sufficiently flexible to enable it to dispose of wool in the best interests of all concerned. In my opinion, the results of the Government's program of buying and selling the domestic wool clip during the past several years is ample evidence that the Government cannot market this wool clip in a satisfactory manner, and as a result of its operations the American manufacturer has been forced to use imported wool in place of domestic-grown wool, resulting in a loss to the wool grower of his only natural market.

For generations, the wool merchant has filled an important place in this industry through his purchase of the domestic wool clip from the producer, financing of same, and proper preparation of it for market, making the many special grades and qualities required by individual manufacturers.

Yet this long-established business would be destroyed by this bill.

While in my opinion the proper method of affording protection to the American producer is through an increase in the tariff on wool and wool products, I recognize the improbability of any tariff legislation at this time which would permit an increase. Therefore, much as I dislike subsidies, I suggest payment to the grower on a per-head basis of a sum which will represent the difference between comparable price now considered to be 40.4 cents per pound and the cost of competitive foreign wool, leaving the grading and merchandising of the clip in the hands of established commercial organizations. I also favor establishment of a floor price to become effective in the event of drastic price in decline. I believe that this suggestion would cost materially less in administrative costs.

I quote from the testimony of a top-maker manufacturer, Kenneth W. Marriner, containing the manufacturer's point of view:

"I can express an opinion from a manufacturer's point of view and would say that seldom in its history has the United States wool textile industry faced a more uncertain future than today when the passage of the British loan seems to carry with it the probability of a reduction in the tariff on wool and wool goods, which means that this country, which now holds the position as being the largest producer of wool goods in the world, employing over 200,000 people, principally in New England, will be subjected to the severest kind of competition from foreign manufacturers, and with the prospect in view, every effort should be made to give manufacturers as much freedom in their selection and purchase of raw wool as possible rather than attempt to surround them with Government rules and regulations which would be inevitable under any Government wool purchase plan."

I recommend the elimination of those sections of S. 2033 which contemplate having the Department of Agriculture inject itself further into private industry.

In the near future, Great Britain and her colonies will return to a free and competitive business in the selling of wool. This country should do likewise.

For the reasons stated, I am unable to recommend favorable consideration of S. 2033.

DAVID I. WALSH.

Mr. DOWNEY subsequently said: Mr. President, this morning the distinguished Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY] discussed at some length his pending wool standard bill. I wish to say that I agree with him as to the great importance of passing the bill, and I wish to associate myself with the statements which have been expressed by him concerning the matter.

As coming from one of the great wool-producing States, it has seemed to me that the entire sheep and wool industry of the United States is now in a serious condition. I believe that only the passage of legislation such as the bill which was referred to by the Senator from Wyoming, will save that great industry.

Moreover, Mr. President, I agree with the Senator from Wyoming that, from the standpoint of the American economy as a whole, it is most vital that our wool industry be preserved.

I concur also with the Senator in expressing the hope and wish that before Congress concludes its present session, it will take action looking to the passage of the bill now pending which has been unanimously reported by a Senate committee.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Mr. President, I wish the RECORD to show that I associated myself with the remarks of the Senator from California.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, I wish to ask the Senator from California one brief question.

I listened to the address of the Senator from Wyoming on the subject of wool, and I listened to the remarks of the Senator from California. I wish to say that Colorado is tremendously interested in the sheep and wool industry. It is an extremely important industry. I also associate myself with the Senator from Wyoming and with the Senator from California, as well as other western Senators, in the hope that Congress will soon pass legislation on the subject which will make it possible for the sheep and wool industry to continue in existence.

Mr. DOWNEY. Mr. President, I express to the junior Senator and senior Senator from Colorado my appreciation for their statements.

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. President, I wish to place myself in accord with what has been said during the day by the distinguished Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY], the distinguished Senator from California [Mr. DOWNEY], and other Senators who have spoken on the subject, who are trying to make it possible that the sheep and wool industry be preserved.

The industry is of great importance to Montana. Like every other State in the Union, Montana is being affected by the conditions which have been portrayed so eloquently by the Senator from Wyoming, as well as other Senators.

I believe it would be a great disaster to the country, I know it would be a very serious injury to the State of Montana, if the bill referred to were not enacted into law. I wish to express myself as being in accord with the statements of the Senators from the other wool-growing States. I think the wool industry is one of the important segments of our economy, and I do not see how the Congress can fail to recognize its importance, and to act accordingly.

Mr. REVERCOMB subsequently said: Mr. President, earlier today the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY] spoke upon a wool bill in which he expressed deep interest. I told him that I would have some comments to make at a later time with respect to the discussion which took place.

In the course of the remarks of the Senator from Wyoming he pointed out that the Congress, in fixing a policy by the passage of the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act, and permitting extensions of that act, which Members of the Senate will recall empowered the President to lower existing tariffs by 50 percent, made possible a situation which is a threat to the wool growers and to the protection of the products of this country.

I wish to say that not only is it a threat to the wool growers, but to the producers of all goods manufactured in America, and to the workers who create them.

At the time of the debate upon the extension of the Trade Agreements Act I said—and I repeat at this time—that it was a threat to every product made in America, and in my own State particularly to glass and pottery; and even a threat to those who work in the production of coal, because the trade agreements permit the importation into this country of the products of other countries, manufactured abroad by foreign workers.

In the course of the remarks of the Senator from Wyoming he stated more than once that 16 Republicans had voted for the passage of the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act. I do not know the real purpose of his statement, but the implication was that the policy which we find ourselves facing since the passage of the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act is to be laid at the door of the Republican Party.

In order that the record may be clear, and in order that there may be no misunderstanding upon the subject, I have before me an excerpt from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of June 20, 1945, showing the vote upon the final passage of the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act. I find that, of the Senators voting at that time, 15 members of the Republican Party voted in favor of the passage of the bill; 38 members of the Democratic Party voted in favor of it; and 1 member of the Progressive Party voted in favor of it.

Voting against the passage of the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act, which now is called a threat and a danger, there were 16 Republican Senators. Sixteen Republican Senators and five Democratic Senators voted against the passage of that act. I wish to take time now to place in the RECORD the names of the Republican Members of the Senate who voted against the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act, inasmuch as this subject has been brought up; and I venture to say that in the future it will be brought up time and time again, because of the threat the act involves to the future well-being of this country and particularly the well-being of the people who manufacture American products. The Senators on the Republican side who voted against the passage of the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act were the following: The Senator from Maine [Mr. BREWSTER], the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BUTLER], the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CAPPER], the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. GURNEY], the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. HAWKES], the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. LANGER], the Senator from Colorado [Mr. MILLIKIN], the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. MOORE], the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. REVERCOMB], the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. ROBERTSON], the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SHIPSTEAD], the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT], the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. WHERRY], the Senator from Maine [Mr. WHITE], the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. WILEY], and the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. YOUNG].

In the course of that debate, the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY] offered an amendment, the purport and effect of which was that any agreement which was made should be submitted, like any treaty, to the Senate, for ratification by it. The Senator from Wyoming espoused that amendment. I agreed with him and I supported him in respect to the amendment. But when question is raised here as to the party division on the votes on those matters, I think we should go to the RECORD, so that there may be no misunderstanding about what the situation was. So let us see who supported that amendment, as between the two parties and their memberships. The amendment was offered by the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY], and it was supported by 20 Republican Senators and 7 Democratic Senators. As I have said, that amendment, if adopted, would have caused the submission of such agreements to the Senate, for ratification by the Senate. Voting against that amendment were 11 Republican Senators, 37 Democratic Senators, and 1 Progressive Senator.

Mr. President, I take the position that when a question of this kind is raised, when the record is clear, and when the matter was passed on by the Senate during the past year, we should bring the RECORD up to date, so that the whole subject will be absolutely clear and so that when any Senator on either side of the aisle raises a point about the party division on the matter, or when partisan points are made, there can be no question as to how the various Members of the Senate voted.

PROHIBITION OF POLL TAX IN FEDERAL ELECTIONS

The Senate resumed consideration of the bill (H. R. 7) making unlawful the requirement for the payment of a poll tax as a prerequisite to voting in a primary or other election for national officers.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. President, last evening, only a few minutes before the Senate recessed, I discussed very briefly the anti-poll-tax bill. The effort to secure the passage of the anti-poll-tax bill has been an uphill struggle for over 7 years. More than a year ago the bill was passed by the House of Representatives. Nine months ago the Senate Judiciary Committee reported it favorably. Since then there has been a silent filibuster on the bill. But, despite the vigorous efforts of the Senators from poll-tax States to keep this bill from coming to a vote, the overwhelming desire of the people to see democracy really work here in America finally forced this bill to reach the floor of the Senate.

Mr. President, we know all the facts and figures regarding this bill. We have heard them many times, so I feel it unnecessary to go over them. I am confident that the majority of my colleagues are anxious to see the poll tax abolished as a precondition of voting in all of our States. What the Senator from New York is not confident of is that two-thirds of his colleagues will vote for cloture this afternoon. I submit, Mr. President, that cloture is not the issue involved, nor is it an issue in itself. Cloture is merely a rule of parliamentary procedure, an instrumentality of legislative conduct. It is just a remedy for democratic illness, when the democratic body is unable to move by its usual processes because it is suffering from a stoppage.

Mr. President, the Senate is about to vote for cloture. This body is about to decide whether sufficient debate has been held on this subject. I submit, Mr. President, that sufficient debate has been held on the merits of this subject. We have been debating it for 2 years. The issues and facts on this question are crystal clear. I recognize that there are Senators who, by clinging to the tradition of free speech, have been loath to put a limit on debate. But I believe that it has become more and more obvious that the power to act is greater and more necessary to a legislature than the right to debate endlessly.

I believe the Senate has come here today to act. The Senate shall act. The junior Senator from New York asks that all Senators who want to see this bill pass, vote for cloture. The issue is clear and decisive. A vote for cloture is a vote for this bill. A vote against cloture is a vote against this bill. I want this to be made most conclusive to my esteemed colleagues. We want cloture invoked, and we can get it if the Senators who want this bill passed will vote for cloture. We have the votes to pass this bill; our first hurdle is the cloture vote.

By voting for cloture and then passing this bill, Mr. President, we will be doing the individual States, despite the argument of some of our states-righters, a great service. By passing H. R. 7, Mr. President, we will be putting the vote into the hand of the people in the seven poll-tax States. With the vote in the people's hands, they will be able to take upon themselves the task of improving the conditions of poor health, housing, and education which exist in their respective States as a result of the poll-tax system. There are 10,000,000 voteless citizens in seven poll-tax States. If we pass this bill we will be improving by a millionfold the conditions of health, education, and housing in those States. This is our problem, Mr. President. The poll-tax question is a national issue effecting all the people. Poor health, education, and housing in any of our States affect all the people of the country. We cannot avoid this issue, Mr. President. The whole world will be looking at us today. We must show the peoples of the world that America is truly the seedbed of democracy, not only in principle but in fact.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The hour of 1 o'clock, being 1 hour after the Senate met today, having arrived, the Chair, in accordance with the provisions of rule XXII of the Standing Rules of the Senate, lays before the Senate the motion to bring to a close the debate upon the bill (H. R. 7) making unlawful the requirement for the payment of a poll tax as a prerequisite to voting in a primary or other election for national officers, and directs the Secretary to call the roll to ascertain whether a quorum is present. The Secretary will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Andrews	Downey	Hoey
Austin	Eastland	Huffman
Ball	Ferguson	Johnson, Colo.
Barkley	Fulbright	Johnston, S. C.

O'Mahoney	Thomas, Okla.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Seventy-four Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

The Chair, in further pursuance of rule XXII, submits to the Senate the question, Is it the sense of the Senate that the debate shall be brought to a close upon this question?

The yeas and nays are required, and the Secretary will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. REVERCOMB (when his name was called). On this vote the Senator from Illinois [Mr. BROOKS] and I have a pair with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. ROBERTSON]. If the Senator from Wyoming were present and voting, he would vote "nay." If the Senator from Illinois were permitted to vote he would vote "yea"; and if I were permitted to vote, I would vote "yea."

Mr. WILLIS (when his name was called). On this vote, the Senator from Iowa [Mr. WILSON] and I have a joint pair with the junior Senator from South Dakota [Mr. BUSHFIELD]. If the junior Senator from South Dakota were present he would vote "nay." If I were permitted to vote I would vote "yea," and if the senior Senator from Iowa [Mr. WILSON] were present he would vote "yea." I therefore withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. HILL. I announce that the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY] is absent because of illness.

The Senator from Nevada [Mr. CARVILLE] is absent by leave of the Senate.

The Senator from Missouri [Mr. BRIGGS] and the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS] are detained on public business.

The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH] is absent on official business, having been appointed a member of the President's Evaluation Commission in connection with the test of atomic bombs on naval vessels at Bikini.

The Senator from Louisiana [Mr. ELLENDER] and the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] are absent on official business, having been appointed to the commission on the part of the Senate to participate in the Philippine independence ceremonies.

On this question the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AIKEN] and the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS], who, if present and voting, would vote "yea," are paired with the Senator from Nevada [Mr. CARVILLE], who, if present and voting, would vote "nay."

The Senator from Missouri [Mr. BRIGGS] and the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY], both of whom would vote "yea" if present, are paired on this question with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY], who would vote "nay" if present.

The Senator from Louisiana [Mr. ELLENDER] would vote "nay" if present.

Mr. WHERRY. The Senator from Maine [Mr. BREWSTER], the Senator from Delaware [Mr. BUCK], the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. HAWKES], and the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. STANFILL] are necessarily absent.

The Senator from Vermont [Mr. AIKEN], the Senator from Illinois [Mr. BROOKS], the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. BUSHFIELD], the Senator from Indiana [Mr. CAPEHART], the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. ROBERTSON], and the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY] are absent by leave of the Senate.

The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BUTLER] is absent on official business, being a member of the commission appointed to attend the Philippine independence ceremonies.

The Senator from Iowa [Mr. HICKENLOOPER] is absent by leave of the Senate on official business as a member of the Special Committee on Atomic Energy. If present he would vote "yea."

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. SALTONSTALL] is absent on official business, having been appointed a member of the President's Evaluation Commission in connection with the test of atomic bombs on naval vessels at Bikini.

The Senator from Iowa [Mr. WILSON] is absent on official business.

The Senator from Vermont [Mr. AIKEN] and the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS], both of whom would vote "yea," are paired on this question with the Senator from Nevada [Mr. CARVILLE], who would vote "nay."

The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY] and the Senator from Missouri [Mr. BRIGGS], both of whom would vote "yea," are paired on this question with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY], who would vote "nay."

The yeas and nays resulted—yeas 39, nays 33, as follows:

INVESTIGATION OF THE TEXTILE INDUSTRY—REPORT OF A COMMITTEE

Mr. McMAHON. Mr. President, from the Committee on Interstate Commerce, I ask unanimous consent to report an original joint resolution (S. J. Res. 187) to investigate the integration, under common control, of textile and clothing manufacturing plants and the effect on independent manufacturers, and I submit a report (No. 1917) thereon.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the report will be received, and the joint resolution will be placed on the calendar.

INTERIM REPORT ON INVESTIGATION OF INTERNATIONAL COMMUNICATIONS BY WIRE AND RADIO

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, from the Committee on Interstate Commerce, I ask unanimous consent to submit, pursuant to Senate Resolution 24, Seventy-ninth Congress, providing for an investigation of international communications by wire and radio, an interim report, and I submit a report (No. 1907) thereon.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the report will be received and printed.

INTERIM REPORT ON INVESTIGATION OF PRESENT STATUS OF COTTON INDUSTRY (REPT. NO. 1918)

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, I ask unanimous consent to submit, pursuant to Senate Resolution 92, providing for the investigation of matters relative to food production and consumption, an interim report on the production, consumption, and distribution of cotton, and I request that it may be printed and printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the report was received, ordered to be printed, and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

The committee had before it representatives of the several Federal agencies interested in and handling cotton, as follows:

Paul A. Porter, representing the Office of Price Administration; O. C. Stine and Maurice R. Cooper, representing the Bureau of Agricultural Economics; E. D. White and L. D. Esates, representing the Department of Agriculture; Brig. Gen. W. H. Middleschwartz, representing the Quartermaster General's Office of the War Department, and Col. R. F. Hartman, representing the Civil Affairs Division, War Department; C. W. Nichols, Jerome Stenger and James Evans, representing the State Department; Julian Breen and William B. Mathews, representing the United Nations Relief Administration; Carl N. Gibboney and Ray Hurley, representing the Office of International Trade and Commerce; and Dewitt C. Scheck, representing the United States Commercial Company, which is subsidiary of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

The findings made herein are based upon the testimony of the witnesses and the published reports of the Department of Agriculture.

DOMESTIC COTTON SITUATION

The estimated number of acres planted to cotton this year, 1946, is 18,300,000, or some 1,000,000 acres less than was anticipated by the cotton trade.

The foregoing compares with 17,700,000 acres in 1945 and the 1935–44 average of 25,600,000. The 1936–45 average abandonment from natural causes was 1.9 percent.

The 10-year average number of acres planted was 25,500,000. The number of acres planted this year, 1946, is 18,333,333, which is some 7,000,000 acres less than the 10-year average.

The following statements are reprinted from the June–July 1946 report of the Bureau of Agricultural Economics with respect to cotton:

"The July 8 cotton crop report places the 1946 acres of cotton in cultivation July 1, at 18,300,000 acres. If this acreage should produce at average yields (1941–45), the 1946 crop would amount to about 9,500,000 running bales and supplies of American cotton in the United States for the 1946 crop year would be at the lowest level in 17 years, or about the same as in 1928."

The 10-year average production was 12,553,000 bales of cotton of 500 pounds each. The cotton produced last year, 1945, was 9,015,000 bales, or 3,538,000 bales less than the 10-year average production. If the July 8 estimate is approximately correct then this year's crop will be some 3,053,000 bales less than said 10-year average.

"Mill consumption for the year ending July 31 is now estimated at 9,200,000 million bales and exports are estimated at 3,500,000 bales, which would leave a domestic carry-over of all kinds of cotton on August 1 of 7,600,000 bales."

"If, as estimated, mills consume 9,200,000 bales of cotton this season and exports total 3,500,000, the carry-over of all kinds of cotton in the United States on August 1, 1946, will amount to 7,600,000 bales, about 200,000 of which will be foreign."

"June reports indicated that this year's cotton crop is threatened by boll-weevil damage, especially in central Texas, southern Mississippi, Georgia, and South Carolina. The boll-weevil damage may be more serious because of a shortage of calcium arsenate and because of a heavier than normal infestation. Areas north of those mentioned above have not been very adversely affected by the weevil."

Testimony of the representatives of Agriculture shows that cotton stocks are now only 7,600,000 bales compared to 11,200,000 a year ago. The drop was caused by 3,500,000 bales being exported. The 1946 crop will hardly equal the domestic demand.

It was further revealed that the mills are carrying working stocks of 2,000,000 bales; 742,957 bales have already been allocated for export to UNRRA, Britain, France, Japan, and Germany; and the State Department has already approved loans to China, Finland, Czechoslovakia, Italy, and the Netherlands for 756,000 bales with additional loans to be approved in the near future. This leaves only 1,807,000 bales of tenderable cotton and 2,294,000 bales of undesirable cotton, totaling 4,101,000 bales for export sales, Government and warehouse stocks, to serve all purposes during the coming 12 months.

The Department of Agriculture estimates that the United States will have orders and requisitions for three and one-half to four million bales of cotton for export during the next 12 months; and the Department's spokesman stated before the committee that all cotton stocks of all kinds would probably be cleaned up within a year. If this should happen all cotton now on hand and all cotton that is produced during the present crop year will find a market during the next 12 months. This conclusion is supported by the report "June–July Cotton Situation," as follows:

"World consumption of cotton and rayon may be the equivalent of well over 30,000,000 bales next year. During the 1946 crop year the combined production of cotton and rayon in the world will probably not total over 27,000,000 bales. Present carry-overs of cotton, large as they seem, will fall sharply during the next few years unless the production of cotton and/or rayon is expanded beyond present levels." (From June–July report of Bureau of Agricultural Economics.)

In view of the statistics and possible requisitions for export as presented by the various agencies, this will leave our country with little, if any, cotton on hand a year from now.

Representatives of the Department of Agriculture said a normal mill and working stock should be 4,000,000 bales for safety, therefore, it appears that either the mills will have to suffer or the exports curtailed from present estimates, and no future commitments made.

OPA AND COTTON

Mr. Paul A. Porter, Administrator for OPA, admitted that his department does not have authority to maintain ceiling prices on the services of warehousing cotton as such service is prohibited under the act extending the OPA; also the law prohibits imposing ceiling on raw cotton or maintaining margin requirements on cotton futures trading.

The Bureau of Agricultural Economics estimates that the following number of bales of cotton were consumed in the United States:

Year:	Number of bales
1943–44	9,943,000
1945–46	9,000,000 to 9,250,000

The Bureau stated that the estimated 9,500,000 bales to be produced in 1946 would be "probably short" of the consumption from August 1, 1946, to August 1, 1947. The Bureau estimates the carry-over August 1, 1947, will drop 2½ million bales from the carry-over of August 1, 1946, of 7,600,000, leaving 5,100,000 bales of both tenderable and untenderable cotton in all grades and positions. After deducting an estimated 2,000,000 bale mill stocks there would be approximately 3,000,000 bales of cotton on hand for export and for all other purposes between August 1, 1946, and August 1, 1947.

The Production and Marketing Administration estimates that the Commodity Credit Corporation shipped the following bales of cotton for export from August 1, 1945, to August 1, 1946:

	Bales
Germany	42,916
France	720,469
UNRRA	767,676
Great Britain	216,028
Italy	169,712
Army	45,921
Japan	478,895
Total	2,441,617

On June 30, 1946, the Commodity Credit Corporation owned 433,297 bales; had pooled for producers' accounts 89,078 bales; and had outstanding loans on 397,897 bales.

Since June 30, 1946, Commodity Credit Corporation stocks had been reduced from 433,297 bales to approximately 135,000 bales of owned cotton as producers had withdrawn from 50,000 to 75,000 bales. The 1944 loans were called due July 1, 1946. The 1945 loans will be called due October 1, 1946.

The Commodity Credit Corporation has requisitions from the following claimants as of July 29, 1946:

	Bales
UNRRA	175,000
Great Britain	4,131
France (lend lease)	19,637
Japan	433,105
Germany	111,084
Total	742,957

The total 742,957 bales still appear in the estimated 7,600,000-bale carry-over. The Commodity Credit Corporation has yet to acquire 123,231 bales from stocks on hand or from loan cotton to complete its stock to fulfill these requisitions.

There will be additional requests for cotton for shipment to Japan and Germany. Such quantities are unknown at this time. The cotton-textile industry of Japan should consume 125,000 bales per month by January 1, 1947. The mill capacity for Germany should equal 280,000 bales per annum which the United States will supply the bulk.

The Army estimated it shipped 11,000 long tons of cotton to the European theater from December 1944 to March 1945; to Italy, 2,129 long tons through August 1, 1945; to France, 13,331 long tons; to Germany, 102 long tons. Since VJ-day the Army shipped to Italy 2,057 long tons; Germany, 9,319 long tons; British-occupied zone of Germany, 166 long tons, making a total of 50,000 bales since VJ-day.

No additional shipments are contemplated. The Department of State revealed that loans have been made to the following countries for the purpose of buying cotton:

Country	Amount	Bales of cotton
China	$33,000,000	360,000
Finland	5,000,000	46,000
Czechoslovakia	20,000,000	130,000
Italy	25,000,000	200,000
Netherlands	10,000,000	80,000
Total		756,000

In addition to the 756,000 bales listed above there are 344,000 bales of cotton to be earmarked for shipment to foreign countries under credit extended by the State Department, with more credits to follow.

United Nations Relief and Rehabilitation Administration has purchased in the United States and shipped the following cotton:

	Bales
Until August 1945	125,000
Until August 1946	675,000
Yet to be shipped	200,000 to 225,000

COTTON LOAN PROGRAM FOR 1946

The Secretary of Agriculture's announcement on May 28 established premiums and discounts under the 1946 loan program. Loans will be made at 92½ percent of the July 15 parity. On June 15, the price received by farmers for cotton was 112 percent of the parity price for cotton. Announced discounts for the poorer qualities are as much as 250 points wider than those for the 1945 crop.

According to the July 29 report of the Bureau of Agricultural Economics, the parity price on cotton on July 15 was 24.68 cents per pound. This establishes the basic loan rate at 22.82 cents per pound for ⅞" Middling.

COTTON PRICES AFTER WORLD WAR I

In October 1918 cotton sold for 37.25 cents per pound: In December 1919 the price was 36.23 cents and in July 1920 the price was 43.75 cents per pound. Cotton is a world commodity and is based on the value of gold. World War I prices were based on the old gold dollar which was 40 percent heavier, hence, 40 percent more valuable than the gold dollar of today. In 1920 there was less than $6,200,000,000 of money in circulation while now (July 17), we have $28,241,000,000 in circulation.

COTTON GROWER RECEIVES FOR 1 HOUR'S WORK PRICE HE RECEIVES FOR 1 POUND OF COTTON

Eminent economists have demonstrated before the Senate Agricultural Committee that cotton growers receive per hour for their labor the amount they receive per pound for the cotton they produced. Cotton is now (July 31, 1946) quoted at some 32 cents per pound, hence, this means that cotton growers may receive only about 32 cents per hour for their work in producing this year's crop. If this price prevails, it is obvious that much of the 1946 crop will not be picked and the existing shortage will be increased.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS INTRODUCED

Bills and joint resolutions were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred, as follows:

(Mr. MURRAY (for himself, Mr. MORSE, and Mr. PEPPER) introduced Senate bill 2499, to establish a national policy for education and to provide a 10-year program of assistance to the States for the further development of educational systems, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor, and appears under a separate heading.)

By Mr. BRIDGES:

S. 2500. A bill to provide for designation of the United States Veterans' Administration hospital at Manchester, N. H., as the Frank Knox Veterans Memorial Hospital; ordered to lie on the table.

By Mr. PEPPER (for himself and Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina):

S. 2501. A bill to amend the Armed Forces Leave Act of 1946 to provide for the redemption prior to maturity of bonds issued under such act; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

(Mr. LA FOLLETTE introduced Senate Joint Resolution 185, providing for the filing of claims for compensation for personal injuries and property damages sustained by citizens of the United States who were taken prisoner by the enemy during World War II, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and appears under a separate heading.)

(Mr. BARKLEY introduced Senate Joint Resolution 186, to provide for the transfer of the painting First Fight of Ironclads—Monitor and Merrimac, now stored in the United States Capitol Building, to the custody of the United States Naval Academy, was passed, and appears under a separate heading.)

DEVELOPMENT OF EDUCATIONAL SYSTEMS

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. President, on behalf of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MORSE], the Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER], and myself, I ask unanimous consent to introduce for appropriate reference a bill to establish a national policy for education and to provide a 10-year program of assistance to the States for the further development of educational systems, and I request that it be printed in full in the RECORD, together with an accompanying statement in explanation.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the bill will be received and appropriately referred, and the bill together with an accompanying statement in explanation will be printed in the RECORD.

The bill (S. 2499) to establish a national policy for education and to provide a 10-year program of assistance to the States for the further development of educational systems, read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Education and Labor, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That this act, divided into titles according to the following table of contents, may be cited as the "Education Development Act of 1947":

DECLARATION OF POLICY

SEC. 2. The Congress hereby declares that in order to promote the common defense, democratic participation in government, the development of science and the arts, productive employment in a fruitful economy, wise use of leisure, world peace and security, and the general welfare, it shall be the national policy to seek the development within 10 years of educational systems throughout the United States—

(a) which will be so organized, financed, and administered as to be capable of offering full and equal opportunities to all to develop their capacities for their own benefit individually and for the best interest of the Nation as a whole;

(b) which will afford equality of opportunity to all without regard to sex, race, color, or creed;

(c) which will promote the principles of democracy, of respect for the dignity of the individual, and of respect for such human rights as freedom of assembly, speech, and religion, with unrestricted pursuit of objective truth and the free exchange of ideas and knowledge:

(e) under which it will be the responsibility of State and local school authorities to provide for compulsory school attendance, to determine the public-school curriculum, to appoint competent teachers and officers of instruction, to provide safe and sanitary school buildings, to provide suitable equipment and instructional materials, and, where necessary, safe pupil transportation;

(f) under which it will be the responsibility of nonpublic tax-exempt schools and educational institutions to meet suitable standards of educational service as established by competent authority, and to aid in the attainment of national educational objectives in the interests of the general welfare;

(g) under which it will be the responsibility of the Federal Government to assist the States in discharging their responsibilities and in meeting Nation-wide educational objectives; and

(h) under which it will be the further responsibility of the Federal Government to cooperate with other members of the United Nations in raising educational standards and in carrying out the obligations of membership in the United Nations Educational, Scientific, and Cultural Organizations.

TITLE I—BASIC EDUCATIONAL PROGRAMS AND SERVICES

APPROPRIATION AUTHORIZED

SEC. 101. ALLOTMENTS TO STATES

SEC. 102. (a) For the fiscal year ending June 30, 1948, and for each fiscal year thereafter, the Commissioner shall allot to each State, which has a plan approved meeting requirements set forth in section 104 hereof, an amount which bears the same ratio to the total sum appropriated for such fiscal year under this title as the State's index of financial need, as determined under subsection (b) of this section, bears to the sum of such indexes of financial need for all States, except that during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1948, no State shall receive less than $5 per child of the ages 4 to 20, inclusive; during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1949, no State shall receive less than $6 per child of such ages; during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1950, no State shall receive less than $6.50 per child of such ages; during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1951, no State shall receive less than $7 per child of such ages; during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1952, no State shall receive less than $7.50 per child of such ages; during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1953, no State shall receive less than $8 per child of such ages; during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1954, no State shall receive less than $8.50 per child of such ages; during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1955, no State shall receive less than $9 per child of such ages; during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1956, no State shall receive less than $9.50 per child of such ages; during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1957, no State shall receive less than $10 per child of such ages.

(b) (1) The index of financial need of each State shall be the product of (A) such State's total income payments, and (B) the quotient obtained by dividing (i) the difference between twice the national income per child and the income per child for such State by (ii) the income per child for such State, except that such quotient shall in no case exceed eight: Provided, That the index of financial need for any State shall be reduced in accordance with section 103.

(2) For the purposes of this section, the national income per child shall be the average, for the three most recent consecutive years for which data are available, of the total income payments received in all of the States within the continental limits of the United States, divided by the total number of persons, within such States, of the ages of 4 to 20, inclusive; and the income per child for a State shall be the average, for such 3 years, of the total income payments received within such State divided by the number of persons, within such State, of the ages of 4 to 20, inclusive.

(3) Between July 1 and August 21 of each year, the Commissioner shall calculate the index of financial need of each State from data provided by the Secretary of Commerce regarding income payments and the number of persons of the age of 4 to 20, inclusive, in each State.

EDUCATIONAL EXPENDITURES BY STATES

SEC. 103. The Commissioner shall determine for each State in the continental United States the percentage ratio of (A) the amount spent in that State from local and State revenues and from other sources for current expenditures (excluding interest, debt service, and capital outlay) for public and nonprofit tax-exempt schools, and higher educational institutions for the third year next preceding the year for which the computation is made, to (B) the average of the annual income payments received in that State, as determined by the Department of Commerce, for 3 years including the third, fourth, and fifth years next preceding the year for which the computation is made.

If the percentage ratio for any State is less than 2 percent as thus determined in 1947, less than 2.2 percent in 1948, less than 2.4 percent in 1949, less than 2.6 percent in 1950, less than 2.8 percent in 1951, less than 3 percent in 1952 and thereafter, the index of financial need for each such State, as computed under section 102, shall be proportionately reduced.

STATE PLANS

SEC. 104. (a) A State plan for basic educational programs and educational services under this title must—

(1) meet the standards set forth in section 504 hereof;

(2) provide for disbursement of funds received under this title to schools, school systems, educational agencies, and institutions for the payment of current expense (excluding interest, debt service, and capital outlay) as follows: (A) Until the fiscal year ending June 30, 1952; 3 percent, if expended, shall be expended solely for preelementary education; 33 percent, if expended, shall be expended solely for elementary education; 33 percent, if expended, shall be expended solely for secondary education, including vocational education of noncollegiate grade; 17 percent, if expended, shall be expended solely for higher education; 3 percent, if expended, shall be expended solely for community recreation and adult education; 3 percent, if expended, shall be expended solely for special education of physically handicapped children and youth; 3 percent, if expended, shall be expended solely for health and physical education; 3 percent, if expended, shall be expended solely for the further development of public library services, especially in rural areas; (B) beginning with the fiscal year ending June 30, 1952, and thereafter: for any or all of the purposes in (A) above, as the State agency may determine;

(3) provide that not to exceed 2 percent of funds received under this title shall be used for the expenses of the State authority necessary for the efficient administration of the State plan, including program development and supervision;

(4) provide that the State plan shall be made public before any expenditure of Federal funds under the plan is incurred.

(b) The Commissioner shall approve any plan which fulfills the conditions specified in subsection (a) hereof.

TITLE II—SCHOLARSHIPS AND FELLOWSHIPS

APPROPRIATION AUTHORIZED

SEC. 201. For the purpose of assisting the several States to enable young persons of ability to continue their education in the last 2 years of high school and in higher educational institutions by means of the award of scholarships and fellowships there is hereby authorized to be appropriated for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1948, $70,000,000; for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1949, $105,000,000; for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1950, $140,000,000; for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1951, $170,000,000; for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1952, $200,000,000; for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1953, $230,000,000, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1954, $260,000,000; for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1955, $290,000,000; for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1956, $320,000,000; for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1957, $350,000,000; and thereafter such sums as the Congress may determine.

ALLOTMENTS TO STATES

SEC. 202. For the fiscal year ending June 30, 1948, and for each fiscal year thereafter the Commissioner shall allot to each State which has a plan approved meeting the requirements set forth in section 203 hereof an amount which bears the same ratio to the total sum appropriated for such fiscal year under this title as the number of persons 16 to 24 years of age, inclusive, in such State bears to the total number of persons of those ages in all of the States.

STATE PLANS

SEC. 203. (a) A State plan for scholarships and fellowships under this title must—

(1) meet the standards set forth in section 504 (a) hereof;

(2) provide a method of identifying students of ability for the award of scholarships and fellowships without reference to race, color, sex, or creed;

(3) provide special assistance for needy students who are compelled to live away from home in order to complete their education;

(4) provide that at least 20 percent of the State's allotment, if expended, shall be expended for scholarships for students who are enrolled in the last 2 years of high school; at least 40 percent, if expended, shall be expended for scholarships for students who are high-school graduates and are enrolled, or eligible to enroll in junior colleges, technical institutes, vocational schools, colleges, and universities; at least 20 percent, if expended, shall be expended for fellowships for students who are enrolled or eligible to enroll, in graduate or professional schools or departments of colleges, universities, and research institutes in the United States or other countries;

(5) provide that not to exceed 2 percent of funds received under this title shall be used for the expenses of the State authority necessary for the efficient administration of the State plan for the award of scholarships and fellowships.

(b) The Commissioner shall approve any plan which fulfills the conditions specified in subsection (a) hereof.

TITLE III—PLANNING AND CONSTRUCTION OF EDUCATIONAL PLANT FACILITIES

APPROPRIATION AUTHORIZED

SEC. 301. In order to assist the States in making surveys of the need for educational plant facilities, in preparing drawings and specifications for such facilities, and in acquiring, constructing, or improving such facilities, there is hereby authorized to be appropriated for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1948, the sum of $200,000,000; for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1949, the sum of $300,000,000; for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1950, and for each fiscal year thereafter, until the fiscal year ending June 30, 1957, the sum of $400,000,000; and thereafter such sums as the Congress may determine.

ALLOTMENTS TO STATES

SEC. 302. (a) For the fiscal year ending June 30, 1948, and for each fiscal year thereafter the Commissioner shall allot to each State for which a State plan has been approved a sum bearing the same ratio to the total sum appropriated for such year under this title as the product of (1) the number of persons in such State of the ages 4 to 20, inclusive, as determined on the basis of the latest figures certified by the Department of Commerce, and (2) the square of its Federal percentage as defined in subsection (b) hereof bears to the sum of the corresponding products for all of the States.

(b) The Federal percentage with respect to any State shall be 100 percent less the non-Federal percentage; and the non-Federal percentage shall be that percentage which bears the some ratio to 50 percent as the per capita income of such State bears to the per capita income of all the States, except that (1) the non-Federal percentage shall in no case be more than 66⅔ percent or less than 25 percent and (2) the non-Federal percentage for Alaska and Hawaii shall be 50 percent each, and the non-Federal percentage for Puerto Rico shall be 25 percent.

(c) The Federal percentages shall be promulgated by the Commissioner between July 1 and August 21 of each year on the basis of the average of the per capita incomes of the several States and of the continental United States (excluding Alaska) for the three most recent consecutive years for which satisfactory data are available from the Department of Commerce. Such promulgation shall be conclusive for each fiscal year in the period beginning July 1 next succeeding such promulgation: Provided, That the Commissioner shall promulgate such percentages as soon as possible after the enactment of this title, which promulgation shall also be conclusive for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1948.

(d) The amount of the allotment to a State shall be available, in accordance with the provisions of this act, for payment of such State's Federal percentage of the cost of approved projects within the State. The Commissioner shall calculate the allotments to be made under this section and notify the Secretary of the Treasury of the amounts thereof. Sums allotted to a State for a fiscal year for the purposes of this title and remaining unencumbered at the end of such year shall remain available to such State for the next fiscal year (and for such year only), in addition to the sums allotted for such State for such next fiscal year. Any amount of the sum authorized to be appropriated for such year, or which is not allotted in such year by reason of the failure of any State or States to have plans approved under this act, or any amount allotted to a State but remaining unencumbered at the end of the period for which it is available to such State is hereby authorized to be appropriated for the next fiscal year in addition to the sum otherwise authorized under section 301 hereof.

STATE PLANS

SEC. 303. (a) A State plan for carrying out the purposes of this title must—

(1) meet the standards set forth in section 504 (a) hereof;

(2) set forth the general manner in which the State proposes to survey its need for educational plant facilities and to determine the priority of projects based on the relative need of different sections of the population and of different areas lacking adequate educational plant facilities, giving special consideration to educational plant facilities serving rural communities and areas with relatively small financial resources;

(3) set forth the general standards for the planning, construction, or acquisition of such facilities of different classes and in different types of locations;

(4) provide that educational plant facilities will be made available to all persons residing in a given territorial area without discrimination on account of race, color, sex, or creed; where separate school facilities are provided for separate population groups, equitable provision shall be made for educational plant facilities of like quality for each such group on the basis of need;

(5) provide for affording every applicant for a construction project an opportunity for hearing before the State agency;

(6) provide that the rates of pay for laborers and mechanics engaged in construction of federally aided projects will be not less than the prevailing local wage rates for similar work as determined in accordance with Public Law 403 of the Seventy-fourth Congress, approved August 30, 1935, as amended;

(7) provide that not to exceed 3 percent of the funds received under this title shall be used for the expenses of the State authority necessary for the efficient administration of the State plan, including program development and supervision.

(b) The Commissioner shall approve any plan which fulfills the conditions specified in subsection (a) hereof.

TITLE IV—CAMPING PROGRAMS FOR CHILDREN AND YOUTH

APPROPRIATION AUTHORIZED

SEC. 401. (a) For the purpose of assisting the several States in providing camping programs for children and youth in public parks and forests, such programs to be administered by school and other nonprofit tax-exempt organizations in cooperation with park and forest authorities, there is hereby authorized to be appropriated for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1948, $25,000,000; for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1949, $40,000,000; for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1950, $55,000,000, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1951, $65,000,000; for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1952, $75,000,000; for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1953, $85,000,000; for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1954, $95,000,000; for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1955, $105,000,000; for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1956, $115,000,000; for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1957, $125,000,000; and thereafter such sums as the Congress may determine.

ALLOTMENT TO STATES

SEC. 402. For the fiscal year ending June 30, 1948, and for each fiscal year thereafter, the Commissioner shall allot to each State which has a plan approved meeting the requirements set forth in section 403 hereof an amount which bears the same ratio to the total sum appropriated for such fiscal year under this title as the urban child population of the ages 10 to 16, inclusive, of the State bears to the urban child population of those ages in all the States.

STATE PLANS

SEC. 403. (a) A State plan for carrying out the purposes of this title must—

(1) meet the standards set forth in section 504 (a) hereof;

(2) set forth the manner in which the State proposes to determine the number, capacity, and location of camps in public parks and forests needed to accommodate the urban child population of the State;

(3) set forth standards for the construction, equipment, and operation of camps of different sizes and in different types of locations;

(4) provide that camping facilities and programs will be made available without discrimination on account of race, creed, color, or economic status; separate camping facilities and programs for separate population groups which make equitable provision of camping facilities and programs of like quality for each such group on the basis of need shall be deemed to meet this requirement;

(5) provide that not to exceed 2 percent of the funds received under this title shall be used for the expenses of the State authority necessary for the efficient administration of the State plan, including program development and supervision.

(b) The Commisssioner shall approve any plan which fulfills the conditions specified in subsection (a) hereof.

TITLE V—ADMINISTRATION

STATE CONTROL OF OPERATIONS

SEC. 501. No department, agency, officer, or employee of the United States shall exercise any direction, supervision, or control over the personnel, curriculum, or program of instruction of any school, school system, or educational institution with respect to which funds have been or may be expended under this act.

UNITED STATES OFFICE OF EDUCATION

SEC. 502. (a) The United States Office of Education shall be administered within the Federal Security Agency by a Commissioner, who shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and shall receive compensation at a rate not to exceed $15,000 per annum.

(b) The Commissioner, in exercising his authority under this act, shall consult and advise with a National Advisory Council (hereinafter referred to as the "Council") on all matters of major policy or program. The Council shall consist of the Commissioner, as chairman, and 9 citizens to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. Each member shall be appointed for a 4-year term; except that (1) at least half of the members originally appointed shall be appointed for 2-year terms, and (2) any member appointed to fill a vacancy occurring prior to the expiration of the term of his predecessor shall be appointed for the remainder of such term. The members of the Council shall serve without remuneration, except for a per diem subsistence allowance not to exceed $25 for actual time devoted to the work of the Council and shall be reimbursed for travel and other necessary expenses.

(c) The Commissioner may from time to time appoint such other advisory committees as he deems necessary to consult and advise with him and the members of his staff with respect to matters involving technical and professional questions of policy and procedure in the administration of this act. Persons appointed to serve on such committees shall serve without remuneration, except for a per diem subsistence allowance of not to exceed $25 for actual time devoted to attending meetings called by the Commissioner and shall be reimbursed for travel and other necessary expenses.

(d) The Commissioner shall appoint and fix the compensation of such personnel as he may deem necessary to carry out the provisions of this act. Appointments shall be made and compensation shall be fixed in accordance with the provisions of the civil-service laws and regulations and the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, except that, when deemed necessary by the Commissioner for the effective administration of this act, expert consultants and part-time employees may be employed without regard to such laws.

(e) Officers and employees of the Office of Education, members of the council, members of advisory committees, and consultants employed, shall be chosen without regard to political affiliations and solely on the basis of their ability and fitness to perform the duties of the office or position.

(f) In addition to administering the provisions of this act, the functions of the United States Office of Education, under the direction of the Commissioners, shall be—

(1) to aid, stimulate, and encourage the development throughout the Nation of improved services and facilities in the entire field of education;

(2) to cooperate with other agencies of the Federal Government, with State Governments, and with other agencies and individuals functioning in the field of education;

(3) to promote, foster, and encourage State and community activities in the field of education;

(4) to collect and analyze statistics, make studies, investigations, and reports on conditions, problems, needs, and progress in the field of education, both in the United States and in other countries, and disseminate and make available information relating to the field of education;

(5) to make reports and recommendations with respect to the most effective policies and methods for the promotion and improvement of educational services, including recommendations with respect to legislation and matters of administrative policy;

(6) to cooperate with the Department of State and the United Nations Educational, Scientific, and Cultural Organization;

(7) to administer such Federal programs, including the grants-in-aid programs authorized by this act, and to exercise such other powers and perform such other duties and functions in the field of education as are now assigned to it or may be provided by presently existing or by subsequent legislative enactment.

(g) The Commissioner, after advisement with the National Advisory Council, and with the approval of the Administrator, Federal Security Agency, is hereby authorized to promulgate such rules and regulations in conformity with the provisions of this act as may be necessary to facilitate its administration.

(h) In administering the provisions of this act, the Commissioner is authorized to utilize the services and facilities of any executive department in accordance with an agreement with the head thereof. Payment for such services and facilities shall be made in advance or by way of reimbursement, as may be agreed upon between the Commissioner and the head of the executive department furnishing them.

(i) The Commissioner is hereby authorized to delegate to any officer or employee of the Office of Education designated by him such of his functions, powers, and duties as he deems appropriate, including the approval, disapproval, or modification of any action which is subject to the direction of the Commissioner; except that he may not delegate the function of promulgating official regulations concerning grants-in-aid programs authorized in this act.

PROGRAM DEVELOPMENT, ADMINISTRATION, AND RESEARCH

SEC. 503. For the purpose of (a) administering the provisions of this act; (b) conducting basic scientific research on learning processes and education methods, such research to be conducted either directly by the Office of Education or by contract with other Government agencies, State educational authorities, schools and school systems, colleges, and universities or research institutes; and (c) providing demonstrations of improved education methods in cooperation with States, communities, school systems, schools, colleges, universities, and libraries, there is hereby authorized to be appropriated to the United States Office of Education for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1948, the sum of $10,000,000; for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1949, the sum of $12,500,000; for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1950, the sum of $15,000,000; for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1951, the sum of $17,500,000; for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1952, the sum of $20,000,000; for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1953, the sum of $22,500,000; for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1954, the sum of $25,000,000; and for each fiscal year thereafter such sum as the Congress may determine.

NATIONAL STANDARDS

SEC. 504. In order to qualify for receiving funds appropriated under this act, a State—

(a) by legislative enactment shall (1) accept the provisions of this act and provide for the administration of funds to be received; (2) provide that the State treasurer, or corresponding official in the State, shall serve as trustee for the funds paid to the State under this act; (3) establish or designate a single State agency as the sole agency for preparing and carrying out or supervising the carrying out of the State plans under this act; (4) provide for an audit by the State agency of the expenditure of funds received and disbursed to schools, school systems, educational agencies, and institutions as authorized in this act; (5) provide that the State agency shall make such reports, in such form, and containing such information, as the Commissioner may from time to time reasonably require; and (6) provide, in States which maintain separate schools for separate population groups, for a just and equitable apportionment of funds received for the benefit of each such group; and (7) provide that funds received under the provisions of this act shall be made available to every State-approved educational agency in need thereof: Provided, That in any State in which the legislature has not taken the action specified in this paragraph the chief executive of such State may, until such action has been taken or until 6 months after the adjournment of the first regular session of the legislature in such State following the date of enactment of this title, whichever first occurs, take such action for such period as is required by this act to be taken by legislative enactment;

(b) either by legislative enactment, or by regulations issued by its State agency, if the legislature so directs, shall provide after the fiscal year ending June 30, 1950, and then subject to exception only after an appeal upheld by the National Board of Appeals that (1) teachers in public schools shall be paid not less than $1,500 per school year of 180 days and shall be entitled to retirement benefits no less adequate than those provided for beneficiaries under the old age insurance provisions of the Social Security Act; (2) a State plan shall be in effect with the objective of bringing about, in not to exceed 5 years, public educational programs and opportunities for children and youth of rural areas no less adequate than those for children and youth in urban areas; (3) a State plan shall be in effect with the objective of bringing about, in not to exceed 5 years, substantially equal opportunities at all levels of the State's public educational system and throughout all areas of the State without regard to sex, race, color, or creed; (4) teachers and other employees of public educational agencies shall be employed only on the basis of merit and retained on the basis of efficiency; (5) school buildings, school busses, and other school equipment shall be safe and sanitary; (6) all books and other necessary instructional materials shall be provided without charge to school pupils; (7) public services, other than instructional services, shall be equally available to all children attending nonprofit tax-exempt schools selected by their parents and meeting the requirements of the State's compulsory attendance laws; (8) all physically and mentally qualified children of 6 to 16 years of age, inclusive, shall be required to attend school for a school year of not less than 180 days; and (9) there shall be actively and progressively under development a 10-year program for the improvement of educational services throughout the State, including plans for improving the organization of school administrative units and educational agencies, plans for improving employment conditions for teachers, and plans for educational plant construction and other capital expenditures for educational purposes.

(c) either by legislative enactment, or by regulations issued by its State agency, if the legislature so directs, shall provide, after the fiscal year ending June 30, 1955, and then subject to exception only after an appeal upheld by the National Board of Appeals, that (1) teachers in public schools shall be paid not less than $2,000 per school year of 180 days; (2) public educational programs and opportunities for children and youth of rural areas shall be no less adequate than those for children and youth in urban areas; and (3) equal opportunities shall be provided at all levels of the State's public educational system and throughout all areas of the State without regard to sex, race, color, or creed and all forms of discrimination not related to individual aptitude shall be eliminated.

(d) In any case where a State agency is unable or unwilling to distribute Federal grants in conformity with this act, the Commissioner, after a public hearing before and a determination by the National Board of Appeals, shall be authorized to carry out the intent of the act by certification of their pro rata share of allotments under sections 102, 202, 302, and 402 of this act directly to local schools, school systems, or educational agencies and, in the case of section 202, to individuals.

OPERATION OF STATE PLANS

SEC. 505. (a) At the beginning of each fiscal year the Commissioner shall estimate the sums to which each State is entitled under the provisions of this act and shall thereupon certify to the Secretary of the Treasury the amount so estimated, reduced or increased, as the case may be, by any sum for which the Commissioner finds that his estimate for any prior period was greater or less than the amount to which the State was entitled for such period. The Secretary of the Treasury shall thereupon through the Fiscal Service of the Treasury Department and prior to audit or settlement by the General Accounting Office, pay to the State in quarterly installments, the amounts so certified beginning with the first quarter of the fiscal year for which appropriations made under authorization of this act are available.

(b) The Commissioner shall cause audits to be made of the expenditure of funds under this act. If the Commissioner, after reasonable notice and opportunity for hearing to the State agency administering or supervising the administration of plans approved under the provisions of this act, finds that in the administration of the plan or plans there is a failure to comply substantially with any of the provisions of the State plan he shall notify such State agency that further payments will not be made to the State under such plan or plans until he is satisfied that there is no longer any failure to comply, or until the National Board of Appeals shall have overruled his decision. Until he is so satisfied or is so overruled, he shall make no further certification to the Secretary of the Treasury with respect to such plan or plans of such State in which there is such failure.

NATIONAL BOARD OF APPEALS

SEC. 506. (a) There is hereby established a National Board of Appeals, which shall consist of a Chairman and two additional members appointed by the Supreme Court of the United States solely on the grounds of fitness to perform the duties of the office. Each member of the Board shall receive compensation at the rate of $50 for each day of actual service on the Board, together with necessary expenses for travel and subsistence in attending sessions of the Board.

(b) The terms of the office of the three members first taking office shall expire, as designated by the Supreme Court at the time of appointment, one at the end of the third year, one at the end of the sixth year, and one at the end of the ninth year. The terms of office of their successors shall expire 9 years after the expiration of the terms for which their predecessors were appointed; except that any new member appointed to fill a vacancy occurring prior to the expiration of the term for which his predecessor was appointed shall be appointed only for the unexpired portion of the term of his predecessor. No member serving a full 9-year term may be reappointed for a second term.

(c) The principal office of the Board shall be in the District of Columbia. The Commissioner shall provide the Board with suitable rooms in the District of Columbia and with necessary legal, stenographic, and other assistance satisfactory to the Board.

(d) The Board shall meet at the call of the Chairman to hear appeals from the State agencies respecting inability to meet national standards specified in section 504 of this act or involving the withholding of certification of funds as set forth in section 505 (b) of this act. The proceedings of the Board shall be conducted in accordance with such rules of practice and procedure as the Board may prescribe.

(e) In any proceeding involving the issue whether a State agency or a school, school system, or educational institution has been guilty of fraud, misuse of funds, or failure to comply with the provisions of an approved State plan or with the national standards, the burden of proof shall be upon the appellant to show that the findings of the Commissioner on the basis of which the certification of funds has been withheld are without sufficient foundation in fact to justify the further withholding of such certification.

(f) The findings of fact of the Commissioner unless substantially contrary to the weight of evidence, shall be conclusive; but the Board, for good cause shown may remand the case to the Commissioner to take further evidence, and the Commissioner may thereupon make new or modified findings of fact and may modify his previous action, and shall certify to the Board the transcript and record of the further proceedings; such new or modified findings of fact shall likewise be conclusive unless substantially contrary to the weight of evidence. The Board shall have jurisdiction to affirm the action of the Commissioner or to set it aside in whole or in part.

TITLE VI—GENERAL PROVISIONS

REPORT TO CONGRESS

SEC. 601. The Commissioner shall include in his annual report for transmission to Congress a full report of the administration of this act, including a detailed statement of appropriations and disbursements, together with a summary and analysis of the legislative and administrative provisions adopted by each State for the expenditure of funds received under this act and statistical information showing the accomplishments of the respective States through the expenditure of such funds. Such report shall also include a record of hearings and actions by the National Board of Appeals.

DEFINITIONS

SEC. 602. As used in this act—

(a) The term "State" shall include the several States, the District of Columbia, Alaska, Hawaii, and Puerto Rico.

(b) The term "legislature" means the State or Territorial legislatures, or other comparable body, except that in the District of Columbia it shall mean the Board of Commissioners.

(c) The term "nonprofit tax-exempt school" means any school, college, or educational institution exempt from taxation under section 101 (6) of the Internal Revenue Code and approved by the State agency.

(d) A "just and equitable" apportionment, allotment, or distribution of funds provided under this act for the benefit of a separate population group in a State which maintains separate educational facilities for such separate population groups, means any plan of apportionment, allotment, or distribution which results in the expenditure, for the benefit of such separate groups, of a proportion of said funds not less than the proportion that each such group in such State bears to the total population of that State.

(e) The term "preelementary education" means the organized education in nursery schools and kindergartens of children of the ages three to five, inclusive.

(f) The term "special education of physically handicapped children" means the education of children who are handicapped by reason of crippling, speech impediments, loss or partial loss of sight or hearing, or who are convalescing from serious illness or accidents and for whose education special instructional methods or facilities are required by reason of such physical handicaps.

(g) The term "community programs of recreation and adult education" means programs operated under the auspices of schools, libraries, colleges, and universities or other nonprofit tax-exempt educational institutions or organizations and designed to serve the community with part-time classes and other educational and recreational services.

(h) The term "scholarship" means a financial award made to a person qualified to enroll or already enrolled as a student in an accredited high school, college, university, technical institute, junior college, vocational school, or other nonprofit tax-exempt educational institution meeting minimum standards for such accreditation as determined by the State agency.

(i) The term "fellowship" means a financial award made to a person qualified to enroll or already enrolled as a student in graduate or professional schools or departments of colleges, universities, or research institutes approved for the purpose by the State agency.

(j) The term "student" means a person who is devoting substantially full time to educational work in a high school, college, university, junior college, technical institute, vocational school, or research institute approved by the State agency.

(k) The term "urban child population" as used in title IV means the number of children who are of the ages 10 to 16, inclusive, as estimated by the Department of Commerce, living in cities or municipalities of 10,000 or more inhabitants.

(l) The term "camping program" means a program of organized activities for children who are of the ages 10 to 16, inclusive, conducted in public parks and forests under the auspices of schools and other nonprofit tax-exempt organizations.

(m) The term "educational plant facilities" means the buildings, furniture, and permanent equipment of educational institutions, including preelementary schools, elementary schools, secondary schools, vocational school, junior colleges, colleges, universities, libraries, and student or faculty dormitories or similar facilities operated under the auspices of or in connection with public and nonprofit tax-exempt educational institutions, but does not include any institution furnishing primarily domiciliary or custodial care.

(n) The term "construction" includes the erection of new buildings, extension, remodeling, and alteration of existing buildings, initial equipment of any such buildings, and landscaping the site thereof, architects' fees, legal counsel, and all other expenses incidental to such construction, but excluding the cost of off-site improvements and the cost of acquisition of land.

(o) The term "State-approved educational agency" means any public school, school system, or higher educational institution or any nonpublic nonprofit tax-exempt school, school system, or higher educational institution meeting the standards promulgated by a State department of education, State board of education, or similar State agency empowered by legislation to determine such standards and to give or withhold approval of such schools, school systems, and higher educational institutions.

SEPARABILITY

SEC. 603. If any provision of this act, or the application thereof to any State, person, or circumstance, is held invalid, the remainder of the act, and the application of such provision to other States, persons, or circumstances shall not be affected thereby.

The accompanying statement of explanation presented by Mr. MURRAY is as follows:

SUMMARY OF THE EDUCATION DEVELOPMENT ACT

The Education Development Act provides for a 10-year program of Federal aid to education.

This program is based on a declaration of policy aimed at achieving throughout the United States educational systems which offer full opportunities for the development of individual capacities and which afford "equality of opportunity to all without regard to sex, race, color, or creed."

The policy declaration clearly recognizes that education is a State responsibility. The role of the Federal Government is to aid and stimulate the States in discharging their responsibilities.

The basic provisions of the bill are as follows:

I. EQUALIZATION OF BASIC EDUCATIONAL PROGRAMS (TITLE I)

For the fiscal year of 1948 $500,000,000 is authorized to help the States equalize opportunities in the following fields: Preelementary education, elementary education, secondary education, including noncollegiate vocational education, higher education, adult education and community recreation, special education of physically handicapped children and youth, health and physical education, and public library services, especially in rural areas.

This sum is to increase gradually every year until, in the tenth year, it amounts to $1,000,000,000.

Funds are to be distributed among the various States in accordance with an index of financial need for each State. The poorer States may receive as much as $40 a child; the more well-to-do States may receive as little as $10 a child.

In order to qualify for the entire amount of its grant, each State must also maintain a certain level of educational expenditures from its own funds (computed as a percentage of income payments within a State). The purpose of this is to assure that Federal aid will supplement rather than take the place of State support of education.

II. SCHOLARSHIPS AND FELLOWSHIPS (TITLE II)

For the fiscal year of 1948, $70,000,000 is authorized to aid the States "to enable young persons of ability to continue their education in the last 2 years of high school and higher educational institutions by means of the award of scholarships and fellowships." This sum is to increase until it reaches $350,000,000 in the tenth year.

The States are to "provide a method of identifying students of ability * * * without reference to race, color, sex, or religion."

The funds authorized at the maximum level could annually finance 250,000 young people to finish high school, 400,000 to attend college, and 75,000 to engage in postgraduate or professional study.

III. PLANNING AND CONSTRUCTION OF EDUCATIONAL FACILITIES (TITLE III)

Two hundred million dollars is authorized for the fiscal year of 1948 to aid the States in (a) making surveys of the needs for educational plant facilities, (b) preparing drawings and specifications for such facilities, and (c) acquiring, constructing, or improving such facilities. This sum rises to $400,000,000 by the third year.

These funds are to be distributed among the States in such a manner as to provide more funds per capita for the poorer States. The allocation formula is the same one used in the recent Senate bill on Federal aid for hospital construction.

The States must also match Federal funds in accordance with their financial capacity. Every State, no matter how poor, must put up at least $1 for every $3 in Federal funds. The maximum amount of State matching is $2 for every $1 of Federal funds.

The State plans must "provide that educational plant facilities will be made available to all persons residing in a given territorial area without discrimination." Where separate school facilities are provided for separate population groups, "equitable provisions shall be made for educational plant facilities of like quality for each such group on the basis of need."

IV. CAMPING PROGRAMS FOR CHILDREN AND YOUTH (TITLE IV)

The sum of $25,000,000 is authorized for the fiscal year of 1948 to assist the States in "providing camping program for children and youth in public parks and forests." This sum is to increase to $125,000,000 in the tenth year.

These funds are to be distributed among the States in accordance with the urban child population.

V. ADMINISTRATION (TITLES V AND VI)

A. State control (sec. 501): It is provided that no Federal agency or official shall "exercise any supervision or control over the personnel, curriculum, or program of instruction of any school, school system, or educational institution."

B. United States Office of Education (sec. 502): The United States Commissioner of Education is authorized to administer the Federal aid provisions of the act and to have audits made on expenditures under the act. He is also given an initial authorization of $10,000,000 for educational research to be conducted either directly by the Office of Education or by contract with other agencies, particularly colleges, universities, and research institutions. He is also to submit a full annual report to Congress on the administration of the act.

C. National Advisory Council (sec. 502): A National Advisory Council is established, composed of nine citizens to be appointed by the President with the Commissioner serving as chairman. The Commissioner must consult with this Council on all matters of major policy or program.

D. National Standards (sec. 504): In order to qualify for receiving funds under this act, a State is expected to live up to standards clearly set forth in the act.

Certain general standards relate to the administration of the funds, State audits, the submission of reports to the Commissioner and the availability of funds to all State-approved educational agencies needing assistance.

With regard to other educational objectives, it is recognized that the raising of standards has to be on a step by step basis. The following goals are set for the period after the program has been in operation for 3 years: (1) Public school teachers to be paid no less than $1,500 a year; (2) a plan to be in effect aiming at equal educational opportunities in farm areas within 5 years; (3) a plan to be in effect aiming at equal educational opportunities for all racial groups within 5 years; (4) employment to teachers on a merit basis; (5) school buildings and other equipment to be safe and sanitary; (6) books to be provided without charge; (7) noninstructional public services should be available to children in all schools; (8) compulsory school year of no less than 180 days a year for children from 6 to 16 years of age; (9) a 10-year program for the improvement of educational services throughout the State to be "actively and progressively under development."

Any State can bring an appeal to the National Board of Appeals respecting inability to meet any of these standards; and the Board has the power to grant exceptions.

The following goals are set for the period after the program has been in operation for 8 years: (1) Public-school teachers to be paid no less than $2,000 a year; (2) equal educational opportunities in farm areas, and (3) equal educational opportunities for all racial groups. With respect to these standards also, any State may win an exception by carrying a successful appeal to the National Board of Appeals.

E. National Board of Appeals (sec. 506): A National Board of Appeals is to be set up, composed of three members appointed by the United States Supreme Court. This Board shall hear appeals from State agencies respecting inability to meet any of the national standards and against the withholding of funds from any State. The Board is given power to grant exceptions and set aside actions by the Commissioner.

SUMMARY OF AUTHORIZATIONS

I. Basic educational programs and services, $500,000,000 rising to $1,000,000,000 yearly.

II. Scholarships and fellowships, $70,000,000 rising to $350,000,000 yearly.

III. Planning and construction of educational facilities, $200,000,000 rising to $400,000,000 yearly.

IV. Camping programs for children and youth, $25,000,000 rising to $125,000,000 yearly.

V. Program development, administration, and research, $10,000,000 rising to $25,000,000 yearly.

Total, $805,000,000 rising to $1,900,000,000 yearly.

FISCAL POLICY ASPECTS

Major proposed legislation of this character should be measured in terms of its impact on the entire national economy. The effect of the bill on expenditures for education in the fiscal year 1948 and for 10 years thereafter is indicated by the attached table. At present, such expenditures—local, State, Federal, and institutional—amount to about 3.2 percent of the national income. This percentage would probably rise to 3.6 percent as soon as the proposal is in effect, and by 1947 would rise to 4 percent of the estimated national income at a full-employment level.

Such a program would undoubtedly have a most favorable effect upon productivity and the national income both immediately and in subsequent years.

TOTAL ESTIMATED EXPENDITURES FOR EDUCATION UNDER PRESENT AND PROPOSED LEGISLATION—EXPLANATORY NOTES

1. The figures do not include expenditures of individuals, including parents, other than those which enter into the income of institutions.

2. The estimate of non-Federal current expenditures of $3,300,000,000 for elementary, secondary, special and higher education for fiscal 1948 represents a 20-percent increase over such estimated expenditures for fiscal 1942. This is approximately $200,000,000 above the non-Federal expenditures which would be required for the States to receive their full allotment under the 2-percent standard proposed in the bill for the first year of operation.

3. The estimate of non-Federal current expenditures of $100,000,000 for fiscal 1948 for school lunch, camping, and other programs, etc., is based on actual non-Federal expenditures of $76,000,000 for school lunches alone in 1945.

4. The Bureau of Labor Statistics estimated total expenditures for construction of educational facilities, public (almost all of which is non-Federal) and private. At $475,000,000, in 1940 prices, for the second postwar year (Monthly Labor Review, February 1945). The above estimate of non-Federal capital expenditures of $500,000,000 under present legislation represents an increase over this figure of approximately 35 percent to allow for the rise in construction costs and a subsequent downward adjustment for anticipated continuing construction bottlenecks. Expenditures for Federal grants under the proposed legislation are estimated at $100,000,000 for the first year of operation of the program. The estimate of non-Federal capital expenditures is reduced to $450,000,000 under the proposed legislation because it is assumed that Federal grants may supplant non-Federal expenditures to the extent of $50,000,000.

5. The estimate of non-Federal expenditures of $100,000,000 for interest payments for fiscal 1948 is somewhat below the fiscal 1942 level.

6. The estimate of Federal current expenditures of $1,616,000,000 for fiscal 1948 consists of $21,000,000 for vocational education, $5,000,000 for land-grant colleges, $1,500,000,000 for veterans' education, $75,000,000 for the school-lunch program, and $15,000,000 for the Office of Education and various miscellaneous items.

7. The estimate of non-Federal current expenditures of $6,300,000,000 for fiscal 1957 is based on the assumption that all of the States meet the 3-percent standard as proposed in the bill. The figure of $6,300,000,000 represents 3 percent of an estimated average full employment level of income payments of $210,000,000,000 in the years 1952, 1953, and 1954. Expenditures are allocated among elementary, secondary, special, and higher education, and school-lunch, camping, and other programs in approximately the same proportion as is estimated for fiscal 1948.

8. The estimate of non-Federal expenditures of $200,000,000 for interest payments for fiscal 1957 represents 200 percent of the estimated figure for 1948.

9. The estimate of Federal current expenditures of $1,650,000,000 for fiscal 1957 includes $1,500,000,000 under the proposed legislation and an estimated $150,000,000 for vocational education, land-grant colleges, the school-lunch program, the Office of Education, and miscellaneous items under existing legislation.

10. For fiscal 1948, income payments are estimated at $175,000,000,000.

11. For fiscal 1957, income payments are estimated at $230,000,000,000.

Mr. MURRAY subsequently said: Mr. President, one could not attend or thoughtfully follow the discussions at the United Nations Educational and Cultural Conference, held in London in November 1945, without coming to the conclusion that we, in America, must reexamine our entire attitude in relation to the problem of education.

In the New World we are entering, we must dedicate ourselves to the building of an educational system that will be a genuine force in strengthening our democratic institutions and providing an example for the rest of the world.

A new and bolder approach with respect to Federal aid to education seems to be in order. We need a program based upon the recognition that an expanded educational system is a prerequisite to a sound and intelligent electorate and to the creation of an economy of full employment and full production. We need a program so broad and so challenging that it will inspire the united support of all groups who are truly interested in raising American educational standards for all our citizens and improving the general social and economic life in our country.

On June 13 of this year, when Senate bill 181, the Educational Finance Act, was reported from the Education and Labor Committee, the point of view I have just expressed was set forth in a separate statement of views submitted by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH], the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AIKEN], the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MORSE], and myself. We pointed out at that time that America needed a 10-year program for the development and improvement of educational activities.

Today the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MORSE], the Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER], and I have introduced a bill providing for such a 10-year program.

In the past we have studied on a piecemeal basis the problem of Federal aid to education. The education development bill, on the other hand, approaches the problem as a whole. This bill deals with four types of Federal aid:

First, general equalization of educational opportunities;

Second, scholarships and fellowships;

Third, planning and construction of school buildings; and Fourth, camping programs.

The bill assumes that the Federal Government must finance an important share of the needed improvement, but it does not propose to let the States sit back while the Federal Government takes over their job. Laggard States must make more effort than they have made in the past. All States must continue to do their share. Funds are to be distributed among the States not merely on the basis of population but also in accordance with the financial need of each State.

The bill also sets forth certain standards which the States are expected to meet in order to qualify for Federal aid. These standards, along with other important aspects of the measure, are described in detail in the explanation of the bill which I filed earlier today.

The measure has been drafted in close consultation with all the professional groups in education and many others which have a special interest in this field. The almost unanimous reaction to the preliminary outline of the bill was that, for the first time, it would focus public attention upon the true scope of the educational problem.

The bill has been introduced at this time mainly for the purpose of stimulating study and constructive discussion during the coming 5 months. Many important details still remain to be worked out. Many controversial issues are still to be resolved.

It is our hope to have a redrafted bill ready for introduction at the beginning of the next Congress. With such a bill as a basis for study it seems to me that the Education and Labor Committee might well undertake at that time a comprehensive review of the entire educational situation.

CLAIMS OF COMPENSATION OF CERTAIN PRISONERS OF WAR

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to introduce for appropriate reference a joint resolution, and request that it be printed in full in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 185) providing for the filing of claims for compensation for personal injuries and property damage sustained by citizens of the United States who were taken prisoner by the enemy during World War II, was received, read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Whereas the Government of the United States has made no provision for the asserting of claims by its citizens who, as a result of capture by the enemy during World War II, suffered loss of, or damage to, health or property, or by the dependents of persons who lost their lives while in or as a result of such captivity;

Whereas the failure of the Government of the United States to provide facilities for the presentation of such claims has resulted in activities whereby private sources are making representations to those who believe they have such claims, seeking to represent them before such tribunal as may be established to consider such claims; and

Whereas it is the responsibility of the Government of the United States to extend to its citizens all possible assistance in the presentation and prosecution of such claims: Therefore be it

Resolved, etc., That (a) the Secretary of State is authorized and directed to establish facilities for the filing of claims for compensation by citizens of the United States, and by individuals who are not citizens but who served as members of the armed forces of the United States, (1) who were taken prisoner by the enemy during World War II, and (2) who sustained loss of, or damage to, health or property as a result of such captivity; and by the dependents of any such persons who died during or subsequent to such captivity.

(b) Any such claims filed by members or former members of the armed forces, or their dependents, shall be transmitted by the Secretary of State to the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy, as the case may be, and any substantiating or supplementary information or data available from the records of such Department shall be attached to and returned with such claim to the Secretary of State.

SEC. 2. It is the sense of the Congress that, in the negotiation of peace treaties and in any adjustments among the Allied Governments with respect to reparations and credits, paramount consideration shall be given to the protection of the interests of individuals who shall have filed valid claims under the provisions of the first section of this joint resolution, to the end that the necessary facilities may be established and funds made available for the prompt adjudication and payment of such claims.

CASTLE CLINTON NATIONAL MONUMENT, NEW YORK CITY—MOTION TO RECONSIDER

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I desire to enter a motion to reconsider the vote by which House bill 5125, a bill to establish the Castle Clinton National Monument in the city of New York, and for other purposes, was passed by the Senate on yesterday. I am informed that it is still in the possession of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion will be entered.

AMENDMENT OF SOCIAL SECURITY ACT AND INTERNAL REVENUE CODE—PRINTING OF H. R. 7037 WITH AMENDMENTS NUMBERED

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, anticipating that House bill 7037, to amend the Social Security Act and the Internal Revenue Code, and for other purposes, may be sent to conference, I ask unanimous consent to have the bill, as it passed the Senate, printed with the Senate amendments made thereto numbered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

TREATY OF GENERAL RELATIONS AND PROTOCOL BETWEEN THE UNITED STATES AND THE PHILIPPINES

Mr. CONNALLY. The Committee on Foreign Relations today ordered reported to the Senate the recently negotiated treaty with the Philippine Islands. A number of appointments have been made in that connection. I ask unanimous consent that, as in executive session, they may go to the Executive Calendar, so that we can act on them when we reach the executive calendar today.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the request of the Senator from Texas is granted.

RATE OF POSTAGE ON DOMESTIC AIR MAIL

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a message from the House of Representatives announcing its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5560) to fix the rate of postage on domestic air mail, and for other purposes, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. CHAVEZ. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments, agree to the request of the House for a conference, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the President pro tempore appointed Mr. CHAVEZ, Mr. MCKELLAR, Mr. HAYDEN, Mr. BAILEY, Mr. ELLENDER, Mr. REED, Mr. LANGER, and Mr. BUCK conferees on the part of the Senate.

PROCEEDINGS AT DINNER IN HONOR OF PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT AND VICE PRESIDENT TRUMAN IN 1945

[Mr. MYERS asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD the proceedings of a dinner given in honor of the inauguration of Franklin Delano Roosevelt, President, and Harry S. Truman, Vice President, at Washington, D. C., on January 19, 1945, which appears in the Appendix.]

THE NEW CONTROL SYSTEM—EDITORIAL FROM PHILADELPHIA EVENING BULLETIN

[Mr. MYERS asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an editorial entitled "The New Contro. System" from the Philadelphia Evening Bulletin of July 26, 1946, which appears in the Appendix.]

EQUAL PAY FOR MEN AND WOMEN

[Mr. MYERS asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD a factual statement of the Women's Bureau of the Department of Labor, and an article entitled "Women's Wages" by Malvina Lindsay, both on the subject of equal pay for men and women, which appear in the Appendix.]

JULEAN ARNOLD

[Mr. MAGNUSON asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an article on Julean Arnold and excerpts from China Club minute book, which appear in the Appendix.]

TRAINING OF OFFICERS FOR THE NAVAL ESTABLISHMENT

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2304) to provide for the training of officers for the naval service, and for other purposes, which were on pages 12 and 13, to strike out all of section 16; on page 13, line 5, to strike out "17" and insert "16"; in line 11, to strike out "19" and insert "18"; in line 21, to strike out "20" and insert "19", and on page 14, line 3, to strike out "21" and insert "20."

Mr. WALSH. I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

GRANTS TO STATES FOR HOSPITALS AND PUBLIC HEALTH CENTERS—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. HILL submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 191) to amend the Public Health Service Act to authorize grants to the States for surveying their hospitals and public-health centers and for planning construction of additional facilities, and to authorize grants to assist in such construction, having met, after full and free conference, have been unable to agree.

LISTER HILL,
JAMES M. TUNNELL,
ELBERT D. THOMAS,
ROBERT M. LA FOLLETTE, JR.,
ROBERT A. TAFT,
Managers on the Part of the Senate.

A. L. BULWINKLE,
VIRGIL CHAPMAN,
VITO MARCANTONIO,
CHAS. A. WOLVERTON,
CLARENCE J. BROWN,
Managers on the Part of the House.

Mr. HILL. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the conference report.

There being no objection, the conference report was considered and agreed to.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, I now move that the Senate agree to the House amendment to the bill.

The motion was agreed to.

TERMINAL LEAVE FOR ENLISTED PERSONNEL OF THE ARMED FORCES—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 4051) to grant to enlisted personnel of the armed forces certain benefits in lieu of accumulated leave, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate to the text of the bill and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following: "That this Act may be cited as the 'Armed Forces Leave Act of 1946'".

"SEC. 2. As used in this Act—

"(a) The term 'member of the armed forces' means any member of the Army of the United States, United States Navy, United States Marine Corps, or the United States Coast Guard.

"(b) The term 'discharge' means (1), in the case of enlisted personnel, separation or release from active duty under honorable conditions or appointment as a commissioned officer or warrant officer; and (2), in the case of commissioned or warrant officers, separation or release from active duty under honorable conditions.

"(c) The term 'spouse' means a lawful wife or husband.

"(d) The term 'child' includes—

"(1) a legitimate child;

"(2) a child legally adopted;

"(3) a stepchild, if, at the time of death of the member or former member of the armed forces, such stepchild is a member of the deceased's household;

"(4) an illegitimate child, but in the case of a male member or former male member of the armed forces only if he has been judicially ordered or decreed to contribute to such child's support; has been judicially decreed to be the putative father of such child; or has acknowledged under oath in writing that he is the father of such child; and

"(5) a person to whom the member or former member of the armed forces at the time of death stands in loco parentis and so stood for not less than twelve months prior to the date of death.

"(e) The term 'parent' includes father and mother, grandfather and grandmother, stepfather and stepmother, father and mother through adoption, and persons who, for a period of not less than one year prior to the death of the member or former member of the armed forces, stood in loco parentis to such member or former member: Provided, That not more than two parents may receive the benefits provided under this Act and preference shall be given to the parent or parents, not exceeding two, who actually exercised parental relationship at the time of or most nearly prior to the date of the death of such member or former member of the armed forces.

"(f) The term 'Secretary' means in the case of personnel of the Army, the Secretary of War; in the case of personnel of the Navy and Marine Corps, the Secretary of the Navy; and in the case of personnel of the Coast Guard, the Secretary of the Treasury, and the designated representatives of each such Secretary.

"(g) The term 'cash' includes a check upon the Treasurer of the United States.

"SEC. 3. (a) Each member of the armed forces shall be entitled to leave at the rate of two and one-half calendar days for each month of active service, excluding periods of (1) absence from duty without leave, (2) absence over leave, and (3) confinement as the result of a sentence of court martial. Except as provided in subsection (b) of this section, such leave may be accumulated in an amount not to exceed one hundred and twenty calendar days. Any leave so accumulated shall not, however, survive death occurring during active military service. Enlisted members or former enlisted members of the armed forces shall be considered to be entitled to such leave from and after September 8, 1939, but shall not be considered to have any leave accumulated or accrued as of the date of the enactment of this act, or the date of discharge if prior to such date of enactment, in excess of the amount which would have been accumulated and accrued if their leave had been accumulated and accrued from and after September 8, 1939, on the same basis as leave is accumulated and accrued in the case of commissioned officers in the regular components of their respective branches of the armed forces. Except in the case of leave to be settled and compensated for under section 6 of this Act, leave may be taken by a member on a calendar-day basis as vacation or absence from duty with pay, annually as accruing or otherwise, in accordance with regulations to be issued by the several Secretaries. Such regulations shall provide equal treatment for officers and enlisted men, shall establish to the fullest extent practicable uniform policies for the several branches of the armed forces, and shall provide that leave shall be taken annually as accruing to the extent consistent with military requirements and other exigencies. Members who reenlist after the date of enactment of this Act may be authorized reenlistment leave in the discretion of the Secretary, for a period not exceeding ninety days, and such leave shall be deducted from leave accrued during active service prior to reenlistment or charged against any leave which may accrue during future active service or both. In the case of members who are retired after the date of enactment of this Act and after retirement are continued on or recalled to active duty, leave accrued during service prior to retirement may be carried over to the period of service after retirement. Leave taken prior to discharge before or after the enactment of this Act shall be considered as active military service; but leave settled and compensated for under section 6 of this Act shall not be considered as active military service.

"(b) Notwithstanding any other provision of this Act or of any other law or regulation, no member of the armed forces (other than a member on terminal leave on September 1, 1946) shall be permitted to accumulate or to have to his credit, at any time after August 31, 1946, accumulated or accrued leave aggregating in excess of sixty days.

"SEC. 4. Leave to be settled and compensated for under section 6 of this Act shall be compensable as follows:

"(a) In the case of leave accumulated as an enlisted member of the armed forces, on the basis of the base and longevity pay applicable to such member on the date of his discharge from enlisted service if discharged before August 31, 1946, or on August 31, 1946, if not so discharged, and an allowance computed at the rate of 70 cents a day for subsistence, plus, in the case of enlisted members of the first three grades with dependents on August 31, 1946 or former enlisted members of the first three grades with dependents at the time of discharge if prior to such date, an allowance computed at the rate of $1.25 a day for quarters.

"(b) In the case of leave accumulated or accrued as a member of the armed forces as a warrant or commissioned officer, on the basis of the base and longevity pay and allowances applicable to such member on August 31, 1946.

In the case of all other leave provided under this Act, members shall be entitled during such leave to the same pay and allowances they would receive if not on leave and to any additional or other allowance or allowances otherwise authorized or provided by law for members while on leave. Determination of the number of calendar days of leave to which a member or former member is entitled, including the number of calendar days of absence from duty or vacation to be counted or charged against such leave, shall be made in accordance with regulations to be prescribed by the respective Secretaries, which regulations shall provide equal treatment of officers and enlisted men and shall establish to the fullest extent practicable uniform policies for the several branches of the armed forces. In the case of the leave of enlisted members or former enlisted members attributable to the period prior to the date of enactment of this Act, the Secretary may in the determination of the number of calendar days of absence from duty or vacation to be counted or charged against such leave rely on such records and evidence, including applicants' sworn statements as to the material facts, as he may determine proper. All decisions by the Secretary under this section shall be final and conclusive and shall not be subject to review by any court or by any officer of the United States.

"SEC. 5. (a) Leave to which enlisted members of the armed forces discharged prior to September 1, 1946, and former enlisted members of the armed forces discharged prior to the date of enactment of this Act, are entitled under the provisions of section 3 of this Act shall, to the extent not taken, be settled and compensated for only in the manner provided in section 6 of this Act and if application is made to the Secretary not later than September 1, 1947, or, in the case of any such member or former member whose record is corrected after the date of enactment of this Act to show discharge under honorable conditions, not later than September 1, 1947, or within one year after the date on which such record is corrected, whichever is later.

"(b) In any case in which a member of the armed forces on active duty on September 1, 1946 (other than a member on terminal leave on such date) has to his credit on August 31, 1946, accumulated or accrued leave aggregating in excess of sixty days, such leave in excess of sixty days shall be settled and compensated for only in the manner provided in section 6 of this Act and if application is made to the Secretary not later than September 1, 1947.

"(c) In no event shall the number of calendar days of leave settled and compensated for under section 6 of this Act exceed one hundred and twenty calendar days; and in no event shall the number of calendar days of leave so settled and compensated for, plus

"(1) in the case of a member on active duty on September 1, 1946 (other than a member on terminal leave on such date), the number of calendar days of leave accumulated or standing to such member's credit on such date, or

"(2) in the case of a member or former member placed on terminal leave prior to September 1, 1946, the number of calendar days of such terminal leave, exceed one hundred and twenty calendar days.

"SEC. 6. (a) Leave by this Act provided to be settled and compensated for under this section shall be settled and compensated for as follows:

"(1) Settlement and compensation shall be made entirely in cash—

"(i) when the amount due is less than $50;

"(ii) in the case of any enlisted member of the armed forces discharged prior to January 1, 1943; or

"(iii) in any case covered by subsection (b) or (c) of this section.

"(2) In all other cases settlement and compensation shall be made in bonds of the United States to the highest multiple of $25 and in cash to the extent of the full amount of any difference. Any such bond issued pursuant to an application made under subsection (a) of section 5 shall be dated as of the 1st day of January, the 1st day of April, the 1st day of July, or the 1st day of October, whichever next follows the date of discharge, and any such bond issued pursuant to an application made under subsection (b) of section 5 shall be dated as of October 1, 1946. Each such bond shall mature five years from the date thereof. The bonds issued under this Act shall be issued by the Secretary of the Treasury under the authority and subject to the provisions of the Second Liberty Bond Act, as amended, and through such agencies as he may designate. Except as provided in subsection (d), such bonds shall be nonnegotiable and shall not be transferable by sale, exchange, assignment, pledge, hypothecation, or otherwise. Such bonds shall be issued only to and in the names of living members or living former members of the armed forces. In the event of the death of any holder of any such bond or of any check issued pursuant to this subsection, payment of the bond shall be made by the Secretary of the Treasury prior to, upon, or after its maturity upon application at the option of such holder's survivors and payment of the check shall be made by the Secretary of the Treasury upon application by such survivors as follows: To such holder's surviving spouse and children, if any, in equal shares; and if such holder leaves no surviving spouse or child or children, then in equal shares to such holder's surviving parents, if any. If there is no such survivor, any such bond shall be retired, and any such check shall be cancelled and the amount of the bond or check covered into the general fund of the Treasury. Payment of any such bond or any such check to any holder, or any survivor entitled thereto under the provisions of this subsection, between seventeen and twenty-one years of age shall constitute a complete discharge of the obligations of the United States under this Act. Where the Secretary of the Treasury is of the opinion that any holder of any such bond or any such check or any survivor entitled to payment under the provisions of this subsection is, by reason of being either under seventeen years of age or under mental disability, incapable of satisfactorily looking after his own interests, payment of such bond or such check may be made in the same manner, and with the same effect, as settlement and compensation made under the provisions of subsection (c). Interest on each bond issued under this Act shall accrue at the rate of 2½ per centum per annum from the date of such bond to the date of maturity or to the last day of the month in which payment of the principal of the bond is made, whichever is earlier, and shall be paid with such principal. All decisions by the Secretary of the Treasury under this section with respect to the issuance and payment of bonds and under this paragraph with respect to the issuance and payment of checks shall be final and conclusive and shall not be subject to review by any court or by any officer of the United States. The provisions of this section with respect to the issuance and payment of bonds shall be carried out subject to regulations of the Secretary of the Treasury.

"(b) Leave by this Act provided to be settled and compensated for under this section shall, in the case of any member or former member of the armed forces who dies after discharge, or on or after September 1, 1946, if not discharged prior to such date, and before settlement and compensation has been effected, be settled and compensated for, on application therefor, with such member's or former member's survivors, as follows: To such member's or former member's surviving spouse and children, if any, in equal shares; and if such member or former member leaves no surviving spouse or child or children, then in equal shares to his surviving parents, if any. If there is no such survivor, no settlement and compensation shall be made under this Act. Settlement and compensation under this subsection with any such survivor between seventeen and twenty-one years of age shall constitute a complete discharge of the obligations of the United States under this Act.

"(c) Where the Secretary is of the opinion that any member or former member of the armed forces or any survivor of any such member or former member is, by reason of being either under seventeen years of age or under mental disability, incapable of satisfactorily looking after his own interests, such Secretary may settle and compensate under this section with a proper person selected by him for the use and benefit of such member, former member or survivor, without the necessity of resorting to judicial proceedings for the appointment of a legal representative. Settlement and compensation made under the provisions of this subsection shall constitute a complete discharge of the obligations of the United States under this Act. The provisions of this subsection shall not apply when a legal guardian or committee has been judicially appointed for any such member, former member, or survivor, except as to any settlement and compensation made prior to the receipt of notice of appointment: Provided, That no fee, commission, or charge shall be demanded or accepted by any representative of any member, former member, or survivor appointed in accordance with the provisions of this subsection and the exaction or acceptance of any such fee, commission, or charge shall be deemed a misdemeanor punishable by a fine of not exceeding $500 or imprisonment for not exceeding six months, or both.

"(d) (1) Pursuant to regulations prescribed by him, the Administrator of Veterans Affairs is authorized and directed to accept an assignment of a bond issued to the insured under this section, the proceeds of which shall be used in payment of premiums or in payment of the difference in reserve in case of conversion to insurance on another plan or in payment of a policy loan made prior to July 31, 1946, on a United States Government Life Insurance policy or a National Service Life Insurance policy: Provided, That such assignment may not be used by the insured directly or indirectly as a means of securing in cash the proceeds of such bond or any portion thereof prior to the date of its maturity or the maturity of such policy by death, whichever is the earlier, and such assignment shall be deemed to constitute an agreement by the insured to this effect.

"(2) Any bond assigned under this subsection shall be redeemed at any time, upon presentation to the Secretary of the Treasury, and the proceeds thereof shall be paid and credited to the appropriate fund or appropriation designated by the Administrator.

"SEC. 7. All amounts paid or payable under section 6 of this Act, in cash, bonds, or both, shall not be assignable except as provided in subsection (d) of such section, shall be exempt from claims of creditors, including any claim of the United States, and shall not be subject to attachment, levy, or seizure by or under any legal or equitable process whatever. All such amounts (except interest in the case of bonds) shall be exempt from taxation.

"SEC. 8. There are hereby authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this Act. Amounts expended hereunder shall be included in the annual reports to the Congress by the Departments concerned.

"SEC. 9. The Act approved May 8, 1874 (18 Stat. 43), as amended by the Act approved July 29, 1876 (19 Stat. 102; 10 U. S. C. 842), is hereby repealed. Such repeal shall not affect any unused leave accumulated (including leave accruing at the rate of two and one-half days per month after July 1, 1946) prior to the date of enactment of this Act."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate to the title of the bill and agree to the same.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, I ask for the present consideration of the conference report.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the conference report?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the report.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, the conference report deals with House bill 4051, the so-called terminal leave pay bill. I move that the Senate agree to the conference report.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, will the Senator give us the result of the conference, whether it was decided to pay in cash or bonds?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. The conference report follows pretty closely the Senate bill. Terminal leave will be paid for in bonds, but the bonds may be used to pay insurance. Outside of that, the report very closely follows the bill as it was passed by the Senate.

Mr. LANGER. I want the RECORD to show that I, for one, disapprove the conference report.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I do not wish to oppose the report. I merely desire to say that the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSTON] and I feel very deeply that the money should be available to the GI's at their own option. We realize it is too late now to accomplish that purpose, but we wish to give notice that before the Senate adjourns we will introduce a bill to that effect, and we will reintroduce it at the coming session, and will continue to pursue the matter as long as we can to enable the GI's to get the money in cash to which we think they are entitled. That is all I wish to say. I do not oppose the adoption of the report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HOEY in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

TEMPORARY EXTENSION OF TIME FOR FILING APPLICATIONS FOR PATENTS—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. PEPPER submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5223) to extend temporarily the time for filing applications for patents, for taking action in the United States Patent Office with respect thereto, for preventing proof of acts abroad with respect to the making of an invention, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 1, 2, 4, 6, 8, 12, 16, 17, 18, 22, 25, 29, 31, 34, and 35.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 3, 5, 9, 11, 13, 14, 15, 19, 20, 21, 23, 24, 26, and 32, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 7:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 7, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows:

Strike out the matter proposed to be stricken out by the Senate amendment and insert the following: ", which request must be accompanied by (1) a copy of the original foreign application, certified to by the patent office of the country in which it was filed, but if the original foreign application has been destroyed, other evidence pertaining thereto may be accepted; (2) a sworn translation of the same if it is not in the English language; and (3) if the foreign application was not made by the inventor himself, an affidavit by the applicant or patentee stating that such application was filed for his benefit or on his behalf and that such procedure is in accordance with the procedure in the foreign country"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 10: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 10, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following: "person,"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 27: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 27, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 11, line 1, of the House bill strike out "sections" and insert "section"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 28: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 28, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the matter proposed to be stricken out by the Senate amendment and insert the following:

"SEC. 11. No claims for patent infringement shall be made or action brought by or on behalf of or for the benefit of any country or a national of any country against which the United States has declared the existence of a state of war, in respect to any manufacture, use, or sale since September 8, 1939."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 30: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 30, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the matter proposed to be stricken out by the Senate amendment and insert the following:

"SEC. 13. Section 10 (a) of the said Trading With the Enemy Act, relating to the filing and prosecution of applications for patents and the registration of trade-marks, prints, labels, and copyrights, by an enemy, or ally of an enemy, is hereby repealed."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 33: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 33, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert a period and the following: "The Alien Property Custodian shall be entitled to the benefits of this Act."; and the Senate agree to the same.

FRED A. HARTLEY, Jr.,
Managers on the Part of the House.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to consider the conference report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the report.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, this is a conference report on a patent bill. The report has already been agreed to by the House, and I move that the conference report be adopted.

The report was agreed to.

REQUEST FOR CONSIDERATION OF THE CALENDAR

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, since the call of the calendar on Monday a number of bills have been reported by committees. The calendar does not show where we left off at the last call, but I ask unanimous consent that the pending business be temporarily laid aside and that the Senate proceed with the call of the calendar for the consideration of uncontested bills, beginning where we left off at the last call.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. WHERRY. There is so much confusion that we on this side did not hear the request of the majority leader.

Mr. BARKLEY. I was asking unanimous consent that the pending business be temporarily laid aside and that the Senate proceed to a call of the calendar for the consideration of bills to which there is no objection.

Mr. WHERRY. I believe the so-called poll-tax bill is the pending business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska is correct.

Mr. REVERCOMB. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from West Virginia will state his inquiry.

Mr. REVERCOMB. At what place on the calendar will the call begin?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk informs the Chair it will be order of business 1908.

Mr. WHERRY. I should like to address the Senate at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska is recognized.

THE STATE DEPARTMENT AND AMERICAN FOREIGN POLICY

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, it is now evident that the Seventy-ninth Congress will adjourn sine die without acting on my Senate Resolution 197, in which I proposed a thorough investigation of the State Department policies.

I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at this point as a part of my remarks Senate Resolution 197. The resolution asks for a complete investigation of the Department of State, with particular emphasis on, first, any variance between the policies now being pursued and those expressed in the Atlantic Charter, the Potsdam Agreement, and the various agreements entered into in recent years by the American Republics; second, any intervention by the personnel of the Department of State in the domestic policies or affairs of the Latin-American Republics or other action by such personnel tending to destroy or militate against the good-neighbor policy in the Western Hemisphere; third, whether any of the personnel of the Department of State have shaped or influenced or have attempted to shape or influence foreign policies or our operations in any foreign nations with a view toward the establishment of a Communist form of government in such nations; fourth, any actions taken in any foreign nation by any personnel of the Department of State which were known by them to be contrary to the foreign policy of the United States or the instructions of our ambassadors or ministers to such nations; fifth, the extent to which the personnel of the Department of State are in sympathy with Communist ideology; and, sixth, any conflict between the policies being pursued by the Department of State and those being pursued by our Army or Navy in any territory now occupied by our military or naval forces. The resolution provides that the committee shall report to the Senate at the earliest practicable date the results of its study and investigation, together with such recommendations as it may deem advisable.

There being no objection, Senate Resolution 197 was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Resolved, That a special committee to be composed of five Senators to be appointed by the President of the Senate is authorized and directed to make a full and complete study and investigation with respect to the policies, operations, administration, and personnel of the Department of State, with particular emphasis on (1) any variance between the policies now being pursued and those expressed in the Atlantic Charter, the Potsdam agreement, and the various agreements entered into in recent years by the American Republics; (2) any intervention by personnel of the Department of State in the domestic policies or affairs of the Latin-American Republics or other action by such personnel tending to destroy or militate against the good-neighbor policy in the Western Hemisphere; (3) whether any of the personnel of the Department of State have shaped or influenced or have attempted to shape or influence our foreign policies or our operations in any foreign nations with a view toward the establishment of a Communist form of government in such nations; (4) any actions taken in any foreign nation by any personnel of the Department of State which were known by them to be contrary to the foreign policy of the United States or the instructions of our ambassadors or ministers to such nations; (5) the extent to which personnel of the Department of State are in sympathy with Communist ideology; and (6) any conflict between the policies being pursued by the Department of State and those being pursued by our Army or Navy in any territory now occupied by our military or naval forces. The committee shall report to the Senate at the earliest practicable date the results of its study and investigation, together with such recommendations as it may deem advisable.

For the purposes of this resolution the committee, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized to hold such hearings, to sit and act at such times and places during the sessions, recesses, and adjourned periods of the Senate in the Seventy-ninth Congress, to employ such experts, and such clerical, stenographic, and other assistants, to require by subpena or otherwise the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such correspondence, books, papers, and documents, to administer such oaths, to take such testimony, and to make such expenditures, as it deems advisable. The cost of stenographic services to report such hearings shall not be in excess of 25 cents per hundred words. The expenses of the committee, which shall not exceed $10,000, shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers approved by the chairman.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, it will be recalled that I cast the only vote against the confirmation of the nomination of Dean Acheson, as Under Secretary of State. Subsequent events have fully justified my vote. The Senate has just been confronted by a situation in which I feel Mr. Acheson clearly misrepresented to one of its committees, conditions surrounding the International Air Transportation Agreements which he entered into in behalf of the United States. We are in the embarrassing position of having had to denounce and abrogate that executive agreement because of its admitted dangers to the United States.

Mr. Acheson now tries to explain his position away as a "mistake."

Mr. President, whether it was a mistake or a misrepresentation, it proves one sure thing, namely, that Mr. Acheson is unsuited to occupy the high, influential, powerful office he now holds.

I point out to the Senate that the State Department is one of our most rapidly expanding Government agencies. It now has a personnel of more than 26,000, and an annual appropriation of $128,000,000. How necessary, then, that one who directs the activities of the State Department, an organization of more than 26,000 persons, should not only be suited to the duties which he must perform, but also eminently qualified to handle the affairs of state. In the absence of the Secretary of State, Dean Acheson, Under Secretary, apparently assumes full responsibility. An Assistant to the Secretary of State should be particularly well suited for carrying out the duties of that office.

Had it not been necessary for the State Department to come to the Congress for appropriations, it is my opinion that we would not have known what had been done by Mr. Acheson until the damage was revealed. This, Mr. President, is only a part of the picture. Who knows when the Senate may again be called upon to repudiate some other ill-advised agreement to which we have been committed?

On May 15, 1946, my distinguished colleague, the Senator from Maine [Mr. WHITE], stated in minority views to the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations that:

From 1940 to 1944, inclusive, there have been but 38 treaties submitted to the Senate as against 256 agreements, of which we have knowledge, not submitted to the Senate. This tendency warns that we of the Senate must assert our rights in this field or we shall be guilty of acquiesence in their loss. * * *

If the State Department's conception of executive authority prevails, if the Senate yields thereto, then the Senate abandons to the executive branch its right to consent or to refuse to consent to foreign commitments of the most solemn character.

I am absolutely convinced that the United States would not be in her present predicament in world affairs if the Senate had been given the opportunity to exercise its constitutional responsibilities to advise and consent to the ratification of any matters in any of these agreements which properly fell within the province of treaty matters.

WHAT ROAD ARE WE FOLLOWING?

Mr. President, as a free people, we cannot much longer follow the road we are traveling if civilization, Americanism, and freedom are to survive. There is already universal recognition of the tragic fact that instead of being "on the road to peace," we are on the road to an atomic war.

WHAT MEN AND WOMEN ARE SAYING

All over the world men and women are now contemplating in terror the awful tragedy that has already occurred, and are trying to resign themselves to an even more terrible tragedy in the not far distant future.

As far back as November 18, 1945, the Catholic bishops of the United States issued their "Statement on War and Peace," which I quote in part:

The war is over but there is no peace in the world.

Since the Moscow Conference of 1943, the United States, Great Britain, and Russia have undertaken to shape the peace which they are imposing on the nations. * * * It is discouraging in the extreme.

Instead of honest discussion even of diverging plans, we are witnessing a return to the tragedy of power politics and the danger of balance of power arrangements, which with the substitution of more expedience for justice, have begotten war after war.

On December 17, 1945, Dorothy Thompson wrote:

I never remember anything like this in America. The people have a contempt for their leadership. In America when pictures of their leaders are shown on the screen they laugh. They do not cheer or boo, they laugh contemptuously. The leaders have taken away the peoples' ideals and when that happens despair sets in.

When people feel that way, everything becomes senseless, the war was senseless; everything is a lie, as the Atlantic Charter became a lie when Yalta and Potsdam became the truth.

The people think the world is out of its senses, but they do not know what to do about it * * * for they have nothing to say about it, they must just accept it, and they are hurt and bewildered and angry.

On March 7, 1945, the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America stated in their findings that:

A world of fear, hatred, cruelty, misery, and violent death is fast closing in on the prospects of a world of fellowship and love.

On March 14, 1946, Maj. George Fielding Eliot wrote:

The peoples of the world are confused, disappointed and frightened. In large part they are also miserable. These were not the promises of victory. We thought victory would bring us peace and hope. We thought victory would bring us a better world. It has brought us only fear and suffering.

On March 25, 1946, Messrs. Joseph and Stewart Alsop wrote in the Washington Post that Secretary of State Byrnes and the chiefs of the armed forces had gone before the Senate Military Affairs Committee to urge the extension of the draft and other manpower measures because of the immediate danger of an outbreak of armed conflict. According to these correspondents, I quote:

It is safe to say that in peacetime history of the United States there has been no such scene as this meeting presented, except at prior and similar meetings with the House Military Affairs Committee. Last week, for the first time the highest officials of government warned the leaders of Congress of the possibility of immediate national danger in a world officially at peace.

On April 3, 1946, Mr. Sumner Welles said:

Unless the United States returns to the basic principles of the good-neighbor policy, no inter-American conference can now be held without risking a break-up of the inter-American system and the total destruction of Pan-American solidarity.

The policy pursued by the Department of State during the past 2 years has resulted in a series of unrelieved failures. It has done grave injury to this country's highest interests, and to the welfare of the rest of the New World. Will American public opinion permit a continuation of this disastrous policy?

On May 8, 1946, the former Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Morgenthau, who perhaps more than anyone else on the globe has helped to turn the world against the United States, mournfully lamented:

I doubt very much whether the United States has a single important friend left in the world.

On May 4, 1946, Walter Lippmann, returning from a visit to war-torn Europe, had the following to say:

No one, least of all the Russians, believes that the political frontier between themselves and the British can be stabilized where it now is. This is the reason why every statesman in Europe has it in the back of his mind as his controlling assumption that he must act as if there were going to be a war between Britain and Russia, which will involve all the other nations.

Again on May 22, Sumner Welles wrote:

From Cairo to Tokyo the eastern world is seething. All constituted authority, whether alien or national, has been gravely weakened during the last several years. The economic dislocation resulting from the war culminating with the present famine, intensify the trend toward mass unrest, toward revolt, and toward eventual anarchy.

On May 30, 1946, Gen. Omar Bradley told a Memorial Day audience that:

Today, there is a growing uneasiness and fear that the peace we sought at the end of the war will elude our grasp. The symptoms of fear are all about. The world that was sick with hatred is now sick with starvation and famine. Out of the rubble of Axis aggression has emerged the suspicion and distrust of allies. Already people have asked themselves, "What has the war accomplished?"

On the same day General Marshall warned the whole world from Nanking, China, that:

China is trembling on the verge of an even greater calamity than the war with Japan.

Cardinal Tien of China a little later admitted that a third world war is now inevitable, and said the sooner it broke out the greater would be the suffering and agony the peoples of the world would be spared.

On June 1, 1946, Pope Pius XII said:

Peace is vanishing in an international bitterness and ungodliness which may provoke a violent world explosion.

On June 15, 1946, Anne O'Hare McCormick wrote in the New York Times that:

Prolonging the present condition of suspense on the Continent can only lead to catastrophe. There is no use outlawing the atomic bomb if the great powers follow policies that produce the conditions of war. In eastern Europe these conditions are creating a system of pauper states. As to Germany everybody now admits that the occupation is a failure in itself and a menace to the rest of the Continent.

And on the same day Adolf Berle, one of the original New Deal braintrusters, and former Ambassador to Brazil, made the following startling admission of what was happening to America from within when he said:

We are now in a world crisis and there is every sign that that crisis will become more intense. Once more all the symptoms of foreign diplomatic conflict are appearing here as they did in 1917. We have the same propaganda campaigns, the same lies and distortions intended to intimidate faithful American public servants, and the same appeals to cupidity, unthinking idealism, and fears.

We have a similar crew of turncoats, some of whom have been in their time Fascist agents and Communist agents abroad, who now appear claiming to advise and guide the New York public. And we know that whatever else these people want they are not interested in the welfare of the United States.

NOT ONE WORLD BUT TWO WORLDS HAVE EMERGED FROM THE WAR

It has now become terrifyingly obvious, Mr. President, that in spite of the fraudulent, poisonous, persistent propaganda to the contrary, not one world of international cooperation exists, but two worlds of conflicting ideologies and purposes have emerged from this terrible war.

No less a person than the Pulitzer prize winning correspondent of the New York Times, James Reaton, said on May 6, 1946:

The thesis that is rapidly gaining ground in the capital now is the following:

First, the Soviet Union is using its economic, political, and military power to support Communist elements all over Europe—not only in the Soviet Belt but also westward into France.

Second, the Soviet Union does not want to take its armies out of eastern Europe, because the Soviets still profess to believe the capitalist world is hostile to them.

Third, our efforts to remove this fear have not succeeded. Therefore, rather than make further concessions to Russia that would divide Europe into two spheres, we should now concede that the two spheres exist and give our support to the western sphere.

On May 27, 1946, the New York Herald Tribune, one of Russia's stanchest defenders in the United States, stated in its leading editorial:

The lines of a new world cleavage are becoming ever more distinct and ominous. In nearly every source of policy there is a growing acceptance of the fact of a struggle for power between two world systems, that of Russia and the west, and a growing tendency to believe that struggle is irreconcilable.

On May 15, 1946, in testifying before the House Banking and Currency Committee, the former Secretary of the Treasury, now Chief Justice Fred M. Vinson, admitted that the British loan would split the world into two conflicting economic blocs with America and England arraigned against Communist Russia in a battle for world trade supremacy.

Mr. President, in spite of the Government-inspired propaganda to the contrary, the one world on which all of our international organizations were supposed to be based in order to function is apparently crumbling right under our feet.

The truth is Russia has refused to join any of the five major international organizations except the United Nations.

Russia has refused to join either the international bank or the international fund set up under the Bretton Woods agreements.

Russia has refused to join or to attend the International Civil Aviation Conference.

Russia has refused to become a member of the International Food and Agriculture Organization. She merely sent an observer to the first meeting.

To this very moment Russia has refused to accept an invitation to the World Trade Conference which is to be called in the near future.

It is significant, indeed, Mr. President, that Russia will not join any organizations where any matters are discussed which would compel her to show her hand. She uses the veto power in the United Nations instead of coming out into the open.

PEACEMAKING AT AN IMPASSE WITHIN UNO AND IN THE FOREIGN MINISTERS' COUNCIL

This sudden wrenching of one world into two conflicting parts has awakened many of our statesmen and policy-makers to the tragic fact that neither inside UNO, nor outside, in the Foreign Ministers' conferences, are we getting on with real peacemaking.

Mr. John Foster Dulles accurately describes our present predicament. In speaking of the way the big powers are failing to get along, he says:

No one of them trusts the others sufficiently to permit of decisions in which it does not concur. They may not feel sure about their ability to go on deserving top rank in the world. Therefore, they seek artificially to perpetuate that position. So they plan a structure of peace that cannot be altered without the consent of each of them. They think through such rigidities to find safety. Actually these rigidities imperil the whole structure of peace.

The junior Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER], who has been a most determined advocate in the Senate of cooperation with Russia, has gone so far as to admit that the whole problem of peacemaking with which we are confronted can never be solved within the United Nations organization as it is now operating.

Certainly this is news to the vast majority of the American people. The Senator from Florida, in a statement on March 20, 1946, said:

At the present time and under the present circumstances, the United Nations is not the way out of this web of fear. It is a delusion and a snare to regard the present United Nations organization as the tribunal for the solution of the clashes and conflicts among the Big Three growing out of their fear for their own security.

And those who pretend now that the United Nations organization can perform such functions are either, without disclosing their purpose, attempting to wreck it, or to convert it from its declared original characer into something else. We must therefore, prepare outside of the United Nations organization the conditions which will make it possible for the United Nations organization effectively to function.

WHO IS TO BLAME?

Mr. President, in the midst of all of this confusion and suspicion and the terrible suffering this peace stalemate is causing to hundreds of millions of people, it has suddenly become popular in the United States to blame everything that has gone wrong on the Communists and Mr. Stalin and Mr. Molotov. Our own policy makers of the administration have taken refuge in this game of charge and countercharge. Now, who is to blame?

On March 20, 1946, Sumner Welles wrote:

Relations between the United States and the Soviet Union have been allowed to drift into an increasingly dangerous condition * * * The recent trend of Soviet policy unfortunately indicates that unless the Soviet Union becomes convinced that the western powers are both strong enough and determined enough to prevent it, it will avail itself of this moment of world upheaval to seek a form of security based upon those traditional Russian aims which Russian Governments have successfully pursued since the dawn of the nineteenth century.

On March 20, 1946, none other than Secretary of Commerce Wallace told a New York audience that:

Russia can't ride roughshod over eastern Europe and get away with it. I think that we can make it perfectly clear to the Soviet Government that no country, however powerful in a military or economic way, can dominate by mere force even the smallest country for very long.

On March 27, 1946, Hanson W. Baldwin, military analyst for the New York Times, stated in his column that:

We must make it amply clear to Russia and to the world that the basic strategic reason for which we fought the last war was to prevent the domination of western Europe by any one power, and to prevent that domination of eastern Asia by any one power.

On May 10, 1946, the Washington Post, which has always reflected the internationalist opinions of its owner, Eugene Meyer, recently elected head of the world bank, stated in an editorial:

We are faced today with a condition and not a theory. The condition is not that Britain and Russia are preparing for war, but that Russia will not make peace. What our angel of peace is afraid of is, bluntly, Russian aggression. Only Russia has the might and the dynamism and the posture to break the peace.

On May 18, 1946, the junior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. FULBRIGHT] told a New York audience:

Never before in public have I questioned the purposes of Russia. It is with profound reluctance that I have concluded that the recent actions of Russia are not consistent with a desire to bring peace to the world under the aegis of the United Nations. Crusading communism appears now to be on the march. There are doubts within the minds of many of us that Russia will ever submit to rules of conduct in any field.

On May 30, former Ambassador to Germany James W. Gerard said, concerning the Russians that:

It's about time they found out we are tired of having their representatives throw a monkey wrench into the United Nations. We are tired of having our representatives pushed around.

On June 7, 1946, David Lawrence, an astute student of affairs, wrote in the United States News:

Until the flames of totalitarianism are extinguished around the world there will be danger of another world conflagration. There is no use camouflaging the truth about what is going on. We are up against the ruthless rule of totalitarianism in world diplomacy. A government that cannot be trusted can make war overnight. Russian aggression has begun. Will the American people ignore it as they did Hitler's aggression or will they be realistic and face the facts of international life. Are we on the road to World War III?

On June 13, 1946, the distinguished chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] warned the Russians that:

It is unreasonable to allow a veto by one Foreign Minister to upset the whole peace program. We should not tolerate such a situation. Let me warn any nation that now plans to subjugate the rest of the world economically, politically, or militarily, world domination is a fatuous dream. The peoples of the world will not stand for it.

And now the press has broken out in a veritable rash of protests by my colleagues, the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG], the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY], and the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN], along with Secretary Byrnes, that they are not going to permit Russia to veto the peace.

Yet, Mr. President, there is another side to the story which, because of the heat and confusion now being generated in diplomatic circles, still is not being brought out into the open.

Let us grant that Russia is standing in the way of reaching satisfactory peace settlements. Let us grant that Mr. Stalin and the Communists constitute the major obstacle on the road back to peace. There is still the shameful part the United States has played in the preliminary peace settlements for which the Russians cannot possibly be held solely to blame; a role which, it seems to me, has set the stage for the very actions and policies on the part of the Russians which are now being so self-righteously condemned.

I am speaking of the war-breeding secret commitments made by our American Presidents of Moscow, Tehran, Yalta, and Potsdam; commitments which set in motion forces and policies which could not do other than make peace terribly difficult, if not an absolute impossibility.

The fact that Russia refuses to cooperate with the rest of the world does not serve as an excuse to relieve this administration of its own responsibility for those betrayals of the rights and privileges and liberties of hundreds of millions of our fellow beings both in Europe and Asia.

The policy makers responsible do not so much as mention any of those betrayals or war-breeding commitments which were made in secret—without the knowledge, the advice, or the consent of either the United States Senate or the American people. The plain fact is that up until this very moment Russia has only been doing in her own way what our policy makers agreed to permit her to do in conformity with those secret agreements of Tehran, Yalta, and Potsdam.

There is just a slight hint of this fact in the following admission of Elmer Davis, who as head of the Office of War Information had more to do with all the propaganda that was fed the American people than perhaps any other man.

On April 5, 1946, Mr. Davis wrote in the Washington News:

A year or so ago most of us supposed that Russian objectives were the same as ours; and extensive concessions were made to them on that hypothesis. It now seems to have been mistaken. There is something that is worse than either atomic or biological warfare. It is subjugation to an alien oppressor.

But still, Mr. President, there has been not a single official admission of guilt; not a single official repudiation of these terrifying agreements; not a single regret expressed for the savage consequences to which our policy makes us a party, and which just in themselves would make the realization of any kind of peace well-nigh impossible.

RECORD OF MY OWN OPPOSITION TO SUCH POLICIES

The question raised by all of these developments, Mr. President, a question which cannot be ignored longer except at our own peril—is one for the American people to answer once and for all; it is whether we shall continue these policies which are in themselves playing directly into Russia's hands, or we must determine whether or not our legitimate and most crucial interests are being deliberately betrayed by alien fanatics both within and outside of the United States.

The record plainly shows that I have protested the steady deterioration of American foreign policy for many long months.

On four specific occasions I have sought to crystallize attention on the long-existent confusion in our foreign policy, hoping to stimulate efforts to find an answer to the question of whether or not America is being deliberately sabotaged and betrayed, or whether our policies are really disastrous in themselves. Surely even the most naive appeasers in America must now realize that we cannot afford to wait longer for such an answer. The time has come for a completely honest, courageous, and open showdown on this issue.

On May 9, 1946, President Truman himself warned the American people that now:

Nobody should play politics with national safety.

Yet, Mr. President, on every occasion when I have sought to arouse interest in these issues, and to stimulate thought about what future course of action would safeguard America's interests and security, I have met with evasion.

Mr. President, on September 24, 1945, I read into the RECORD the reasons why I opposed the confirmation of the nomination of Dean Acheson as Under Secretary of State. I did so because I could not find out from Mr. Acheson or from anyone else what our foreign commitments and policies were, which Mr. Acheson was to carry out. I did not know how Mr. Acheson felt about them, and he failed to respond to my questions.

I had hoped that, as a result of my action, at least some light might be thrown on the policies we had been persuing. I sought information which would enable this administration, and the American people, to get a better picture of the actual results of our policies. My hopes were vain. My efforts were futile. Both Mr. Acheson, and the administration's undisclosed policies received the highest commendation from my colleagues, the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY], the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY], and the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. FULBRIGHT].

On October 22, 1945, Mr. Spruille Braden was nominated as Assistant Secretary of State. Again, on that occasion, I sought information. Ugly rumors and reverberations were coming out of South America, as a result of Mr. Braden's activities prior to that date. I sought to learn whether or not his policies had been in keeping with the solemn contracts we had signed with our sister republics, and with the act of Chapultepec, Again I could not get any real light on Mr. Braden's past activities or on our future policies toward the South American countries. But it became clear to me that there was something radically wrong both with our policy, and with the way our State Department, and Mr. Braden, had been interpreting it, so far as South America was concerned.

On that same day, the distinguished chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee, together with my colleagues, the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDEN-

BERG] and the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE], indirectly revealed that Mr. Braden and the State Department for many long months, had been destroying the very roots of our good-neighbor policy. At that time, the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] in answer to questions by some of us on the floor, insisted that:

We do not want to create any impression that by the confirmation of the nomination of Mr. Braden we are reverting to the old type of diplomacy of the years gone by when we had the reputation, whether deservedly or not, of having wielded the big stick and using a strong-arm diplomacy * * *. We want the other countries to feel that we are showing consideration for their sovereignty and their independence and that we do not expect to interfere in anywise in any of their domestic affairs.

The Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] stated that he considered that Mr. Braden was "but an incident" in the development of a dangerous perversion of our traditional Latin-America policies, and went on to say he believed there was an imperative need that:

We shall do everything in our power to maintain healthy, wholesome relationships and to scrupulously observe all of our mutual engagements with the 20 Latin-American Republics which constitute, with us, the great inter-American system of hemispherical peace, security, and good will.

On the same day the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] stated during debate on Mr. Braden's confirmation that:

If I voted for Mr. Braden, if the committee voted for him, and if the Senate voted for him—

And we did, Mr. President. We confirmed him. I followed the leadership of our distinguished colleague, the Senator from Michigan, as I always have, and I am proud to do so because of his knowledge of foreign affairs.

If I voted for Mr. Braden, if the committee voted for him, and if the Senate voted for him, as they intend to do, I have the distinct feeling that we are not advancing the cause of cooperation, consultation, and united action so far as the Latin-American nations are concerned.

In discussing the dilemma in which the United States Senate found itself as a result of Mr. Braden's previous policies and actions, the Senator from Wisconsin went on to say that the best thing he could do was to vote for Mr. Braden's confirmation, but he added:

I want it clearly understood that in so doing I am not in any wise indicating that I am in favor of any weakening or any alteration of our policy so far as the Latin-American countries are concerned * * *. To proceed further on a unilateral basis or in a unilateral spirit in order to avoid embarrassing and complicated problems, which may arise from multilateral action and discussion, I say in the long run, hazards the destruction of the good-neighbor policy.

On November 28, 1945, I submitted Senate Resolution 197 to investigate the State Department after Ambassador Hurley openly charged that:

The professional foreign-service men in the State Department sided with the Chinese Communist armed party, and the imperialist bloc of nations, whose policy it was to keep China divided against itself.

Again the State Department and that administration policy were completely whitewashed, and Ambassador Hurley became the target of personal abuse, while such persons as Mr. John Service, who over a year before had been one of the six persons arrested for disclosing confidential State Department material, and who had been whitewashed in a secret session of this administration's policy makers, was sent to Japan to serve as economic adviser to General MacArthur.

On January 29, 1946, for myself and in behalf of several other Senators, I introduced Senate Concurrent Resolution 51, providing for a joint congressional committee to investigate starvation conditions in Europe. Eighteen other Senators on both sides of the aisle joined me in stressing the urgency of the conditions of starvation which warranted congressional action. But again, as on so many other occasions, this administration stubbornly refused to look these tragic consequences of its own policies in the face.

Instead, Mr. President, this administration has continued to carry on our foreign relations in such a secret and blundering way that at this very moment neither the American people nor the Senate of the United States, nor the other nations of the world know what to make of the course we have been following in South America, Asia, and Europe.

OUR POLICY OF MEDDLING IN SOUTH AMERICA

Let us turn to South America. Nowhere else in the world have we such a great stake in continued confidence, cooperation, and unity of purpose, between and among nations, as we have in the Western Hemisphere.

It is in the long tradition we have built up in our relations with these nations that the fundamental tenets and solemn commitments of this Government are most clearly and consistently stated.

On October 22, 1945, my colleague from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] paid a just tribute to this good-neighbor policy of which I am speaking in one of the most masterful utterances that has been heard on the floor of the Senate since I have been a Member of the Senate. I believe it will be years before a more clearly defined statement is made than that made by the distinguished Senator of Michigan when he said:

This inter-American system is not the sudden improvisation of an expedient hour. It is not born of the transient exigencies of a war. It dates back to the days of President James Monroe in respect to its roots. It is the evolution of many decades of neighborly contacts. It is the natural outgrowth of common interests in the protection and development of our common heritage in this new world. Its credentials are as long as they are honorable. It enjoys attachments of deep affection throughout the two Americas. It has been solemnly stabilized by repeated treaties for mutual consultation and mutual support. It is not a perquisite of the United States alone. It is the common property of our inter-American partnership, and the statecraft of the United States must never for an instant neglect, ignore, or violate this fundamental fact.

Mr. President, contrary to the current popular myth, it was President Hoover who, in 1928, withdrew our troops from Haiti and Nicaragua, and solemnly assured the Latin-American countries that we could not again intervene in the internal affairs of any nation to the south of us. This was the original formulation of what has come to be known as our good-neighbor policy. And while, on occasion, this Government has relapsed into the "big-stick" policy and "dollar diplomacy," yet over the years our traditional policy has been that of trying to be a good neighbor among good neighbors.

On December 26, 1933, the late President Roosevelt signed the Seventh International Conference of American States Agreement, article 8 of which specifically provides that:

No state has the right to intervene in the internal or external affairs of another.

On the same day the late President stated:

I feel safe in undertaking to say that under our support of the general principle of nonintervention as has been suggested, no government need fear any intervention on the part of the United States under the Roosevelt administration.

On June 17, 1935, former Secretary of State Cordell Hull reaffirmed this principle and went on to say that:

This declaration creates a precedent which in my belief will never be abandoned.

On September 15, 1936, Mr. Hull reaffirmed that so far as South America was concerned:

This administration has made it clear it would not intervene in any of those republics.

Again on December 5, 1936, Mr. Hull stated in Buenos Aires, at the opening of the Inter-American Conference for the Maintenance of Peace, that:

We recognize the right of all nations to handle their affairs in any way they choose, and this quite irrespective of the fact that their way may be different from our way or even repugnant to our ideas. If the solemn rights and obligations between nations are to be treated lightly or to be brushed aside, the nations of the world will head straight toward international anarchy. It is to the interest of everyone that there be an end of treaties broken by arbitrary and unilateral action.

On December 21, 1936, the United States signed the Declaration of Principles of Inter-American Solidarity and Cooperation, at Buenos Aires, which also specifically provided under article 3 (b):

Intervention by one state in the internal or external affairs of another state is condemned.

On March 17, 1938, Secretary Hull again stated as this Government's policy and conviction that:

All nations should, through voluntary self-restraint abstain from use of force in pursuit of policy and from interference in the internal affairs of other nations.

Again at the Eighth International Conference of American States December 24, 1938, at Lima, Peru, the United States signed the following solemn pledge contained in the Declaration of Lima:

The respect for the personality, sovereignty and independence of each American state constitutes the essence of international order sustained by continental solidarity.

In the Declaration of Principles agreed upon at this conference we agreed that:

The intervention of any state in the internal or external affairs of another is inadmissible.

Again on April 13, 1940, the late President Roosevelt stated:

If civilization is to survive, the rights of the smaller nations to independence, to their territorial integrity, and to the unimpeded opportunity for self government must be respected by their more powerful neighbors.

Even as recently as March 21, 1944, Secretary Hull asserted in his outline of the principles of American foreign policy that:

All nations, large and small, which respect the rights of others are entitled to freedom from outside interference in their internal affairs.

Although it is difficult to believe, as recently as October 31, 1945, and January 5, 1946, Secretary Byrnes and Mr. Braden made the following assurances, respectively.

Mr. Byrnes declared:

In the inter-American system the members do not interfere in the internal affairs of their neighbors nor do they brook interference in those internal affairs by others.

Mr. Braden said on January 5, 1946:

Our policy of nonintervention in the affairs of the other American countries is fundamental and will continue. We have no intention of that kind of unilateral action.

Mr. President, in spite of all these solemn declarations and promises of nonintervention the fact remains that we have so grossly repudiated our agreements that we have now reached the place where our whole future relations with South America are gravely in danger.

What is the record?

On March 27, 1946, Sumner Welles wrote:

Our recent policies in Latin America have been incredibly stupid as well as humiliatingly unsuccessful. American public opinion should be demanding from this Government some coherent program of foreign policy which will refill the reservoir of good will toward the United States.

On the same day, in the New York Times, Hanson Baldwin wrote:

For many months we have been breathing fire and brimstone toward Argentina and badgering the Argentine Government with accusations.

In Argentina our policy has served only to elect our enemy Peron and to consolidate much of Argentine and Latin-American sentiment against us. Many of the happy results of the good-neighbor policy have been destroyed and again Latin Americans are becoming more and more conscious of the "Colossus of the North" and Yankee "imperialism." We are risking the formation of a real anti-American bloc in South America.

It is high time the dangerous policies of Mr. Braden and Mr. Acheson be ended. We indulged in such inexcusable intervention that we are now confronted with complete embarrassment of our relations with every other South American country.

The Bradenistic policy of intervention by insult has been against the richest and most powerful nation in South America, namely, the Argentine.

I am not defending the Argentine Government for any of its misdeeds, whatever they may or may not have been. I am not carrying a portfolio for Argentina. Whatever excuse may have existed for the policies toward Argentina during the war certainly has no validity now.

The war has been over for more than a year. The course pursued by Mr. Braden and Mr. Acheson over the past 12 months is positively the most stupid and scandalous adventure in personal feuding between the heads of states that is to be found in the entire history of our diplomacy.

The Argentine finally broke with the Axis. She was admitted as a member of the Chapultepec Conference and of the United Nations Organization. She was entitled to joint action by any nations directly concerned with her affairs. Yet, in spite of all the agreements we have signed, to which Argentina has been a party, Mr. Braden and Mr. Acheson seem for the past year to have gone out of their way to force a permanent break with the Argentine people.

WHAT WE HAVE DONE TO ARGENTINA DURING THE PAST YEAR

During the past year we have continued, until within the last month, to keep over 800 Argentine firms on the blacklist.

Until within a week or so we have kept all of Argentina's funds in the United States banks frozen.

Up until this very moment we have continued to refuse to join in any discussion with the Argentine delegates concerning the Rio conference on hemisphere defense. That discussion has already been postponed, until Mr. Braden is satisfied that they have eliminated all of what has been termed Axis influence in Argentina.

Our State Department is insisting that the Argentine courts accept the views of Messrs. Braden and Acheson as to what aliens in Argentina were friendly with the Axis Powers and should be deported from Argentina; as to what Argentinean citizens were friendly with the Axis Powers and should be tried and imprisoned, if found guilty; and as to what agencies or businesses trafficked with the Axis Powers and should be liquidated by the Argentine Government. In response to their insistence, the Argentine Government has replied that it is seeking to expedite these matters in accordance with Argentine law.

Here, again, is a case in which Messrs. Braden and Acheson have done everything they apparently could do to violate another solemn agreement.

On December 26, 1933, at the Convention of Human Duties and Rights, held in Montevideo, we subscribed to the following principle:

The political existence of a state is independent of recognition by the other states. Even before recognition the state has the right to defend its integrity and independence, to provide for its conservation and prosperity, and consequently to organize itself as it sees fit, to legislate upon its interests, administer its services, and to define the jurisdiction and the competence of its courts.

In the light of that solemn convention, for the State Department of the United States to insist that the Argentine courts act in accordance with State Department demands in determining what constitutes unfriendly action on the part of individuals or agencies is the sheerest and boldest defiance of international law and of every solemn commitment we have made to the South American Republics.

I ask you, Mr. President, just exactly what is the State Department going to do if the Argentine courts do not agree with its list of persons who are suspects, a list which our State Department will not even furnish, I am informed, to the Argentine officials?

Consider another circumstance in this story of diplomatic blunders. Spruille Braden and Dean Acheson have been carrying on a personal feud against Colonel Peron ever since the war ended. The press was filled with stories that the Argentine people became so incensed over Braden's interference in their presidential campaign that Braden's action really assured Peron's election. Braden created in the Argentine an issue which—were the situation reversed—the American people would, of course, have resented intensely. No self-respecting people will tolerate such interference in their domestice affairs.

Not only did Braden thus directly interfere in the Argentine presidential elections, but I am informed that Braden, in defiance of all international law, actually used the American Embassy in Buenos Aires as the headquarters of the Argentine parties opposing Peron. Such unprecedented, high-handed activity, such a wanton breaking of faith with the American people, and such an offense offered the Argentine people, could have only one possible result. Acheson and Braden were completely repudiated by the Argentine people. The result was a terrible loss of face for 130,000,000 American people who, though blameless, will have to bear the consequences.

There is a universal recognition of the failure of our South American diplomacy everywhere except within this administration. One need only to summarize the calamitous extent of this venture in personal intervention, by reminding oneself of the fact that all of the hatred, fear, and animosity now aroused against the United States, has played directly into the hands of just one nation. That nation is Russia. Russia has taken this opportunity to attempt to reestablish diplomatic and trade, and even military, relations in the Argentine. What better weapon could the Communists in South America desire than the animosity and hostile interventionist policy of Acheson and Braden?

Through these two officials, America has furnished the Communists with reason to cry "Yanqui Imperialism." Certainly we cannot blame Stalin for what is clearly the calamitous consequence of Braden's own bungling.

So far as South America is concerned, Mr. President, the time has come, as I have already stated, to repudiate the policy of Bradenism, and to return to the good-neighbor policy. But to accomplish this, we need desperately to clean out the Communist influences in the State Department, which, for some strange reason, have wielded such a sinister influence during the past few years.

After a great deal of struggle, members of the Senate have finally wrung from the distinguished Secretary of State the admission that there are, indeed, many Communists and fellow travelers in the State Department. It would seem, however, that the Secretary has been unable to do anything about them, because of the provisions of the civil-service law and its administration by the Civil Service Commission. That problem needs desperately to be taken care of by Congress immediately.

But there are still certain very startling facts about the way our South American policies have been handled, and about the forces and individuals who have had the most persistent interest in carrying out these policies, which have not yet been told to the American people.

There is the matter of the press and propaganda.

Mr. Carleton Beals, writing in the Progressive of July 15, 1946, stated:

It is a long time since the American public has had much of the truth about Latin-America. And folks aren't likely to get much more very soon.

Mr. Beals, who is one of our ablest and most forthright authorities on Latin-America, revealed that even during Mr. Nelson Rockefeller's regime—

Only those who jumped on the bandwagon and peddled pap and piffle had any chance to travel or get at the news. One couldn't even read current issues of Latin-American publications in the public libraries. As a student of Latin-American affairs and one earning his living by writing about them I could not obtain access to such materials. It was possible to get only what printed matter Mr. Nelson Rockefeller and the State Department wanted you to get, unless you went to a vast amount of trouble, subterfuge, and expense.

In the February 8, 1946, issue of the Commonweal, Mr. Christopher Emmet, a well-informed authority on Latin America, asserts in detail that Arnaldo Cotesi, of the New York Times; Joseph Newman, of the New York Herald Tribune; and Virginia Pruett and Ray Josephs, of PM, have completely misjudged the Argentine situation and misinformed the American public. As Mr. Emmett says:

It is largely the facts and appraisals they reported which most American commentators, headline writers, and newspaper columnists relayed, with the usual oversimplification, to the American people.

My distinguished colleague the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE], on the Senate floor on October 22, 1945, vigorously condemned this kind of reporting. I quote his words:

What I am saying is that such faulty reporting, such faulty exposition of the actual facts in a nation which is in a state of crisis can only lead to disaster if our policy is to be predicated upon such reports which are so inaccurate and which so utterly fail to describe the actual factual situation.

It is not by accident, however, Mr. President, that this misinformation should have emanated largely through New York sources. I hold in my hand a copy of the State Department so-called Blue Book on the Argentine, which it published and released in February 1946. Most Senators know what is in that "Blue Book." Those who do not should read it. The name Joseph Newman, to whom I have referred, reported on March 26, from Buenos Aires, that Foreign Minister Bevin had refused to join with the United States in issuing the Blue Book, even after a personal invitation to do so was extended by Mr. Byrnes. As a matter of fact, the British were so opposed, Mr. Newman went on to say that—

The British Government's economic policy toward the Argentine is now seriously embarrassing the State Department and its representatives in this country.

There is a strange coincidence in all of this, Mr. President. For although the State Department Blue Book was issued in February of this year, in January the Committee on Latin-American Affairs of the CIO issued their own white book on The Argentine Regime. I have it here on my desk, Mr. President.

It so happens that in the CIO News of February 25, 1946, a statement appeared calling attention to the fact that—

Release of the State Department's blast fully confirms similar charges made over a long period of time by the CIO Latin-American Affairs Committee. As a matter of fact the CIO committee's book, The Argentine Regime, was released weeks before the State Department did its job.

It so happens that the executive director of this Latin-American committee of the CIO is George Michanowsky, born in Yalta, Russia, who arrived in the United States from Panama in 1940. He was not a United States citizen, and he registered as an alien on December 17, 1940.

Mr. Michanowsky served for a while with New York's PM, in 1942. Now this same man has moved into the select circle as advisor to our Secretary of State and as a molder of American public opinion. I want to enter into the record a copy of a letter written to Secretary Byrnes on August 6, 1945, which is startling, to say the least, and is self-explanatory:

[Jacob S. Potofsky, chairman; George Baldanzi; L. S. Buckmaster; Lewis B. Clark; Joseph Curran; Samuel J. Hogan; O. A. Knight; Martin C. Kyne; David J. McDonald, Milton Murray; Joseph P. Selly; Willard Townsend; George Michanowsky, executive secretary]

PHILIP MURRAY, President — JAMES B. CAREY, Secretary-Treasurer

COMMITTEE ON LATIN-AMERICAN AFFAIRS,
CONGRESS OF INDUSTRIAL ORGANIZATIONS,
New York, N. Y., August 6, 1945.

Hon. JAMES F. BYRNES,
Secretary of State, Department of State, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. BYRNES: Please permit me to congratulate you on your magnificent achievements at the Potsdam Conference. I also wish to thank you very much for your kind letter of July 5.

At this time I should like to acquaint you, on a confidential basis, with a very important matter I have dealt with during your absence from this country: In order to offer maximum support to United States Ambassador Spruille Braden's admirable activities on behalf of democracy in Argentina, we have engaged in a campaign on his behalf both in this country and in the lands to the south of us. We have especially publicized Mr. Braden's fine record, deserving the confidence of business and labor, among Latin-American workers, organized and unorganized. This step was particularly important since there was a chance that propaganda campaigns emanating from certain quarters and calculated to resuscitate the moth-eaten cry of "Yankee imperialism" threatened to make some headway and to confuse the situation in various countries, especially in Argentina.

An inspired Associated Press story describing how admirable a stand you had taken on the Argentine question and reaffirming in detail our full and unqualified support of Ambassador Braden created a sensation in Latin America and made the front page of Argentina's biggest newspapers. Hard on the heels of this story and certain other actions originating with me, the Under Secretary of State Joseph Grew was happy to announce on August 2 that representatives of Argentine labor unions had called on Ambassador Braden in Buenos Aires to express their disapproval of the recent campaign of defamation directed at the Ambassador and obviously inspired by certain elements.

Since I know how limited your time is, I shall confine myself today to giving you only this sketchy outline of some of the things I have done during your absence to assist United States foreign policy and the cause of democracy. It will be a great honor to hear from you on this subject at your convenience. At your request, of course, I shall be glad to elaborate on any of these points.

Very sincerely yours,
GEORGE MICHANOWSKY.

Here then is the type of support and conniving which has made our Latin American policy under Mr. Braden and Mr. Acheson so terribly effective in destroying our own prestige, and in putting a weapon in the hands of the Communists.

Mr. President, I wish to sound a warning. What about the State Department's publicity which no doubt, will continue? There are now 45,778 full- or part-time personnel in publicity and propaganda work within all the Government agencies.

We need not go back any further than the Yalta agreement to find a convincing picture of the way in which our policies are selling out the Chinese to the Communists and betraying our own most vital interests in the Far East.

The Yalta agreement is said by authoritative students to be the greatest insult to which the United States has ever subjected the Chinese people. Mr. President, certain reports and charges have been made which ought to be investigated by the Senate. It is claimed, for instance, that Russia was turned loose to rape and loot Manchuria, that China was cut in two, and forced to grant to Russia not only all that she had fought Japan 10 years to retain, but also all the benefits contained in agreements that had been entered into by the Soviets and the Chinese since January 26, 1923.

We know now that the Kurile Islands, which it certainly was not in the late President's authority to give to the Russians, or to anyone else, except by treaty, ratified by the Senate, were given to Stalin and by him are being turned into a Russian fortress.

It is charged that the late President agreed to the restoration of the Chinese Eastern Railway to the Soviet Union, and the uniting of outer and inner Mongolia in a Soviet puppet state.

The Russians did not have a shadow of legal claim to a single one of the concessions it is reported the Yalta agreement gave them. Yet, the Chinese were not even consulted, it is said, until the late President had returned from Yalta and personally informed the Chinese Ambassador of the deal. The Ambassador is asserted to have reminded the President, that this seems to be taking us back to the nineteenth century. But it was much worse than that, Mr. President—vastly worse.

For instance, I am informed the Chinese were given to understand by the late President that by accepting the Yalta agreement and formalizing it in a treaty with Russia, which China did conclude in August 1945, China could expect three tremendous advantages:

First. China would have peace with Russia along their 3,000-mile frontier.

Second. The late President assured the Chinese that by accepting the Yalta deal, they could expect the Russians no longer to support the Chinese Communists against the Chinese Government.

Third. Above all, the Chinese were assured they would receive active and large-scale assistance from the United States to hasten the end of the war and to enable China to begin reconstruction in earnest at the earliest possible moment.

Those are some of the reasons behind my earnest pleas to the Senate to adopt Senate Resolution 197.

WE FAILED AT ALMOST EVERY POINT TO FULFILL OUR PROMISES TO CHINA

While the Chinese were terribly fearful of Russia's entry into the war in the Far East, and while they believed there was no need for Russia's entry, I understand they accepted the Yalta deal on the basis of the United States promises.

General Stilwell was replaced by General Wedemeyer, who got along well with the Chinese, and who understood the situation. General Hurley, as Ambassador, had defined the Chinese Communists as "a political party with an army trying to overthrow the Government of the Republic of China."

General Hurley, who was our Ambassador, had pledged American support to the Chinese Nationalist Government. However, General Hurley resigned in December of 1945, accusing the State Department of failure to support those pledges. He demanded a clear-cut statement of American policy toward China.

On December 15, 1945, President Truman issued a public statement of American policy toward China.

This statement of policy criticized the Nationalist Government of China as undemocratic, and insisted that it be widened to include other political elements, particularly the Communists. Ambassador Wei forthwith resigned.

It is a matter of history that the Chinese Nationalist Government had in the past attempted time and again to broaden its base, but all attempts to include the Communists resulted in the latter trying to effect a coup and to take over the whole Government.

In 1927 the Communists sought to do exactly that. But for the Generalissimo they would have succeeded. Henceforth, the Communists had consistently adopted the policy of armed rebellion. The uneasy common front of 1937 again broke up in 1939 when the New Fourth Army of the Communists, as well as the Eighth Route Army, took matters into their own hands, expanding their forces and taking advantage of Japanese attacks to attack Government troops from the rear. The Chinese Government took the position that no working arrangement could be made unless and until the Communists gave up their territorial bases and their private army.

However, the Truman statement of policy did not insist that the Communists should give up their private army first. It insisted that the Chinese Government could not be regarded as democratic unless it included the Communists. This was exactly what the Communists wanted. By refusing to join under any terms, they would forever hold the key to the political situation in China. Thus they were enabled to increase their demands, as they did during the Hurley, and later the Marshall, negotiations, which they could hope would result ultimately in capturing the whole Government.

The statement also stipulated that unless the basis of the Chinese Government was widened, American assistance could not be given. The Communists had gone on record opposing an American loan to China. They would not like to have the government made stronger. On the contrary, they had, since the termination of war, torn up more than 2,000 kilometers of railways, breached dykes flooding wide areas, and in general made economic recovery impossible. They had occupied sections of trunk railway lines, so that these lines could not run, making famine relief impossible. These measures would create misery among the people, and misery breeds Communists. In short, the veto of the loan played directly into the hands of the Communists, making peace and unity entirely impossible. The Truman statement therefore defeated its own purpose.

General Marshall's enforcement of the Truman policy made peace and unity impossible. He sought to freeze the military situation by truce agreements enforced by truce terms. In December 1945, General Marshall succeeded in bringing Mao Tse-tung, the Communist leader, to Chungking. He also succeeded in bringing about the Political Consultative Council composed of all parties. Agreements were arrived at in the council in January 1946. But no sooner were the agreements made than they were broken by the Communists. Since the termination of the war, the Communists had considerably widened their control through illegally seizing territories from the surrendering Japanese, and through the assistance of the evacuating Russians in Manchuria. General Marshall's truce arrangements in effect legalized those Communists gains, thus encouraging them to seize more and more territories for General Marshall's truce terms to legalize. The truce arrangements could not bring unity or peace to China. They had exactly the opposite effect, no matter how well-intentioned they might be. Of the 2,000 counties—or districts—in China, informed sources point out that the Communists were in occupation of 74 counties before the Japanese surrender. Two hundred and forty-one additional counties were occupied by them after the surrender and 20 more were occupied after the Marshall truce agreement of January 1946. The total now stands at 335 counties.

In the meantime, the projected loan of $500,000,000 to China, already agreed to in principle, is not forthcoming. It is now in the hands of the Import and Export Bank, with apparently no clear-cut directive from higher levels.

The Chinese people are now in even greater misery than during the war. They are disillusioned, desperate, and bewildered.

Informed Chinese simply cannot understand American policy.

First, they cannot understand why this administration is so sensitive to Communist criticisms in China while having struggles with the Communists in other parts of the world;

Second, why this administration grants large loans to other countries, such as Yugoslavia, and not to China, knowing that those regimes are totalitarian;

Third, why Mr. Truman appears to believe Communist participation in the Chinese Government would make it democratic while we regard Communists in other lands as totalitarian;

Fourth. Why this administration insists on Communist participation in the Chinese Government while congressional committees and the Justice Department are trying to bar Communists from the American Government;

Fifth, why Mr. Truman believes Chinese Communists are democrats and agrarian reformers while we regard American Communists as owing allegiance to a foreign nation;

Sixth, why Mr. Truman has failed to insist upon the abolition of the private army of the Chinese Communists which is making peace and unity impossible in China and the rest of Asia;

Seventh, why Mr. Truman does not insist that the Communists open up their occupation areas in China so normal communications can be resumed, bringing relief to millions of starving people;

Eighth, why our American representatives to UNRRA, and the American Director-General of UNRRA limit UNRRA aid to China to such meager proportions, while giving bountiful aid to Russian satellites, and even ex-enemy countries. China is to receive from UNRRA supplies worth $562,500,000 or about $1.25 per capita. The per capita value given to Greece is about $46.90, to Italy $9.75, to Poland $20.70, to Yugoslavia $27.50, to White Russia $6.40, to Ukraine $4.60.

Ninth, informed Chinese ask why the United States Government cannot revise the whole policy toward China right now, knowing full well that the policy, as embodied in the Truman statement, and administered by Marshall, has proved to be wrong. They insist that the basic premise of the policy plays directly into the hands of the Communists whose advantage plainly lies in making the implementation of this policy impossible.

Tenth, it is hard to believe, Mr. President, that in spite of all that has transpired, Mr. Acheson has testified before the House Foreign Affairs Committee, which was reported to the House June 27, in connection with H. R. 6795, that there is need to extend to China an agreement which would provide military equipment and training, not only to the Nationalist government, but would permit aid to the Communist armies as well.

If the United States Government really wants to help the Chinese people, it must reverse its policy.

According to press releases right up to this very hour, the situation is becoming more desperate, and, evidently, neither Mr. Acheson nor the policymakers in the Far Eastern Division intend to make a reversal of our present policies pursued in China, or to remedy these terrible errors flowing from the mistaken policy now being pursued.

EUROPEAN POLICY FOLLOWS SAME PATTERN

Mr. President, when we turn to Europe to analyze just what we have been doing there for the past year the picture is even more grim.

As Anne O'Hare McCormick wrote on June 15, 1946, in the New York Times:

> The state of Europe today is the first threat to the peace of the world.

On July 15, Secretary Byrnes confirmed this conclusion, and even went so far as to tell the American people he was going to direct the American military government in Germany that very week to abandon the provisions of the Potsdam Declaration and start out on their own negotiating with the governments in any of the zones that would work with them to prevent a complete catastrophe in Germany and Europe.

While no one seems to realize the full significance of this statement, it becomes perfectly clear that it amounts to the first sign of an open break with Russia.

But, Mr. President, this does not alter in any way our other policies which we have been following in Europe since the war ended. All one has to do is to recall that for almost a year the Communists in other governments have used food for purely political purposes, but the United States Government would not even permit the churches to use food for purely humanitarian missions of mercy.

As recently as June 25, 1946, General Eisenhower himself appeared before the Senate Committee on Appropriations to plead for the restoration of a huge amount of money for the Army's relief program. Said General Eisenhower:

> I recommend that the act carry no less than $500,000,000 for these problems in the occupied territories. The feeding of these countries is extremely meager and the people responsible have had to cut and cut until they have cut it down to nothing but a starvation diet. Only recently have we had enough food in sight to restore the European zone, I think, to 1,250 calories. We have always felt that on the advice of our doctors anything lower than 1,500 was indefensible. So the conditions throughout Austria, Germany, and Japan have become alarming to our people.

Mr. President, let us survey briefly the European picture. Mass deportations; slave labor; a policy creating a permanent economic slum of Europe; millions without even a minimum of human shelter, clothing, heat, light, or sanitation.

Civilization simply cannot survive such awful development. The newspapers of yesterday morning carried articles which make one's flesh creep.

In the July 6, 1946, edition of the New Leader, John Dos Passos reported a conversation he had with a high-ranking American Army officer in the train out of Berlin on his way home. According to Mr. Dos Passos the American officer stated:

> It's all this apologizing that makes me sick. We built up the greatest army in the world and won the war with it and now we are letting everything go to pieces because we don't know what to do next.

Russia has become a real menace to the peace and the security of the world. But Russia could never have reached this stage in her aggressions had it not been for the weakness of our State Department policies.

CONCLUSION

Indeed, Mr. President, Russian aggression is a major problem, but to continue to pretend to abide by these sordid agreements which have made possible Russia's aggressions thus far is not only suicidal to the peoples caught between the two power centers of the world, but it may be the end of our freedom and our great heritage.

Mr. MORSE obtained the floor.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Oregon yield to me? I shall be very brief.

Mr. MORSE. I yield with the understanding that I retain the floor.

Mr. CONNALLY. I thank the Senator.

Mr. President, I have listened with a great deal of interest to the address of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. WHERRY] on the foreign situation. I shall not undertake this afternoon to reply to the Senator. It seems to me that it is rather unfortunate that he should have chosen the closing hours of the Congress to fire his artillery and then fall back behind the well-protected breastworks of his office and his home.

Mr. President, it is easy enough for Senators to sit in their air-cooled offices, or for correspondents and columnists to sit in their well-appointed offices in this country and tell us all about how the affairs of the world should be conducted. It is marvelous. But, Mr. President, the Department of State of the United States is not responsible for all the unhappy things which are taking place in the world today. The United States is not responsible for all the unfortunate things which are happening throughout the world and those which have happened throughout the world.

Today, while the Secretary of State of the United States, Mr. Byrnes, with the sanction and the blessing of the President of the United States, is in a foreign capital participating in an international conference in an effort to help bring about peace throughout the world, and helping in the drafting of peace treaties, and while the distinguished Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] and myself have lately been laboring with Mr. Byrnes in undertaking to bind up some of the wounds of the world, it is most unfortunate to have a broadside attack made upon the State Department for its policies all down the line.

The Senator from Nebraska referred to the unfortunate situation of deportees in Europe. I suppose the State Department is responsible for there being deportees in Europe, and displaced persons, and conditions of that sort. We are not responsible for those things.

Mr. President, I want to see the peace of the world restored, I want to see the United States get along, as it were, with other nations. I want to see the United States carry out its high concepts of international duty; and it is doing that now insofar as it is able to do it.

But, Mr. President, the United States is not the only nation in the world. We cannot enter a conference and dictate every act that takes place. While in Paris I am sure the Senator from Michigan received communications, as I did, from constituents and others in the United States, complaining about this, that, and the other, telling us just what to do, as if all we had to do was to call the conference to order and say, "By unanimous consent, without objection, it is so ordered."

Mr. President, that cannot be done. Groups of foreign nations have their objectives and their policies. The United States, through President Truman, through the Secretary of State, through the distinguished Senator from Michigan, and other representatives, in international conferences are doing all that can possibly be done now for the promotion of good will with the nations of the earth, for the establishment of peace, and for the promotion of the United Nations organization, in which will be settled international questions, in the language of the charter, "by peaceable means." These are the things we are striving to establish, and I hope Senators will aid us and do what they can to promote these causes, instead of making addresses and speeches attacking and criticizing and throwing obstacles in the way of harmony and unity here at home.

One of the reasons why we have been as successful as we have has been that we have been nonpartisan, the Senator from Michigan representing that branch of our citizenry known as the Republican Party, and working in complete harmony with the Secretary of State and others of us on the other side of the aisle. We have been saved the confusion and the uncertainty and the bitterness that followed World War I. It is only because of such nonpolitical unity that the voice of America is influential in these world conferences. If the other nations thought we were divided, if they believed there was a line of cleavage here at home on the ground of partisan politics, they would be encouraged more and more to resist us on the theory that they could divide us at home, or undermine us here, and render our efforts ineffective.

I do not say this in bitterness, I assure the Senator from Nebraska, but I say it in all good spirit. We are all good Americans. If we can have peace, we save from the battlefield the boys of Nebraska, as well as the boys of Texas and of Michigan. If we have accord, we save the terrible burdens of taxation and sacrifice which have been borne in the recent years. There is no advantage of party in these international conferences. What benefits one American benefits all Americans.

Mr. President, I hope we may remain united, that we shall not dissipate our efforts because of narrow partisan political considerations which do not contribute, but which detract from the force, the influence, the prestige of America in this supreme hour of the world's history.

Mr. President, this is perhaps the most fateful hour in all the annals of time. America has a great opportunity. We should and we must lead the world, not because we want any selfish advantage, not because other nations have things we desire, but because of the fact that we do not wish these things. We have a position among the powers which enables us to exert perhaps the most tremendous and compelling influence any nation has ever exerted in all history. We want to exert that voice and that influence in behalf of things looking to the betterment of mankind, for the welfare of the peoples of the world, and we cannot do it if our forces are divided on domestic political lines.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SWIFT in the chair). Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. MORSE. I yield, with the understanding I may retain the floor in my own right.

Mr. WHERRY. I thank the Senator. I wish to say to the distinguished Senator from Texas that no one has cooperated more fully than I with the universal peace program which has been brought into the Senate. My criticism was constructive, and not inspired in any way by political considerations. I do not know how in the world the distinguished Senator from Texas could criticize my speech very much from a political angle, when he did not hear half of it.

I hardly think the Senator from Texas subscribes to the policies of Mr. Acheson and Mr. Braden in South America. Certainly we have the right, as Senators, to stand on the floor and, in a constructive way, ask the Senate and ask the administration to carry out policies which are in keeping with the good neighbor policy in South America. That is all I ask today, and I do so at this time. I have tried for 10 days, as I said in the beginning of my remarks, to get an opportunity to prepare a summary and enumerate a few American principles, and when I finally got my study completed, I presented it, and I did it only as an American, to be helpful to the administration and to the distinguished leader of the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Oregon yield?

Mr. MORSE. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. I wish to say that I entertain the most cordial and friendly relations with the Senator from Nebraska. Of course I subscribe to the doctrine that any Senator has a right to express his opinions and his views on this floor regarding any public question, and I shall not vote to take that right away from him, and I did not vote that way today, when the Senator from Nebraska was so voting.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I cannot let the moment pass without a brief word, lest my silence be misunderstood. I do not care to go into the ancient history involved in the comments on American foreign policy which have been made by the distinguished Senator from Nebraska [Mr. WHERRY]. I happen to share some of the views which he expressed regarding certain of our American attitudes up to the time of the Yalta Conference, and most emphatically including the Yalta Conference, although I hasten to add that I realize the late President of the United States was operating under the exigencies of war, and perhaps under what he considered to be a dire necessity to maintain unity of armed action at any price. Happily, we are under no such repugnant compulsions now. I agree, and so does Secretary Byrnes, that appeasement days are over.

I have no quarrel with the Senator in respect to pre-Yalta policies in many aspects, and I think there will have to be revisions at some key points before the world will have won peace with justice.

I have no quarrel with the Senator regarding certain phases of the vitally important South American situation. The distinguished chairman of the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations, and my distinguished friend sitting at my left, the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE], and I have been critical of all unilateral action in South America, and I am sure we have done everything within our power to create a different situation, and I think a different situation is under way.

The only thing I wish to comment on directly in the remarks of my able friend from Nebraska relates to the immediate situation which we confront in respect to the Peace Conference now in session at Paris. I inferred from the Senator's observations that he doubted whether the present Secretary of State is vigorously and faithfully representing sound American viewpoints at the present moment in respect to these negotiations.

Mr. President, confining my present remarks to the five treaties which are under discussion in Paris, I wish to say that in their preparation, through difficult and trying hours, I do not know how any representative of America could have been more faithful to the human rights and fundamental freedoms for which America stands in respect to herself and the world than Secretary of State James F. Byrnes. He could not always have his way. But he relentlessly kept the record straight. I was there. I think I know.

Nor do I know of any more definite and specific issue that could have been drawn with the Soviet Union regarding human rights and fundamental freedoms than were drawn, for example, by our distinguished Secretary of State in respect to the very thing the able Senator from Nebraska particularly referred to, namely, the status of displaced persons and refugees. I refer to the Secretary's refusal even to consider a treaty with Austria so long as the price was the immediate involuntary repatriation of 500,000 poor victims of displacement, including patriots from the heroic Polish Army of General Anders.

I simply wish to say Mr. President, that with respect to the Secretary of State's present obligations in Paris, in respect to his express purpose to achieve a final result for an American position which in my humble opinion reflects the full American idea, I would not want the world in general or the Soviets in particular to think that there was any serious division at home, behind him. Division at home would be our greatest hazard. For myself I subscribe to him my full faith and confidence in respect to the hard task to which he is now committed, and I shall maintain that attitude until events unexpectedly dictate otherwise.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I rose to speak on a subject other than the one to which I wish to address myself now, but I have been so deeply moved by the commendable statements made by the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] and the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] on the international situation that I wish to associate myself with their remarks. I wish to mention at this time that I think a very solemn—and I use the word advisedly—a very solemn obligation rests on the Senate of the United States to consider and vote upon, before it adjourns, Senate Resolution 196. This is the resolution which proposes that this country accept the compulsory jurisdiction of the World Court in any dispute with any other nation which likewise has or in the future will accept the compulsory jurisdiction of the World Court. The resolution does not limit our right to make any other agreement with a nation with which we are in dispute insofar as agreeing to some other peaceful method for settling the dispute is concerned.

The Senator from Texas was quite right when he pointed out the significance of this hour in the history of man, and hence I say that no stone should be left unturned by the Senate of the United States in fostering an international order based upon justice through law. The greatest opportunity to advance that order which this body perhaps will have in the lifetime of its Members is to adopt Senate Resolution 196, which has been reported unanimously by the Foreign Relations Committee of the United States Senate, and the principle of which has been endorsed by the President of the United States, by the Secretary of State, by the American Bar Association, by every authority, without exception within my knowledge, on international law in the United States.

I believe that not only the people of the United States but the peoples of the world have the right to look at this body during the closing hours of the Seventy-ninth Congress and ask whether the 96 Senators of this body will rise to a very rare opportunity, that only infrequently is presented to them in high office, and perform the great art of statesmanship called for by this resolution 196. We have a great chance to show to the peoples of the world that we of the United States are ready to submit our international disputes to the rules of reason prevailing in an international court of justice. I hope that no rationalization, no maneuver by way of subterfuge, no excuses and no alibis will be advanced that will cause us to delay or postpone meeting—and I use this word advisedly—what in my judgment, when I consider the security of posterity from the curse of war, has now become a sacred obligation. I sincerely hope that the majority leader, the chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee, and the senior Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS], who had charge of the hearings on this resolution, will, before the Congress adjourns, move that the Senate of the United States proceed to consider, to debate, and to vote upon Senate Resolution 196. I express that hope because I believe the resolution 196 is the best evidence that we can give to the smaller nations of the world and the greatest assurance that we can give to Russia that we stand ready to live up to the spirit and the intent and the purpose of the San Francisco Charter. It will be recalled that at the last plenary session of that great conference, it adopted without a dissenting vote a resolution which proposed that all signatories to the United Nations charter should as soon as possible file their declaration with the United Nations pledging themselves to accept the compulsory jurisdiction of the World Court in disputes with other nations that had likewise by reciprocity accepted a similar jurisdiction.

O Mr. President, although I did not rise to speak on this point, I will say that we cannot listen to the Senator from Texas and the Senator from Michigan without realizing that those two great statesmen have caught the vision of a one world and have recognized its implication so far as the welfare of future generations the world over are concerned. Unquestionably I think they see that this is our last chance, Mr. President, to build a world order which recognizes that the peoples of the world must either live together in a cooperative arrangement by way of justice through law or destroy themselves in a third world war. I shall await the first rational argument to justify any postponement of immediate consideration of Senate Resolution 196.

I close this part of my speech by repeating what I have heretofore said: that in my opinion the hour is historic, the obligation sacred, the responsibility one so full of significance to the future welfare not only of our country, but of the world, that we cannot justify going home at the end of this week without having risen to this obligation and cast our vote on Senate Resolution 196.

I agree with the great Senator from Texas with regard to these international issues. There is no room for the slightest degree of partisan politics. On this issue we must all be Americans first and politicians second. I close not only with a plea for the passage of the resolution but with a prayer that we will meet this solemn obligation. If there was ever a time when statesmen ought to bow their heads and pray to the Almighty God to give us vision and strength and foresight, I think the time is now. I hope that a full appreciation of the significance of Senate Resolution 196 will permeate the thinking of every Member of this body, and that between now and the time Congress adjourns the 96 of us can unite, not only in the interest of our country but in the interest of permanent peace through law, and pass the resolution. It is my view that only to the extent that we make that contribution now can we hope to live up to the great obligations which rest upon our shoulders to lead this country down the broad highway to future peace, setting an example to all the nations of the world that we mean to practice as well as preach international justice through law.

With the great Secretary of State now sitting in Paris working not only in our interest for a peace based upon justice, I pray that we will give him the support he so sorely needs; that we will put him in a position so that when he listens to the arguments of the nations, great and small, he can say, "Yes; we believe in justice through law, because the Senate of the United States has again demonstrated that belief and conviction by passing by an overwhelming vote Senate Resolution 196."

Let me repeat that I hope the great statesmen of this body who have in charge the international policies of this Nation, so far as Senate action is concerned, will not fail to live up to what I consider to be their clear duty and obligation.

TRANSFER OF PAINTING OF BATTLE BETWEEN MONITOR AND MERRIMAC TO NAVAL ACADEMY AT ANNAPOLIS

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I have been waiting to try to introduce a joint resolution and to have it acted upon. It deals with a painting entitled, "The First Fight of Ironclads, Monitor and Merrimac." The painting is about 10 by 15 feet in size. It has been moved around the Capitol for years and years from one place to another, and is now in storage in the basement of the Capitol. It would be very appropriate if that painting were permanently allocated to the Naval Academy at Annapolis. I know of no more appropriate place for it to hang than in the Naval Academy at Annapolis, rather than being stored in the basement of the Capitol in Washington. Looking to that transfer, I ask unanimous consent to introduce a joint resolution which would accomplish that purpose.

There being no objection, the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 186) to provide for the transfer of the painting First Fight of Ironclads, Monitor and Merrimac, now stored in the United States Capitol Building, to the custody of the United States Naval Academy, was read twice by its title.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the joint resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 186) to provide for the transfer of the painting "First Fight of Ironclads, Monitor and Merrimac," now stored in the United States Capitol Building, to the custody of the United States Naval Academy, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the painting "First Fight of Ironclads, Monitor and Merrimac," by William Formby Halsall, now stored in the United States Capitol Building, be and the same is hereby transferred to the permanent custody of the United States Naval Academy.

The removal and transport of this painting from the Capitol to the United States Naval Academy at Annapolis, Md., shall be effected at the expense of said Academy, and the Architect of the Capitol shall act for the Joint Committee on the Library in carrying out the provisions of this joint resolution.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I ask at this point to have printed in the RECORD a brief statement containing the history of this painting, which I think Senators will find interesting.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

TRANSFER OF PAINTING "FIRST FIGHT OF IRONCLADS, MONITOR AND MERRIMAC," TO THE CUSTODY OF THE UNITED STATES NAVAL ACADEMY

The painting "First Fight of Ironclads, Monitor and Merrimac," was completed in 1886 by the artist, William Formby Halsall. This artist, a distinguished painter of marine subjects, was born in England, March 20, 1841, and died at Winthrop, Mass., November 7, 1919.

The painting was purchased by the Joint Committee on the Library in January 1887 for the sum of $5,000 and for many years was exhibited in the lobby of the gallery floor, Senate wing of the Capitol, until the installation of the elevators on the Senate side in 1909 made its removal necessary.

The painting is a very large one, requiring a wall space 9 feet and 8 inches high by 15 feet and 4 inches long, and as there was no adequate space available in the Capitol Building in which it might be relocated, it was taken to the Senate Office Building and placed on view in room 405 of that building, where it remained until May 1919, when at the request of the occupant of that room it was removed therefrom, and placed in storage first in the Senate Office Building, and later in its present location in the Capitol Building.

As there is no adequate space available in the United States Capitol Building in which to hang the painting "First Fight of Ironclads, Monitor and Merrimac," it is recommended that this painting be located at, and placed in the custody of, the United States Naval Academy, where another painting by this artist "Our Glory—Battleship Oregon" also hangs.

THE CALENDAR

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, earlier in the day I asked unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the call of the calendar represented by bills reported since the calendar was called on Monday. The Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY] asked me to withhold that request, which I did. I now ask unanimous consent that following the remarks of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MORSE] the Senate may proceed to the consideration of unobjected-to bills on the calendar, beginning with calendar No. 1908.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I wish to announce that at the conclusion of the call of the calendar it is my purpose to bring up calendar 1610, Senate bill 1178, which is the so-called equal pay for equal work bill for women, which was favorably reported by the committee. I do not want Senators to think that perhaps there might be something else brought up at the conclusion of the call of the calendar. To those who are interested I want to give notice that I shall try to bring up that bill for consideration.

PROHIBITION OF POLL TAX IN FEDERAL ELECTIONS

The Senate resumed consideration of the bill (H. R. 7) making unlawful the requirement for the payment of a poll tax as a prerequisite to voting in a primary or other election for national officers.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, House bill 7, the so-called anti-poll-tax bill, is now the unfinished business before the Senate. Once again House bill 7 has been brought up at the end of a session of Congress. I shall not review my position in regard to the procedure which has been followed in the handling of the bill. I have not changed my views in regard to the procedure. Neither shall I dwell upon the statement, "I told you so," as shown by the action taken today on the cloture petition, which action I predicted days ago. I think it is perfectly obvious that we can never hope to pass House bill 7 until we are willing to grapple with it early in the session and make it perfectly clear that we intend to fight through on the issue until we finally reach a vote on the merits of the bill.

This bill has come to hold the hopes of millions of Americans, Negroes and whites alike, who wish to see removed improper restraints upon the right of our citizens to vote, who wish to enjoy what I consider to be one of the fundamental freedoms and liberties of American citizens, irrespective of the color of their skin or their economic status—a free, untrammeled franchise.

The bill has the opposition of many Senators who were likewise opposed to the passage of the Fair Employment Practices Act. Senators will remember that the Fair Employment Practices bill was before the Senate early in this session. Many persons have entirely overlooked what I consider to be an important incident which occurred during the debate on the FEPC bill. Many Senators were absent from the Chamber at the time. So, Mr. President, especially in view of the action which has taken place today on the cloture petition in the United States Senate, I wish to refresh the recollection of Senators on the point I have in mind.

I have on my desk the official RECORD of the proceedings and debates of the Seventy-ninth Congress, second session, volume 92. I turn to page 814 which records the proceedings of February 4, 1946. The Senator from Tennessee [Mr. STEWART], a Democrat, had the floor. He was addressed by the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. OVERTON], also a Democrat, who asked the Senator from Tennessee to yield. The RECORD shows that he did so. The RECORD also shows that the Senator from Indiana [Mr. CAPEHART], a Republican, joined in the discussion. Mr. President, I think it desirable for the RECORD that there now be read into the RECORD the debate which occurred on February 4, 1946, as recorded on page 814. I quote from the RECORD:

Mr. OVERTON. The Senator has very correctly made the observation that this is a political measure. It is intended to get votes for the national administration now in power. At least there is no doubt about that in my mind. I do not think there is any doubt about it in the mind of anyone, whether he be a Democrat or a Republican, if he has given any thought to the origin of this measure and its daddy and granddaddy, the anti-poll-tax bill and the anti-lynching bill. I ask the Senator if he does not agree with me that the purpose is very largely to enable the national Democratic administration to hold within its ranks Negro votes from pivotal States, and probably add to the number of Negro votes from such States.

Mr. President, I feel very friendly toward the Negro. I believe that all of us in Louisiana feel friendly toward him. We have no trouble with the Negro, politically or otherwise. So far as Louisiana is concerned, very few of them vote. They are perfectly well satisfied with the government of Louisiana, as it is being conducted today.

But, Mr. President, the question I wish to ask the Senator is whether the National Democratic Party realizes that ultimately the Negro is going to come to the conclusion that his permanent friend, his steady friend, his fast and certain friend, is not the Democratic Party, but the Republican Party? Is not the Negro going to come to the conclusion that out of a sense of gratitude he owes fealty to the Republican Party? Was it not the great emancipator, Abraham Lincoln, who broke the shackles from the Negro's wrists and gave him freedom? Was it not the Republican Party which placed in our Constitution the fifteenth amendment, giving the Negro the right of suffrage? Was it not the Republican Party that, following the War Between the States, undertook to place and did place the Negro in political power in the Southern States? Is the Negro going to forget his obligation to the party which made his race free, which gave it political power, and which gave it political prestige? Is he going to go astray and worship after false idols and false gods? Is he going to surrender the birthright and heritage of his race, politically, for a mess of pottage which might be thrown out by the present national Democratic administration?

As a Democrat whose forebears have been Democrats and whose democracy cannot be impunged, I wish to say that it would be infinitely better for the Negro to adhere to the Republican Party rather than to the Democratic Party.

Mr. CAPEHART. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. STEWART. I yield for a question, but I do not wish to lose the floor.

Mr. CAPEHART. I understand, and my request is made with that in mind.

Mr. President, are we to understand from the able Senator from Louisiana that the Democratic Party does not wish to have the vote of the Negro?

Mr. OVERTON. So far as the southern Democrats are concerned, I can say "Yes"—unquestionably so, so far as the great majority of southern Democrats are concerned. We do not want the Negroes in the party. They do not belong in the Democratic Party.

Mr. EASTLAND and Mr. CHAVEZ addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. STEWART. The Senator from Indiana has not completed his question, I believe.

Mr. CAPEHART. Mr. President, I wish to say that I see no connection between wanting the vote of the Negroes and the question before the Senate at the moment. Let me say that we in the Republican Party want the votes of the Negroes of America because they are Americans.

Mr. President, I am very happy to join with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. CAPEHART] in extending an invitation to the Negroes of America to come on over and join the Republican Party, because I think the action taken at this session of Congress, both on the FEPC bill and on the anti-poll-tax bill, should make unequivocally and crystal clear to the Negroes of America that their hopes to exercise the rights of free citizens will be assured and guaranteed to them only by the Republican Party.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, as a Republican, I wish to say that I agree somewhat with the speech just made by my colleague the Senator from Oregon. The Republican Party has done some little more for the Negro than has the Democratic Party—and that is worth noting. Ever since the time of Abraham Lincoln, the Republican Party, time and time and time again—and that has been true during the last 4 or 5 years since I have been a Member of the Senate—when it has had an opportunity to do something of real value for the Negro, has done more than the Democratic Party but has not done as much as it should have done; and I wish the RECORD to show that, because that is the record.

REORGANIZATIONS OF FINANCIAL STRUCTURES OF DEBTOR RAILROADS—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. WHEELER submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 1253) to enable debtor railroad corporations expeditiously to effectuate reorganizations of their financial structures; to alter or modify their financial obligations; and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House to the text of the bill and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows:

In lieu of the matter inserted by the amendment of the House insert the following: "That (1) it shall be lawful (any express provision contained in any mortgage, indenture, deed of trust, or other instrument to the contrary notwithstanding), with the approval and authorization of the Interstate Commerce Commission (hereinafter referred to as the Commission), as provided in paragraph (2) hereof, for a carrier as defined in section 20a (1) of Part 1 of the Interstate Commerce Act to alter or modify (a) any provision of any class or classes of its bonds, notes, debentures, or other indebtedness, (whether secured, unsecured, matured, or unmatured) issued under any mortgage, indenture, deed of trust, or other instrument, or otherwise created, such bonds, notes, debentures, or other evidences of indebtedness being hereinafter in this section sometimes called "obligations"; (b) any provision of any mortgage, indenture, deed of trust, or other instrument pursuant to which any class of its obligations shall have been issued or by which any class of its obligations is secured: Provided, That the provisions of this section shall not apply to any equipment-trust certificates in respect of which a carrier is obligated, or to any evidences of indebtedness of a carrier the payment of which is secured in any manner solely by equipment, or to any instrument, whether an agreement, lease, conditional-sale agreement, or otherwise, pursuant to which such equipment-trust certificates or such evidences of indebtedness shall have been issued or by which they are secured.

"(2) Whenever an alteration or modification is proposed under paragraph (1) hereof, the carrier seeking authority therefor shall, pursuant to such rules and regulations as the Commission shall prescribe, present an application to the Commission. The Commission shall set such application for public hearing and the carrier shall give such notice of such hearing in such manner, by advertisement or otherwise, as the Commission may find practicable and may direct, to holders of such of its classes of securities and to such other persons in interest as the Commission shall determine to be appropriate and shall direct. If the Commission, after hearing, in addition to making (in any case where such alteration or modification involves an issuance of securities) the findings required by paragraph (2) of said section 20a, shall find that, subject to such terms and conditions (not constituting alterations or modifications of obligations or securities) and with such amendments (altering or modifying the obligations affected by the alteration or modification proposed by the carrier) as the Commission shall determine to be just and reasonable, the proposed alteration or modification—

"(a) is within the scope of paragraph (1);

"(b) will be in the public interest;

"(c) will be in the best interests of the carrier and of the holders of each class of its obligations affected by such modification or alteration; and

"(d) will not be adverse to the interests of the holders of any other class of the carrier's securities or to the interests of any creditor of the carrier not affected by such modification or alteration,

then (unless the applicant carrier shall withdraw its application) the Commission shall cause the carrier, in such manner as it shall direct, to submit the proposed alteration or modification (with such terms, conditions, and amendments, if any) to the holders of each class of its obligations affected thereby, for acceptance or rejection. If the Commission shall find that as a result of such submission the proposed alteration or modification has been assented to by the holders—

"(i) of at least 66⅔ per centum of the aggregate principal amount outstanding of each class of obligations affected thereby; or

"(ii) of less than 66⅔ per centum but not less than 51 per centum of any particular class or classes of securities affected, and the Commission, after hearing, finds that such reduction in percentage will be just and reasonable and in the public interest; or

"(iii) in any case where 66⅔ per centum thereof is held by fewer than twenty-five holders, of such larger percentage, if any, as the Commission, after hearing, finds will be just and reasonable and in the public interest;

the Commission shall enter an order approving and authorizing the proposed alteration or modification upon the terms and conditions and with the amendments, if any, so determined to be just and reasonable. Such order shall make provision as to the time when such alteration or modification shall become and be binding, which may be upon publication of a declaration to that effect by the carrier, or otherwise, as the Commission may determine. Any alteration or modification which shall become and be binding pursuant to the approval and authority of the Commission hereunder shall be binding upon each holder of any obligation of the carrier of each class affected by such alteration or modification, and upon any trustee or other party to any instrument under which any such class of obligations shall have been issued or by which it is secured, and when any alteration or modification shall become and be binding the rights of each such holder and of any such trustee or other party shall be correspondingly altered or modified.

"(3) For the purposes of this section a class of obligations shall be deemed to be affected by any modification or alteration proposed only (a) if a modification or alteration is proposed as to any provision of such class of obligations, or (b) if any modification or alteration is proposed as to any provision of any instrument pursuant to which such class of obligations shall have been issued or shall be secured: Provided, That in any case where more than one class of obligations shall have been issued and be outstanding or shall be secured pursuant to any instrument, any alteration or modification proposed as to any provision of such instrument, which does not relate to all of the classes of obligations issued thereunder, shall be deemed to affect only the class or classes of obligations to which such alteration or modification is related. For the purpose of the finding of the Commission referred to in paragraph (2) of this section as to whether the required percentage of the aggregate principal amount outstanding of each class of obligations affected by any proposed alteration or modification has assented to the making of such alteration or modification, any obligation which secures any evidence or evidences of indebtedness of the carrier or of any company controlling or controlled by the carrier shall be deemed to be outstanding unless the Commission in its discretion determines that the proposed alteration or modification does not materially affect the interests of the holder or holders of the evidence or evidences of indebtedness secured by such obligation. Whenever any such pledged obligation is, for said purposes, to be deemed outstanding, assent in respect of such obligations, as to any proposed alteration or modification, may be given only (any express or implied provision in any mortgage, indenture, deed of trust, note, or other instrument to the contrary notwithstanding) as follows: (a) where such obligation is pledged as security under a mortgage, indenture, deed of trust, or other instrument, pursuant to which any evidences of indebtedness are issued and outstanding, by the holders of a majority in principal amount of such evidences of indebtedness, or (b) where such obligation secures an evidence or evidences of indebtedness not issued pursuant to such a mortgage, indenture, deed of trust, or other instrument, by the holder or holders of such evidence or evidences of indebtedness; and in any such case the Commission, in addition to the submission referred to in paragraph (2) of this section, shall cause the carrier in such manner as it shall direct to submit the proposed alteration or modification (with such terms, conditions, and amendments, if any, as the Commission shall have determined to be just and reasonable) for acceptance or rejection, to the holders of the evidences of indebtedness issued and outstanding pursuant to such mortgage, indenture, deed of trust, or other instrument, or to the holder or holders of such evidence or evidences of indebtedness not so issued, and such proposed alteration or modification need not be submitted to the trustee of any such mortgage, indenture, deed of trust, or other instrument, but assent in respect of any such obligation shall be determined as hereinbefore in this section provided. For the purpose of any such assent the evidences of indebtedness issued and outstanding under any such mortgage, indenture, deed of trust, or other instrument shall be determined by the Commission.

"(4) (a) Any authorization and approval hereunder of any alteration or modification of a provision of any class of obligations of a carrier or of a provision of any instrument pursuant to which a class of obligations has been issued, or by which it is secured, shall be deemed to constitute authorization and approval of a corresponding alteration or modification of the obligation of any other carrier which has assumed liability in respect of such class of obligations as guarantor, endorser, surety, or otherwise: Provided, That such other carrier consents in writing to such alteration or modification of such class of obligations in respect of which it has assumed liability or of the instrument pursuant to which such class of obligations has been issued or by which it is secured, and, such consent having been given, any such corresponding alteration or modification shall become effective, without other action, when the alteration or modification of such class of obligations or of such instrument shall become and be binding.

"(b) Any person who is liable or obligated contingently or otherwise on any class or classes of obligations issued by a carrier shall, with respect to such class or classes of obligations, for the purposes of this section, be deemed a carrier.

"(5) The authority conferred by this section shall be exclusive and plenary and any carrier, in respect of any alteration or modification authorized and approved by the Commission hereunder, shall have full power to make any such alteration or modification and to take any actions incidental or appropriate thereto, and may make any such alteration or modification and take any such actions, and any such alteration or modification may be made without securing the approval of the Commission under any other section of the Interstate Commerce Act or other paragraph of this section, and without securing approval of any State authority, and any carrier and its officers and employees and any other persons, participating in the making of an alteration or modification approved and authorized under the provisions of this section or the taking of any such actions, shall be, and they hereby are, relieved from the operation of all restraints, limitations, and prohibitions of law, Federal, State, or municipal, insofar as may be necessary to enable them to make and carry into effect the alteration or modification so approved and authorized, in accordance with the conditions and with the amendments, if any, imposed by the Commission. Any power granted by this section to any carrier shall be deemed to be in addition to and in modification of its powers under its corporate charter or under the laws of any State. The provisions of this section shall not affect in any way the negotiability of any obligation of any carrier or of the obligation of any carrier which has assumed liability in respect thereto.

"(6) The Commission shall require periodical or special reports from each carrier which shall hereafter secure from the Commission approval and authorization of any alteration or modification under this section, which shall show, in such detail as the Commission may require, the action taken by the carrier in the making of such alteration or modification.

"(7) The provisions of this section are permissive and not mandatory and shall not require any carrier to obtain authorization and approval of the Commission hereunder for the making of any alteration or modification of any provision of any of its obligations or of any class thereof or of any provision of any mortgage, indenture, deed of trust, or other instrument, which it may be able lawfully to make in any other manner, whether by reason of provisions for the making of such alteration or modification in any such mortgage, indenture, deed of trust, or other instrument, or otherwise: Provided, That the provisions of paragraph (2) of said section 20a, if applicable to such alteration or modification made otherwise than pursuant to the provisions of this section, shall continue to be so applicable.

"(8) The provisions of paragraph (6) of said section 20a, except the provisions thereof in respect of hearings, shall apply to applications made under this section. In connection with any order entered by the Commission pursuant to paragraph (2) hereof, the Commission may from time to time, for good cause shown, make such supplemental orders in the premises as it may deem necessary or appropriate, and may by any such supplemental order modify the provisions of any such order, subject always to the requirements of said paragraph (2).

"(9) The provisions of subdivision (a) of section 14 of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 shall not apply to any solicitation in connection with a proposed alteration or modification pursuant to this section.

"(10) The Commission shall have the power to make such rules and regulations appropriate to its administration of the provisions of this section as it shall deem necessary or desirable.

"SEC. 2. (1) All proceedings under section 77 of the Bankruptcy Act, whether before the Interstate Commerce Commission or United States courts, relating to the preparation or effectuation of plans of reorganization of each carrier by railroad as defined in said section 20a (1) whose properties on the effective date of this Act or at any time thereafter are in the custody of the United States courts, shall be forthwith suspended and discontinued as of the effective date of this Act—

"(A) If the gross railway operating revenues of such carrier for any of the calendar years 1942 to 1944, inclusive, were in excess of $50,000,000; or if its gross railway operating revenues were not in excess of such amount, such carrier is a debtor in any such proceeding, or is a party defendant in any proceeding ancillary thereto, with another such carrier whose revenues were so in excess; and

"(B) If, for the period of seven calendar years from 1939 to 1945, inclusive, the total of the income reported to the Commission as income available for fixed charges, plus (a) the total of any amounts so reported as a deficit for fixed charges in any of said seven years to the extent of the total of any amounts reported for Federal income and excess-profits taxes in any of said years, and (b) amounts deducted in any year for amortization of emergency facilities under section 124 of the Internal Revenue Code in excess of 20 per centum of the cost of such facilities, of such carrier, or, on a joint or consolidated basis, of the carriers in the system of which such carrier is a part, or of such carrier and other carriers, directly or indirectly controlled by it, through direct or indirect ownership of at least a majority of their stock, is at least equal to the reported total fixed charges (other than charges on intercompany obligations) of such carrier or carriers for such period.

"(2) Carriers to which paragraph (1) of this section is applicable shall institute proceedings and file application under section 1 of this Act as expeditiously as practicable but in no event later than eighteen months after the effective date of this Act, or such longer period as the Commission, on application, may approve.

"(3) The properties of any carrier specified in paragraph (1) of this section shall continue in the custody of the United States courts having custody of them; except that, the following portions of said section 77 shall not be applicable in any such case:

"(a) The first two paragraphs of subsection (b).

"(b) Subdivision (1) of subsection (c).

"(c) The first five sentences, and the first seven words and the last twenty-two words of the sixth sentence, of subdivision (2) of subsection (c): Provided, That for the purposes of this section there shall be substituted for the said last twenty-two words of said sixth sentence, the words 'custody and supervision of the judge'.

"(d) Subsections (d), (e), (f), and (k). In addition to the foregoing exceptions and for the same purpose of applying to such carriers in the cases in which and during the period for which such custody is held under said section 77, and pending the consummation of proceedings under section 1 of this Act, the word 'debtor' shall be substituted for the words 'trustee or trustees' wherever such latter words occur in subdivisions (3), (5), (9), and (10) of subsection (c), and subsections (i) and (o), of said section 77. The provisions of subsection (12) of subsection (c) of said section 77 shall be applicable to proceedings under this Act. The final determination heretofore or hereafter made in the United States courts with respect to the relative priorities as between the respective classes of security holders, the subordination of the interest of a creditor or security holder of the debtor to the interest of other creditors or security holders, or the validity, amount and priority of any claim shall continue in full force and effect. Nothing contained in this Act is intended or shall be construed to modify or rescind any such determination or to prevent or delay the prosecution to final determination of any such issue now pending, and not yet finally determined, in the United States courts. Nothing in this Act shall be deemed to limit, qualify or restrict the right of the debtor (which right of the debtor is hereby confirmed), with the approval of the court (a) to purchase in whole or in part any bond issues or other obligations of the debtor (including bonds or other obligations guaranteed or assumed by the debtor), at a discount or otherwise, provided that the court's approval of the debtor's purchase of any such obligations junior in lien to first lien mortgage bonds shall be granted only if the court finds, after hearing, that such purchase will be for the best interests of the estate of the carrier and will not deprive the holders of obligations senior in lien to the obligations proposed to be purchased, of adequate security and protection; (b) to hold or to retire and cancel any of its bonds or other obligations now held or hereafter acquired by the debtor; and (c) to make voluntary agreements or compromises with any creditor or creditors as to either principal or interest of his or their claims or the security therefor, provided that the court shall find, after hearing, that any such agreement or compromise will be in the best interests of the estate of the carrier and will not unjustly or inequitably affect the claims or security of other creditors.

"(4) The proceedings with respect to any such carrier specified in paragraph (1) of this section under section 77 of the Bankruptcy Act shall be dismissed upon consummation of proceedings affecting such carrier under section 1 of this Act, or upon payment of its matured, unpaid obligations, or the making of other arrangements with reference to such obligations satisfactory to the owners of the claims therefor; and such proceedings may be dismissed under the conditions and in the manner prescribed in subsection (g) of section 77 of the Bankruptcy Act: Provided, That in the event there has been a determination by the United States courts with respect to subordination of any claim, or the issue thereon has not been finally determined, the determination of that one issue, and only that issue, shall be continued and prosecuted to completion and shall be binding on the security holders of such company; but such continuance of the determination of that sole issue shall not delay the dismissal of the proceedings in any and every other respect.

"(5) The appointment, term of office, powers, authority, compensation and fees of each trustee appointed by the court, and of each counsel of such trustee, shall be terminated on or before sixty days after the effective date of this Act: Provided, That if the board of directors of the carrier shall have been elected, pursuant to the provisions of paragraph (11) of this section, prior to the expiration of the afore-mentioned sixty-day period, the appointment, term of office, powers, authority, compensation and fees of such trustees and counsel shall be terminated forthwith.

"(6) The provisions of this section shall not apply if at the time of filing the petition for reorganization under section 77 of the Bankruptcy Act as amended, more than 95 percent of the outstanding voting stock of the debtor railroad corporation shall have been owned or controlled, directly or indirectly, by voting trust or otherwise, by another railroad corporation not a debtor in the same proceeding under the said section 77 with the said debtor and/or by a corporation owning or controlling more than 95 percent of the outstanding voting stock of another railroad corporation; provided also, that this section shall not apply to a railroad corporation if (1) all of its stock is owned directly or indirectly by an operating railroad corporation, (2) both corporations are in the same proceeding under the said section 77, and (3) pursuant to the provisions in this paragraph, this section does not apply to the said operating railroad corporation which owns all of the stock of the said controlled railroad corporation. The term 'corporation' as used in this paragraph shall be deemed to include its trustees appointed under the aforesaid section 77 of the Bankruptcy Act.

"(7) If the United States of America, or any agency thereof, or any corporation (other than the Reconstruction Finance Corporation) the majority of the stock of which is owned by the United States of America, is a creditor or stockholder of any such carrier, the President of the United States or any officer or agency he may designate, is hereby authorized to act in respect of the interest or claims of the United States or of such agency or other corporation.

"(8) The Commission shall designate one or more qualified members of its staff to serve as mediator or mediators in each of the proceedings under section 1 with respect to carriers specified under paragraph (1) of this section for the purpose of bringing the different classes of creditors and other security holders together, of being available to advise with them, of assisting in the effectuation of changes, compromises, arrangements, negotiations, and dealings with the various classes of creditors and other security holders and with individuals, groups, and committees representing creditors or other security holders, of assisting in expediting all stages of the proceedings and the early termination and the consummation of all transactions hereunder, including all steps requisite for the effectuation thereof.

"(9) In proceedings under section 1 with respect to a carrier specified in paragraph (1) of this section the Commission shall have the power, in its discretion, to submit to holders of obligations, any proposed alteration or modification affecting them which the Commission has caused the carrier to submit to such holders under the provisions of the fourth sentence of paragraph (2) of section 1 hereof; in the event that it is satisfied that such alteration or modification has been accepted by or on behalf of creditors of each class to which submission is required under section 1 holding more than two-thirds in amount of the total of the allowed claims of such class which have voted on said alteration or modification, the Commission shall enter an order approving and authorizing the proposed alteration or modification as provided in said paragraph (2) of section 1 hereof: Provided, That it shall enter such order in any case in which such alteration or modification has not been so accepted by the creditors of any class or classes if it finds, after hearing, that the alteration or modification makes adequate provision for fair and equitable treatment for the claims of those rejecting it; that such rejection is not reasonably justified in the light of the respective rights and interests of those rejecting them and all the relevant facts; and that the alteration or modification is fair and equitable, affords due recognition to the rights of each class of creditors and stockholders, and will conform to the requirements of the law of the land.

"(10) If after having submitted a proposed alteration or modification to holders of affected obligations as provided in paragraph (9), the Commission shall not have entered an order approving and authorizing such proposed alteration or modification within a period of twelve months following the date of the filing of an application in accordance with paragraph (2) of this section, or such extended periods as the Commission on application therefor may approve, then the Commission, after hearings, shall formulate and submit to holders of affected obligations such alteration or modification as in its opinion meets the standards set forth in section 1 above; in applying such standards of section 1 for the purpose of any such alteration or modification under this paragraph, the Commission shall give full effect to all changes, facts, and developments since 1940, including, without limitation, for such period total railway operating revenues, operating expenses and other charges, net earnings, the full effect of amortization deductions on earnings of past and future years, improvements to the property, the effect of the released collateral through past or future payment of loans, cash and net current assets, retirements and purchases of debt, including retirements and purchases at a discount that have been made or that can reasonably be made, adjustment and reduction of interest rates on outstanding debt that may be made including the adjustment and reduction of interest rates for prior years. In the event the Commission is satisfied that such alteration or modification has been accepted by the percentages required for acceptance under the provisions of section 1 or of paragraph (9) of this section it shall enter an order approving and authorizing such alteration or modification, unless it finds that, prior to the entry of such order, the alteration or modification submitted under paragraph (9) has been accepted by the percentages required by the provisions of that paragraph or of section 1, in which event it shall enter an order approving and authorizing such alteration or modification submitted under paragraph (9).

"(11) (a) Every carrier to which paragraph (1) of this section is applicable shall call a meeting of stockholders for the election of directors to be held within sixty days after the effective date of this Act. The present terms of office of all directors and officers of such carrier shall terminate upon the election and qualification of their successors, as herein provided, notwithstanding any provision of the charter or by-laws of such carrier or of any State law to the contrary. The terms of office of all directors elected at such meeting shall be the unexpired terms of present directors.

"(b) No holding company, individual, group, partnership, association, corporation, or other entity (excluding any operating common carrier subject to Part I of the Interstate Commerce Act, but not excluding any holding company or other nonoperating corporation which has been held or which may be held to be a common carrier within the meaning of said Act)—

"(A) which exercises direct or indirect control of one or more railroad corporations the properties of which are not in the custody of a court in proceedings under section 77 of the Bankruptcy Act; and shall, during the period the debtor shall be in possession of its properties and in control of the management and operation thereof under this Act, vote such shares for the election of more than a minority of the directors of any railroad corporation to which this Act is applicable.

"(B) which also owns shares of voting stock of any railroad corporation to which this Act is applicable, in sufficient number to enable the owner thereof to control such carrier,

"(c) No stock of any common carrier to which paragraph (1) of this section is applicable, which stock is owned or controlled directly or indirectly by, or held for the benefit of, or pledged as security by, any other common carrier to which paragraph (1) of this section is applicable, shall be voted for the election of directors during the proceedings under this Act, unless at the time of filing the petition for reorganization under section 77 of the Bankruptcy Act as amended, the transaction or transactions by which such stock was acquired, and the ownership and control of such stock, had been approved by the Interstate Commerce Commission pursuant to the applicable provisions of section 5 of the Interstate Commerce Act, as amended or unless the two carriers are debtors in the same proceeding under section 77 of the Bankruptcy Act, as amended.

"(d) In the determination of whether a quorum is represented in attendance at any meeting of stockholders of any carrier to which paragraph (1) of this section is applicable, held during the pendency of proceedings under this Act, for the election of directors or for other purposes, all voting stock standing in the name of, or held for the benefit of or pledged or assigned by, or directly or indirectly controlled by, any carrier, holding company, individual, corporation or other entity to which subparagraph (b) or (c) of this paragraph (11) is applicable, which voting stock may be not represented at said meeting shall nevertheless be considered and counted as being represented in attendance at such meeting, notwithstanding any provision of the charter or by-laws of such carrier or the provision of any State law to the contrary.

"(12) Any party having properly filed an application under section 5 of the Interstate Commerce Act to control, or participate in the control of, a carrier to which section 2 of this Act applies, is hereby authorized to intervene generally in and become a party to the proceedings under this Act affecting such carrier.

"(13) No readjustment of financial structure or other proceeding under this Act and no order of the court or Commission in connection therewith shall relieve any carrier from the obligation of any final judgment of any Federal or State court rendered prior to January 1, 1929, against such carrier or against one of its predecessors in title, requiring the maintenance of offices, shops, and roundhouses at any place, where such judgment was rendered on account of the making of a valid contract or contracts by such carrier or one of its predecessors in title.

"(14) In judicial review of any order of the Commission approving or authorizing a proposed alteration or modification entered pursuant to the authority of paragraph (10) of this section 2, the court (and any court on review thereof) shall not be concluded by any determination or finding made by the Commission as to matters either of law or of facts, and the court shall make full and independent reexamination and review of the issues and of the evidence and thereafter shall arrive at a decision in the exercise of its independent judgment based upon such judicial reexamination and review. Any order of the Circuit Court of Appeals relating to any alteration or modification under paragraph (10) of this section 2 shall be reviewed by the Supreme Court of the United States upon appeal made by any person affected by the plan who deems himself aggrieved within sixty days after the entry of such order or decree, pursuant to the applicable provisions of the Judicial Code.

"(15) In the case of any carrier which is under the jurisdiction of the United States Courts on the effective date of this Act, and to which the provisions of paragraph (1) of section 2 of this Act would be applicable if such carrier were in the custody of such courts on such date, and with respect to which carrier, securities under a plan of reorganization approved by the court and Commission had already been issued, a holder of a security of any class which rejected, or was not entitled to vote on, such plan in accordance with subsection (e) of said section 77, may, within ninety days after the date of enactment of this Act, apply to the Commission for amendment of the plan to the extent necessary to permit the issuance, to holders of securities of such class, of options or warrants as described in subsection (b) of said section 77. If the Commission shall find after hearings that the proceeds of the exercise of such options or warrants will be applied in conformance with the requirements of section 20 (a) of the Interstate Commerce Act (including, without limitation, the application of such proceeds to the retirement of outstanding obligations of the carrier), it shall approve such application and shall order the carrier to issue such options or warrants.

"SEC. 3. The provisions of sections 1801, 1802, 3481, and 3482 of the Internal Revenue Code and any amendments thereto, unless specifically providing to the contrary, shall not apply to the issuance, transfer, or exchange of securities or the making or delivery of conveyances to make effective any alteration or modification effected pursuant to section 1 or section 2 of this Act. No income, gain, or profit taxable under any law of the United States or of any State, now in force, or hereafter enacted, shall be deemed to have accrued to or have been realized by such carrier by reason of such an alteration or modification, or by reason of any transaction authorized in the last sentence of paragraph (3) of section 2.

"SEC. 4. If any provisions of this Act, or the application thereof to any person or circumstances, is held invalid, the remainder of this Act and the application of such provision to other persons or circumstances, shall not be affected thereby."

And the House agree to the same.

Amend the title so as to read: "An Act to enable debtor railroad corporations, whose properties during a period of seven years have provided sufficient earnings to pay fixed charges, to effect a readjustment of their financial structures; to alter or modify their financial obligations; and for other purposes."

B. K. WHEELER,
ED C. JOHNSON,
CLYDE REED,
Managers on the Part of the Senate.

HATTON W. SUMNERS,
SAM HOBBS,
MARTIN GORSKI,
CHAUNCEY W. REED,
JOHN W. GWYNNE,
Managers on the Part of the House.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the report.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I understand that two different bills were passed, one by the Senate and one by the House. I am interested in knowing what the final provision is to be.

Mr. WHEELER. Frankly, Mr. President, the final provision is practically the Senate bill, with the addition of a few clarifications by the House. The Senate bill left out the Denver & Rio Grande Western Railroad, which the House bill had included. The House bill and the Senate bill provided basically the same procedure.

Let me make a brief explanation of the conference report.

As to the Florida East Coast Railroad, it is not included under the terms of the conference report. The Interstate Commerce Commission advised that this railroad was in the group which should be omitted.

Nobody appeared to testify before the Senate Interstate Commerce Committee, to ask that Florida East Coast be included. The committee print of the bill was publicly distributed for a month before the hearings closed.

The House conferees accepted the ICC recommendation.

The Senate passed the bill on June 15, omitting this road.

As to the Chicago, Milwaukee, St. Paul & Pacific Railroad, the House bill, as passed by the House, included this road; the Senate bill did not. The road is now included in the conference agreement, but to a very limited extent. Section 2, paragraph (15), simply gives the ICC additional authority, which it does not now possess, to correct any injustice which may have been done to stockholders and bondholders who were wiped out in that reorganization. The Commission is given authority, in its discretion, to issue warrants to them to buy some stock from the reorganized company. They can buy them on the stock market anyway, so it is not clear that this provision will help them very much. But under the bill the securities already distributed under the reorganization plan are not disturbed, and the transfer of the railroad to the reorganized company is not disturbed.

As to the Denver & Rio Grande & Western Railroad, the Senate passed an amendment on this subject, which is now clarified.

The Senate and House bills provided basically the same procedure for section 1. The House bill proposed the reenactment of chapter XV of the Bankruptcy Act, which is the McLaughlin or Chandler Act. The Senate bill uses the procedure drafted by the ICC, which is generally regarded as an improvement of the chapter XV procedure. The House conferees accepted the ICC procedure, as it appears in the bill passed by the Senate.

The House conferees proposed four clarifying or minor amendments, which were accepted by the Senate conferees, as follows:

As to paragraph (2) of section 1, the report omits one procedural step which would have slowed up the reorganization, clarifies the meaning of the words "terms and conditions" and "amendments", as used in the bill, and omits the sentence about circulars sent to security holders. That is omitted, as surplusage, for the matter is covered in general by the other provisions.

As to paragraph (9) of section 1, the report includes clarifying words suggested by the ICC and the SEC.

As to section 2, paragraph (1), the Senate bill restricted its application to roads on a gross revenue basis, as suggested by the ICC. The House bill restricted it on the basis of net income for 7 years. Both restrictions are in the conference bill.

The Senate bill covers only railroads whose properties are in court custody; the House bill omits the court custody provision.

The conference report accepts the Senate bill's limitation, except that paragraph (15) of section 2 provides a very limited relief for other cases included in the bill passed by the House.

Paragraph (2) of section 2: The Senate bill provided for a period of 6 months, or such longer period as granted by the ICC. The House bill provided 18 months. The conference report accepts the 18 months provision.

Paragraph (3) of section 2: Some clarifying language was suggested by the House, and is included in the conference report, especially the reference to retirement of debt through purchase or voluntary arrangement with creditors.

Paragraph (4) of section 2: Clarifying and limiting language is added, at request of House conferees, for the completion of proceedings already begun to subordinate claims to other claims, if found necessary by the court in accordance with established legal principles.

Paragraph (5) of section 2: The Senate and House bills removed trustees and trustees' counsel. The conference report retains this, but eliminates the provision in the Senate bill permitting the retention of trustees in other capacities.

The Senate bill provided that trustees and their counsel cease in 30 days; the conference report extends the period, in some circumstances, to 60 days.

Paragraph (6) of section 2: This is the same as paragraph (11) of the bill as passed by the Senate, except for clarifying and limiting language.

Paragraphs (7) and (8) of section 2 of the report are the same as in bill passed by Senate.

Paragraph (9) of section 2 of the report is the same as in bill passed by Senate (paragraph (8) in that bill), except for clarifying limitations with respect to Commission's power to authorize a reorganization plan, even if required percentages of approval have not been received. The amendment adds further conditions to the exercise of such power, making it in this respect more like the language in the present section 77 of the Bankruptcy Act.

Paragraph (10) of section 2 of the report is the same as paragraph (9) of bill as passed by Senate, except that at the request of House conferees, the authority to force acceptance of a plan issued by the ICC is limited.

Paragraph (11) of section 2: That is in effect a limitation on paragraph (5) of the bill as it passed the Senate, and is now included in the conference report. It is also a substitution for the language of paragraph (5), which was dropped out in conference. This paragraph, by removing the trustees, in effect turns the properties over to the boards of directors. In the Senate bill this was hedged by the provision permitting the court to require the retention of the trustees in a managerial or other capacity. The latter limitation has now been removed, but in its place the conference report provides that there must be a prompt election of a new board of directors, within the time period when the trustees continue in office. In the same respect the new language, paragraph (11), is a limitation on paragraph (3) of section 2, which also removes control by trustees, and authorizes a return, to the debtor, of the property, subject to court control.

Paragraph (12) of section 2 of the report is a limitation or requirement, as proposed by the House conferees, on the proceedings before the ICC under the Senate bill. This limitation entitles other carriers to intervene in those proceedings under certain conditions, so as to have an opportunity to present their views on reorganizations under consideration.

Paragraph (13) of section 2: This is taken from the House bill. It requires that reorganization plans shall not interfere with contracts requiring the maintenance of shops, under certain conditions.

Paragraph (14) of section 2: This deals with judicial review of Commission reorganization plans prepared under this bill. It is in substance drawn from the House bill, as reported by the House Judiciary Committee, plus an adaptation of an amendment offered on the floor of the House.

Paragraph (15) of section 2: This brings under the bill carriers whose properties are no longer in court custody, but the carriers themselves are still in the jurisdiction of the court on the effective date of this act. It authorizes the ICC to issue warrants or options to security holders wiped out under the reorganization plan.

Section 3: This contains the customary provisions to exempt from profits taxation the exchange of reorganization securities, which do not constitute any actual profit at all. It also deals similarly with the retirement or cancellation of debt. In general, it follows the wording of the provision in the House bill, but more specifically limits it to the exact and specific type of readjustment provided in this bill.

Section 4 is the same as in bill passed by Senate.

The first clause of the title is from the House bill; the other two clauses are from the Senate bill.

Mr. President, I wish to emphasize that the Senate managers are in complete agreement with the statement of the House managers on the subject of judicial review, including their statement concerning the review provisions of chapter XV.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. WHITE. What became of the Senate provision with respect to the Denver & Rio Grande Western Railroad? Is that out?

Mr. WHEELER. That is out. The Senate put it in, but the conference report leaves it out.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. President, I should like to propound a question to the Senator from Colorado [Mr. JOHNSON] about the Denver & Rio Grande Western Railroad. Does section 2, paragraph (6), except the Denver & Rio Grande Western system from the operation of this legislation?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. It does.

Mr. MURDOCK. What was the reason for excepting the Denver & Rio Grande Western Railroad from the operation of the measure?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. The conferees decided that there were many good reasons for excepting the D. & R. G. W. from the provisions of this legislation. Among other things, its plan of reorganization has already been approved in an opinion handed down by the United States Supreme Court. No other plan in the other pending section 77 cases has been so approved. As another reason, the plan of reorganization of the D. & R. G. W. Railroad, which has been so approved by the Supreme Court of the United States, provides for a consolidation of the Denver & Salt Lake Railroad with the Denver & Rio Grande Railroad, the stock of which the Denver & Rio Grande acquired at a large expenditure many years ago. The plan of reorganization likewise protects the Denver & Rio Grande Railroad's obligation in connection with the construction of the $17,000,000 Moffat tunnel. Large obligations are still outstanding in payment of this construction. Denver County and other counties adjacent to the tunnel are footing the bill, along with the railroad. If this contract between the railroad and the tunnel district is disturbed—as it might be if the Rio Grande is not excepted from the provisions of this bill—it might be necessary to increase the tax rate in the respective counties that obligated themselves to build the 6-mile Moffat tunnel. Paragraph 6 of this section makes possible the prompt carrying out of the consolidation of all the properties of the Denver & Rio Grande Western system, a consolidation which is in the interest of all the people of Colorado.

I may say further that while this provision does take the Denver, Rio Grande & Western Railroad out, it likewise takes out any other railroad which falls under the provisions of this section.

Mr. MURDOCK. That was my information, and I am glad to have that assurance from the Senator from Colorado.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the report.

The report was agreed to.

Mr. MOORE subsequently said: Mr. President, while I was out of the Chamber the conference report on Senate bill S. 1253, the railroad reorganization bill, was acted on, I did not intend to detain the Senate by speaking on the conference report, but I wanted to have placed in the RECORD an explanation of the reason why I opposed the report and declined to sign the conference report. I have set forth my views in a letter which I have addressed to those who favor the measure, and I ask that it be printed in the RECORD following the action on the conference report.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

I have your communication requesting that I support the so-called Wheeler bill (S. 1253) which establishes a procedure for the reorganization of certain railroads. So many letters and telegrams such as yours have been received concerning this legislation that it has been necessary to prepare a form letter in answering them.

It is assumed that your request is made in the belief that it will help put the railroads in a more secure financial position and result in better service to their respective territories and the shippers.

Some form of this bill has been pending in Congress for many months. A similar proposal was originally introduced by Congressman HOBBS (H. R. 37). The bill passed the House and came to the Senate, where hearings were conducted by the Interstate Commerce Committee, but no agreement was reached. Thereafter, S. 1253 was introduced by Senators WHEELER and REED. At about the same time a similar bill was introduced by Representative REED in the House. Long and extensive hearings were conducted. It soon became apparent to me that the bill was discriminatory in that it would result in preferential treatment of special groups and operate as a taking of property from others without due process of law.

At the conclusion of the hearings, a committee substitute bill was reported. The terms of the committee bill are essentially the same as the Wheeler-Reed bill originally introduced in the Senate.

The bill would take from the courts all bankruptcy or receivership proceedings with respect to railroads doing a gross business of more than $50,000,000 per annum for any of the calendar years 1942 to 1944, except the Denver & Rio Grande Western Railroad. The only reason this one carrier, which would otherwise have been included, was exempt was to satisfy certain sources of opposition. There is no more basis on which to exempt this road from the bill than any other of the eight roads affected.

Taking the pending proceedings from the judiciary and transferring them to an administrative body which, under the law, will be vested with judicial powers, is a dangerous precedent. Commissioner Mahaffie of the Interstate Commerce Commission has pointed out the danger of such move. His statement was supported by four other members of the Commission.

Many of the roads affected have practically completed their reorganization plans. In the case of the Frisco, I understand 98 per cent of the security holders have agreed to the plan and judicial approval may be had at an early date. Passage of this bill would mean that these proceedings would necessarily be rehashed by the commission. The delay in getting these roads out of receivership or out of bankruptcy would necessarily entail great additional expense to the detriment of the roads and the general public.

The bill provides that the securities of the road affected may be altered, changed, or adjusted, if owners of two-thirds of the securities agree and the Commission approves. This means one-third of the security holders will be bound by the opinion of two-thirds. This rule of law, insofar as public improvements are concerned, has been sustained by the courts. In cases involving paving, sidewalks, sewers, etc., agreement of two-thirds of the property owners affected has been held sufficient to bind the other one-third. I have been unable, however, to find any case in which this rule has been applied to the ownership of private property such as a railroad bond. On the contrary, the Supreme Court has in two cases held that the approval of a reorganization plan by a majority is not necessarily a measure of what is "fair and equitable."

Personally, I feel it is extremely unsound legislation and possibly violative of the Constitution to require one-third, or any other proportion, of railroad security holders to accept a reorganization plan that might destoy their property rights. The owner or owners of the two-thirds might for various reasons be helped by the plan. It should be remembered that these security holders loaned their money to the stockholders in good faith and were given a lien on the properties by the owners to secure the loan. In many cases, the reduction of the principal amount of the securities and an adjustment of the interest rate would reinvest the debtor stockholders with the full value of their stock at the expense of the creditors. I cannot see the efficacy of the Government establishing such policy by law. It is a taking from one group for the benefit of another. In some cases, two-thirds of the securities are held by small groups of large investors, whereas the one-third is widely distributed in the hands of the public. The owners of the two-thirds may very well, because of an option to purchase all the new securities or other promised benefits, agree to a plan that will be beneficial to them but extremely detrimental to the one-third. It might be the owners of the two-thirds securities have acquired the previously worthless stock at very low cost. You can readily understand why, in these cases, holders of two-thirds of the securities would strongly favor a reduction of the principal debt and a readjustment of the interest. The evidence produced before the committee indicates that this situation actually exists with respect to some of the railroads affected.

Railroad securities have been the backbone of insurance company investments and constitute in a large measure the security behind our individual insurance policies. Endowment funds have been invested in many railroad securities. Many colleges, universities, scientific foundations, and eleemosynary institutions are dependent upon these investments. A law which would permit or encourage jockeying between holders of two-thirds of these securities and stockholders, which might be the same interest, to alter or change existing obligations on which third parties have relied in good faith, would not be in the public interest. No one knows what influence such bill might have on the marketing of future railroad securities.

I realize, of course, that the legislation would greatly benefit the management of some roads and some groups of investors. Both groups have appealed to their customers and friends to support the pending bill. I also realize that many abuses have occurred under the Bankruptcy Act and under receivership proceedings. Exorbitant and unreasonable fees in some cases have been granted to political friends. The way to remedy these evils, however, is not to pass bad legislation.

I feel confident that if you will take the time to further analyze the proposed bill and its implications, you will be hesitant to urge its enactment.

With kind regards, I beg to remain,

Yours very truly,

E. H. MOORE.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Swanson, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 1253) to enable debtor railroad corporations expeditiously to effectuate reorganizations of their financial structures; to alter or modify their financial obligations; and for other purposes.

THE CALENDAR

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the order previously entered, the clerk will proceed to state the measures on the calendar, beginning with Order No. 1908.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

RAYMOND CROSBY

The bill (H. R 1633) for the relief of Raymond Crosby was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ARRESTS AND SEARCHES BY EMPLOYEES OF IMMIGRATION AND NATURALIZATION SERVICE

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, on the previous call of the calendar, objection was entered to the consideration of House bill 386, Calendar No. 635. I made a statement in regard to the bill when it was reached during the call of the calendar. But there was a doubt in the minds of some Senators in regard to the bill.

I have discussed this matter with the Senators involved, and I think there is now no objection to it. Therefore, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. REVERCOMB. Mr. President, this bill deals with the right of search, by the officers and employees of the Immigration and Naturalization Service, of vessels and aircraft within the waters adjacent to the United States; and its purpose is to permit the enforcement of the immigration laws, so as to prevent aliens from unlawfully entering the United States. I am utterly in sympathy with the purpose of the bill.

During the previous call of the calendar objection was made because I thought the right of search provided by the bill was too broad. I am inclined to think so, today. However, I am advised that enactment of this bill is absolutely necessary for the proper enforcement of the immigration laws. For that reason—and expressing at the same time the hope that the measure may later be improved by amendment—I am withdrawing my objection to consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be read by title, for the information of the Senate.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (H. R. 386) to amend the law relating to the authority of certain employees of the Immigration and Naturalization Service to make arrests without warrant in certain cases and to search vehicles within certain areas.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request for present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MRS. GRACE A. PHILLIPS

The bill (H. R. 5849) for the relief of Mrs. Grace A. Phillips was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOSEPH A. BROWN

The bill (H. R. 4924) for the relief of Joseph A. Brown was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

THOMAS A. BEDDINGFIELD AND WIFE

The bill (H. R. 6255) for the relief of Thomas A. Beddingfield and his wife, Opal May Beddingfield, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CLYDE O. PAYNE

The bill (H. R. 3210) for the relief of Clyde O. Payne was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LEGAL GUARDIAN OF ROBERT OLSEN, A MINOR

The Senate proceeded to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 1004) for the relief of the legal guardian of Robert Olsen, a minor.

Mr. O'DANIEL. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk and ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 1, in line 4, after the word "pay", it is proposed to insert:

, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated,

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Texas.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the next measure on the calendar.

MRS. MILLICENT MOORE

The bill (H. R. 5848) for the relief of Mrs. Millicent Moore was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARTIN A. TUCKER AND EMMA M. TUCKER

The bill (H. R. 3855) for the relief of Martin A. Tucker and Emma M. Tucker was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RUDOLPH K. BARTELS, JR.

The bill (H. R. 4374) for the relief of the legal guardian of Rudolph K. Bartels, Jr., a minor, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WATSON AIRFOTOS, INC.

The bill (H. R. 5847) for the relief of Watson Airfotos, Inc., was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DISPOSITION OF PROCEEDS OF COINS COMMEMORATING TWO HUNDRED AND FIFTIETH ANNIVERSARY OF ALBANY

The bill (S. 2332) to provide that the unexpended proceeds from the sale of 50-cent pieces coined in commemoration of the two hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the founding of the city of Albany, N. Y., may be paid into the general fund of such city was announced as next in order.

Mr. REVERCOMB. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of the bill? It seems to apply to the sale of commemorative coins.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, the act of June 16, 1936, authorized the coinage of not to exceed 25,000 silver 50-cent pieces within a period of 1 year from that date. The coins were to be issued only upon request of a committee duly authorized by the Mayor of the city of Albany, N. Y., upon payment of the par value of such coins, and were to be disposed of at par or at a premium by said committee, the net proceeds being used to defray the expenses incidental and appropriate to the commemoration of the 250th anniversary of the city. There is about $4,000 involved which is unexpended and is to be transferred to the treasury of the city of Albany, N. Y.

Mr. REVERCOMB. Were the coins issued under an arrangement which would permit a committee in the city of Albany to sell them at par or above par?

Mr. WAGNER. I am sorry, Mr. President, but I did not hear the Senator.

Mr. REVERCOMB. I ask the Senator from New York by what plan, or arrangement were the 50-cent pieces to be issued and permission granted to the city of Albany to sell them at par or above?

Mr. WAGNER. The authority for doing that was granted by the Congress.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WAGNER. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. Senate bill 2332 is one of the commemorative coin bills of which Congress has passed several in the last 10 years. Under the authority which was granted by Congress in connection with this matter, the city of Albany bought, as I understand, a quantity of 50-cent pieces for 50 cents each. They were then sold by the city of Albany for $1 each, we will say, and the profit so realized was intended by the original act to be used in defraying the expenses of the celebration of the two hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the founding of the city of Albany. I assume that the expenses were paid and that $4,000 remains unused. Am I correct?

Mr. WAGNER. The Senator is correct.

Mr. TAFT. The United States Government has been paid for the 50-cent pieces which the city of Albany bought at their face value of 50 cents each. The only question now is whether the $4,000 which remains unused is to be turned over to the United States Government or to the city of Albany.

Mr. WAGNER. That is the problem for the Congress to decide.

Mr. REVERCOMB. Mr. President, the situation which has been explained is now clear to me. The Federal Government has received its full pay for the face value of the coins.

Mr. WAGNER. Yes.

Mr. REVERCOMB. I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill (S. 2332) was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 2 of the act entitled "An act to authorize the coinage of 50-cent pieces in commemoration of the two hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the founding of the city of Albany, N. Y.," approved June 16, 1936, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following: "Any unexpended proceeds may be paid by such committee to the city of Albany, N. Y., for deposit in the general fund of such city."

CONVEYANCE OF PROPERTY TO ROY C. LAMMERS

The bill (H. R. 5128) to provide for the conveyance of certain real property to Roy C. Lammers, was announced as next in order.

Mr. CORDON. Mr. President, before the bill is considered I wish to inquire of the Senator from Idaho whether the property described in the bill, and authorized by the bill to be conveyed by Roy C. Lammers, and which, according to the bill, was turned over to the United States by Lammers for use as a Civilian Conservation Corps camp, was sold originally by Lammers to the Government, or donated to the Government?

Mr. TAYLOR. It was donated to the Government. Lammers gave the ground to the Government for the purpose of building a CCC camp there with the understanding that when the camp was abandoned the Government would give the land back to Lammers. However, the authorities handling the matter did not provide for the transaction in that way in the contract, and the Federal Department has no authority to give back the land to Lammers. The Department has asked for this bill. The CCC camp has been moved away and the Government desires to give back to the owner the land on which the CCC camp was located.

Mr. CORDON. Mr. President, I find no committee report on the bill. Therefore, no information has been made available to me with regard to the matter. I understand, however, that the land was a donation in the first instance by Lammers to the Government, and that it is now desired to donate the land back to the owner.

Mr. TAYLOR. Yes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill (H. R. 5128) to provide for the conveyance of certain real property to Roy C. Lammers, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CUMBERLAND RIVER BRIDGE AT BURKESVILLE, KY.

The bill (H. R. 7046) to revive and reenact the act entitled "An act granting the consent of Congress to the State Highway Commission, Commonwealth of Kentucky to construct, maintain, and operate a toll bridge across the Cumberland River at or near Burkesville, Cumberland County, Ky.," approved May 18, 1928, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DEDICATION DAY

The joint resolution (H. J. Res. 35) designating November 19, 1946, the anniversary of Lincoln's Gettysburg Address, as Dedication Day, was considered, ordered to third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOINT COMMITTEE TO STUDY AND RECOMMEND LABOR RELATIONS LEGISLATION

The concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 148) creating a joint select committee to study and recommend legislation concerning labor relations, was announced as next in order.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I believe the matter involved in this concurrent resolution is subject to controversy, and I doubt whether it should be considered on the call of the calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is heard. The concurrent resolution will be passed over.

LEASING OF INDIAN LANDS

The bill (H. R. 2586) to authorize the leasing of Indian lands for business, and other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. CORDON. Mr. President, I ask that the bill be passed over. I have not had an opportunity to study it completely. It may be that later I shall withdraw my objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. CORDON subsequently said: Mr. President, I interposed temporarily an objection to Calendar No. 1951, House bill 2586. After considering the bill I have no objection, and I withdraw my objection to that bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 2586) to authorize the leasing of Indian lands for business, and other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with an amendment on page 1, line 6, after the word "lands", to insert "situated within the State of Washington."

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "An act to authorize the leasing of Indian lands situated within the State of Washington for business and other purposes."

REFUND OF TAXES ILLEGALLY PAID BY INDIANS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1439) to amend section 2 of the act of January 29, 1942 (56 Stat. 21) relating to the refund of taxes illegally paid by Indian citizens, which had been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with an amendment on page 2, line 20, after the words "so paid" to strike out "with" and insert "without", and on the same page in line 21, to strike out "at 6 percent from the date such taxes were paid" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 2 of the act of January 29, 1942 (56 Stat. 21), is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 2 That any person duly enrolled as a member of an Indian tribe who received in pursuance of a tribal treaty or agreement with the United States an allotment of land which, by the terms of said treaty or agreement was exempted from taxation, or restricted against alienation, or which by the terms of section 6 of the act of Congress of May 27, 1908 (35 Stat. 312), was in the manner therein provided continued under the supervision of probate attorneys of the United States as the representatives of the Secretary of the Interior during the minority of such allottee, and from which land the restrictions have or have not been removed, and any such enrolled member of an Indian tribe who prior to April 26, 1931, had restricted money in the custody or control of the United States, and who was required or permitted to pay any Federal income tax on such lands or on the rents, royalties, or other gains arising from such lands during such restricted or tax-exempt period or on income from such restricted funds while in the custody or control of the United States, or on income from any allotment during the minority of the allottee, or any such person who has been erroneously or illegally taxed by reason of not having claimed or received the benefit of any deductions or exemptions permitted by law, and who has filed a claim or claims for such refund at any time or times before January 29, 1944, shall be entitled to and shall be repaid such taxes so paid, without interest, notwithstanding any previous rejection by the Treasury Department of any such claim or claims for refund theretofore filed upon the same or similar ground and notwithstanding any decision of the Treasury Department or of any court, it not being the policy or intention of the Government to invoke or plead a statute of limitations or any other defense to escape the obligations of agreement solemnly entered into with its Indian wards, or prior to April 26, 1931, to exact for its own use and benefit an income tax from them while their property continued under the supervision of the United States or during the minority of any such allottee: Provided, however, That in the case of the death of any enrolled member of an Indian tribe any such taxes paid by him or on his account may in like manner be recovered by the person or persons who would have received such money had it constituted a part of his estate at the time of his death.

"That all acts and parts of acts in conflict herewith are modified for the purpose, and only for the purpose, of carrying into effect the provisions hereof."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CORDON. Mr. President, I should like to have an explanation of the bill, particularly inasmuch as it has been indicated that the taxes were illegally paid.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS] reported the bill, but he is not present in the Chamber.

Mr. CORDON. Mr. President, I object at this time to the bill. Perhaps after I receive satisfactory information I shall withdraw my objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be temporarily passed over.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma subsequently said: Mr. President, the last bill on the calendar, Senate bill 1439, was objected to by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CORDON]. I have discussed the matter with the Senator and he is now willing to withdraw his objection. The committee amendments have been agreed to. The bill simply provides for the repayment to Indians of income taxes illegally paid by them.

Mr. CORDON. Mr. President, I withdraw my objection to Senate 1439.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill (S. 1439) was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ADMISSION OF CERTAIN PERSONS TO MERCHANT MARINE ACADEMY

Mr. RADCLIFFE obtained the floor.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RADCLIFFE. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. I have four bills from the Committee on the Library. They are not controversial.

Mr. RADCLIFFE. Mr. President, before the Senator from Kentucky proceeds, I wish to state that on the call of the calendar the other day I was under the impression that Calendar No. 1763, House bill 1751, which was one of a series of bills I had reported to the Senate from the Commerce Committee, had been passed. I see that the bill is still on the calendar. I was definitely under the impression that it had been debated on the floor of the Senate and passed.

I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar No. 1763, House bill 1751.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be read by title for the information of the Senate.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (H. R. 1751) to authorize the course of instruction at the United States Merchant Marine Academy to be given to not exceeding 20 persons at a time from American Republics other than the United States.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill which had been reported from the Committee on Commerce with amendments on page 2, line 2, after the word "than", to strike out "three" and insert "two"; and on the same page, after line 15, to strike out:

SEC. 2. In conformity with the Executive order of February 7, 1942, No. 9054 (7 F. R. 837), the authority conferred upon the Chairman of the United States Maritime Commission by this act shall be vested in and exercised by the Administrator of the War Shipping Administration.

The amendments were agreed to.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "An act to authorize the course of instruction at the United States Merchant Marine Academy to be given to not exceeding 12 persons at a time from the American Republics, other than the United States."

AMENDMENT OF NATIONAL ARCHIVES ACT

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I have four bills from the Committee on the Library and I should like, one at a time, to ask for their present consideration. They have been favorably reported to the Senate. I send forward the first bill, and ask that it be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the bill by its title for the information of the Senate.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (H. R. 3243) to amend the act entitled "An act to establish a National Archives of the United States Government, and for other purposes."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I will explain the bill. It amends the act establishing the National Archives, and I think I can best explain it by reading a paragraph from a letter which I have received.

This bill passed the House in January. It has been pending in the Senate since then. The administrative secretary of the Archives has sent me the following letter in explaining what the bill would do. The letter reads as follows:

JANUARY 29, 1946.

Hon. ALBEN W. BARKLEY
United States Senate,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR BARKLEY: Because of the fact that you have always indicated an interest in legislation affecting the National Archives, and because of your willingness to get prompt action by the Senate Library Committee and the Senate on such legislation, I am again taking the liberty of enlisting your valuable assistance.

H. R. 3243, amending the National Archives Act, was recently passed by the House and has been referred to the Senate Library Committee. The primary purpose of this bill is (1) to protect the interest of the Government and the people of the United States by requiring the Archivist of the United States to impose such restrictions on the use of records in his custody as appears to him to be necessary or desirable to the public interest and (2) to facilitate the transfer to the custody of the Archivist of certain collections of permanently valuable records that are no longer needed in conducting the current business of agencies and that are occupying space urgently needed for other purposes. The bill also provides for restrictions placed on records in the custody of the Archivist by the heads of agencies from which they were transferred to remain in force and effect until modified or removed by joint agreement of the Archivist and the respective heads of agencies. Under the present law such restrictions remain in force and effect only during the tenure of office of the head of the agency by whom they were imposed. Some of the amendments in H. R. 3243 will be very helpful during the liquidation of some of the war emergency agencies. Many of those agencies, as well as the regular agencies of the Government, are anxious for H. R. 3243 to be enacted into law as promptly as possible.

The bill has been approved by the National Archives Council, of which you are a member, and so far as is known there is no objection to its enactment into law.

I assure you that anything you may do to expedite action on this bill by the Senate Library Committee and its passage by the Senate will be sincerely appreciated.

Should you desire any additional information about this bill, I will be delighted to do my best to supply it. A copy of the bill as it was referred to the Senate Library Committee and a copy of the House Library Committee's report thereon are enclosed for your information.

Sincerely yours,

THAD PAGE,
Administrative Secretary.

The bill provides in one respect that where restrictions have been placed by the head of an agency upon public documents placed in the Archives, such restrictions shall remain in force until they are modified by joint action of the Archivist and the head of the agency. Under the present law the restrictions remain in force only so long as the head of the agency which imposed them is in office, and when he goes out, the restrictions are lifted. The pending bill retains the restrictions until the Archivist and the head of the agency, whoever he may be, may agree upon lifting them or modifying them.

The bill otherwise undertakes to protect the public interest with respect to these documents which are placed in the custody of the Archivist, and it seems on the whole that the bill is in the interest of the public. It can do harm to nobody, apparently, and I hope it will be enacted.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HUFFMAN in the chair). The Senator will state it.

Mr. TAFT. Is this a request for unanimous consent to set aside the pending business temporarily?

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes.

Mr. CORDON. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, the Committee on the Library has had no opportunity to consider the proposed legislation. Although the bill, according to the majority leader, came to the Senate some time in January, I can understand that the distinguished majority leader, the chairman of that committee, has had his hands full, and I am not critical in calling attention to the fact that the committee has not had an opportunity to consider the bill and go into its merits. I merely state that as a fact, and by reason of that fact, I, as a member of the committee, have had no opportunity to consider the bill, or to make certain suggestions which I certainly would have made with reference to it.

I call attention to this language in the bill, which, as I view it, is objectionable—I read on page 1, line 10—

The Archivist shall impose such restrictions on the use or examination of records in his custody as appears to him to be necessary or desirable in the public interest.

Mr. President, that is absolute authority to the Archivist to close to public examination any record which may be delivered to the public Archivist, and which may and should be a public record, open to inspection and examination by the general public.

I call attention to the fact that the term is "such restrictions on the use or examination of records in his custody as appear to him to be necessary or desirable in the public interest."

I feel that the records of the United States Government, after they have served their purpose in the several departments and are delivered to the Archives, are public records, and should be open to public examination, except in extraordinary cases where the national security may dictate that they should not be public. If the bill had provided some method of determination of the necessity of protecting the national security, I should have had no objection to it.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I might say that under the National Archives Act the Archivist has the general authority to make regulations and impose restrictions upon the documents which are regarded as sufficiently important to become a part of the Archives of the American Nation. The National Archives Council participates in the deliberations with respect to these matters which are passed upon by the Archivist. There is nothing strange in this particular measure with reference to the particular records which are covered. There is nothing new in the fact that the Archivist would have the authority to make regulations with respect to the inspection of public documents placed under his custody.

I appreciate the Senator's reference to the Committee on the Library. It may be fortunate or unfortunate that I am chairman of that committee, and in the multiplicity of other things and other duties in other committees the Committee on the Library has not been very active, so far as formal meetings are concerned. I plead guilty to an unavoidable negligence in the matter of not calling the committee together more often.

Mr. CORDON. I have not filed the complaint or the indictment.

Mr. BARKLEY. The bill I am reporting is regarded by the Archivist and the National Archives Council, and by some of the agencies which have been consulted about it, as meritorious.

Mr. CORDON. Mr. President, I shall be compelled to make my objection at the moment. If I can have an opportunity to examine into the existing law, I may later withdraw the objection.

Mr. BARKLEY. I report the bill for the calendar. The Senator may look into it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be received and placed on the calendar.

NATIONAL COMMISSION ON INDIVIDUAL WAR MEMORIALS

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I report favorably from the Committee on the Library Senate Joint Resolution 158, and I ask unanimous consent that the pending business be temporarily laid aside, and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of this joint resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution will be stated by title.

The CHIEF CLERK. A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 158) to provide for the appointment of a National Commission on Individual War Memorials, and for other purposes.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, this measure simply provides for the appointment of a Commission on Individual War Memorials. It is to have no power of action. It is to investigate the question of policy, and will report back, so that there is no commitment involved in the mere appointment of the Commission.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 158) was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That there is hereby established a National Commission on Individual War Memorials to be composed of five members to be appointed by the President of the United States. The members of the Commission shall serve without compensation but traveling, subsistence, and other necessary expenses incurred by them in connection with the work of the Commission may be paid from any funds available for expenditure by the Commission. Such Commission is authorized and directed to prepare an adequate individual historical record of each man or woman who was killed in the military service during World War II. Such records shall be prepared as far as possible in cooperation with the family of the deceased, and placed in metal cases, for presentation to the next of kin of such man or woman as a means of expressing the appreciation of the American people and for the information of generations yet to come.

SEC. 2. The Commission is authorized (1) to appoint such advisory committees as it may deem necessary to advise and consult with it with respect to the composition of such individual memorials; (2) to include among the members of any committee or committees so appointed such representatives of the War Department, the Navy Department, Veterans' Administration, American Red Cross, and such other interested organization as it may deem advisable; and (3) to invite the newspapers of the United States to offer prizes for outstanding poems and pictures for use as memorial expressions in such individual memorials, and to arrange for the exhibition and publication of such materials.

SEC. 3. The Commission is authorized to make such expenditures (including expenditures for personal services and rent at the seat of government and elsewhere, and for printing and binding) as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this resolution.

SEC. 4. There are hereby authorized to be appropriated such sums as may equal the sum of $20 for each individual war memorial to be prepared under the direction of the Commission.

NATIONAL AIR MUSEUM

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, from the Committee on the Library I report favorably House bill 5144, to establish a national air museum, and for other purposes. I ask unanimous consent that the pending business be laid aside and that the Senate proceed to consider the bill.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I suggest that the bill be read, since it is not on the calendar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will read.

The Chief Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That (a) there is hereby established under the Smithsonian Institution a bureau to be known as a national air museum, which shall be administered by the Smithsonian Institution with the advice of a board to be composed of the Commanding General of the Army Air Forces, or his successor, the Chief of Naval Operations, or his successor, the Secretary of the Smithsonian Institution, and two citizens of the United States appointed by the President from civilian life who shall serve at the pleasure of the President. The members of the Board shall serve as such members without compensation.

(b) The Secretary of the Smithsonian Institution with the advice of the board may appoint and fix the compensation and duties of the head of a national air museum whose appointment and salary shall not be subject to the civil-service laws or the Classification Act of 1923, as amended. The Smithsonian Institution may employ such other officers and employees as may be necessary for the efficient operation and administration of the museum.

SEC. 2. Said national air museum shall memorialize the national development of aviation; collect, preserve, and display aeronautical equipment of historical interest and significance; serve as a repository for scientific equipment and data pertaining to the development of aviation and provide educational material for the historical study of aviation.

SEC. 3 The Secretary of the Smithsonian Institution with the advice of the advisory board is hereby directed to investigate and survey suitable lands and buildings for selection as a site for said national air museum and to make recommendations to Congress for the acquisition of suitable lands and buildings for said national air museum.

SEC. 4. (a) The board is authorized to adopt an official seal which shall be judicially noticed and to make such bylaws, rules, and regulations as it deems necessary for the administration of its functions The board may function notwithstanding vacancies and three members of the board shall constitute a quorum for transaction of business.

(b) The Smithsonian Institution shall include in its annual report of its operations to Congress a statement of the operations of said national air museum, including all public and private moneys received aind disbursed.

SEC. 5. (a) The heads of executive departments of the Government are authorized to transfer or loan to said national air museum without charge therefor aircraft, aircraft parts, instruments, engines, or other aeronautical equipment or records for exhibition, historical, or educational purposes.

(b) The Secretary of the Smithsonian Institution, with the advice of the Commission of Fine Arts, is authorized (1) to accept as a gift to the Smithsonian Institution from George H. Stephenson, of Philadelphia, Pa., a statute of Brig. Gen. William L. Mitchell of such character as may be deemed appropriate, and (2) without expense to the United States, to cause such statue to be erected at a suitable location on the grounds of the national air museum.

SEC. 6. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated the sum of $50,000 for the purposes of this act and there are hereby authorized to be appropriated annually hereafter such sums as may be necessary to maintain and administer said national air museum including salaries and all other necessary expenses.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, as I understand the bill does not actually authorize the construction of a building. It is to be a matter of later recommendation?

Mr. BARKLEY. That is correct. I might say that the bill has been under consideration for a long time. The House passed it a few days ago unanimously. The Smithsonian Institution is urging its passage.

When the bill was first introduced, the air museum was to be administered by other than the Smithsonian Institution, by either the War Department or the Navy Department. It was worked out, however, at a conference participated in by the parties interested, that the appropriate place for the museum would be under the Smithsonian Institution. All the bill does is to set up a board to make recommendations to Congress for the establishment of an air museum.

BOOKS FOR THE ADULT BLIND

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, from the Committee on the Library I report favorably Senate bill 2430 to amend the act entitled "An act to provide books for the adult blind."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be received and placed on the calendar.

Mr. BARKLEY. I now ask that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside, and that the Senate proceed to consider the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2430) to amend the act entitled "An act to provide books for the adult blind," which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act of June 13, 1944 (58 Stat. 276), is amended to read as follows:

"That there is hereby authorized to be appropriated annually to the Library of Congress, in addition to appropriations otherwise made to said Library, $1,125,000, which sum shall be expended under the direction of the Librarian of Congress to provide books published either in raised characters, on sound-reproduction recordings, or in any other form for the use of the adult blind residents of the United States, including the several States, Territories, insular possessions, and the District of Columbia: Provided, That of said annual appropriation of $1,125,000, not exceeding $200,000 thereof shall be expended for books in raised characters and the balance remaining shall be expended for sound-reproduction recordings and for the purchase, maintenance, and replacement of reproducers for these sound-reproduction recordings, all of which books, recordings, and reproducers will remain the property of the Library of Congress but will be loaned to blind readers under regulations prescribed by the Librarian of Congress for this service. In the purchase of books in either raised characters or in sound-reproduction recordings the Librarian of Congress, without reference to section 5 of title 41, United States Code, shall give preference to non-profit-making institutions or agencies whose activities are primarily concerned with the blind, in all cases where the prices or bids submitted by such institutions or agencies are, by said Librarian, under all the circumstances and needs involved, determined to be fair and reasonable.

"SEC. 2. This act shall be applicable with respect to the fiscal year ending June 30, 1947, and for each fiscal year thereafter."

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, the bill simply provides for an additional authorization for the benefit of the adult blind. We have from time to time appropriated money for the purchase of books for the blind. We have never been too liberal in that respect. The bill merely authorizes a million and a quarter dollars more, to be disbursed under the jurisdiction and control of the Librarian of Congress.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill (S. 2430) was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BARKLEY subsequently said: Mr. President, a few minutes ago the Senate passed Senate bill 2430, a bill to provide books for the adult blind. The House has just recently sent to the Senate an identical bill, under the number House bill 6455. From the Committee on the Library, I now report the bill without amendment. I ask unanimous consent that the vote by which Senate bill 2430 was passed be reconsidered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? Without objection, the votes by which Senate bill 2430 was engrossed, read the third time, and passed are reconsidered; and the bill is now before the Senate.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I now ask unanimous consent that House bill 6455 may be substituted for the Senate bill and be considered at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, House bill 6455 will be substituted for Senate bill 2430. Is there objection to the request that the Senate proceed to consider House bill 6455?

There being no objection, the bill (H. R. 6455) to amend the act entitled "An act to provide books for the adult blind" was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, Senate bill 2430 will be indefinitely postponed.

SELECTION FOR ELIMINATION AND RETIREMENT OF OFFICERS OF THE REGULAR ARMY

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, in view of the fact that I am obliged to attend a meeting of the Appropriations Committee I should like to make a short statement in connection with Senate bill 1974, to provide for the selection for elimination and retirement of officers of the Regular Army, for the equalization of retirement benefits for members of the Army of the United States, and for other purposes. The statement I desire to make is that considerable confusion exists in the minds of many persons connected with the armed forces, by reason of the fact that I introduced Senate bill 1974, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and was later amended by the committee itself. The bill in its present form is not comparable to the bill which I introduced. On the calendar it is stated that Senate bill 1974 was reported by me from the Committee on Military Affairs. I merely wish to state for the record, so there will be no misunderstanding about the matter, that the statement in connection with Calendar No. 1899, House bill 7063, to provide for the selection for elimination and retirement of officers of the Regular Army, that it is "same as Calendar 1803" is incorrect. The bill which I introduced was practically the same as House bill 7063, which appears under Calendar No. 1899, but Senate bill 1974 was so amended by the committee, that, although it was my bill, it does not now carry the provisions of the original Senate bill 1974.

Mr. President, I make this statement for the record, so there may be no misunderstanding. I hope that before Congress adjourns House bill 7063 will be passed by the Senate, or if not, that Senate bill 1974, if passed, may be sent to conference, and that the differences existing may be resolved. I shall speak on that subject at a later date.

PARKER RIVER NATIONAL WILDLIFE REFUGE, ESSEX COUNTY, MASS.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, a few days ago on the call of the calendar, when Calendar No. 1771 was reached, the able Senator from California [Mr. KNOWLAND] objected. The bill is H. R. 4362 to abolish the Parker River National Wildlife Refuge in Essex County, Mass. The Senator from California has since investigated the matter and has authorized me to state to the Senate that his objection is withdrawn. Therefore I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

Mr. REVERCOMB. I must state to the able Senator from Massachusetts that at the request of another Member of the Senate I must object to consideration of the bill.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I may say that the Senator who wished to have objection made in his behalf is not now in Washington. I will communicate with him by telegraph tonight to endeavor to persuade him to withdraw his objection.

I think I can reach him either by telegram or by telephone.

Mr. WALSH. I may say to my distinguished Republican colleague that this has become a political issue. The Democratic candidate has the advantage today because of the protests that have come with respect to this matter from the Republican side.

Mr. TAFT. I have been so informed, and I shall cooperate in obtaining consideration of the measure.

Mr. WALSH. I have received telegrams from Republicans in Massachusetts asking that objection be withdrawn in the next 24 hours.

Mr. REVERCOMB. I may say to the Senator from Massachusetts that his statement urging withdrawal of the objection is very persuasive. The Senator who wished to have his objection noted is not in Washington. As soon as he can be reached, and will relieve me of my obligation in this respect, I shall be very glad to withdraw my objection.

Mr. WALSH. In view of the fact that Republicans in Massachusetts have made objection to this refuge it may be well that objection be withdrawn to the present consideration of the bill in the Senate.

AUTHORIZATION TO REPORT A BILL, AND TO REFER NOMINATIONS

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that, during the recess of the Senate the Committee on Appropriations may be authorized to report the final deficiency bill, which I think is now under consideration in the committee; and also that the Secretary of the Senate may be authorized, in the event nominations come to the Senate during the recess, to have them properly referred to appropriate committees.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the authorizations requested by the Senator from Kentucky are granted.

ROBERT JUNE

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, from the Committee on Claims I report favorably House bill 228, for the relief of Robert June, and I submit a report (No. 2452) thereon.

Mr. President, I have conferred with the majority leader and have his approval for the present consideration of the bill. It has been pointed out to me that it will not only save time, but expense if we proceed to act on it today, rather than to wait and have it go to the calendar. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the bill (H. R. 228) for the relief of Robert June, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EQUAL PAY FOR EQUAL WORK FOR WOMEN

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 1178, Calendar No. 1610. I should like to make a statement about the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be stated by title for the information of the Senate.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (S. 1178), providing equal pay for equal work for women, and for other purposes.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, a bill providing equal pay for equal work for women and forbidding discrimination against women in employment has been favorably reported by the Senate Committee on Education and Labor. A similar bill has also been favorably reported to the House by the House Committee on Labor, and is on the House calendar at the present time. I am not sure that there is a chance to have the bill enacted if the Senate passes it, but I believe there is a good chance if the Senate will pass the bill this afternoon.

Mr. President, I do not wish to go into a full debate on the merits of the bill. At the present time nothing of an emergent nature seems to be pending, and I think we might as well take up the bill and dispose of it. After we take it up we can proceed to the consideration of the bill on its merits. I believe that the bill possesses sufficient merit, having the report of the committee and the report of the Labor Department behind it, a companion bill having been reported by the House Committee on Labor, to entitle the bill to the consideration of the Senate. That is the subject of my motion.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, it seems to me that it would be improper to take up the bill at this late date. The bill was reported to the Senate on June 21, and no particular attention has been paid to it. The bill is a sort of FEPC for women. The opening lines of the bill read as follows:

The Congress hereby finds that the existence in industry of differentials based on sex is an inequity in compensation standards which constitutes an unfair wage practice.

Such discrimination is declared to be an unfair wage practice, based upon the Labor Relations Act procedure. I have read the bill only hastily. The Secretary of Labor is authorized to file a complaint and hale into court any employer on the complaint of any woman employee that she is not being treated fairly.

Section 2 of the bill provides that—

It shall be an unfair wage practice for any employer engaged in commerce or in transactions or operations affecting commerce—

(a) to discriminate in any way in the payment of wages as between the sexes.

That certainly is a pretty general prohibition. The application of the act would be turned over to the Secretary of Labor or to some board, to define its provisions more clearly.

(b) to pay wages to any female employee at a rate less than the rate at which he pays or has paid wages to male employees for work of comparable quality or quantity, except where such payment is made pursuant to a seniority or merit increase system which does not discriminate on the basis of sex.

On the complaint of any woman employee the Secretary of Labor would be authorized to go into any industry or office in the United States and investigate the whole question of what kind of work she is doing, whether it is the same as what some man is doing, whether the wage is the same, and whether there is any reason for a difference. The bill would put a new Federal bureau into every business office in the United States, and turn over to it the question of what kind of wages should be paid.

(c) to lay off or discharge or in any other manner discriminate against any employee because such employee has filed any charges or instituted or caused to be instituted any proceeding under or related to this act, or has testified or is about to testify in any such proceeding, or has served or is about to serve on an industry committee.

I have not been able to develop the exact procedure which would follow, but it would be very similar to the procedure under the National Labor Relations Act. We would turn over to a board the question of determining whether an employer had treated his employees fairly, whether he must pay back wages, and whether corrections must be made in the entire scale of salary standards. The bill involves a major interference with the freedom of American industry. Certainly it ought not to come up during the last days of the session. There ought to be plenty of time to debate the fundamental issues involved. I think it would be a great mistake for the Senate to take up the bill today.

Mr. President, I should like to submit a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. TAFT. If the pending motion were agreed to, would it have the effect of displacing the poll-tax bill as the unfinished business of the Senate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It would.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I strongly urge upon the Senate that it not take up a bill of this importance at this late date in the session.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, let me reply to the Senator from Ohio. I should like to have my motion considered in the nature of a request for unanimous consent, because I would not like to displace the unfinished business before the Senate. From time to time we have been taking up other measures and considering them, allowing the poll-tax bill to remain the unfinished business. That is what we have been doing since Monday, and I see no reason why we could not follow the same course in respect to this bill.

Mr. BALL. Mr. President, if the Senator is making a unanimous-consent request for the consideration of Senate bill 1178, I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I should like to have the record clear that Senators wish to support the practice and principle of discrimination against women, because they are unwilling that the Senate, when it has ample time and opportunity to do so, should proceed to consider this bill.

The Senator from Ohio has said in substance that the bill would establish another board. It would do no such thing. It would place the authority in the Secretary of Labor. The Secretary of Labor would be the one who would be responsible for the enforcement of the law.

Moreover, the Secretary of Labor would not have authority to compel any employer to do anything. He could only go into court and seek authority to enforce an order which he might make.

The bill contains a limitation which I have not found in similar laws. When the Secretary of Labor goes into court and seeks authority to enforce a cease-and-desist order, for example, it is not sufficient, as in ordinary cases, that there be merely some evidence to support the finding of the Secretary. The weight of the evidence must satisfy the court as being on the side of the Secretary. In other words, the court, and not the Secretary of Labor, would enforce the order. If the court should not find that the weight of the evidence was on the side of the Secretary, it would not grant the authority necessary to enforce the order or decree of the Secretary of Labor.

So the bill would not establish a board with authority to coerce employers into some policy or practice. The Secretary of Labor would cause an investigation to be made in the Department of Labor to determine whether or not there was a prima facie case; and if he found a prima facie case he could issue a cease-and-desist order. If the order were not obeyed by the employer, and if the employer persisted in discrimination against women on the ground of sex, the Secretary of Labor could apply to the court and obtain a decree for the enforcement of his order, provided the court should find that the weight of the evidence was on the side of the prima facie finding made by the Secretary of Labor.

If the Senator from Minnesota and the Senator from Ohio are going to withhold their assent to the consideration of the bill in the same way that we have considered other measures, I invite attention to the fact that we considered the social security bill under a unanimous-consent agreement, and we have been considering bills all day today by unanimous consent. I am indeed sorry that the Senator from Minnesota and the Senator from Ohio are not willing to give the women of this country fair consideration in respect to legislation which would eliminate discriminatory employment practices based exclusively on sex. I am sorry that Senators choose to place themselves on record as favoring the continuation of such practices and resisting an effort to correct them.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection has been made.

Mr. BALL. Mr. President, I take exception to the statement of the Senator from Florida that objection to the consideration of the bill at this time labels the Senator making the objection as being in favor of discrimination between the sexes in employment. It does no such thing. The Senator from Minnesota believes that the enactment of the bill would be a terrible mistake, because it would establish in the Department of Labor an agency headed by one man who would be prosecutor, judge, and jury, to determine whether an employer was discriminating in rates of pay, hours, or anything else, as between men and women in his employment doing substantially the same work. The situation would be exactly the same as under the Wagner Act, except that instead of being administered by a quasi-judicial independent board, the act would be administered by the Secretary of Labor, who is a partisan of labor, and cannot be impartial in such a position. Furthermore, he would have complete power of subpena. The bill would establish one more agency in this time of reconversion, when, Heaven knows, employers are having enough difficulties with OPA, CPA, and other agencies, without being further harassed in their efforts to produce for civilian consumption. I am very happy that my objection can prevent this bill from having any chance to become law.

RACE DISORDERS AT COLUMBIA, TENN.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, a few days ago the Senator from California [Mr. KNOWLAND] placed in the RECORD a newspaper report of a very unfortunate incident which occurred in the State of Georgia, namely, the slaying of four colored people. That matter was discussed for some time on the floor of the Senate, and reference was made to other occasions when similar trouble occurred in the South. I might add here that I hope the guilty will be apprehended and duly punished.

That prompts me to call the attention of the Senate to the so-called Columbia, Tenn., race disorder. I am doing this for one purpose, to wit, to point out that the affair at Columbia, Tenn., was investigated by the Federal Bureau of Investigation over a period of weeks, and a Federal grand jury was impaneled at Columbia by a Federal judge, Judge Davies, of Nashville, who holds court at Columbia. After scores of witnesses had been examined in an investigation which was conducted before that grand jury for a period of 6 or 8 weeks, as I recall, it was found that no Federal rights had been violated at Columbia, in Maury County. The report of the grand jury was printed in full in the June 14 issue of the Nashville Banner, an old and well-established daily newspaper published at Nashville, Tenn. In order to avoid taking the time of the Senate to read the entire article and the grand jury report, I ask unanimous consent that they may be printed in full at this point in the RECORD, as a part of my remarks.

There being no objection, the newspaper article and grand jury report were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

JURY FINDS NO RIGHTS VIOLATED IN MAURY—INCENDIARY ARTICLES BY COMMUNIST PRESS HIT

Reporting today on its investigation of the Columbia race disorders, the Federal grand jury declared it found no evidence of civil-rights violations, and assailed "Nation-wide misrepresentations" through the circulation of pamphlets dealing with the incident of last February.

The report declared these pamphlets constituted malicious intent to incite racial discord and intolerance.

The jurors said the Communist press had been especially active, having carried a series of inflammatory articles on the racial disturbances

Federal Judge Elmer Davies ordered the investigation by the grand jury after it had been asked for by United States Attorney General Tom Clark.

In its findings the jury commended the quick action of Gov. Jim McCord, said the prompt arrival and deployment of State forces (the State guard under Brig. Gen. J. M. Dickinson and the State highway patrol under Chief Lynn Bomar) "in our opinion prevented a bloody race war which threatened to arise out of the heat of excitement following the wounding of a number of officers of the law."

The work of Columbia and Maury County law enforcement was likewise commended. The report said these officers had been impartial in their actions.

The report said there had been unnecessary destruction of property, but went on to declare that after an exhaustive investigation "it has proved wholly impossible to determine the identity" of the persons responsible.

Agents of the Federal Bureau of Investigation were highly praised for the assistance they had given the grand jury.

JURY CONGRATULATED

In a brief statement to the jury after its report had been read by Assistant United States District Attorney A. O. Denning, Judge Davies congratulated the members for rendering "a distinct public service" and charged that persons who "persist in circulating false and malicious rumors * * * render a distinct disservice to both races."

Judge Davies said that "It is apparent from this report that you have made a most exhaustive inquiry of this unfortunate incident. It is obvious that you have been very careful to ascertain the true facts of the matter and I am satisfied that the evidence upon which you have acted will fully sustain the correctness of your report.

"Your official action," he continued, "should put an end to the irresponsible and scurrilous rumors that have been so freely circulated over the entire country, and should be a reassurance to those of both the white and the Negro races who sincerely desire to live in peace and harmony. Any person who hereafter persists in circulating false and malicious rumors will render a distinct disservice to both races in the opinion of this court and cannot possibly have the best interests of this country at heart."

Judge Davies then told the grand jury that he wished he could discharge its members but that "unfortunately other matters have arisen which may make it necessary to call you back in session before the end of the term." He then dismissed the jury until further notice.

Later Judge Davies stated that he could not elaborate upon the matters referred to at this time.

JURORS LISTED

J. P. Richardson, of Hohenwald, was chairman of the grand jury. The other members were Ed Bradley, of Pleasant View; L. V. Brooks, Hartsville; W. C. Jones, Hohenwald; Alex Holt, Byrdstown; W. R. Webb, Waverly; Berry O. Carter, Lebanon; William I. Rogers, Waverly; Jack H. Bradshaw, Lebanon; W. G. Masters, Celina; Joe Cooksey, Nashville; Fred Sawyer, Clarksville; Prince Fishburn, Lafayette; Clyde Jameson, Bradyville; Tom W. Thompson, Lebanon; T. S. Evans, Lebanon; John S. Ledbetter, Nashville, Floyd Gregg, Algood; Fred Clark, Byrdstown; Lester Higgins, Woodbury; Ed Climer, Lebanon; and Herman Webb, Cumberland City.

Discussing the handling of the early stages of the situation by Columbia and Maury County officers, the report said:

In doing so, they acted impartially and with an evident desire to uphold the law and to prevent violence. When the four policemen were shot, the sheriff immediately called on the Governor of the State for assistance, and the Governor's prompt action in getting the State patrol and the State guard to Columbia is to be commended, as is the action of the State forces in sealing off the Mink Slide area, and in preventing any clash between white and Negro citizens. The prompt arrival and deployment of State forces, in our opinion, prevented a bloody race war which threatened to arise out of the heat of excitement following the wounding of a number of officers of the law, who, it is evident, were acting solely in an effort to preserve the peace and to fulfill their sworn duties.

There have been lurid and inflammatory stories published and circulated to the effect that large numbers of people were killed during the racial disorder at Columbia. Two Negroes were killed at the jail, as heretofore set out, and we have found that they were the only Negroes who lost their lives. During the disturbance two Negroes were wounded, one seriously. Two white civilians were wounded, and seven white officers were wounded, one seriously. These are the actual figures concerning the number killed and wounded during the action following the initial trouble on February 25, 1946.

We have found during the course of our investigation that the events transpiring at Columbia have been the subject of Nation-wide misrepresentation. It has been charged that scores of Negroes were killed, that Negro women were raped, that armed mobs roamed the streets of Columbia seeking a victim, and that police officers acted with indescribable brutality. Many of such accounts concerning these events are wholly lacking in factual foundation, and the conclusion is inescapable that they have been manufactured and circulated with the malicious intent and desire to incite racial discord and intolerance and to cause further racial strife.

We have explored the possibility of returning presentments against those sending such pamphlets through the mails, but to our regret, we are advised that the mailing of such pamphlets does not constitute a violation of any Federal statute.

In disseminating such propaganda the avowed Communist press of the country has been especially active, having carried a series of inflammatory articles on the racial disturbances at Columbia. This technique is characteristic and dangerous, and manifestly is designed to foster racial hatred and to array class against class.

In concluding our report we wish to sound a warning that the good citizens of both races be on their guard against insidious and false propaganda. In the opinion of this grand jury nothing is so likely to erode and ultimately destroy peaceful and friendly relations between the races as the dissemination of half-truths and falsehoods such as have been so freely circulated in relation to the events occurring at Columbia.

The report follows:

We, the regular grand jury for the middle district of Tennessee, were convened on April 8, 1946, and charged by Your Honor to make a "full, complete, fair and impartial investigation" into the racial disturbance at Columbia, Tenn., occurring during the week of February 25, 1946, and especially as to the invasion of civil rights in violation of Federal law alleged to have occurred in connection therewith.

Our inquiry has been facilitated by the several reports submitted by the Federal Bureau of Investigation, reflecting an exhaustive and painstaking investigation by that agency in connection with which 390 persons were interviewed for the purpose of securing all facts relating to the disturbance in question.

We have had before us and have examined under oath all persons, both white and colored, who were substantially connected with the disturbance or who were known or believed to be in possession of factual information pertinent and material to this investigation, and we have concluded after careful consideration that there is no evidence before us that would justify an indictment or presentment for the violation of any Federal statute.

Now, in keeping with Your Honor's charge, we further report as follows:

On Monday, February 25, 1946, at about 10 a. m., following a disagreement concerning repairs to a radio a fight occurred in front of a department store located on the public square in Columbia, between two Negroes, Gladys Stephenson and her son, James, and William Fleming, a white employee of the radio section of the department store, and a white passerby.

Police, in response to a call made during the altercation, arrived on the scene and arrested the Stephensons. At the time of the arrests Fleming was inside the store receiving first aid and the arresting officers were not at that time informed that anyone else had participated in the affair.

Reports have circulated in pamphlets and press that the fight was started inside the store by Fleming, by his striking or kicking Gladys Stephenson, and that thereupon James Stephenson came to the defense of his mother. Such reports have no foundation in fact. The undisputed testimony before us shows that the fight commenced between James Stephenson and William Fleming on the street in front of the store. Thereupon the mother, Gladys Stephenson entered the affray in aid of her son. At this stage the above-mentioned passer-by came to the aid of Fleming and engaged in a fight with Mrs. Stephenson. Blows were struck by all parties.

At the outset of the fighting Fleming was propelled through the glass front of the store and received a gash in his leg as a result. From the statements of witnesses situated within the department store, it appears that during the course of the fight Gladys Stephenson seized a piece of glass that had fallen from the shattered window and struck Fleming with the same, at about which time she was assaulted by the white passer-by hereinbefore mentioned.

Both the Stephensons and the city police officers responsible for their arrest have appeared before us and have testified fully, under oath, concerning the circumstances thereof. It is undisputed that in the course of arresting Gladys Stephenson a city police officer struck her with a night stick. From all of the evidence before us, it appears that the force used by the arresting officer in this respect was neither brutal nor wanton but was reasonably necessitated in the course of overcoming resistance to the arrest. It is undisputed that James Stephenson was not struck or harmed during the course of the arrest and that neither he nor his mother was subjected to any physical mistreatment throughout the period of their incarceration. At the city jail the Stephensons were charged with a breach of the peace before the city magistrate; on their pleas of guilty they were each fined $50.

While the Stephensons were still in custody warrants charging them with assault with intent to commit murder, sworn out by the father of William Fleming, were served on them and they were thereupon transported to the county jail.

After receiving first aid Fleming was transported to the hospital where he remained until the following day. The identity of the white passer-by, who engaged in the fight, was and remains unascertained. It is our considered opinion that the responsibility for aggression in this assault is not determinable in view of the direct conflict in testimony supplied by the known participants in this connection. The evidence before us establishes that the Stephensons were the only persons arrested in connection with this disturbance of the peace although police officers, subsequent to the arrest, learned of the part played in the affair by Fleming and the passer-by who assisted him.

As is not unusual in the world of men, it is abundantly evident that throughout the day, in recounting the circumstances of the fight and the ensuing events, fact and fancy were freely intermingled in the accounts of white as well as colored citizens—especially among the less stable elements of both races. Among the group of white people attracted by the fight, indignation at the occurrence was expressed, and the matter was discussed on the streets of Columbia thereafter during the day. In the Negro districts of Columbia a rumor was circulated to the effect that a white man had bought a rope, stating that he intended to hang a Negro with it.

A thorough investigation involving inquiry at all Columbia business establishments engaged in the sale of rope has failed to lend any factual reality to the occurrence thus rumored, and diligent inquiry among the Negro citizens of Columbia has likewise failed to lend the slightest substantiation thereto.

Throughout the afternoon following the Stephenson-Fleming fight, small groups of white individuals gathered from time to time on the public square and in the streets nearby. The sheriff and his deputies and the chief of police and his force moved freely among such groups and dispersed them without difficulty. These groups, the majority of which were composed of teen-aged youths were unarmed and were responsive to orders. To city and county officials there appeared to be no manifestation of mob spirit and no organized leadership was evident among the persons thus assembled.

At approximately 5 p. m. the Stephensons were released from custody on bond. Following their release the mother was first driven to her home in Columbia, and thereafter James Stephenson was driven to "Mink Slide," a Negro district devoted exclusively to business and located one block south of the public square, on East Eighth Street, between South Main and Woodland Streets. At the time of James Stephenson's arrival in "Mink Slide," armed and unarmed Negroes had gathered and were continuing to gather in the area, having come from other sections of Columbia and the surrounding countryside. By the evidence of several Negro witnesses it appears that such witnesses, activated by the rumor of a possible lynching, armed themselves and assembled in the "Mink Slide" area for the purpose of protecting James Stephenson from mob violence. Evidence supplied by several other Negro witnesses establishes that said witnesses circulated throughout the "Mink Slide" area during Monday afternoon and evening with no genuine apprehension of impending trouble, having discounted the rumor as baseless in fact, which it has since proved to be. By the testimony of these latter witnesses it is apparent that many of the Negroes then assembled in "Mink Slide" were not appreciably alarmed over the safety of James Stephenson or the likelihood of any serious outbreak between white and Negro citizens. The evidence is undisputed that following his release on bond upon his arrival at the "Mink Slide" area at approximately 5:30 p. m., James Stephenson mingled freely and openly with other Negroes on the street in front of, and within several business establishments, and that at approximately 6 p. m. he entered the barber shop of Sol Blair and casually procured a haircut and shoe shine. The evidence is likewise undisputed that at approximately 6:30 p. m., James Stephenson drove his girl friend from the "Mink Slide" area to her home in the colored residential section of Columbia, passing en route around the city square without molestation in any form, returned to the "Mink Slide" section and entered Patton's residence where he had some drinks. That after leaving Patton's restaurant he again entered Sol Blair's barber shop, secured a rifle from a stack of weapons there assembled and in company with approximately 25 other armed Negroes climbed to the roof of the building and maintained a lookout, without incident, in the direction of South Main Street. The evidence is likewise undisputed that some time between 7:30 and 8 p. m., James Stephenson descended from the roof and in company with three other Negroes entered an automobile which was then parked on East Eighth Street and, thereafter, without molestation, drove to Nashville, Tenn., where he boarded a train for Chicago, Ill.

At 6 p. m., after receiving information of the situation in "Mink Slide," the sheriff of Maury County went to that area and found there over 100 Negroes, a third of whom were openly bearing arms, on the street. He walked among the Negroes, told them there would be no trouble from the white people, and asked them to disarm and return to their homes.

Some 30 minutes after leaving "Mink Slide," or about 6:30 p. m., the sheriff called James Morton, a prominent Negro, at his funeral establishment in "Mink Slide," and asked him if the Negroes were still armed and on the street. Being informed that they were, the sheriff asked Morton to tell the Negroes that if they did not disband he would enter the area with sufficient force to arrest those under arms. At approximately 7 p. m. city policemen went to "Mink Slide" and told the Negroes there congregated that there would be no violence done them by the white people, that the white people were completely under control, and ordered the Negroes to disarm and disperse. Other Negroes armed and unarmed continued to arrive in "Mink Slide." Evidence as to the total number of Negroes congregated in the block-long business section ranged from two to four hundred. Shortly after darkness fell the Negroes extinguished all light in "Mink Slide." The evidence is undisputed that certain armed Negroes made demand upon proprietors of several colored business establishments to extinguish their lights and upon refusal shot such light out with gunfire. As a Negro undertaker (not James Morton) drove through the area on business, his car was fired upon. The car of a tourist from California who lost his way and drove through the area was also fired upon.

At about 8:30 p. m., a group of 20 to 30 white persons, the majority of whom were teen-age boys, went to the county jail and demanded to know the whereabout of the Stephensons. The sheriff, machine gun in hand, answered their demand by arresting two drunken white men who appeared to be the leaders of the group, and dispersed the remainder, who appeared to be unarmed.

At about 9 p. m., the chief of police, with three of his uniformed officers, decided to enter the "Mink Slide" area and to investigate and put a stop to the shooting which was intermittently occurring in that area. The officers crossed the lighted intersection of East Eighth Street with South Main Street, and proceeded into "Mink Slide" for a distance of approximately 75 feet. At this point they were met by aimed shotgun fire. All four officers were struck, and one of them was critically wounded. The officers did not return the fire or draw their guns, but taking cover as best they could they withdraw from the scene and sought medical aid.

In certain pamphlets and press articles which have come to our attention it has been asserted that when the city police officers proceeded into the "Mink Slide" area they were accompanied by a crowd of armed white men. We have found no evidence whatsoever that tends to substantiate such assertion. However, as word of the assault on the officers spread, armed white people began to assemble on the public square and on South Main Street near the entrance to "Mink Slide."

With one exception, the evidence is undisputed that no white citizen, saving local officials, were observed to be bearing arms until after the shooting of the policeman. The exception noted appears in the testimony of one Negro, who stated that at approximately 6:30 p. m., while driving around the public square, he observed three armed white men but that he didn't notice what kind of guns they carried.

Realizing that violence threatened, the sheriff called the Governor of Tennessee and asked for assistance. This call was made at about 9:30 p. m., and immediately thereafter elements of the Tennessee State Guard, and the State highway patrol were alerted and ordered to proceed to Columbia at once. Elements of these organizations headed by Brig. Gen. J. M. Dickinson and Commissioner of Safety Lynn Bomar (head of the highway patrol) began arriving in Columbia within an hour.

While it is now clear from all of the evidence that many of the Negroes congregated in "Mink Slide" left the area following the shooting of the city police officers, State and county officials were unaware of the number of armed men barricaded in the business establishments throughout the night. General Dickinson and Commissioner Bomar conferred with the sheriff on their arrival in Columbia, decided to seal off and isolate the "Mink Slide" area, and to attempt no entrance into the area until daybreak. As fast as they arrived and were available for guard duty, highway patrolmen were stationed at the several street intersections encompassing the "Mink Slide" section in keeping with the course of action decided upon.

Intermittent gunfire was heard in the "Mink Slide" area throughout the balance of the night. Two white men attempted to enter the area and were wounded slightly by shotgun fire. Two armed Negroes were arrested as they attempted to enter "Mink Slide." At about 3 a. m. Tuesday, February 26, 1946, officers entered the home of James Morton, located on the corner of East Eighth and Woodland Streets but a few feet distant from a guard-post which had been maintained by the State guard and highway patrol throughout the night. The officers there arrested 12 Negroes and seized a quantity of arms and ammunition.

Shortly after daybreak the highway patrolmen stationed at the intersections of Woodland and South Main Streets with East Eighth Street accompanied by the Sheriff, advanced into "Mink Slide." As they advanced they announced that no person surrendering would be harmed. As the officers came abreast of Sol Blair's barber shop they were met by shotgun fire from within, three of the officers being slightly wounded as a result. Members of the Highway Patrol, armed with machine guns, rifles and shotguns, thereupon opened fire directing the same toward the interior of the barber shop. Continuing to voice the demand that the occupants surrender peaceably the officers forced an entrance into the barber shop and arrested its two Negro occupants, who were wholly unharmed despite the gunfire preceding the arrest. The officers then proceeded as before; they came to a building containing a lodge hall on its second floor, the entrance to which was padlocked. Despite gunfire emanating from the building, a group of highway patrolmen forced an entrance and proceeded upstairs, where they arrested a number of Negroes. It was at this point that a Negro, John Black, was struck on the head with a gun butt by a highway patrolman. The blow knocked him down and he was seriously injured. The testimony with respect to the circumstances surrounding this incident is in conflict. The Negro witnesses state that Blackwell was not armed. Highway patrol officers making these arrests have testified that Blackwell emerged from an ante room and aimed a shotgun at them and that he was struck on the head as a measure of self defense. Following their arrest at the lodge hall all Negroes in the building were removed. Blackwell, whose picture (as he lay in the street before the entrance to the lodge hall) has been widely reproduced, was taken to the hospital by an officer of the State Guard. He was subsequently removed to the jail where he was separately confined, and later was transferred to a hospital in Nashville.

Approximately 30 Negroes were arrested, and a quantity of arms and ammunition seized, in the "Mink Slide" area. As a result of the gunfire one Negro was wounded in the arm. On information obtained from the Negroes under arrest as to those present in "Mink Slide" when the officers were fired upon, further arrests were made, bringing the total apprehended to approximately 100.

After conferring with the Governor of Tennessee and the State attorney general, and at their direction, the sheriff, aided by some 60 members of the State guard, conducted a search of the territory immediately adjacent to the "Mink Slide" area. During this search approximately 250 guns of various descriptions were seized. The search was indiscriminate; weapons were taken from Negro and white citizens alike.

Paul P. Bumpus, district attorney general for Maury and other counties, with the assistance of the few other local officials at hand, began an investigation of the assault on the police officers immediately after the arrests of February 26, questioning all Negroes in confinement. Of the number arrested, approximately 40 were released after questioning without charges being placed against them, and without being required to make bond.

On Thursday, February 28, 1946, three Negroes, James "Digger" Johnson, Willie Gordon, and Napoleon Stewart, were questioned, informed that they would be permitted to make bond in nominal sums, and thereafter be released. Pending execution of their bonds these three Negroes were placed in the sheriff's office, located on the first floor of the Maury County jail. A large quantity of guns seized during the arrests and the search heretofore mentioned were stored in the office. Two deputy sheriffs were in the room with the Negroes, one of them, Deputy Darnell, was in the act of telephoning. The other, Deputy Pennington, was lying across a bed. A newspaper photographer was likewise in the room and was then engaged in loading his camera. At this point Johnson and Gordon were observed to seize guns from a group of weapons stored against the wall. Deputy Darnell dropped the telephone and seized the gun in the hands of Gordon. At the same moment Johnson fired, wounding Darnell in the arm. Hearing shots, highway patrolmen outside the office rushed to the doorway, saw Gordon aiming his gun in their direction, and began firing at the Negroes. The officers continued firing until both Gordon and Johnson fell. During the firing the third Negro, Napoleon Stewart, backed into a corner and stood there with his hands raised. Commissioner Bomar obtained an ambulance by which Johnson and Gordon were removed to the hospital, where they received treatment. On the advice of attendant physicians, the Negroes were rushed by ambulance to Nashville. Both Negroes died en route.

After the shooting of these Negroes, 40 of the confined Negroes were transferred to the county jail at Nashville, Tenn. They were returned to Columbia on the following day. As the questioning and investigation proceeded, bonds were fixed, and upon execution the Negroes questioned were released from custody.

After the arrest of the Negroes found in "Mink Slide" on Tuesday, various business establishments, the fixtures therein, and certain personal property located in "Mink Slide" and particularly the properties of James Morton, Sol Blair, and Julius Blair, were found to be in a wrecked and damaged condition. The proprietors of several of the business establishments assert that merchandise and other valuable items of personal property were carried away from their premises during the course of the disturbance.

The evidence before us establishes that a portion of the damage was done by the Negroes occupying the premises throughout the night and prior to their arrest, and that extensive damage also resulted from gunfire immediately preceding and during the course of the arrests. It is likewise clear that much of the damage was wantonly committed after the arrest of the Negroes, and while the area was under the control of the highway patrol and members of the Tennessee State Guard.

It is manifest from the evidence of willful destruction of property that during the confusion and excitement arising in connection with the extensive gunfire and the ensuing arrests that an efficient and adequate guard was not maintained throughout the "Mink Slide" area for a period of several hours thereafter. Throughout this period divers civilians, including newspaper reporters and photographers and many members of the Tennessee State Guard entered the "Mink Slide" area and several business establishments situated therein. During, and for some hours following the arrests, divers highway patrolmen likewise entered and re-entered the buildings in this area. By dint of the most painstaking investigation all persons known to have been present in the "Mink Slide" section throughout the period in question have been interrogated searchingly and at length and we have diligently examined all witnesses before us in an effort to ascertain the identity of the person or persons committing these acts of vandalism.

As recently announced by the foremen in open court it was the desire of this grand jury to remain in session and to continue our efforts to fasten responsibility for such property destruction. Despite the fact that we have exhausted every reasonable avenue of inquiry it has proved wholly impossible to determine the identity of such person or persons or to elicit facts upon which to predicate an indictment in this respect.

We have also particularly considered certain other matters, and have carefully viewed the action of the law enforcement officers with respect thereto to the end that any officer depriving an inhabitant of Columbia during this disturbance, of a right secured to him by the Constitution, laws of the United States, or decisions interpreting them, be made to answer an indictment of his conduct. Among these matters are widely circulated charges that the Negroes of Columbia were subjected to mass and indiscriminate arrests, that their homes were subjected to unreasonable search and their weapons to unjustifiable seizure, that excessive force was used in making the arrests; that prisoners were subjected to brutality while in confinement, were denied the right to counsel, were made to incriminate themselves, and were confined for unreasonable lengths of time, being denied the right to bail.

The police officers, when shot, were in full uniform and were fired upon immediately after crossing a lighted intersection. Negro witnesses in "Mink Slide" at the time testified that uniforms were clearly distinguishable in the light at the intersection. The felonious assault was committed by unknown persons in a general area and probable cause therefore existed to believe that those in the area had participated in the assault, were accessories thereto, or were in possession of knowledge concerning the same. The arrests made on account of the assault were therefore lawful. Arrests made for the lawful purpose of preserving the peace and security of society are in violation of no man's civil rights.

There is evidence before us that during the course of the arrests certain Negroes were struck by the arresting officers. The evidence establishes that such incidents occurred as a result of a failure to comply with orders of the arresting officers. The Negroes appearing before us from that group arrested in "Mink Slide," have testified that some of their number were unnecessarily struck during the course of such arrests. They have sworn that after their arrest they were not subjected to physical abuse. Considering the basis of the arrests and the tense and dangerous atmosphere under which the arrests were accomplished, it is the considered judgment of this body that the force shown to have been used was not unreasonable.

We consider the killing of the Negroes Johnson and Gordon justifiable homicide. The testimony of eyewitnesses, including Napoleon Stewart, admits of no other interpretation.

In the evidence before us, it affirmatively appears that during their confinement the prisoners were not subjected to brutality or denied the right to counsel. The testimony before us establishes that before they were questioned all prisoners were advised of their constitutional right not to incriminate themselves. In the light of all of the circumstances prevailing prisoners were allowed to make bond and were released from custody without unreasonable delay. The searches and the seizure of weapons in the homes adjacent to the "Mink Slide" area were made at the direction of the Governor of Tennessee, and were not, in our opinion, unreasonable.

During the late afternoon and evening of February 25, 1946, the Sheriff of Maury County and the Chief of Police at Columbia were confronted with a grave and menacing situation. They made every effort to disperse the crowds and to prevent any clashes between the races. In doing so, they acted impartially and with an evident desire to uphold the law and to prevent violence.

When the four policemen were shot, the sheriff immediately called on the Governor of the State for assistance, and the Governor's prompt action in getting the State Patrol and the State Guard to Columbia is to be commended, as is the action of the State forces in sealing off the "Mink Slide" area, and in preventing any clash between white and Negro citizens. The prompt arrival and deployment of State forces, in our opinion, prevented a bloody race war which threatened to arise out of the heat of excitement following the wounding of a number of officers of the law, who, it is evident, were acting solely in an effort to preserve the peace and to fulfill their sworn duties.

There have been lurid and inflammatory stories published and circulated to the effect that large numbers of people were killed during the racial disorder at Columbia. Two Negroes were killed at the jail, as heretofore set out, and we have found that they were the only Negroes who lost their lives. During the disturbance two Negroes were wounded, one seriously. Two white civilians were wounded, and seven white officers were wounded, one seriously. These are the actual figures concerning the number killed and wounded during the action following the initial trouble on February 25, 1946.

We have found during the course of our investigation that the events transpiring at Columbia have been the subject of Nation-wide misrepresentation. Falsehoods and half-truths have been widely publicized by letter and pamphlet under the sponsorship of various organizations. It has been charged that scores of Negroes were killed, that Negro women were raped, that armed mobs roamed the streets of Columbia seeking a victim and that police officers acted with indescribable brutality. Many of such accounts concerning these events are wholly lacking in factual foundation, and the conclusion is inescapable that they have been manufactured and circulated with the malicious intent and desire to incite racial discord and intolerance and to cause further racial strife.

We have explored the possibility of returning presentments against those sending such pamphlets through the mails, but to our regret, we are advised that the mailing of such pamphlets does not constitute a violation of any Federal statute.

In disseminating such propaganda the avowed Communist press of the country has been especially active, having carried a series of inflammatory articles on the racial disturbances at Columbia. This technique is characteristic and dangerous, and manifestly is designed to foster racial hatred and to array class against class.

In concluding our report we wish to sound a warning that the good citizens of both races be on their guard against insidious and false propaganda. In the opinion of this grand jury nothing is so likely to erode and ultimately destroy peaceful and friendly relations between the races as the dissemination of half-truths and falsehoods such as have been so freely circulated in relation to the events occurring at Columbia.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, I should like to refer now to several of the highlights of the report. I wish this report to be given as much publicity as possible, because of the fact, as I stated at the outset, that it shows that after many weeks of careful investigation by a constitutionally authorized body, a grand jury appointed by a court, it was found that no Federal rights were involved or violated in the unfortunate affair, which arose over a more or less trivial incident—a fight between a white boy and a colored boy.

As I have said, I wish as much publicity as possible to be given to the findings of the grand jury, and it is important to do this, in view of the fact that many irresponsible reports have been made concerning the trouble. Much loose talk was passed from mouth to mouth, and several different stories, utterly misrepresenting the situation there, were carried in various publications, both newspapers and magazines, throughout the country.

I repeat, Mr. President, the report of the grand jury comes as the result of a very painstaking, very careful, and apparently quite exhaustive investigation which was made with the help and the aid of agents of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, of the United States Government.

At this point, I should like to read a few excerpts from the report and the newspaper comment on it. I read first from the newspaper comment, as follows:

Reporting today on its investigation of the Columbia race disorders, the Federal grand jury declared it found no evidence of civil rights violations, and assailed "nation-wide misrepresentations" through the circulation of pamphlets dealing with the incident of last February.

The report declared these pamphlets constituted malicious intent to incite racial discord and intolerance.

The jurors said the Communist press had been especially active, having carried a series of inflammatory articles on the racial disturbances.

Federal Judge Elmer Davies ordered the investigation by the grand jury after it had been asked for by United States Attorney General Tom Clark.

In its findings the jury commended the quick action of Gov. Jim McCord, said the prompt arrival and deployment of State forces—the State Guard under Brig. Gen. J. M. Dickinson and the State highway patrol under Chief Lynn Bomar—"in our opinion prevented a bloody race war which threatened to arise out of the heat of excitement following the wounding of a number of officers of the law."

Mr. President, the grand jury report was commented upon by the Federal judge, Judge Davies, in these words:

It is apparent from this report that you have made a most exhaustive inquiry of this unfortunate incident. It is obvious that you have been very careful to ascertain the true facts of the matter and I am satisfied that the evidence upon which you have acted will fully sustain the correctness of your report.

Your official action should put an end to the irresponsible and scurrilous rumors that have been so freely circulated over the entire country, and should be a reassurance to those of both the white and the Negro races who sincerely desire to live in peace and harmony. Any person who hereafter persists in circulating false and malicious rumors will render a distinct disservice to both races, and in the opinion of this court cannot possibly have the best interests of this country at heart.

At the completion of its report, the grand jury states the following:

In concluding our report we wish to sound a warning that the good citizens of both races be on their guard against insidious and false propaganda. In the opinion of this grand jury nothing is so likely to erode and ultimately destroy peaceful and friendly relations between the races as the dissemination of half-truths and falsehoods such as have been so freely circulated in relation to the events occurring at Columbia.

Mr. President, the incident at Columbia involved a fight which occurred between a colored boy and a white boy. However, one thing brought on another; and, before long, various rumblings which were circulated about the town indicated that the trouble might spread and cause a race riot. The Governor of Tennessee, Governor Jim McCord, was notified by the sheriff of Maury County, and Governor McCord immediately sent State patrolmen to the scene. They held the situation well in hand, without any great difficulty, until a group of National Guardsmen came there to relieve them, having been summoned, likewise, by the Governor of the State, Governor McCord.

The grand jury report, as indicated by the portion which I read a moment ago, commends the Governor of Tennessee for his quick action in this matter.

Mr. President, race questions are sometimes very serious and extremely dangerous. The population of every State in the Union—not only of the Southern States, but of all the States—is composed of members of various races. It is the earnest desire of most well-thinking people to have the members of the various races continue to live in this country, and to continue on a peaceful basis. Indeed, it is the earnest desire of all the people of the United States that peace continue to reign, especially in the relationship between the white man and the black man.

Mr. President, for the past 25 years wonderful progress in the South has been made in bringing about better feelings between the white man and the black man. The progress which has been made in Tennessee and other Southern States is indeed remarkable. There are very few communities in Tennessee at least—and I believe the same is true of almost all other sections of the South—where great improvements have not been made within the past 25 years. The greatest improvements for colored people are perhaps with respect to the schools. Schools which have been established for the use of the colored students are as good as those which have been established for the use of white students. They are comfortable, sanitary, and colored teachers are paid on the same basis as are the teachers who serve in the white schools. Conditions have improved rapidly, too. Twenty-five years is a short span of time when compared with the number of years which our Government has existed.

Mr. President, when the incident to which I have referred occurred at Columbia, the press of the country, including certain types of magazines and newspapers, carried stories relating to the occurrence which were utterly untrue. Pictures and pamphlets were circulated throughout the country with the intention of inflaming the black man against the white man. Irresponsible newspaper reporters wrote articles which were not true, and some of them were published in important daily publications throughout the country. But I have not seen very much prominence given to the report of the grand jury which I have had inserted in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

An article was carried in the Washington Post concerning the investigation by Mrs. Meyer, who visited Columbia, she said, during the investigation. That report appeared in the May 20 issue of the Washington Post. The article was very critical of the people of the South. Her story dealt disparagingly with the poor whites, as she called them, as well as with other kinds of white persons whom we are supposed to have in Tennessee. I was told by the Governor of Tennessee, who responded so promptly to the call which was made at the time the riot began, that Mrs. Meyer called his office in Nashville and talked with him about the part he had played in calling out the troops in suppressing the insurrection. He asked Mrs. Meyer to remain in Tennessee as the guest of the State, and to go to some of the colored sections in Davidson County, or in any other part of the State which she might desire to visit, in an automobile which he would furnish her to be driven by a chauffeur which he would also furnish. He stated to her that he would be glad to accompany her on such an inspection trip. He wanted especially to have her see the fine colored schools. Mrs. Meyer was in a hurry, however, and did not make the investigation. She had an opportunity to view a picture which she should have looked at before undertaking blindly to criticise—however there are none so blind as those who will not see.

Mr. President, we are called upon to exercise tolerance. It should be exercised by everyone. But the application of the rule of tolerance should be as much to one side of the line as to the other.

Racial questions are always touchy and always will be. We in the South have worked to solve problems between races. But they will never be solved so long as there are persons who desire to prevent a solution, and who continue to stir up strife and discord, and to publish untrue articles about things which have not occurred.

Mr. President, I hope that the report of the grand jury which investigated the unfortunate incident at Columbia, Tenn., will be read by every Member of the Senate. I hope also that many other persons will read it, and that it will be pointed to and consulted as being a report which was made as a result of an honest effort on the part of honest people who do not want race prejudice to occur and who want both black and white people treated equally and fairly before the law. Mr. President, I do not condone what occurred in Georgia the other day, and neither does any other Senator. It was most unfortunate and the guilty should be punished. The people of the South desire to see that peace is maintained between the white man and the black man, and if left alone and not disturbed by agitators and others who have no honest desire for peace in their hearts, such as those of the communistic type referred to in the report, we will all get along.

Incidentally, Columbia, Tenn., is in the heart of one of the finest sections of my State. It is the home of a former President of the United States, James K. Polk. His home stands there today as a shrine, and it is visited daily by people from all sections of the country.

Mr. President, I am sorry that this subject has been heretofore reported on so unfairly by persons who have not seemed to want to make an investigation to the end that the truth might be learned before undertaking to report upon it.

It is the outside agitator, the Communist, that we have most to fear.

ACCEPTANCE OF COMPULSORY JURISDICTION OF INTERNATIONAL COURT OF JUSTICE

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate Resolution 196, and, as a parliamentary inquiry, I should like to know, first, whether my motion is in order; second, if it is in order, whether the effect of the adoption of the motion would be to displace the anti-poll-tax bill; and, third, whether or not the motion is debatable, so as to permit me to make an explanation as to why I make the motion at this time.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, I did not understand the statement of the Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion is debatable. If the motion is agreed to, it will displace the pending business.

Mr. MORSE. I wish to make a very brief statement in explanation of why I think it of vital importance——

Mr. CONNALLY. Is the Senator now making the motion, or not?

Mr. MORSE. I have made the motion.

Mr. CONNALLY. If the motion is carried, it will displace the poll-tax bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's statement is correct.

Mr. BARKLEY. I was hoping the Senator from Oregon would wait until the senior Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS] arrived in the Chamber. The Senator from Utah was chairman of the subcommittee of the Committee on Foreign Relations which handled this matter. The whole committee is supporting the Senator from Utah, and we expected that he would be the one to call it up before the Senate.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. MILLIKIN. What is before the Senate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the resolution.

The CHIEF CLERK. A resolution (S. Res. 196) proposing acceptance of compulsory jurisdiction of International Court of Justice, by United States Government.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. A motion to consider the resolution is pending.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Does it take unanimous consent to consider the resolution?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oregon made a motion to consider it.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, by way of explanation——

Mr. BARKLEY. May I ask the Senator from Oregon if he wants to proceed with the motion at this time?

Mr. MORSE. I wonder if the majority leader would listen to my speech, because in the course of the explanation, I want to suggest, if it can be worked out, that we have an understanding to proceed with the resolution tomorrow, at least making it unnecessary for me to suggest the absence of a quorum tonight.

Mr. BARKLEY. I may have misunderstood the Senator when he came to me privately about this matter. I got the impression that he intended to make the motion tomorrow. I may have misunderstood him.

Mr. MORSE. I assure the Senator from Kentucky that he completely misunderstood me, that there was not anything I said that would be subject to such an interpretation, so far as my intent was concerned.

Mr. BARKLEY. I am supporting the resolution for the world court, voted for it in the committee, and it does not matter to me whether it is voted on this afternoon or tomorrow; but I did get the other impression.

Mr. MORSE. The impression I got from the majority leader was that not only was there a great possibility but that in all probability such a motion would not be made unless the Senator from Oregon made it.

Mr. BARKLEY. I did not get such an impression as that, because when the Senate first met today the Senator from Utah was here and ready to make the motion, and wanted to make the motion, but on account of the parliamentary situation at that time, he did not do so.

Mr. MORSE. I am sorry the Senator from Utah is not present, but he can read this statement in the RECORD tomorrow morning, and I am sure he will verify the facts stated, because the junior Senator from Oregon has talked to the Senator from Utah, and the Senator from Utah has no objection to the Senator from Oregon making this motion, but the Senator from Utah did not suggest that the Senator from Oregon make it.

Mr. BARKLEY. I am not suggesting that the Senator from Utah did; but the Senator from Utah was here and wanted to make the motion, and it was not possible, under the conditions at the time he was interested in making it, for it to be considered. It is immaterial to me who makes the motion. I am for the motion, no matter who makes it.

Mr. MORSE. I have no intention of calling for a vote on the motion in the absence of the Senator from Utah, but I am going to make my motion, and I should like to make an explanation as to why I think it important that the motion be made.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I make the point of order that this resolution should properly go to the Executive Calendar instead of the Legislative Calendar, because it expresses the concurrence and advice of the Senate to the President; so it has no place on the Legislative Calendar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution was reported as a legislative proposition. The Chair is of the opinion it is in order.

Mr. CONNALLY. If the Chair will read the resolution, he will find it is not joined in by the House of Representatives at all. It calls for action only by the Senate.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator from Texas suggested the same thing to me, and it occurred to me at first that it should be on the Executive Calendar, but on second thought it is not a treaty, to be put on the Executive Calendar in the same sense an ordinary treaty would be, to be considered in executive session. Therefore I must take the position that being a resolution of approval, an endorsement, a committal, and not being a treaty between this country and some other country, probably it is properly on the Legislative Calendar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The majority leader sustains the Chair.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. MORSE. For what purpose?

Mr. MURDOCK. Has the Chair ruled on the point of order made by the Senator from Texas?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair has ruled on the point of order.

Mr. MURDOCK. I should like to make the observation that if this involves legislation, and is a legislative matter, it is beyond the comprehension of the Senator from Utah how the Senate can possibly take exclusive action without referring it to the House of Representatives and then to the President. Certainly the Constitution provides that any legislative matter, any resolution or any bill proposing legislation, must, if passed by the Senate, be sent to the House, and the House must concur in it and send it to the President of the United States.

Notwithstanding the ruling of the Chair, and with all due respect to the present occupant of the chair, it seems to me that to hold that this is a legislative matter, and still hold that it does not need to go to the House, is certainly contrary to the Constitution of the United States, whether or not it conforms to the rules of the Senate.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, this resolution is based upon the agreement of the United States heretofore entered into when it became a member of the United Nations. It is a part of the United Nations set-up. The resolution itself starts by saying "That the Senate," and in the United Nations Charter, as I recall, provision is made that this International Court shall be approved by the Senate of the United States, not by the Congress.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, will the Senator from Kentucky yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. AUSTIN. I dislike very much to have the Senate proceed on the theory that it is a provision in the treaty, for it is not. The statute of the Court is made an integral part of the treaty, and the statute of the Court, provides that any member may signify, by a declaration, its recognition of the ipso facto jurisdiction of the Court. Therefore the only question that arises is, How does a state signify its adherence to that provision? The matter came up in the subcommittee of the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations, and was very thoroughly studied. We had before us, representing the American Bar Association and representing the State Department, lawyers who would be especially qualified to speak on this subject. It was their opinion that there were two methods by which the Government of the United States could make its declaration. One was by a bill, to be passed by both Houses, but the other seemed preferable, and it was the method of getting the advice and consent of the Senate, as in the case of adherence to a treaty. That requires a two-thirds vote of the Senate.

Mr. BARKLEY. That is true.

Mr. AUSTIN. That is the way the resolution adopted at the San Francisco Conference is set up. But the statute of the Court does not say that the Senate may make the declaration. It does not undertake to decide that question. Each country must for itself decide the question.

Mr. BARKLEY. Under its own constitutional processes.

Mr. AUSTIN Yes.

Mr. BARKLEY. That does not controvert the statement that the Court of International Justice is a part of the set-up of the United Nations.

Mr. AUSTIN. That is correct.

Mr. BARKLEY. It comes about by virtue of it; and that the statute which has been adopted for the Court is a part of the general program under the United Nations. I think I am correct about that.

Mr. AUSTIN. That is correct, it is an integral part.

Mr. BARKLEY. An integral part. So that the Committee on Foreign Relations, having a choice as between a resolution, to be adopted by two-thirds of the Senate, and a joint resolution or bill, to be passed on by both Houses by a majority, either one of which courses could have been pursued, has decided that the resolution formula is the course we should pursue, and in this case a two-thirds vote will be required, instead of a majority.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. MORSE. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. Section 2 of article 36 of the Charter of the United Nations reads as follows:

> The states parties to the present statute may at any time declare that they recognize as compulsory ipso facto and without special agreement, in relation to any other state accepting the same obligation, the jurisdiction of the Court in all legal disputes concerning:

And then it gives a category of causes that it may act upon.

Mr. President, the Charter says "the states party to the present statute." I confess that my own predilection is that this is a matter that can very properly be acted upon by both the Senate and the House since the article contains the word "states." Certainly the states can give consent, through their constitutional processes, by enactment of a statute saying that they give consent.

The House of Representatives has pending before it a resolution contemplating action by both bodies. But, as suggested by the Senator from Vermonth [Mr. AUSTIN] the Senate committee, after considering the matter quite thoroughly, came to the conclusion that it could be done properly by either method just as efficaciously, the one giving the consent of the Senate in the form of advice and consent to the President, and that the President should then file notice with the United Nations Organization that the United States adheres to the compulsory jurisdiction clause.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, will the Senator from Oregon yield for one more matter?

Mr. MORSE. Yes.

Mr. AUSTIN. I should like to read into the RECORD at this point from the report of the committee on page 10:

> Inasmuch as the declaration would involve important new obligations for the United States, the committee was of the opinion that it should be approved by the treaty process, with two-thirds of the Senators present concurring. The force and effect of the declaration is that of a treaty, binding the United States with respect to those states which have or which may in the future deposit similar declarations. Moreover, under our constitutional system the peaceful settlement of disputes through arbitration or judicial settlement has always been considered a proper subject for the use of the treaty procedure. While the declaration can hardly be considered a treaty in the strict sense of that term, the nature of the obligations assumed by the contracting parties are such that no action less solemn or less formal than that required for treaties should be contemplated.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I shall not repeat the remarks I made earlier this afternoon. I only wish to say that every intuitive cell in my body convinces me that it is of the utmost importance that the Senate of the United States vote upon this resolution before it adjourns. As I indicated earlier this afternoon, I know of no responsibility more grave resting upon our shoulders than to demonstrate by action to the peoples of the world that we believe that international disputes within the boundaries of international law, and in accordance with the terms of this resolution, should be settled by way of the World Court. I do not see how we can possibly go home with the world upset and torn as it is without adopting this resolution. I have talked about it to a great many Members of this body. I am absolutely convinced that if it can be brought to a vote there is no question that the resolution will be adopted. Support for this resolution throughout the United States is so overwhelming, so well founded in fact and logic, that I know the Members of this body are not going to escape the inevitable conclusion that they must reach—namely, that there is no valid reason for not adopting the resolution at this time.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MORSE. I yield.

Mr. MILLIKIN. We cannot reach that conclusion, I will suggest to the Senator from Oregon, until we have full debate of the subject. I do not know of anything more important we can do, but I think we may be a little profligate in rushing this through in the closing hours of the session.

Mr. MORSE. I am certainly not in favor of rushing it through. I am in favor, if it takes longer than the junior Senator from Oregon now thinks it may take, to stay here and take the time necessary, because I believe it is clearly our responsibility to adopt this resolution.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Mr. President, will the Senator again yield?

Mr. MORSE. I yield.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Considering its importance, if it be considered that as a matter of national exigency we should adopt the resolution, then I, too, would be willing to stay. I certainly would not be willing that the resolution be rushed through the Senate in the closing hours of this session without the fullest debate.

Mr. MORSE. I want the fullest debate.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Because I cannot think of anything more important from an international standpoint. Personally, I should like to see something brought before the Senate that would enable me to vote for adherence, but I want to know what I am voting for.

Mr. MORSE. I want the Senator from Colorado to know what he is voting for before he votes. That is why I want the fullest debate. When the Senator talks about the international importance of the resolution, I say, yes, it is of great international importance, it is of tremendous world importance, and I think that now that we have practically reached the end of our calendar we ought to take the time necessary to give full and fair consideration to this resolution and proceed to adopt it.

Mr. GEORGE rose.

Mr. MORSE. I should like to finish my explanatory statement before I yield further, Mr. President.

Mr. GEORGE. I simply wish to make an inquiry. Do I correctly understand that the Senator is now making a motion to take up the resolution for consideration?

Mr. MORSE. I have made the motion. I am now debating the motion.

Mr. GEORGE. Does the Senator wish to press for a vote on that motion this afternoon?

Mr. MORSE. That is what I want to discuss in the course of my explanation.

Mr. President, I now make the motion because of the great importance, in my judgment, of the resolution for the establishment of international justice through law. I make it also, Mr. President—and I do not want to embarrass the Senator from Vermont—I make it also out of the greatest of respect for a great record of public service which one of the great statesmen of this body has made with respect to international law. I refer to the great and distinguished Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN], who is about to leave this body in order to assume great responsibility as the representative of this Nation on the Security Council. I certainly think that it would be a fitting tribute to pay to that distinguished American citizen whose public service in my judgment—and I speak out of the depths of my heart, and the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD supports my statement—demonstrates that he is undoubtedly as able in the field of international law as any international lawyer ever produced by the United States. Through the years he has given unstinted devotion to the ideal of establishing an international order in which and through which and by which the nations of the world will settle their differences by rules of reason and by judicial processes, and thereby destroy the cause of war. What more fitting tribute could this body pay to the Senator from Vermont, than, as we send him forth to greater tasks, to demonstrate that we are back of him and intend to give him all the support we can as he pleads, as I know he will plead, in the councils of the world for the peaceful settlement of disputes by way of the World Court?

Mr. President, I have made the motion for the reason, among others, that I think the great Secretary of State, as he sits in Paris ought to be able to give a clear demonstration to the representatives of other nations participating in that peace conference that the United States of America means to keep faith with the San Francisco Charter and live up to the resolution which was adopted at the plenary session to the effect that as soon as possible the signatories to the treaty would file their declaration, accepting the compulsory jurisdiction of the World Court. I shall continue to await throughout this debate to hear any sound reason why now should not be the time for the filing of the declaration by the United States. What better evidence of support to the concept of international justice through law could we give to the nations sitting in Paris at the peace conference than the adoption of this resolution? It is the epitome, it seems to me, Mr. President, of our intent and our purpose so far as living up to the objectives of the San Francisco Charter are concerned.

Mr. President, I am well aware that my motion will displace H. R. 7. I am perfectly willing to assume the responsibility of displacing H. R. 7, because I think it has been demonstrated as clearly as it can ever be demonstrated that H. R. 7 has no chance whatsoever of passing at this session of Congress. Heretofore I have set forth my reasons for believing that it has no chance, because of the parliamentary situation in which we find ourselves. Therefore I offer no apology for making a motion which would displace House bill 7, particularly in view of the fact that my motion seeks to secure the passage through the Senate of the United States of a resolution which would give to the peoples of the world assurance that our country stands ready and wiling now to settle its disputes within the terms of the resolution through the medium of a world court.

Mr. President, I have made the motion with great hesitation. In private conversations with other Members of this body I have tried to determine whether there would be opportunity for the consideration of the resolution through a motion made by some other Member of the Senate. I have reached the conclusion that if this motion is to be made and if the resolution is to be considered at this session of Congress, it is necessary for the junior Senator from Oregon to make the motion.

I have given a great deal of time and attention to the problems involved in the resolution. I have worked with the leaders of the American Bar Association. I have worked with the outstanding international lawyers of this country. I have had conferences with representatives of the State Department. I have satisfied myself, from his own public statements, that the President of the United States is for the principle of the resolution, and I am satisfied that the Secretary of State is for the principle of the resolution. I have satisfied myself that those in the best position to know consider the resolution sound from the standpoint of international law. It should be adopted by the Senate of the United States before it adjourns. Hence I make the motion. If possible I should like to have an understanding that my motion to take up the resolution will not be voted upon tonight, thus making it unnecessary for me to suggest the absence of a quorum. If I may have the understanding that upon the convening of the Senate tomorrow my motion to proceed to the consideration of Senate Resolution 196 will be the first order of business, that arrangement will be perfectly satisfactory to me. If I cannot have such an understanding I must suggest the absence of a quorum, because I do not wish to have my motion considered with only a portion of the Members of the Senate present. The resolution is too important to the future peace of the world for us to vote on the motion at this late hour tonight without a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MORSE] to proceed to the consideration of Senate Resolution 196.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, if the motion is to be pressed tonight I must suggest the absence of a quorum. I do not believe that the motion ought to be pressed tonight. I am perfectly willing to have the motion remain pending and be the unfinished business when the Senate convenes tomorrow.

Mr. MORSE. I make that unanimous consent request.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, it is not necessary to make a unanimous consent request. If we do not pass on the motion tonight it will be the pending question when we convene tomorrow following a recess.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. MURDOCK. If the unanimous-consent request is agreed to, is it too late to appeal from the ruling of the Chair on the question whether Senate Resolution 196 is a legislative matter or an executive matter? I cannot forget the fact that we are operating in the Senate under the Constitution of the United States; and I cannot for the life of me understand how the Senate can act on what is so obviously an executive matter without going into executive session. If any Member of the Senate can point out to me how the Senate can act on legislative matters without such matters being referred to the House of Representatives, and why such matters require a two-thirds majority, I should like to have it pointed out. If there is any provision of the Constitution which provides for legislative matters being considered by the Senate exclusively, and determined by a two-thirds vote, I should like to have any lawyer in the Senate point it out to me. I may be mistaken. There may be such a provision in the Constitution, but up to this time I have found none. I am not aware of such a provision.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is of the opinion that the two-thirds vote required does not make necessary the consideration of the resolution in executive session.

Mr. MURDOCK. The resolution itself provides—

> Two-thirds of the Senators present concurring therein—

Whether it was so intended or not, the resolution itself makes the subject one to be considered as a treaty. It provides for the procedure prescribed by the Constitution for considering a treaty.

Under the Constitution all legislative powers are vested in the Congress, consisting of a Senate and a House of Representatives. I am as anxious as is the Senator from Oregon to proceed to the consideration of the resolution, but I must insist, if we take it up, that we take it up under the Constitution. The resolution itself makes it an executive matter. It gives it the dignity of a treaty. So if the resolution so provides, then certainly the Senate should go into executive session for its consideration, and proceed with it as a treaty. In my opinion that is exactly what it is.

So far as the unanimous consent request is concerned, I reserve the right to appeal from the decision of the Chair on the question whether the Senate must resolve itself into executive session to consider this subject.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I wish merely to observe that there is nothing in the Constitution with reference to the legislative calendar or the executive calendar. For the convenience of the Senate, in making up the calendars executive business is placed on the executive calendar. Formerly an executive session was a closed session for the consideration of executive business. That is how it got its name. Treaties and nominations were formerly considered in closed sessions. The Senate later amended its rules. It pursued the custom of requiring an executive session for the consideration of executive business, but executive business is now considered in open executive session.

There is nothing in the Constitution which says anything about whether we should have one calendar or two calendars. We could place all the business on the same calendar. We could go into executive session to consider nominations and treaties, as we do. I do not think there is anything unconstitutional about the procedure in connection with a subject requiring a two-thirds vote. It does not make any difference whether it is considered in legislative session or executive session. Under the Constitution we are not required to go into executive session in order to pass upon a question which requires a two-thirds majority.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. President, if the Senator wishes to take the position that at this late date, the Senate having for many years acted on treaties in executive session and on legislative matters in legislative session, the Senate may now with propriety absolutely disregard its customs and rules and may now handle executive business in legislative session, then, of course, I agree with him that so far as the Constitution is concerned that is probably in order. But it seems to me that it would be very irregular for the Senate to take the position that we can handle executive business such as this, a subject having the dignity of a treaty, without following the rules of the Senate and going into executive session.

Mr. BARKLEY. The question of having an executive session does not depend upon whether the proposal requires a two-thirds majority. We confirm nominations by a bare majority, in executive session. We ratify treaties by a two-thirds majority in executive session. The Senate might have started from the beginning without having what we call executive sessions, but that would not modify the constitutional provision that a treaty must be ratified by a two-thirds vote.

It is immaterial to me whether we do this in executive session or legislative session. In my judgment it would not disrupt the rules to consider the resolution in legislative session.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is immaterial to the Chair; but the Senator from Kentucky has stated the situation as the Chair understands it.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. President, does the Senator from Kentucky take the position that this is a legislative matter?

Mr. BARKLEY. To be perfectly frank, it partakes of the nature of both executive and legislative. Under the statute which has been referred to by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN], which is a part of the United Nations program, it is provided that the statute may be adhered to under the constitutional processes of the various States which deal with it. In a sense it is legislative. In a sense it may be executive. It makes no difference whether we regard it as an executive or legislative matter. The resolution itself requires a two-thirds majority. If the Senate is to act upon it as if it were a treaty—not because it is a treaty, but as if it were a treaty—the two-thirds rule would apply, whether it were considered in executive session or in legislative session.

Mr. MURDOCK. If the majority leader wishes to take the position that the rules of the Senate with regard to executive business, as distinguished from legislative business, are so inconsequential that we should not observe them and that we can handle an executive matter in legislative session without paying any attention to the Senate rules, while I hesitate to do so, I disagree with him.

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not take that position.

Mr. MURDOCK. It seems to me that the Senator does.

Mr. BARKLEY. In a sense, this is a mixture. It is not exactly a treaty between this country and another country with regard to a particular subject. It is a question of adhering to an organization which has been established under a statute of the United Nations. As the Senator from Vermont has pointed out, adherence to the statute could be accomplished by an act of both Houses, which would be signed by the President; or it could be accomplished by Senate ratification, as if it were a treaty, which would require a two-thirds vote. The committee decided to pursue that course.

Mr. MURDOCK. I have noticed a tendency in the Senate, especially in the past several years, to treat lightly our treaty-making powers. We have been willing to forget all about what the Constitution says with regard to treaties.

And now it seems, on the ground of convenience and expediency, we are willing to consider as legislation matters which, in my opinion, should never be treated as anything but treaties, and to adopt a procedure whereby an executive agreement may be ratified by means of a simple Senate resolution.

Mr. President, it seems to me that what we now have before us certainly has the dignity of a treaty. It has the effect and the result of a treaty. I am unwilling to throw the rules of the Senate to the winds and to consider the matter as a mixture of executive and legislative business.

In my judgment we should draw the line between what is executive business and what is legislative business; and when we have an executive matter, we should follow the rules of the Senate relative to executive procedure.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. MORSE. I wish to make two points in connection with my statement of the parliamentary inquiry. In the first place, I understand that the Chair has ruled that my motion is in order. In the second place, I understand that the majority leader has stated that my motion will be in order at the beginning of the session tomorrow, if we take a recess tonight and if it remains, at the time of the taking of the recess, the pending business; and that, therefore, unanimous consent will not be required in order to make it the pending business at the beginning of the session tomorrow. Is that correct?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The statement of the Senator from Oregon is correct.

Mr. MORSE. If that be so, then I say to my good friend, the Senator from Utah [Mr. MURDOCK], that the discussion in which he is participating now is a discussion of the merits of my motion, and I respectfully suggest we should proceed with it tomorrow afternoon when we can have a full attendance of the Members of the Senate rather than take it up at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state to the Senator from Utah that, no business having been transacted, an appeal from the ruling of the Chair will still be in order.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. President, did I correctly understand the Chair to state that an appeal from the ruling of the Chair will be in order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is correct.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. MURDOCK. I yield.

Mr. GEORGE. I wish to say that unless this resolution is advice and consent of the Senate for the President to take a highly important act, it is nothing. It can be only that. I do not think it material whether the resolution appears on the Executive Calendar, although that has been our custom, or whether it appears on the Legislative Calendar. But what it is—and it is that or nothing—is the advice and consent of the Senate of the United States for the President of the United States to consent to the compulsory jurisdiction of the International Court. I take issue flatly and squarely with the distinguished Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] when he says that this matter might be handled by a simple concurrent resolution to be adopted by the two Houses. I do not think so. Not only is it a treaty, but it is a treaty of the highest importance. This resolution raises definitely and distinctly the question which the Senate should consider, and which I shall insist that it consider; namely, whether this International Court, itself, by the acceptance of compulsory jurisdiction upon our part, acquires the function of determining whether a question is essentially a domestic question or whether the Court itself has the final right to say whether any juridical matter submitted to it involves a domestic question. Let me say that if I can define what is going on in this country and what has been going on, it is that a large number of Americans think that by adopting resolutions and hastily entering into international agreements, we can make certain and steadfast the peace of the earth. I am as strongly in favor of any step which looks to the peace as any man who has ever occupied a seat in this body has been or can be; but we are not going to obtain peace by the mere passage of laws. We are not going to put an end to war by the mere passage of laws or the adoption of resolutions, or by adhering to every type and kind of international agreement which anyone in the State Department or elsewhere can think of. It is high time that the American people know what they are agreeing to and what they are committing themselves to, and that they have a firm conviction about it, because only in the firm conviction and in the high resolve to carry through from day to day and from year to year is there any possible hope for peace, through anything that we have done thus far or through anything that is now being proposed.

I have no moral doubt that this resolution is but one thing, namely, the advance advice and consent of the Senate for the President to perform an act which will for a stipulated period commit us to an international agreement which is of the utmost importance to the American people.

Therefore, I am glad that the Senator is not going to press for a vote on his motion that the Senate consider the resolution, and that he will not endeavor to have the Senate take it up until tomorrow. I shall have no objection to having the Senate consider it, let me say.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GEORGE. I yield.

Mr. MORSE. I simply wish to say to the distinguished Senator from Georgia that I am in complete concurrence with his remarks. I feel as he does.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, as I have said, I shall have no objection to having the Senate take up the resolution, but I do not think we should stumble blindly into such a situation that a mere majority vote of the Senate can commit us to the compulsory jurisdiction of a court on which we probably shall have a representative, but on which we need not actually have anything like an influential voice.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I wish to respond to one thing the Senator from Oregon has said. The Senator from Oregon said that he became convinced that this motion never would be offered in the Senate unless he offered it. Let me say that the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS], the chairman of the subcommittee of the Committee on Foreign Relations, held hearings and gave this matter very careful and serious attention. He happens to be temporarily absent, at the moment, but during the day he conferred with me several times. He is anxious to have the resolution taken up and considered by the Senate. He had every intention of trying to bring it up either this afternoon or tomorrow.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. MURDOCK. I have talked to my colleague today about the matter, and he deplored the fact that the resolution was not before the Senate. I am sure there is no Senator who is more anxious than he to have it considered, and I am sure it was his intention to endeavor to bring it up.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, let me say that, as chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee, I deferred to the Senator from Utah. I could have presented the matter to the Senate; but the Senator from Utah had done so much work on it, that I deferred to him, and I recommended that he handle it. He has conferred with me a number of times, not later than this morning; and he was very anxious and indeed insistent that he be given an opportunity to call up the resolution.

I say that, in response to the suggestion made by the Senator from Oregon that he, the Senator from Oregon, was the only person who was qualified to bring up the resolution.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Is this matter before the Senate as a legislative matter or as a treaty?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That question probably will be determined tomorrow morning.

Mr. MILLIKIN. It has not as yet been determined. Is that correct?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It has not as yet been determined.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Do I correctly understand that that is not implicit in the ruling which the Chair has already made?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair has ruled that there is still the right of appeal from the ruling of the Chair.

Mr. MILLIKIN. May I ask the Chair to be kind enough to state what is the ruling which bears on the question whether this matter is a treaty or is a legislative matter?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The ruling was that the matter is legislative, and does not require consideration in executive session.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Mr. President, a further parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Has an appeal been taken from the ruling of the Chair?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that the Senator from Utah [Mr. MURDOCK] took an appeal from the ruling of the Chair.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. President, let me say that I reserved the right to appeal tomorrow from the decision of the Chair, when the matter comes before the Senate.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I wish the record to be perfectly clear in regard to the position taken by the senior Senator from Utah. Of course, he can speak for himself, tomorrow, when he is on the floor. Let me say now that just before the senior Senator from Utah left the floor this afternoon, I had a conference with him. I talked to him about the possibility of having the resolution presented. He indicated very clearly to me, as I think he himself will testify tomorrow, that it was not his expectation to bring up the resolution. I said to him, "Under those circumstances, then, do you have any objection if I make the motion?" He said, "None whatsoever." Furthermore, he said to me that if I did make the motion, he would support it.

That is the substance of a conversation which I had with the senior Senator from Utah within 5 minutes of the time when he left the floor this afternoon.

Mr. President, insofar as I am concerned, I have no pride of authorship in this matter. I am not interested in who gets credit for any parliamentary move which is made on the floor of the Senate in connection with the resolution; but I am devoted to the great principles which it involves. I am perfectly willing to yield to any other Senator who may desire to make the motion. I only say, Mr. President, let us go ahead tomorrow and debate this resolution on its merits, and proceed to give the American people a decision as to the position of the Senate of the United States in regard to the question whether the United States should accept the compulsory jurisdiction of the world court.

TRANSACTION OF EXECUTIVE BUSINESS

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I am compelled to leave the Chamber. I wish to have the nominations on the Executive Calendar confirmed. They will take but only a moment of the Senate's time.

I ask unanimous consent, as in executive session, that the Senate consider the nominations on the Executive Calendar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

As in executive session,

The Presiding Officer (Mr. HUFFMAN in the chair) laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations, which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(For nominations this day received, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

As in executive session,

The following favorable reports of nominations and a treaty were submitted:

By Mr. OVERTON, from the Committee on Commerce:

Commodore Ellis Reed-Hill, United States Coast Guard, to be a rear admiral for temporary service to rank as such from the 1st day of August 1946; and

The following two Coast Guard officers to be professors in the United States Coast Guard:

Commander Henry S. Sharp, United States Coast Guard with rank of lieutenant, with date of rank as lieutenant from May 15, 1935; and Lt. Robert E. Reed-Hill, United States Coast Guard, with the rank of lieutenant (junior grade).

By Mr. WALSH, from the Committee on Naval Affairs:

Admiral Jonas H. Ingram, United States Navy, to be an admiral in the Navy, for temporary service, to rank from the 15th day of November 1944;

Rear Adm. Herbert G. Hopwood, United States Navy, to be Director of Budget and Reports in the Department of the Navy, with the rank of rear admiral, for a term of 3 years; and Pay Director Walter A. Buck to be Paymaster General and Chief of the Bureau of Supplies and Accounts in the Department of the Navy, with the rank of rear admiral, for a term of 4 years.

By Mr. WAGNER, from the Committee on Banking and Currency:

Dillon S. Myer, of Ohio, to be Administrator of the United States Housing Authority in the National Housing Agency.

By Mr. GEORGE, from the Committee on Finance:

Sundry candidates for promotions in the Regular Corps of the United States Public Health Service.

By Mr. CONNALLY, from the Committee on Foreign Relations:

Louis G. Dreyfus, Jr., of California, now Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary to Iceland, to be Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary to Sweden; and

The following-named persons to be Foreign Service officers, unclassified, vice consuls of career, and secretaries in the diplomatic service:

John M. Kavanaugh, of Louisiana;
Stephen A. Koczak, of New Jersey;
David J. S. Manbey, of California; and David E. Mark, of New York.

Executive J, Seventy-ninth Congress, second session, a treaty of general relations and protocol between the United States of America and the Republic of the Philippines, signed at Manila on July 4, 1946; without amendment (Ex. Rept. No. 10).

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no further reports of committees, as in executive session, the clerk will state the nominations on the calendar.

FOREIGN SERVICE

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Louis G. Dreyfus, Jr., of California, to be envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary of the United States of America to Sweden.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of John M. Kavanaugh, of Louisiana, to be Foreign Service officer, unclassified, vice consul of career, and secretary in the Diplomatic Service of the United States of America.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Stephen A. Koczak, of New Jersey, to be Foreign Service officer, unclassified, vice consul of career, and secretary in the Diplomatic Service of the United States of America.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of David J. S. Manbey, of California, be Foreign Service officer, unclassified, vice consul of career, and secretary in the diplomatic service of the United States.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of David E. Mark, of New York, to be Foreign Service officer, unclassified, vice consul of career, and secretary in the diplomatic service of the United States of America.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

GOVERNOR OF PUERTO RICO

The legislative clerk read the nomination of JESÚS T. PIÑERO, of Puerto Rico, to be Governor of Puerto Rico.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

POSTMASTERS

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations of postmasters.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the nominations of postmaster be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nominations of postmasters are confirmed en bloc.

THE NAVY

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations in the Navy.

Mr. BARKLEY. I ask unanimous consent that the nominations in the Navy be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nominations in the Navy are confirmed en bloc.

Mr. BARKLEY. I ask unanimous consent that the President be notified of all nominations confirmed today.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the President will be notified forthwith.

That concludes the calendar.

ORDER OF RECESS

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate concludes its deliberations today, it stand in recess until 11 o'clock tomorrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

TREATY OF GENERAL RELATIONS AND PROTOCOL WITH THE PHILIPPINE REPUBLIC

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, as in executive session I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Executive J (79th Cong., 2d sess.) being a treaty of general relations and protocol with the Republic of the Philippines.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the treaty and protocol, Executive J (79th Cong., 2d sess.), a treaty of general relations and protocol with the Republic of the Philippines, signed at Manila on July 4, 1946, which was read the second time, as follows:

TREATY OF GENERAL RELATIONS BETWEEN THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA AND THE REPUBLIC OF THE PHILIPPINES

The United States of America and the Republic of the Philippines being animated by the desire to cement the relations of close and long friendship existing between the two countries, and to provide for the recognition of the independence of the Republic of the Philippines as of July 4, 1946 and the relinquishment of American sovereignty over the Philippine Islands, have agreed upon the following articles:

ARTICLE I

The United States of America agrees to withdraw and surrender, and does hereby withdraw and surrender, all right of possession, supervision, jurisdiction, control or sovereignty existing and exercised by the United States of America in and over the territory and the people of the Philippine Islands, except the use of such bases, necessary appurtenances to such bases, and the rights incident thereto, as the United States of America, by agreement with the Republic of the Philippines, may deem necessary to retain for the mutual protection of the United States of America and of the Republic of the Philippines. The United States of America further agrees to recognize, and does hereby recognize, the independence of the Republic of the Philippines as a separate self-governing nation and to acknowledge, and does hereby acknowledge, the authority and control over the same of the Government instituted by the people thereof, under the Constitution of the Republic of the Philippines.

ARTICLE II

The diplomatic representatives of each country shall enjoy in the territories of the other the privileges and immunities derived from generally recognized international law and usage. The consular representatives of each country, duly provided with exequatur, will be permitted to reside in the territories of the other in the places wherein consular representatives are by local laws permitted to reside; they shall enjoy the honorary privileges and the immunities accorded to such officers by general international usage; and they shall not be treated in a manner less favorable than similar officers of any other foreign country.

ARTICLE III

Pending the final establishment of the requisite Philippine Foreign Service establishments abroad, the United States of America and the Republic of the Philippines agree that at the request of the Republic of the Philippines the United States of America will endeavor, in so far as it may be practicable, to represent through its Foreign Service the interests of the Republic of the Philippines in countries where there is no Philippine representation. The two countries further agree that any such arrangements are to be subject to termination when in the judgment of either country such arrangements are no longer necessary.

ARTICLE IV

The Republic of the Philippines agrees to assume, and does hereby assume, all the debts and liabilities of the Philippine Islands, its provinces, cities, municipalities and instrumentalities, which shall be valid and subsisting on the date hereof. The Republic of the Philippines will make adequate provision for the necessary funds for the payment of interest on and principal of bonds issued prior to May 1, 1934 under authority of an Act of Congress of the United States of America by the Philippine Islands, or any province, city or municipality therein, and such obligations shall be a first lien on the taxes collected in the Philippines.

ARTICLE V

The United States of America and the Republic of the Philippines agree that all cases at law concerning the Government and people of the Philippines which, in accordance with Section 7 (6) of the Independence Act of 1934, are pending before the Supreme Court of the United States of America at the date of the granting of the independence of the Republic of the Philippines shall continue to be subject to the review of the Supreme Court of the United States of America for such period of time after independence as may be necessary to effectuate the disposition of the cases at hand. The contracting parties also agree that following the disposition of such cases the Supreme Court of the United States of America will cease to have the right of review of cases originating in the Philippine Islands.

ARTICLE VI

In so far as they are not covered by existing legislation, all claims of the Government of the United States of America or its nationals against the Government of the Republic of the Philippines and all claims of the Government of the Republic of the Philippines and its nationals against the Government of the United States of America shall be promptly adjusted and settled. The property rights of the United States of America and the Republic of the Philippines shall be promptly adjusted and settled by mutual agreement, and all existing property rights of citizens and corporations of the United States of America in the Republic of the Philippines and of citizens and corporations of the Republic of the Philippines in the United States of America shall be acknowledged, respected and safeguarded to the same extent as property rights of citizens and corporations of the Republic of the Philippines and of the United States of America respectively. Both Governments shall designate representatives who may in concert agree on measures best calculated to effect a satisfactory and expeditious disposal of such claims as may not be covered by existing legislation.

ARTICLE VII

The Republic of the Philippines agrees to assume all continuing obligations assumed by the United States of America under the Treaty of Peace between the United States of America and Spain concluded at Paris on the 10th day of December, 1898, by which the Philippine Islands were ceded to the United States of America, and under the Treaty between the United States of America and Spain concluded at Washington on the 7th day of November, 1900.

ARTICLE VIII

This Treaty shall enter into force on the exchange of instruments of ratification.

This Treaty shall be submitted for ratification in accordance with the constitutional procedures of the United States of America and of the Republic of the Philippines; and instruments of ratification shall be exchanged and deposited at Manila.

Signed at Manila this fourth day of July, one thousand nine hundred forty-six.

PROTOCOL TO ACCOMPANY THE TREATY OF GENERAL RELATIONS BETWEEN THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA AND THE REPUBLIC OF THE PHILIPPINES, SIGNED AT MANILA ON THE FOURTH DAY OF JULY 1946

It is understood and agreed by the High Contracting Parties that this Treaty is for the purpose of recognizing the independence of the Republic of the Philippines and for the maintenance of close and harmonious relations between the two Governments:

It is understood and agreed that this Treaty does not attempt to regulate the details of arrangements between the two Governments for their mutual defense; for the establishment, termination or regulation of the rights and duties of the two countries, each with respect to the other, in the settlement of claims, as to the ownership or control of real or personal property, or as to the carrying out of provisions of law of either country; or for the settlement of rights or claims of citizens or corporations of either country with respect to or against the other.

It is understood and agreed that the conclusion and entrance into force of this Treaty is not exclusive of further treaties and executive agreements providing for the specific regulation or matters broadly covered herein.

It is understood and agreed that pending final ratification of this Treaty, the provisions of Articles II and III shall be observed by executive agreement.

Signed at Manila this fourth day of July, one thousand nine hundred forty-six.

For the Government of the United States of America:

PAUL V. McNUTT

For the Government of the Republic of the Philippines:

MANUEL ROXAS

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, this is more or less of an interim treaty with the Philippines, and it is dated July 4, 1946, the day the Philippines attained a status of a republic. It is contemplated that later a treaty will be entered into which will be more comprehensive and in greater detail. The Committee on Foreign Relations considered this treaty and protocol and had the State Department represented before it. I think it is desirable that the Senate give its approval.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The treaty and protocol is open to amendment. If there be no amendment to be proposed, the treaty and protocol will be reported to the Senate.

The treaty and protocol was reported to the Senate without amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution of ratification will be read.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

Resolved (two-thirds of the Senators present concurring therein), That the Senate advise and consent to the ratification of Executive J, Seventy-ninth Congress, second session, the treaty of general relations and protocol between the United States of America and the Republic of the Philippines, signed at Manila on July 4, 1946.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution of ratification. [Putting the question.] Two-thirds of the Senators present concurring therein, the resolution of ratification is agreed to, and the treaty and protocol is ratified.

PROHIBITION OF POLL TAX IN FEDERAL ELECTIONS

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the body of the RECORD a letter which I have received from Edgar G. Brown, director of National Negro Council.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

NATIONAL NEGRO COUNCIL,
Washington, D. C., July 30, 1946.

Senator WAYNE MORSE,
Senate Building, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR MORSE: As director of the National Negro Council, I wish to emphatically assure you that our organization, representing a major part of the 13,000,000 colored Americans in this country, 1,000,000 of whose sons and daughters served this country in the military services during World War II, are unequivocally in agreement with your pointed observation delivered Monday on the floor of the Senate. The so-called friends of the anti-poll-tax legislation turned out to be our bitterest enemies. The present prearranged and signed cloture petition, set 2 days in advance of any debate which could be characterized as a filibuster by even professional jokers under the guise of a "gentleman's" agreement, must be dismissed as puerile and unfortunate. The unholy deal was cheap politics that will fool no one, but those who entered into it in the final outcome.

It amounts to a parliamentary lynching of the anti-poll-tax legislation no less saddening to the decent thinking people and those Americans who seek to gain the same voting rights for the 10,000,000 disfranchised in the seven poll-tax States of the South as enjoyed by those of the 41 other States and as guaranteed by the Constitution to all regardless of race, class, color, or religion.

The National Negro Council therefore is compelled to insist that you, as a true friend, defer indefinitely, this obvious plan to ditch the anti-poll-tax legislation with this gesture, proposed in another cloture vote already set in advance. We call upon you in keeping with your consistent and honest leadership, to resort to your same strategy of statesmanship and justice to assure 10,000,000 disfranchised Americans, equal rights in the poll-tax States, if it means keeping the Senate in session all summer, cloture or no cloture. The unholy alliance of minority southern Senators can and must be broken. Let them talk themselves politically to death, rather than let them crucify the Constitution in denying the majority of the Senators the right to vote for or against the anti-poll-tax legislation.

Will you see that the anti-poll-tax bill gets something better than funny treatment such as proposing the rightness of the cart before the horse. Such parliamentary tactics will never work political charms upon an alerted electorate next November nor subsequently. We commend you and your heartening leadership and statesmanship.

Very sincerely yours,

EDGAR G. BROWN,
Director.

ALLEGED DISHONESTY AND CORRUPTION IN CONNECTION WITH WAR CONTRACTS

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, the wartime contracts of the Erie Basin Metal Products Co., Batavia Metal Products Co., and allied companies have been the subject of careful investigation by the Special Committee Investigating the National Defense Program. Being privileged to serve on this committee, I consider it my duty to make certain observations concerning the activities of persons associated with the munitions combine which have had the calculated intent or the necessary effect of corrupting or influencing public officials, both high and low, in the execution of their public trust.

I do not propose to relate here all the facts which have been developed in the hearings or to anticipate the committee's conclusions, which will be reported in due time as a formal committee report. In my opinion, particular matters should be brought officially to the notice of the Senate before it adjourns and that is my purpose in speaking today.

The hearings have shown conclusively certain financial manipulations involving public funds which most people would have thought fantastic and impossible. A $3,000,000 contract was awarded to a company not then in existence, headed by a man without demonstrated experience as a manufacturer and a producer, and whose moral and financial responsibility, if investigated, would have been disclosed to be questionable. Nearly a million dollars of public funds were advanced on that contract to a corporation organized without tangible assets, which advance is now shown to have been wholly unsecured by a valid obligation of a financially responsible organization. A million dollars of public funds were overpaid on the termination of a contract with Batavia Metal Products Co. Huge sums of money were expended for administrative salaries, traveling expenses and other expenses, such as propaganda and entertainment, and for the renovation and improvement of physical properties in which the war contractors expending those sums had only a tenant's interest expiring at the end of the war.

These are some of the financial manipulations to which I have referred. The question in my mind is how such fantastic operations could have been possible unless sanctioned by Government officials who failed in their high duty of protecting the public interest and safeguarding the public funds.

One obvious answer is that officials down the line had been persuaded to give special consideration and special favors to these contractors. The conclusion is also inescapable that those favors were not merely in the nature of courtesies, or more prompt attention to the various matters which, were handled for the contractors, but that they involved outright corruption. My belief in this matter is strengthened by the crass and shameful attempts to buy off a member of the committee and of the staff in the vain hope that we would be dissuaded from continuing the investigation. If this is the technique employed against a committee of the Senate, how many attempts were made to influence Government officials to act against the interests of the Government and in favor of these contractors?

Perhaps that question will never be fully answered. The committee has been unable so far to obtain the full facts because no records were kept by these contractors which would disclose such activities. Of course some company officials, and also Mr. Benjamin Franklin Fields, who has a mysterious and unexplained relationship to them, have not made their knowledge available to the committee. Both Mr. Fields and Dr. Henry Garsson refused to testify before the committee on the ground that their answers might tend to incriminate or degrade them. Mr. Murray Garsson saw fit to remain in Cuba for his health.

The committee has traced a number of the attempts to corrupt and improperly influence Government officials. I hope that one outcome of the committee's labors will be to make the Nation's Capital an unprofitable and unhealthful place for men of the Benjamin F. Fields stripe, who prey upon the Government and seek to buy influence with money, parties, gifts, and favors. The available evidence, though incomplete, in my opinion warrants the severest condemnation of these practices. For example, the renegotiation officials testified that they had disallowed as an improper expense $19,213 sought to be charged by these companies to the Government for gifts. This sum was itemized as follows:

6 pen and pencil sets	720
2 cigarette lighters	376
Liquor and liquor baskets	255
17 cases of bourbon and 14 liquor baskets	823
9 cases of rum	1,399
10 gold pen and pencil sets	918
Do	918
100 cases of liquor	5,363
Gifts and liquor	2,812
Do	3,080
Total	19,213

It should be noted that this expenditure of $19,213 by Erie Basin Metal Products Co. was for 1 year only, 1943. The committee has not obtained as yet the details on similar expenditures made by this company for the years 1944 and 1945. I propose to urge that the committee seek the full facts concerning such expenditures and others made on behalf of the Batavia Metals Products Co. I also believe the committee should inquire into the expenditures made in connection with a wedding party on January 2, 1944, by Murray Garsson and ascertain whether or not they were charged directly or indirectly to the war contracts of any of these companies, and allowed as costs of performance on Government contracts. I will urge further that the committee obtain the detailed breakdown of the following expenses:

First. Expenditures by Murray Garsson for entertainment and propaganda expenses in the amount of $13,000 in 1943.

Second. Expenditures by Joseph Freeman for travel expenses in the amount of $15,290 in 1944.

Third. Expenditures by Murray Garsson for travel expenses in the amount of $9,978 in 1944.

Fourth. Expenditures by Dr. Henry Garsson for "Travel expenses" in the amount of $9,472 in 1944.

Fifth. Similar expenses for other years and for other companies where the funds of such companies or rather the funds of the Government allocated to these companies for the making of munitions were used not only to obtain privileges and favors from Government officials in the higher and lower echelons, but also to obtain special consideration from suppliers.

If the committee is not able to obtain all of that information, possibly it may be obtained by the Department of Justice in its investigation of the affairs of these companies. The Department of Justice should give special attention to expenditures of the sort I have described, and if it finds that such expenditures are violative of Federal criminal statutes, I urge that it prosecute violation relentlessly. Only by enforcement of statutes designed to punish those who corrupt public officials can confidence in the handling of public affairs and public funds be restored.

The honesty of public officials is a basic pillar of democracy. Without trustworthy public servants our form of government is sure to crumble and collapse. It should be remembered that the Mead committee has found other cases where public funds were loosely, carelessly, or corruptly handled and where wrongdoers escaped detection and punishment for their unfaithful handling of a public trust. The committee has heard the fantastic story of Commander Blodgett who appropriated 1,500 pounds of Government meat and 500 pounds of Government butter to his own use, and upon a whitewash investigation by the Navy, was acquitted at a court martial. The committee has heard of the wholesale diversion of public funds in the submarine ship stores and the civilian housing areas at Pearl Harbor, and of the misspending of public funds by high-ranking officials in the Navy and the misappropriation of Government property at San Juan, P. R.

The Erie Basin investigation is the first case of war profiteering publicly heard by the committee after the termination of hostilities. Other instances of corruption and improper influencing of Government officials undoubtedly will be uncovered before the committee completes its war-profiteering investigations.

When the evidence is finally gathered, the Congress should give it due attention and adopt appropriate preventive measures for the future. A bill at the present time would be somewhat premature, and of course on the eve of adjournment the Congress cannot do justice to far-reaching legislation even if the full facts were available. I direct attention to this matter now so that it may be given consideration and thought by the Senators, and also for the purpose of urging them to cooperate with the Mead committee by referring to it instances of corruption and improper influence which may come to their notice from time to time.

Mr. President, no one can condone the activities of these contractors in illegally and improperly influencing Government officials or officials of suppliers by resorting to gifts and favors. The claim has been made that this was done to further the war effort. It is an insult to Government workers and to the reputable suppliers of these companies to say that unless they were paid to "expedite" the performance of their functions, the war effort would have been retarded. In this instance, as it appears to me, an allegedly desirable end cannot justify clearly reprehensible means.

However, the activities of the contractors, corrupt and improper as they may have been, do not rate so low as the conduct of Government officials, some of them in military uniform, who have taken an oath to protect and preserve the Government which employs them, and which has entrusted sacred public funds to their care. The contractors' activities can be partially explained because of their natural self-interest. The activities of public employees stand without any such qualifying explanation. Stripped of niceties in wording, such conduct was, at the very least, disloyalty to a principle. To the extent that it hampered and interfered with the war effort, although such result may not have been intended, it approached traitorous conduct. When the Nation is fighting for its very existence, there should be no room for thought of individual self-interest. In my opinion, true patriotism guided the work of the great majority of our public officials, military and civilian. It is unjust to them that a few individuals in time of crisis put their personal interest and advantage above that of their country.

I cite as an example of reprehensible conduct the case of Albert W. Jacobson. The evidence shows that time and again he appeared to have had an important, if somewhat obscure, part in repeated episodes throughout the course of the Chemical Warfare Service's relationships with these contractors, in many of which episodes the Government lost and the contractors gained improperly. Jacobson was sent to investigate these companies when allegations of improper business methods were made, and he returned to report that such allegations were without foundation. He had important duties to perform with respect to a bond to secure the Government in the advance of nearly one million dollars of public funds which, it now appears, was never a valid obligation on the part of a responsible surety. He handled the legal phases of various contracts between the Erie Basin and Batavia companies and the Chemical Warfare Service. He went to Elgin to "assist" renegotiation officials in connection with difficulties that were being experienced with these contractors. He was assigned to assemble material in response to this Committee's request. He prepared the report and included certain statements which, if relied upon by the Committee, would have wholly misled the Committee as to these contractors' activities. He is reported to have made recommendations concerning the handling of the overpayment of nearly one million dollars to Batavia, which, if followed, would have been to the detriment of the Government and to the benefit of the contractor. Repeatedly and continuously before the Committee he avoided frank and open admissions, and so confused his own testimony as to make it unreliable as a basis for Committee conclusions.

No less than three times Jacobson swore under oath that he had never been present at the Washington office of Erie Basin and Batavia, but subsequently and conveniently his memory was refreshed after a witness had been unsuccessfully prompted to be "hazy" about her recollection of his presence at those offices. Jacobson was reported by another witness to be receiving $20,000 a year from these companies. He rose from a $1,500 a year clerk to a $9,975 head of a legal section during the time when he was so solicitous of the contractors' interest and so unfaithful to the interests of the Government, his employer. It was Jacobson who obtained from Congressman MAY, who he stated was only casually known to him, a glowing recommendation for his reinstatement to the bar.

This man Jacobson should not be permitted to remain 1 hour longer in the employ of the Government in the face of all the evidence which brands him as an unfaithful public servant. Recently the press carried a report of his suspension by the War Department, but prior to that reported action Gen. A. H. Waitt, Chief of the Chemical Warfare Service, informed the committee that Jacobson was on "sick leave" and offered the opinion that separation from the Government would be "rather drastic" action. This is a startling conclusion, and it does not speak well for the general, who must accept the responsibility for his continued employment.

To say that such action would be "drastic" when American soldiers fought and died around the world is a terrible commentary on the conduct of officials in this branch of the War Department. The committee proposes to look further into the affairs of the Chemical Warfare Service. High-ranking officers of this Service danced and cavorted at wedding parties and had their hotel and food bills paid by Garsson & Co.

The American people, who fought and toiled with all their might to defeat a savage enemy, will be interested to learn that on or about the day when Murray Garsson's daughter was to be wed, the War Department found it "necessary in the military service" that these officers be ordered to New York City. By singular coincidence, New York required simultaneously the presence of Maj. Gen. William N. Porter for temporary duty in connection with chemical warfare training, Brig. Gen. Paul X. English for temporary duty in connection with chemical warfare procurement, Col. Lowell A. Elliott for temporary duty in connection with chemical warfare administration, Lt. Col. Gordon B. Kaufmann for temporary duty in connection with chemical warfare administration, Brig. Gen. Alden H. Waitt for temporary duty in connection with chemical warfare research and development, and Mr. Albert W. Jacobson for temporary duty in connection with chemical warfare procurement. These individuals attended the Garsson wedding and were given per diem or travel allowances by the Government. Following the committee's disclosures, the General Accounting Office has disallowed these travel expenses in an effort to recover them for the Government.

General Waitt, who found himself so busily occupied with "chemical warfare research and development" the day after the wedding, described his visit to New York as a "mission" to speed the construction of a poison gas plant by giving a "pep talk". He was impressed with the salutary influence on the war effort exerted by the presence of his rank and uniform. When the Committee inquired whether he had made a report on the outcome of his "mission", he replied "I didn't have any report to make but to myself." This appears to me an exhibition of unbridled military arrogance if not utter irresponsibility as a public servant.

I call attention to the fact that General Waitt in a report to the Under Secretary of War, attempted to discredit the Inspector General's report which showed an overpayment of one million dollars by the Chemical Warfare Service to the Batavia Metal Products Co. General Waitt asserted that the Inspector General's report was unsupported by the evidence, but he admitted on oath that he had never read the supporting evidence.

If General Waitt carries his responsibilities so lightly in dealing with dollars, what shall we conclude when he deals with lives—the lives of American soldiers who were killed because of defective munitions? General Waitt was quick to maintain that the 4.2-inch motar shells produced by the Erie Basin companies were excellent in quality, but at the same time he did not know who produced shells which burst in the mortar barrel or at the muzzle, killing and maiming our own men.

The committee was told that mortar shells were produced under the direction of the Chemical Warfare Service since 1942, and yet 3 years later in the Battle of the Bulge the mortar was rendered almost useless for a time because of defective shells. As a precaution against barrel and muzzle bursts from defective shells, it was necessary to fire the mortar with a lanyard, reducing the rate of fire from 20 shells per minute to 2 shells per minute.

How many American soldiers were killed by defective 4.2-inch mortar shells? General Waitt did not know. Who had manufactured these defective shells? General Waitt did not know. Had the existence of these defective shells been previously known to the Chemical Warfare Service? General Waitt could not answer. Had mortar shells been tested under weather conditions similar to those of the ETO? General Waitt could not answer.

The general suggested that the fault of the shells lay in the design rather than in the production and admitted that he still does not know completely what was wrong with these shells. And while, in his own words, he "sweated blood" to find the answers, he did not find them, but found time to go to fancy parties, even as American boys spilled blood because somebody fell down on the job back home.

In a second appearance before the committee, General Waitt repudiated part of his previous testimony as erroneous, offering the explanation that he had been confused and fatigued.

The errors and contradictions in this testimony are so patent as to raise a legitimate question about the general's technical competence for his job, let alone his moral caliber. The committee received a report, tentative and incomplete, of 47 incidents resulting from defective 4.2-inch mortar shells, which brought death to 29 men and injury to 83. The committee insists that full information on this matter be provided by the War Department, and accordingly General Waitt's report has been referred back for revision and amplification.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MITCHELL. I yield.

Mr. FERGUSON. I assume that this is not a final report respecting defective shells; that the committee has not had a final report so far as such shells are concerned? Is that correct?

Mr. MITCHELL. The Senator's statement is correct. The committee has insisted upon a real report. The Senator from Michigan has made that very clear in his requests to the generals who have appeared before the committee.

Mr. FERGUSON. I simply wish to say to the Senator that I received information last evening in a letter from Texas which would indicate that a certain explosion occurred there, and I should like to have the generals complete an investigation of that matter. As yet I am sure they have not completed that investigation. I make that statement so that the record may be clear that what has been said up to date is not a complete record of these analyses.

Mr. MITCHELL. That is correct.

Pursuing the tangled threads of the Garsson tie-up with the Chemical Warfare Service, the Commiittee discovered that General Waitt had undertaken to carry by his own hand a letter from Congressman MAY to General Eisenhower, soliciting the intervention of the Supreme Commander in court martial proceedings which involved Captain Joseph H. Garsson, the son of Murray Garsson. General Waitt testified that he traveled under secret orders but was unable to explain how Congressman MAY knew of his intention to go to Europe. In fact, General Waitt could not recall at first how MAY's letter came in his possession, but subsequently he mentioned that "the chairman of the Military Affairs Committee had given me a letter."

There were 12 chemical mortar battalions stationed in Europe, but General Waitt had time to visit only two or three, including the one that held Captain Garsson in custody. Garsson, who had been court martialed for flat refusal to carry out a battle order of the regimental commander, was restored to duty and received a Bronze Star for previous meritorious action, which, incidentally, General Waitt pinned on his breast.

Mr. FERGUSON. May I interrupt the Senator?

Mr. MITCHELL. I am glad to yield.

Mr. FERGUSON. Was that bronze star bestowed here in America or in Europe?

Mr. MITCHELL. It was bestowed in Europe.

Mr. FERGUSON. At the time that General Waitt was over there and had carried the message?

Mr. MITCHELL. Yes; at the time General Waitt was over there and had carried the message; when he was being solicitous about Captain Garsson's court martial.

Mr. FERGUSON. I thank the Senator.

Mr. MITCHELL. Without wishing to pass judgment on the merits of the court-martial proceeding, I may note that General Waitt saw nothing unusual in making this case a special part of his business in Europe. His intercession in Garsson's behalf he described as "a perfectly natural and normal thing" and his role in carrying MAY's letter to General Eisenhower he depicted as that of "a messenger, pure and simple." This, I may say, was a new role for General Waitt. Whereas formerly he thought the presence of his rank and uniform in New York would speed the building of a war plant, now he could detect no influence that his presence might exert in the disposition of the Garsson case. His concern for Garsson he put down as the ordinary concern for the welfare of officers in his branch of the service. When the committee elicited the testimony that he had never looked into any other court-martial proceeding, the general described his intercession as accidental. Finally, he acknowledged that influence was used in this case and that the use of such influence was unfortunate.

Before I complete my remarks, I wish to call attention to one other aspect of Captain Garsson's case which demonstrated a serious defect in military administration, and a possible factor in undermining the morale of military personnel. Garsson was promoted from lieutenant to captain ahead of other, more deserving candidates, and transferred to the Chemical Warfare Service upon the signed recommendation of General Porter, then Chief of the Service. General Porter, who was a guest at both the Garsson and Freeman weddings, disclaimed responsibility for making the recommendation of promotion and transfer, dismissing lightly the matter of his signature as routine business. General Porter emphasized in his testimony that this was merely one of hundreds of items that passed over his desk every day. He admitted that all promotions were made that way, and that any name could be slipped into a paper for his signature. I deem the signing of papers without knowing what action is involved or without accepting responsibility therefor as a dangerous kind of indifference to the requirements of public service. If responsibility does not attach to the signature, then what purpose does it serve? Administrative responsibility demands that the man who is authorized to make a decision must stand behind it with his signature, without having this authority dispersed and distributed by useless ceremonial inscriptions of top elements in the military hierarchy.

The military departments of Government have an immediate obligation to put their houses in order. They must take appropriate punitive measures against officers who are easy in morals and careless in administration. The military uniform, in too many instances, has been changed from a cloak of honor and duty to a cloak of convenience and irresponsibility. Unless their officers are invested with a new sense of austerity, dignity, and responsibility, the military will lose the confidence of the people. America today is faced with a moral crisis in which the integrity of Government is at stake. The military must do its share to insure the maintenance of honest, efficient, democratic government.

Mr. President, I have spoken longer than I intended, and many things still are left unsaid. But I wanted the Senate to be informed before its recess about the existence of these conditions in the War Department and elsewhere which have been disclosed by the Mead committee's hearings of the past 3 weeks. It is my sincere hope that when the next Congress convenes, it will address itself to the all-important matter of corrective legislation. It is also my hope that the Mead committee will have the support of the Members of Congress in its investigation of war profiteering during the recess.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. MITCHELL. I yield.

Mr. FERGUSON. In order that the record may be clear, is it not a fact that the committee has not completed its investigation of this subject, and that the investigation is still in progress?

Mr. MITCHELL. That is a correct statement. I made that statement at the opening of my remarks.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MITCHELL. I yield.

Mr. MAGNUSON. As both my colleague from Washington and the Senator from Michigan know, we all heartily approve of what the committee is doing, and hope that it may continue its work. I have pointed out time and again on this floor that I believed that a proper subject of investigation would be the arrogance of another Army officer during war, another head of a bureau in the War Department, namely, General Somervell. I hope the committee will proceed to investigate that subject at the proper time. Our experience with that officer was the same type of experience which I think the committee felt certain persons had with the generals. My colleague from Washington has made general reference to the subject.

In connection with the Alaskan Highway and the Canol project, in my opinion the Quartermaster General squandered practically $300,000,000 of American money with supreme arrogance, building a highway at a time when there was an Alaskan International Highway Commission in existence, without even consulting the Canadian Commission or the American Commission, and building the Canol project at a time when it was so secret that no Member of the American Congress could inquire about it, but the Canadian press could discuss it any time it wished to do so. I hope that before the committee concludes its hearings it will deal with that question.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MITCHELL. I yield.

Mr. FERGUSON. I have raised my voice on this floor in relation to the Canol project and the highway project. I think it would be worth while to continue our investigation along that line. As I understand, the committee intends to take up the Wyman case. The case, in a way, was referred to us by the Pearl Harbor Committee, which failed to go into it. It was material in that case, but it is still material to the American people. I believe that the trail of Mr. Wyman will reach up into Canada, over into Hawaii, and various other places. I am sure that the committee will complete that investigation as soon as possible.

Mr. MAGNUSON. I thank the Senator. I know that he has been most cooperative. I know that he feels as I feel on that subject. I know that the committee has many things to do, but I hope the time will come when it will go into that subject.

Mr. FERGUSON. I hope the Senate will understand that the committee is doing all it can with the force at its command. Naturally it wishes to do a thorough job on each project; and if we do not reach a given case in a short time, that does not mean that the committee will not deal with these important subjects. However, time is required for such investigations.

CONFIRMATION OF JUDICIAL NOMINATIONS

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, as in executive session I ask unanimous consent to report from the Committee on the Judiciary two nominations of United States district judges.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. WHITE. Let me inquire whether the nominations come to the Senate with the approval of the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. LANGER. They come with the approval of a majority of the Judiciary Committee. The committee was polled and a majority of the committee favored confirmation of the nominations.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the nominations will be stated.

UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGES

The legislative clerk read the nomination of James P. McGranery, of Pennsylvania, to be United States district judge for the eastern district of Pennsylvania.

Mr. LANGER. I ask unanimous consent that the nomination be confirmed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Frederick V. Follmer, of Pennsylvania, to be United States district judge for the eastern, middle, and western districts of Pennsylvania.

Mr. LANGER. I ask unanimous consent that the nomination be confirmed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

Mr. LANGER. I now ask unanimous consent that the President be immediately notified of the confirmation of the nominations.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the President will be notified forthwith.

Mr. LANGER. Let me say that I have taken this action on behalf of the Senators from Pennsylvania [Mr. GUFFEY and Mr. MYERS], who have been called away from the Senate on official business in Pennsylvania.

RECESS

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, under the order previously entered, I move that the Senate now take a recess until 11 o'clock a. m. tomorrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 6 o'clock and 35 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess, the recess being, under the order previously entered, until tomorrow, Thursday, August 1, 1946, at 11 o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

WEDNESDAY, JULY 31, 1946

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

Rev. Bernard Braskamp, D. D., pastor of the Gunton Temple Memorial Presbyterian Church, offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, in this moment of prayer, wilt Thou touch our hearts with a searching and reassuring sense of Thy nearness, Thy peace, and Thy power.

We pray that when we are challenged by difficult problems, hard tasks, and complicated situations, we may not dodge them with doubt and despair. May we not run away from them or rave and rail against them. May we never be numbered among those who drift into complacency or the cynical who become desperate with bitterness and hardness of spirit.

Help us as men of vision and valor to face all of life's experiences with forthright candor, high courage, and gallant faith. Inspire us to affirm and champion the good and to trust it. Show us how we may appropriate and apply the great ideals and principles of our blessed Lord, whereby we may achieve for ourselves and all mankind mastery in the midst of weakness, confidence in the midst of confusion, and peace in the midst of turmoil.

Hear us in His name. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT

A message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House by Mr. Miller, one of his secretaries, who also informed the House that on the following dates the President approved and signed bills and a joint resolution of the House of the following titles:

On July 29, 1946:

H. R. 3484. An act for the relief of the Poultry Producers of Central California;

H. R. 4616. An act for the relief of the Maryland Sanitary Manufacturing Corp., of Baltimore, Md.;

H. R. 5053. An act for the relief of the estate of Jasper A. Mealer; and

H. R. 6324. An act to amend and supplement the Federal-Aid Road Act of July 11, 1916, as amended and supplemented, to provide for the design and construction of dams so that they will serve as foundations for highway bridges, to provide for the design and construction of highway bridges upon and across such dams, to authorize the granting of easements and rights-of-way in connection therewith, and for other purposes.

On July 30, 1946:

H. R. 1151. An act for the relief of the legal guardian of James Lemuel Muzzell, a minor;

H. R. 2192. An act for the relief of Andre Dacharry;

H. R. 4486. An act to abolish the Santa Rosa Island National Monument and to provide for the conveyance to Escambia County, State of Florida, of that portion of Santa Rosa Island which is under the jurisdiction of the Department of the Interior;

H. R. 6983. An act conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to hear, examine, adjudicate, and render judgment in any and all claims which the Confederated Salish and Kootenai Tribes of Indians of the Flathead Reservation in Montana, or any tribe or band thereof, may have against the United States, and for other purposes; and

H. J. Res. 305. Joint resolution providing for membership and participation by the United States in the United Nations Educational, Scientific, and Cultural Organization, and authorizing an appropriation therefor.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Frazier, its legislative clerk, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the House of the following titles:

H. R. 1860. An act to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to issue a duplicate of Porterfield scrip certificate No. 53 to the Muskegon Trust Co., Muskegon, Mich., as trustee of the John Torrent trust;

H. R. 3973. An act to amend the act entitled "An act to provide reemployment rights for persons who leave their positions to serve in the merchant marine, and for other purposes," approved June 23, 1943 (57 Stat. 162), and for other purposes;

H. R. 6057. An act to amend the act of July 11, 1919 (41 Stat. 132), relating to the interchange of property between the Army and the Navy, so as to include the Coast Guard within its provision;

H. R. 6896. An act to grant to the city of Miles City, State of Montana, certain land in Custer County, Mont., for industrial and recreational purposes and as a museum site;

H. R. 7020. An act to provide for the acquisition by exchange of non-Federal property within the Glacier National Park; and

H. R. 7126. An act to amend section 2 of the act of July 16, 1946 (Public Law 514, 79th Cong.), relating to the establishment and operation in the District of Columbia of nurseries and nursery schools, so as to permit payment of compensation for services rendered after June 30, 1946, and prior to the enactment of such act.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed, with amendments in which the concurrence of the House is requested, bills of the House of the following titles:

H. R. 4435. An act to establish the Theodore Roosevelt National Park; to erect a monument in memory of Theodore Roosevelt in the village of Medora, N. Dak.; and for other purposes; and

H. R. 7039. An act to further amend section 304 of the Naval Reserve Act of 1938, as amended, so as to grant certain benefits to naval personnel engaged in training duty prior to official termination of World War II.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

S. 1250. An act for the relief of certain claimants who suffered losses and sustained damages as the result of the campaign carried out by the Federal Government for the eradication of the Mediterranean fruitfly in the State of Florida;

S. 2000. An act to amend the Civil Service Retirement Act, approved May 29, 1930, as amended, so as to make such act applicable to officers and employees of the Columbia Institute for the Deaf; and

S. 2236. An act providing for a medal for service in the merchant marine during the present war.

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the amendment of the House to a bill of the Senate of the following title:

S. 881. An act authorizing the President of the United States to award posthumously in the name of Congress a Medal of Honor to William Mitchell.

The message also announced that the Senate insists upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 5560) entitled "An act to fix the rate of postage on domestic air mail, and for other purposes," disagreed to by the House; agrees to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. CHAVEZ, Mr. MCKELLAR, Mr. HAYDEN, Mr. BAILEY, Mr. ELLENDER, Mr. REED, Mr. LANGER, and Mr. BUCK to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

PROCEEDINGS AGAINST GEORGE MARSHALL

Mr. RANKIN, from the Committee on Un-American Activities, submitted the following report on the proceedings against George Marshall, which was referred to the House Calendar and ordered to be printed:

The Committee on Un-American Activities, as created and authorized by the House of Representatives by House Resolution 5 of the Seventy-ninth Congress, caused to be issued a subpena to George Marshall, chairman of the National Federation for Constitutional Liberties, with offices at 205 East Forty-second Street, New York, N. Y. The said subpena required the said person to produce books, papers, and records of the organization for the inspection of your committee. The subpena is set forth as follows:

"To the SERGEANT AT ARMS OR HIS SPECIAL MESSENGER:

"You are hereby commanded to summon Mr. George Marshall, chairman, National Federation for Constitutional Liberties, 205 East Forty-second Street, room 1613, New York City, to be and appear before the Un-American Activities Committee of the House of Representatives of the United States, of which the Honorable JOHN S. WOOD is chairman, and to bring with you all books, records, documents, and correspondence pertaining to the National Federation for Constitutional Liberties relating to the solicitation and disbursement of funds with a list of all contributors, in their chamber in the city of Washington, on February 20, 1946, at the hour of inquiry committed to said committee; and he is not to depart without leave of said committee.

"Herein fail not, and make return of this summons.

"Witness my hand and the seal of the House of Representatives of the United States at the city of Washington this 23d day of January 1946.

"JOHN S. WOOD,
"Chairman.

"Attest:

"JOHN W. CARRINGTON,
"Clerk."

The said subpena was duly served, as appears by the return made thereon by George V. McDavitt, an investigator for your committee:

"Served R. Shaftel, secretary to George Marshall, who contacted Mr. George Marshall by phone. R. Shaftel read the original subpena to Mr. Marshall over the phone and Mr. Marshall informed his secretary (R. Shaftel) to accept same. Miss Shaftel was served at 4:30 p. m. on February 5, 1946, at the private offices of George Marshall located on the twelfth floor, at 38 East Fifty-seventh Street, Borough of Manhattan, city of New York.

"GEORGE V. MCDAVITT,
"Investigator."

In response to the said subpena the said George Marshall appeared before your committee on April 11, 1946, and your committee then and there demanded the production of the said books, papers, and records, and the said Marshall refused to produce as required by the said subpena. The said Marshall was duly sworn by the chairman and gave his testimony under oath and refused to answer certain pertinent questions. The material parts of his testimony follow:

"The CHAIRMAN. No; the question now is whether he will answer the question that was asked him, whether or not he has any connection with the organization known as the Marshall Foundation, and if so, what it is.

"Mr. MARSHALL. Well, I do really wish to state why I feel that this committee——

"The CHAIRMAN (interposing). Mr. Marshall, speaking for myself, you have stated your objection. I am not concerned about the various reasons. What I want to know is do you object to answering the question for any reason? Are there any reasons that impel you to refuse to answer the question? First, I would like to know whether or not you refuse to answer it?

"Mr. MARSHALL. I would like to advise you, sir, that that is beyond the scope of this inquiry, as to how you can judge this without hearing what my objections are.

"The CHAIRMAN. It might be open to that line of reasoning if you first tell us whether you are going to answer it or not. If you answer it, your reasons for not answering it are not material.

"Mr. MARSHALL. But I think you would withdraw your question if you would hear what my reasons are.

"The CHAIRMAN. First I would like to hear your answer, whether you do answer it or do not. Then if you want to give reasons for it, all right.

"Mr. MARSHALL. I would like for you to rule on that before I have to answer, but I don't see how you can rule on it unless you hear what my reasons are.

"The CHAIRMAN. I can't rule on it at all.

"Mr. MARSHALL. Well, this seems to me to be putting me in a very difficult position. I am, in a sense, being possibly put into some sort of jeopardy here in the ordinary legal sense, and myself performing the functions that a judge in a court proceeding would perform in ruling as to whether or not this is a pertinent question.

"The CHAIRMAN. Do you think it would put you in jeopardy to say whether you are going to answer that question or not?

"Mr. MARSHALL. Well, I don't know whether I really would. It is a matter that is really pretty well known, but it seems to me that that question, as well as others are outside the scope of this inquiry, and I am taking the principal position, sir—I don't see the point.

"Mr. RANKIN. Don't see what point?

"The CHAIRMAN. I am trying to be patient about the matter and asking the witness a very simple question. If the witness desires to answer the question he may do so; if not, let him say he is not going to answer it. Which do you do?

"Mr. MARSHALL. I want to explain, sir——

"Mr. RANKIN (interposing). I demand, Mr. Chairman, that the witness is in contempt already.

"The CHAIRMAN. Just answer the question.

"Mr. RANKIN. I demand that he answer the question now and quit trying to argue with the chairman.

"The CHAIRMAN. I am trying my best to get him to do that.

"Mr. MARSHALL. I have it here, the Constitution itself [indicating].

"Mr. RANKIN. We know the Constitution of the United States, too. We have all read it. Mr. Chairman, I demand that this witness quit treating this committee with contempt and answer this question or refuse to answer it.

"The CHAIRMAN Mr. Rankin, I am trying my best to get him to do that.

"Mr. RANKIN. I am just telling him what I think he ought to do.

"The CHAIRMAN. What is your answer, Mr. Marshall? Do you answer it or not?

"Mr. MARSHALL. I would like to state the ingredients of principle——

"The CHAIRMAN (interposing). Just answer the question if you want to answer it; if not, say you are not going to answer it. Which do you do?

"Mr. MARSHALL. I would answer the question after I have the opportunity of stating why I feel that it is an improper question for this particular inquiry.

"The CHAIRMAN. Suppose you answer it. Then if you have some reasons to give for it that are pertinent, I will be glad to put them in the record. Suppose you answer the question or refuse to answer it.

"Mr. MARSHALL. But isn't the point, sir, that I assume that if I can persuade you of the reasonableness and correctness of my position you would not pursue this question?

"The CHAIRMAN. I thought you said you would answer it

"Mr. MARSHALL. If you rule, after hearing my objections that you still feel I must answer it.

"The CHAIRMAN. The question was asked you by a member of the committee, Mr. Thomas. You have the privilege of saying that you decline to answer, if you want to, or of answering it. Now, do one or the other without further quibbling. Let us get along. We have got other things to do.

* * * * * * *

"The CHAIRMAN. This committee cannot devote all day long listening to you quibble about the matter. You know whether you are going to answer or not.

"Mr. LANDIS. You are making it hard on us. Either answer or decline to answer.

"Mr. MARSHALL. If you rule that I must answer it now, I will decline to answer it. If I may indicate why I feel that that is outside the scope of this general inquiry, and I would be very glad to save all of the time, Mr. Wood, by indicating at the same time that I feel that the material asked for——

"The CHAIRMAN (interposing). I understand then that you decline to answer it? Is that right?

"Mr. MARSHALL. With the understanding that I may give my reasons for my objection to that question.

* * * * * * *

"The CHAIRMAN. You did not produce those records at the hearing in New York?

"Mr. MARSHALL. No; I did not. I stated my objections.

"The CHAIRMAN. I understand, but you did not produce them?

"Mr. MARSHALL. No, sir.

"The CHAIRMAN. Have you got them here?

"Mr. MARSHALL. Well, I would like to have the opportunity to briefly and a little more coherently than I was given the opportunity to do, to summarize what my objections are to it.

"The CHAIRMAN. First answer the question, if you have got them or haven't got them. Have you got them?

"Mr. ADAMSON. We let him put his full statement into the record in New York, a long statement.

"Mr. THOMAS. That is his last statement. That is why I asked that it be brought down here.

"The CHAIRMAN. The question is asked you now if you didn't bring them from New York? Have you got them here now? You know whether you have got them here or not?

"Mr. MARSHALL. Yes; I know that certainly, but you see, I would like to, if I may, after answering that, indicate why I object to what the subpena calls for, and the two questions go together.

"The CHAIRMAN. Let us have a definite understanding now. If after you answer this question there are any reasons that you have for answering as you do, other than what you already put into the record here today or at a previous hearing, you will be given that privilege. Now, did you produce them here today?

"Mr. MARSHALL. I did produce for the record on Monday—I understand they are part of the record of this entire hearing—some 43 exhibits which seemed to me to be pertinent material out of which the committee could judge whether or not they have the right to go on and examine the internal affairs of our organization. I do not have with me all of the records.

"The CHAIRMAN. Called for by the subpena?

"Mr. MARSHALL. I do not have all of the records called for by the subpena."

Because of the foregoing the Committee on Un-American Activities has been deprived of the opportunity to inspect the books, papers, and records mentioned in the foregoing subpena and of the evidence contained therein which your committee considers relevant to the subject matter of subversive and un-American activities as set forth in House Resolution 5 of the Seventy-ninth Congress, first session, which instructed and required your committee to investigate such matters. The willful and deliberate refusal of George Marshall to testify, as set forth herein, and to produce the books, papers, and records as called for in the subpena deprives your committee of the evidence necessary to conduct its investigation of the National Federation for Constitutional Liberties, which evidence is pertinent to the said investigation, and places the said George Marshall in contempt of the House of Representatives of the United States.

"HOUSE RESOLUTION

"Resolved, That the Speaker of the House of Representatives certify the foregoing report of the House Committee on Un-American Activities as to the willful and deliberate refusal of the following person to produce before the said committee for its inspection certain books, papers, and records which had been duly subpenaed, and to testify under oath concerning all pertinent facts relating thereto; under seal of the House of Representatives to the United States attorney for the District of Columbia to the end that the said person named below may be proceeded against in the manner and form provided by law: George Marshall, 205 East Forty-second Street, New York, N. Y."

PROCEEDINGS AGAINST RICHARD MORFORD

Mr. RANKIN, from the Committee on Un-American Activities, submitted the following report on the proceedings against Richard Morford, which was referred to the House Calendar and ordered to be printed:

The Committee on Un-American Activities, as created and authorized by the House of Representatives by House Resolution 5 of the Seventy-ninth Congress, caused to be issued a subpena to Richard Morford, director of the National Council of American-Soviet Friendship, Inc., with offices at 114 East Thirty-second Street, New York City, N. Y. The said subpena required the said person to produce books, papers, and records of the organization for the inspection of your committee. The subpena is set forth as follows:

"To the SERGEANT AT ARMS OR HIS SPECIAL MESSENGER:

"You are hereby commanded to summon Mr. Richard Morford, director of the National Council of American-Soviet Friendship, Inc., located at 114 East Thirty-second Street, New York City, N. Y., to be and appear before the Un-American Activities Committee of the House of Representatives of the United States, of which the Honorable JOHN S. WOOD is chairman, and to produce all books, records, papers, and document showing all the receipts and disbursements of money by the National Council of American-Soviet Friendship, Inc., and all correspondence, memoranda, and communications with any and all persons, together with a complete list of all affiliated organizations for the year 1945 in their chamber in the city of Washington, on February 20, 1946, at the hour of 10 a. m. then and there to testify touching matters of inquiry committed to said committee; and he is not to depart without leave of said committee.

"Herein fail not, and make return of this summons.

"Witness my hand and the seal of the House of Representatives of the United States at the city of Washington on this 6th day of February 1946.

"JOHN S. WOOD,
"Chairman.

"Attest:

"JOHN W. CARRINGTON,
"Clerk."

The said subpena was duly served, as appears by the return made thereon by John W. Carrington, clerk to your committee:

"Served to Mr. Morford personally at his office at 114 East Thirty-second Street, New York City, on February 11, 1946, at 3:30 p. m.

"JOHN W. CARRINGTON,
"Clerk."

In response to said subpena the said Richard Morford appeared before your committee on March 6, 1946, and your committee then and there demanded the production of the said books, papers, and records, and the said Morford refused to produce as required by the said subpena. The said Morford was duly sworn by the chairman and gave his testimony under oath and refused to answer certain pertinent questions. The material parts of his testimony follow:

"The CHAIRMAN. I just asked if you are prepared now to produce the records in conformity with the subpena?

"Mr. MORFORD. These records do not appear to be here, sir.

"The CHAIRMAN. You have such records?

"Mr. MORFORD. The records are in my custody in the office of the council; yes, sir.

"The CHAIRMAN. Very well. Are you prepared now to produce today, in conformity with this subpena, all the books, records, and documents showing disbursements of money for the year 1945, of the National Council of Soviet-American Friendship?

"Mr. MORFORD. We believe that this material is outside the proper scope of your investigation.

"The CHAIRMAN. I understand, but I didn't ask you that.

"Mr. MORFORD. That is my reply.

"The CHAIRMAN. I just asked if you have got them here ready to produce to this committee in conformity with the subpena. That is a simple question. You know whether you have got them or not.

"Mr. MORFORD. I am trying to make an explanation to you, sir.

"The CHAIRMAN. You have already made the explanation, and I gave you permission to do that. Now, I want you to answer the question, Have you got them in conformity with the terms of this subpena?

"Mr. MORFORD. I have not the record here.

"The CHAIRMAN. You have such records?

"Mr. MORFORD. I have such records, sir.

"The CHAIRMAN. Now, I will ask you whether or not you have got and are prepared to produce all your correspondence, memoranda, and communications with any and all persons, together with a complete list of your subsidiary organizations?

"Mr. MORFORD. No; because we count this a completely unreasonable request, and without the terms of the resolution under which this committee acts. As a practical matter, I do not have those records at the moment.

"The CHAIRMAN. You have them in your possession?

"Mr. MORFORD. They are at the office.

"The CHAIRMAN. I will ask you one further question. If one of our investigators should come to your office in New York City, thereby saving you the burden and inconvenience of producing them and bringing them here, will you permit him to see them?

"Mr. MORFORD. It would be still my responsibility not to permit him to investigate those records.

"The CHAIRMAN. I didn't ask you about responsibility; I ask you if you would permit him to investigate those records.

"Mr. MORFORD. I would not permit him to do that.

"The CHAIRMAN. That is all, so far as I am concerned.

* * * * *

"Mr. ADAMSON. Let me read it again, only a few words: 'The Soviet case, even on the issue of procedure, stands up far better than the position of the United States.'

"Mr. MORFORD. You see, you are taking it out of context. That is the reason I would like to read from the copy of it. It is only a question of procedure that is involved, and that has nothing to do with attacking a system.

"Mr. ADAMSON. If that statement appears in your Reporter as I have read it then would you say that that was an expression of position on the part of the national council?

"Mr. MORFORD. Well, that is a publication of the national council. We do not necessarily have to stand for every word that may be uttered in that publication.

"Mr. ADAMSON. Who prepared this bulletin called the Reporter?

"Mr. MORFORD. That is the responsibility of our publications committee.

"Mr. ADAMSON. Who is the committee?

"Mr. MORFORD. Now you are moving in an area in which you are asking about the internal structure and operations of our organization, and that is a point which I have indicated to you goes beyond the scope of your committee.

"Mr. MUNDT. Do you know who edits the Reporter? Do you know, and don't want us to know who edits the Reporter?

"Mr. MORFORD. I don't want to answer, because that is a matter that is beyond the scope of your investigation, according to our judgment.

"Mr. MUNDT. A question of any investigatory scope at all certainly would attach itself to the editor of a publication, about the wisdom of statements of which we have doubts. Certainly, if we have any investigatory powers at all, we would want to know who is responsible for statements that are un-American, if they are so demonstrated to be.

"Mr. MORFORD. If it is true that your investigatory powers enable you to move in to ask for the total information concerning the internal structure and operations of our organization, it is at that point that I have indicated to you that we feel that it is outside the proper scope of your operations in terms of your authority by Congress to investigate un-American propaganda activities.

"Mr. ADAMSON. We are getting off the track. I ask you, did you write it?

"Mr. MORFORD. This is October 15. I did not write it.

"Mr. ADAMSON. Do you write them now?

"Mr. MORFORD. I do not write the material for the Reporter.

"Mr. ADAMSON. All right then; who is responsible for the preparation and publication of the material in this bulletin of yours called the Reporter?

"Mr. MORFORD. I have stated that I refused to——

"Mr. ADAMSON (interposing). You refuse to answer that question?

"Mr. MORFORD. I have indicated to you the publications committee, and beyond that I feel it is within my province not to furnish you further information at that point concerning the structure of our organization.

"Mr. ADAMSON. Do you refuse to answer that question?

"Mr. MUNDT. He refuses to identify the members of that committee. Is that right?

"The CHAIRMAN. Is that correct?

"Mr. MORFORD. On a basis of principle, you see.

"The CHAIRMAN. I am not asking about what basis it is. Do you decline to divulge the names of your publications committee?

"Mr. MORFORD. I think at this point it is proper for me to indicate that I may not go into the matter further of the internal affairs of this organization.

"The CHAIRMAN. You do decline to furnish that information?

"Mr. MORFORD. That is the answer that I want to make.

* * * * *

"Mr. MORFORD. I do not think that I can give you the names, sir, of the members of the publications committee.

"The CHAIRMAN. You mean you don't know them, or you refuse to give them?

"Mr. MORFORD. I do know them. I do not wish to give them.

"The CHAIRMAN. You decline to give them?

"Mr. MORFORD. I decline. This publication is a publication of the council and will stand on its own merits. I think there is nothing in that statement that in any way can be construed as being un-American or subversive. We are entitled to an opinion—as a group putting out material we are entitled to an opinion, and under our rights under the first amendment, and on that basis then, unless you can make a judgment about that is satisfactory in proving that to be un-American and subversive, then, if it is not false, beyond that it is not our responsibility to furnish further information. It does not make any difference who wrote that particular article or who the particular committee was that stands behind that article."

Because of the foregoing, the Committee on Un-American Activities has been deprived of the opportunity to inspect the books, papers, and records mentioned in the foregoing subpena and of the evidence contained therein which your committee considers relevant to the subject matter of subversive and un-American activities as set forth in House Resolution 5 of the Seventy-ninth Congress, first session, which instructed and required your committee to investigate such matters. The willful and deliberate refusal of Richard Morford to testify, as set forth herein, and to produce the books, papers, and records as called for in the subpena deprives your committee of the evidence necessary to conduct its investigation of the National Council of American-Soviet Friendship, Inc., which evidence is pertinent to the said investigation, and places the said Richard Morford in contempt of the House of Representatives of the United States.

"HOUSE RESOLUTION

"Resolved, That the Speaker of the House of Representatives certify the foregoing report of the House Committee on Un-American Activities as to the willful and deliberate refusal of the following person to produce before the said committee for its inspection certain books, papers, and records which had been duly subpenaed, and to testify under oath concerning all pertinent facts relating thereto; under seal of the House of Representatives to the United States attorney for the District of Columbia to the end that the said person named below may be proceeded against in the manner and form provided by law: Richard Morford, 114 East Thirty-second Street, New York, N. Y."

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that my colleague the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. HAGEN] may extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an article on veterans. I am informed by the Public Printer that this will exceed two pages of the RECORD and will cost $150, but I ask that it be printed notwithstanding that fact.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, notwithstanding the cost, the extension may be made.

There was no objection.

Mr. SPENCE asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD relating to H. R. 6722, a bill he introduced.

Mr. WALTER asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a newspaper article.

Mr. SAVAGE asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD in two instances and include in one an editorial.

Mr. BRADLEY of Pennsylvania asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD in two instances; to include in one correspondence passing between him and his colleagues from Pennsylvania, Messrs. MCGLINCHEY, GRANAHAN, and BARRETT, and in the other, on the subject of price control.

THADDEUS C. KNIGHT

Mr. DURHAM. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Military Affairs I call up S. 528, for the relief of Thaddeus C. Knight, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I understand this is simply a bill that the War Department has approved correcting the record of an Army officer.

Mr. DURHAM. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield, the War Department has not approved the bill, due to this fact: Under the Articles of War the War Department has no authority to correct an error in a court-martial case where later evidence proves a case of forgery, and this is such a case.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I know about this legislation. I withdraw my reservation of objection, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Whereas Thaddeus C. Knight, formerly a captain, Quartermaster Corps, United States Army, was convicted on April 28, 1926, by a general court martial for the violation of the ninety-third and ninety-sixth articles of war and sentenced to be discharged from the military service and to serve 5 years in prison. The said Thaddeus C. Knight was discharged from the Army in accordance with the findings of the court martial and served 2 years of the sentence imposed upon him, at which time he was paroled. Since the carrying into execution of the findings of the court martial it has been determined that the testimony upon which the said Thaddeus C. Knight was convicted was perjured and untrue and that the conviction of the said Thaddeus C. Knight by general court martial was without foundation in law or in fact: Therefore

Be it enacted, etc., That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized to appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, the said Thaddeus C. Knight, a captain in the Quartermaster Corps, United States Army, and to retire him and place him on the retired list of the Army as a captain with the retirement pay and allowances of that grade; and in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, or benefits upon persons who have served in the military service of the United States and who have been honorably discharged therefrom, the said Thaddeus C. Knight shall be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from such service as of the date of his separation therefrom; but not back pay or allowance shall be held to have accrued by reason of this act, prior to its passage.

DISPLACED PERSONS

Mr. KLEIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. KLEIN. Mr. Speaker, I have today introduced a bill providing for the immigration to this country of displaced persons. My bill would provide that all unused quotas in the past year, for example, those from England, Germany, and other countries, which are seldom used, could be used for the benefit of these displaced persons. This follows the suggestion recently made to the Secretary of State by Fiorello LaGuardia, Director of UNRRA, and also conforms with a suggestion or plan of President Truman. In this way we can help relieve the situation in Europe and get some of those displaced persons out. We can do our share in this country, and then we can expect other countries, such as Great Britain and countries of South America, to do their share as well. In this way we may be able to get a majority of the 600,000 displaced persons, now homeless, settled somewhere. I know the bill will not pass in this session, but I hope it will be the first order of business in the Eightieth Congress.

COMMODITIES RATIONED OR ALLOCATED UNDER JURISDICTION OF THE SECRETARY OF AGRICULTURE

Mr. FLANNAGAN. Mr. Speaker, I present a privileged resolution (H. Res. 721) from the Committee on Agriculture, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of Agriculture is requested to submit to the House of Representatives a list of all commodities rationed or allocated under his jurisdiction together with a break-down of the percentages of each allocated for essential purposes and the definition of essentiality as to each commodity.

Mr. FLANNAGAN. Mr. Speaker, I have received from the Secretary of Agriculture a complete report giving the information requested in the resolution, and have furnished the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. JOHNSON] a copy of that report, which he will insert in the RECORD for the benefit of the Members of the House.

Mr. Speaker, I move that the resolution be laid on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. JOHNSON of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. FLANNAGAN] has sent me a copy of the report of the Secretary of Agriculture to which he has just referred. His letter of transmittal and the report are as follows:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES U. S.,
COMMITTEE ON AGRICULTURE,
Washington, D. C., July 31, 1946.

Hon. ANTON J. JOHNSON,
House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

Dear ANTON: I have secured from the Secretary of Agriculture the information called for in the Resolution you introduced on July 22, 1946, House Resolution 721, and I am enclosing herewith copy of the report.

If there is any further information I can obtain, kindly let me know.

With all good wishes, I am

Sincerely yours,

JNO. W. FLANNAGAN, JR.,
Chairman.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
Washington, D. C., July 30, 1946.

Hon. JOHN W. FLANNAGAN, JR.,
Chairman, Committee on Agriculture,
House of Representatives.

DEAR MR. FLANNAGAN: The following statement is submitted in reply to your letter of July 23 enclosing a copy of House Resolution 721, which requests the Secretary of Agriculture to submit to the House of Representatives a list of commodities rationed or allocated under his jurisdiction.

By Executve order, the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized and directed to ascertain all requirements against United States food supplies, including foregn requrements, and to make allocations to meet essential needs. In discharging this responsibility, the Secretary of Agriculture is assisted by the interagency Food Requirements and Allocations Committee, which is composed of representatives of the Departments of State, Commerce, War, and Navy, in addition to representatives of the Department of Agriculture. Allocations are made by the Secretary of Agriculture after they have been fully considered by this Committee and its commodity subcommittees. In these committee deliberations, the position of the Department of State, for example, is given great weight when the foreign policy of the United States has a bearing on the allocation being discussed. Committee recommendations are submitted to the Secretary of Agriculture, who makes final decisions regarding allocations. Export licenses are issued by the Department of Commerce in accordance with allocations to foreign claimants.

The United States position with regard to distribution of United States food supplies is presented to the International Emergency Food Council (formerly the Combined Food Board) where every effort is made to coordinate the proposed programs of the various supplying countries in order to insure that exportable supplies from all sources may be used as effectively as possible to meet world food needs. The IEFC has no power to determine the destination of United States food supplies. It is an agency for the coordination of national programs through mutual agreement. The Council provides a forum for consultation among exporting countries and importing countries regarding exportable supplies and minimum import requirements.

At the present time, the following foods and related items are under formal allocation:

Meats, fats and oils, selected dairy products, canned fish, dry beans and peas, rice, rye, corn, oats, barley, sugar, dried fruits, spices, protein feeds,[1] cocoa beans.

Wheat, although in very short supply relative to desperate needs in many war-torn countries, is not formally under allocation. Monthly export programs are prepared for wheat and wheat substitutes which establish limits on the quantities which may be exported to designated foreign claimants. These limits are established after consideration of the quantities that are available for export and the relative urgency of the need among foreign claimants.

A commodity is removed from allocation when it reaches a supply position which permits the essential requirements of all claimants to be met. For example, eggs, potatoes, and canned fruits and vegetables were recently removed from allocation when it became reasonably certain that the various claimants would be able to procure sufficient quantities to meet their essential needs. The current annual allocations of dried fruits and spices expire on August 31 and September 30, respectively.

Sugar is the only food item that is being rationed at the consumer level. The Secretary of Agriculture is responsible for determining the total quantity allocated to United States civilians, while actual distribution among individual consumers is under the jurisdiction of the Office of Price Administration.

The enclosed tables indicate (1) the percentage distribution of United States food supplies among major claimants during the fiscal year 1945–46 and (2) the quantities and percentages of specified commodities that have been tentatively allocated to the major claimants during the July-September 1946 quarter.

In determining the essential requirements of United States civilians for particular commodities, reference is made to such factors as average prewar per-capita consumption, estimated current civilian market demand, and the availability of other foods that are required for adequate nutrition with special reference to the availability of substitutes for the commodity in question. A basic consideration is the minimum quantity that is necessary to avoid serious geographic maldistribution of available market supplies in the absence of consumer rationing, with special reference to maintenance of adequate operating stocks.

Requirements submitted by foreign claimants must be accompanied by a full statement of justification. These requirements are also screened in the context of information available through the Office of Foreign Agricultural Relations in the Department of Agriculture and through our agricultural attachés in the various claimant countries regarding indigenous production and the quantity of food available in urban areas.

Sincerely yours,

CLINTON P. ANDERSON,
Secretary.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from West Virginia?

There was no objection.

[Mr. ELLIS addressed the House. His remarks appear in the Appendix.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. SPRINGER asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a newspaper editorial.

Mr. BYRNES of Wisconsin asked and was given permission to extend his own remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD.

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a letter from the Commerce Department.

SPECIAL ORDER GRANTED

Mr. REES of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 10 minutes today following the disposition of business on the Speaker's desk and the conclusion of special orders heretofore entered.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. ANGELL asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in two instances in the RECORD and to include an excerpt in each.

Mr. LEMKE asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in two instances in the RECORD and include therein excerpts.

Mrs. LUCE asked and was given permission to extend her remarks in the RECORD in two instances and to include therein certain newspaper excerpts.

Mr. FARRINGTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and include therein a discussion of the military defense in Hawaii by United States District Judge Frank McLaughlin. I am informed by the Public Printer that the extension will cost $240.

The SPEAKER. Notwithstanding the cost and without objection, the extension may be made.

There was no objection.

Mr. WOLVERTON of New Jersey asked and was given permission to extend his own remarks in the RECORD in two instances, one relating to foreign trade and the other to the shipbuilding industry.

THE NATIONAL DEBT

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, we are coming to two ends. First, we are coming to the end of this session of Congress, which will be on Friday. I think that will be a good thing for the country and especially for the Members of Congress. The longer in session the more they spend. Second, we are coming to the end of the Treasury's ability to stand such spending. When you look at the national debt, it is $269,000,000,000. That is the greatest debt in the world. Where will you get the money? You are going to have to put your noses to the grindstone and get out and work and teach the people of this country that we all have to work and earn and save if we are going to keep this country from going into bankruptcy. There is one way we can do that, and that is by everybody putting their shoulder to the wheel, eliminating all the strikes in the country, and produce, thus cutting down the cost of commodities so that people can buy them. The law of supply and demand will then go to work and there will be no need for OPA. We can do away, and should at once, with many of the agencies of Government; many are expensive joy rides for New Dealers.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. CASE of South Dakota (at the request of Mr. ARENDS) was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

CANTON, S. DAK., INSANE ASYLUM

Mr. HOLMES of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (S. 2426) providing for the conveyance to the city of Canton, S. Dak., of the Canton Insane Asylum, located in Lincoln County, S. Dak.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Commissioner of Public Buildings is authorized and directed to convey by quitclaim deed to the city of Canton, S. Dak., all right, title, and interest of the United States in and to all lands, including the buildings and other improvements thereon, constituting the old Canton Insane Asylum, located to the east of the city of Canton, Lincoln County, S. Dak.

SEC. 2. The lands conveyed pursuant to the provisions of the first section of this act shall be used by the grantee for park, recreation, airport, or other public purposes; and the deed of conveyance of such lands shall contain the express condition that if the grantee shall fail or cease to use such lands for such purposes, or shall alienate or attempt to alienate such lands, title thereto shall revert to the United States.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. BUCHANAN asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD.

Mr. GREEN asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include therein a letter to a constituent.

VETO MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES—FOR THE RELIEF OF S. G. LEOFFLER OPERATING CO.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following veto message from the President of the United States, which was read by the Clerk:

To the House of Representatives:

I return herewith without my approval the bill (H. R. 1480) for the relief of the S. G. Leoffler Operating Co., of Washington, D. C., and for other purposes.

This bill would authorize and direct the Secretary of the Interior and the Comptroller General of the United States to relieve the S. G. Leoffler Operating Co. from liability for payment of the sum of $9,537.54. This sum represents rental due the United States under contract No. I–28p–2 for the operation of golf courses and allied facilities in the National Capital Parks of the District of Columbia.

The proposed remission of the rental due under the terms of the contract appears to be based on the theory that the rented premises were, in effect, destroyed by an act of God—that is, by the Potomac River flood of 1942. In fact, only part of the premises, the East Potomac golf course, which was but one of five public courses included under the contract, was damaged by the flood, and the injury it sustained was of a temporary character. In addition, this course was rehabilitated by the Department of the Interior at the Government's expense during a period when the small amount of golf play, because of wartime restrictions, probably would not have justified keeping the course open.

The S. G. Leoffler Operating Co., in taking custody of all public golf courses in the District of Columbia, could and should have reasonably anticipated that storms and flood might at times during the life of its 5-year contract make some or all of the areas temporarily unplayable. Particularly is this so since the company was an experienced operator of these very courses. The East Potomac course was known to be extremely vulnerable to freshets and floods, and the flood of October 1942 was but little more devastating than the flood of March 1936, which antedated the execution of the contract by approximately 3 years.

Moreover, although the flooded East Potomac course was not repaired for several months, it appears that other public courses were adequate to serve the public demand during wartime. This conclusion is supported by the fact that when the East Potomac course was reopened after the injury caused by the flood had been repaired, it was immediately closed again at the request of the operator because there was not sufficient play to justify its continued operation. Thus I am convinced that the Company suffered no damages because of the flood beyond the ordinary risk contemplated under its operating contract.

Lastly, I wish to emphasize that the National Park Service of the Department of the Interior has numerous contracts with operators who furnish accommodations and conveniences to the public visiting the various national parks and national monuments. The granting of relief in the circumstances here presented might well be considered by other concessioners as a precedent to seek relief because of damages to their facilities from storms or other causes not under the control of the Government.

Accordingly, I am constrained to withhold approval from H. R. 1480.

HARRY TRUMAN.

THE WHITE HOUSE, July 31, 1946.

The SPEAKER. The objection of the President will be spread at large upon the Journal, and the message and accompanying bill referred to the Committee on Claims and ordered printed.

REORGANIZATION OF RAILROADS

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (S. 1253) to enable debtor railroad corporations expeditiously to effectuate reorganizations of their financial structures; to alter or modify their financial obligations, and for other purposes, and I ask unanimous consent that the statement may be read in lieu of the report.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBBS]?

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Speaker, I object.

CALL OF THE HOUSE

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. Evidently there is no quorum present.

Mr. GORE. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

The SPEAKER. On this roll call 252 Members have answered to their names, a quorum.

If there is no objection, further proceedings under the call will be dispensed with.

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. The question is, Will the House dispense with further proceedings under the call?

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. WALTER) there were—ayes 108, noes 2.

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present and make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER. Evidently a quorum is not present.

The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 230, nays 16, answered "present" 1, not voting 183, as follows:

REORGANIZATION OF RAILROADS

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the conference report.

The Clerk proceeded to read the conference report.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 1253) to enable debtor railroad corporations expeditiously to effectuate reorganizations of their financial structures; to alter or modify their financial obligations; and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows: That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House to the text of the bill and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by the amendment of the House insert the following: "That (1) it shall be lawful (any express provision contained in any mortgage, indenture, deed of trust, or other instrument to the contrary notwithstanding), with the approval and authorization of the Interstate Commerce Commission (hereinafter referred to as the Commission), as provided in paragraph (2) hereof, for a carrier as defined in section 20a (1) of Part I of the Interstate Commerce Act to alter or modify (a) any provision of any class or classes of its bonds, notes, debentures, or other indebtedness (whether secured, unsecured, matured, or unmatured) issued under any mortgage, indenture, deed of trust, or other instrument, or otherwise created, such bonds, notes, debentures, or other evidences of indebtedness being hereinafter in this section sometimes called 'obligations'; (b) any provision of any mortgage, indenture, deed of trust, or other instrument pursuant to which any class of its obligations shall have been issued or by which any class of its obligations is secured: Provided, That the provisions of this section shall not apply to any equipment-trust certificates in respect of which a carrier is obligated, or to any evidences of indebtedness of a carrier the payment of which is secured in any manner solely by equipment, or to any instrument, whether an agreement, lease, conditional-sale agreement, or otherwise, pursuant to which such equipment-trust certificates or such evidences of indebtedness shall have been issued or by which they are secured.

"(2) Whenever an alteration or modification is proposed under paragraph (1) hereof, the carrier seeking authority therefor shall, pursuant to such rules and regulations as the Commission shall prescribe, present an application to the Commission. The Commission shall set such application for public hearing and the carrier shall give such notice of such hearing in such manner, by advertisement or otherwise, as the Commission may find practicable and may direct, to holders of such of its classes of securities and to such other persons in interest as the Commission shall determine to be appropriate and shall direct. If the Commission, after hearing, in addition to making (in any case where such alteration or modification involves an issuance of securities) the findings required by paragraph (2) of said section 20a, shall find that, subject to such terms and conditions (not constituting alterations or modifications of obligations or securities) and with such amendments (altering or modifying the obligations affected by the alteration or modification proposed by the carrier) as the Commission shall determine to be just and reasonable, the proposed alteration or modification—

"(a) is within the scope of paragraph (1);

"(b) will be in the public interest;

"(c) will be in the best interests of the carrier and of the holders of each class of its obligation affected by such modification or alteration; and

"(d) will not be adverse to the interests of the holders of any other class of the carrier's securities or to the interests of any creditor of the carrier not affected by such modification or alteration,

then (unless the applicant carrier shall withdraw its application) the Commission shall cause the carrier, in such manner as it shall direct, to submit the proposed alteration or modification (with such terms, conditions, and amendments, if any) to the holders of each class of its obligations affected thereby, for acceptance or rejection. If the Commission shall find that as a result of such submission the proposed alteration or modification has been assented to by the holders—

"(i) of at least 66⅔ per centum of the aggregate principal amount outstanding of each class of obligations affected thereby; or

"(ii) of less than 66⅔ per centum but not less than 51 per centum of any particular class or classes of securities affected, and the Commission, after hearing, finds that such reduction in percentage will be just and reasonable and in the public interest; or

the Commission shall enter an order approving and authorizing the proposed alteration or modification upon the terms and conditions and with the amendments, if any, so determined to be just and reasonable. Such order shall make provision as to the time when such alteration or modification shall become and be binding, which may be upon publication of a declaration to that effect by the carrier, or otherwise, as the Commission may determine. Any alteration or modification which shall become and be binding pursuant to the approval and authority of the Commission hereunder shall be binding upon each holder of any obligation of the carrier of each class affected by such alteration or modification, and upon any trustee or other party to any instrument under which any such class of obligations shall have been issued or by which it is secured, and when any alteration or modification shall become and be binding the right of each such holder and of any such trustee or other party shall be correspondingly altered or modified.

"(3) For the purposes of this section a class of obligations shall be deemed to be affected by any modification or alteration proposed only (a) if a modification or alteration is proposed as to any provision of such class of obligations, or (b) if any modification or alteration is proposed as to any provision of any instrument pursuant to which such class of obligations shall have been issued or shall be secured: Provided, That in any case where more than one class of obligations shall have been issued and be outstanding or shall be secured pursuant to any instrument, any alteration or modification proposed as to any provision of such instrument, which does not relate to all of the classes of obligations issued thereunder, shall be deemed to affect only the class or classes of obligations to which such alteration or modification is related. For the purpose of the finding of the Commission referred to in paragraph (2) of this section as to whether the required percentage of the aggregate principal amount outstanding of each class of obligations affected by any proposed alteration or modification has assented to the making of such alteration or modification, any obligation which secures any evidence or evidences of indebtedness of the carrier or

of any company controlling or controlled by the carrier shall be deemed to be outstanding unless the Commission in its discretion determines that the proposed alteration or modification does not materially affect the interests of the holder or holders of the evidence or evidences of indebtedness secured by such obligation. Whenever any such pledged obligation is, for said purposes, to be deemed outstanding, assent in respect of such obligations, as to any proposed alteration or modification, may be given only (any express or implied provision in any mortgage, indenture, deed of trust, note, or other instrument to the contrary notwithstanding) as follows: (a) where such obligation is pledged as security under a mortgage, indenture, deed of trust, or other instrument, pursuant to which any evidence of indebtedness are issued and outstanding, by the holders of a majority in principal amount of such evidences of indebtedness, or (b) where such obligation secures an evidence or evidences of indebtedness not issued pursuant to such a mortgage, indenture, deed of trust, or other instrument, by the holder or holders of such evidence or evidences of indebtedness; and in any such case the Commission, in addition to the submission referred to in paragraph (2) of this section, shall cause the carrier in such manner as it shall direct to submit the proposed alteration or modification (with such terms, conditions, and amendments, if any, as the Commission shall have determined to be just and reasonable) for acceptance or rejection, to the holders of the evidences of indebtedness issued and outstanding pursuant to such mortgage, indenture, deed of trust, or other instrument, or to the holder or holders of such evidence or evidences of indebtedness not so issued, and such proposed alteration or modification need not be submitted to the trustee of any such mortgage, indenture, deed of trust, or other instrument, but assent in respect of any such obligation shall be determined as hereinbefore in this section provided. For the purpose of any such assent the evidences of indebtedness issued and outstanding under any such mortgage, indenture, deed of trust, or other instrument shall be determined by the Commission.

"(4) (a) Any authorization and approval hereunder of any alteration or modification of a provision of any class of obligations of a carrier or of a provision of any instrument pursuant to which a class of obligations has been issued, or by which it is secured, shall be deemed to constitute authorization and approval of a corresponding alteration or modification of the obligation of any other carrier which has assumed liability in respect of such class of obligations as guarantor, endorser, surety, or otherwise: Provided, That such other carrier consents in writing to such alteration or modification of such class of obligations in respect of which it has assumed liability or of the instrument pursuant to which such class of obligations has been issued or by which it is secured, and, such consent having been given, any such corresponding alteration or modification shall become effective, without other action, when the alteration or modification of such class of obligations or of such instrument shall become and be binding.

"(b) Any person who is liable or obligated contingently or otherwise on any class or classes of obligations issued by a carrier shall, with respect to such class or classes of obligations, for the purposes of this section, be deemed a carrier.

"(5) The authority conferred by this section shall be exclusive and plenary and any carrier, in respect of any alteration or modification authorized and approved by the Commission hereunder, shall have full power to make any such alteration or modification and to take any actions incidental or appropriate thereto, and may make any such alteration or modification and take any such actions, and any such alteration or modification may be made without securing the approval of the Commission under any other section of the Interstate Commerce Act or other paragraph of this section, and without securing approval of any State authority, and any carrier and its officers and employees and any other persons, participating in the making of an alteration or modification approved and authorized under the provisions of this section or the taking of any such actions, shall be, and they hereby are, relieved from the operation of all restraints, limitations, and prohibitions of law, Federal, State, or municipal, insofar as may be necessary to enable them to make and carry into effect the alteration or modification so approved and authorized, in accordance with the conditions and with the amendments, if any, imposed by the Commission. Any power granted by this section to any carrier shall be deemed to be in addition to and in modification of its powers under its corporate charter or under the laws of any State. The provisions of this section shall not affect in any way the negotiability of any obligation of any carrier or of the obligation of any carrier which has assumed liability in respect thereto.

"(6) The Commission shall require periodical or special reports from each carrier which shall hereafter secure from the Commission approval and authorization of any alteration or modification under this section, which shall show, in such detail as the Commission may require, the action taken by the carrier in the making of such alteration or modification.

"(7) The provisions of this section are permissive and not mandatory and shall not require any carrier to obtain authorization and approval of the Commission hereunder for the making of any alteration or modification of any provision of any of its obligations or of any class thereof or of any provision of any mortgage, indenture, deed of trust, or other instrument, which it may be able lawfully to make in any other manner, whether by reason of provisions for the making of such alteration or modification in any such mortgage, indenture, deed of trust, or other instrument, or otherwise: Provided, That the provisions of paragraph (2) of said section 20a, if applicable to such alteration or modification made otherwise than pursuant to the provisions of this section, shall continue to be so applicable.

"(8) The provisions of paragraph (6) of said section 20a, except the provisions thereof in respect of hearings, shall apply to applications made under this section. In connection with any order entered by the Commission pursuant to paragraph (2) hereof, the Commission may from time to time, for good cause shown, make such supplemental orders in the premises as it may deem necessary or appropriate, and may by any such supplemental order modify the provisions of any such order, subject always to the requirements of said paragraph (2).

"(9) The provisions of subdivision (a) of section 14 of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 shall not apply to any solicitation in connection with a proposed alteration or modification pursuant to this section.

"(10) The Commission shall have the power to make such rules and regulations appropriate to its administration of the provisions of this section as it shall deem necessary or desirable.

"SEC. 2. (1) All proceedings under section 77 of the Bankruptcy Act, whether before the Interstate Commerce Commission or United States courts, relating to the preparation or effectuation of plans of reorganization of each carrier by railroad as defined in said section 20a (1) whose properties on the effective date of this Act or at any time thereafter are in the custody of the United States courts, shall be forthwith suspended and discontinued as of the effective date of this Act—

"(A) If the gross railway operating revenues of such carrier for any of the calendar years 1942 to 1944, inclusive, were in excess of $50,000,000; or if its gross railway operating revenues were not in excess of such amount, such carrier is a debtor in any such proceeding, or is a party defendant in any proceeding ancillary thereto, with another such carrier whose revenues were so in excess; and

"(B) If, for the period of seven calendar years from 1939 to 1945, inclusive, the total of the income reported to the Commission as income available for fixed charges, plus (a) the total of any amounts so reported as a deficit for fixed charges in any of said seven years to the extent of the total of any amounts reported for Federal income and excess-profits taxes in any of said years, and (b) amounts deducted in any year for amortization of emergency facilities under section 124 of the Internal Revenue Code in excess of 20 per centum of the cost of such facilities, of such carrier, or, on a joint or consolidated basis, of the carriers in the system of which such carrier is a part, or of such carrier and other carriers, directly or indirectly controlled by it, through direct or indirect ownership of at least a majority of their stock, is at least equal to the reported total fixed charges (other than charges on intercompany obligations) of such carrier or carriers for such period.

"(2) Carriers to which paragraph (1) of this section is applicable shall institute proceedings and file application under section 1 of this Act as expeditiously as practicable but in no event later than eighteen months after the effective date of this Act, or such longer period as the Commission, on application, may approve.

"(3) The properties of any carrier specified in paragraph (1) of this section shall continue in the custody of the United States courts having custody of them; except that, the following portions of said section 77 shall not be applicable in any such case:

"(a) The first two paragraphs of subsection (b).

"(b) Subdivision (1) of subsection (c).

"(c) The first five sentences, and the first seven words and the last twenty-two words of the sixth sentence, of subdivision (2) of subsection (c): Provided, That for the purposes of this section there shall be substituted for the said last twenty-two words of said sixth sentence, the words 'custody and supervision of the judge'.

"(d) Subsections (d), (e), (f), and (k).

In addition to the foregoing exceptions and for the same purpose of applying to such carriers in the cases in which and during the period for which such custody is held under said section 77, and pending the consummation of proceedings under section 1 of this Act, the word 'debtor' shall be substituted for the words 'trustee or trustees' wherever such latter words occur in subdivisions (3), (5), (9), and (10) of subsection (c), and subsections (i) and (o), of said section 77. The provisions of subsection (12) of subsection (c) of said section 77 shall be applicable to proceedings under this Act. The final determination heretofore or hereafter made in the United States courts with respect to the relative priorities as between the respective classes of security holders, the subordination of the interest of a creditor or security holder of the debtor to the interest of other creditors or security holders, or the validity, amount and priority of any claim shall continue in full force and effect. Nothing contained in this Act is intended or shall be construed to modify or rescind any such determination or to prevent or delay the prosecution to final determination of any such issue now pending, and not yet finally determined, in the United States courts. Nothing in this Act shall be deemed to limit, qualify or restrict the right of the debtor (which right of the debtor is hereby confirmed), with the approval of the court (a) to purchase in whole or in part any bond issues or other obligations of the debtor (including bonds or other obligations guaranteed or assumed by the debtor), at a discount or otherwise, provided that the court's approval of the debtor's purchase of any such obligations junior in lien to first lien mortgage bonds shall be granted only if the court finds, after hearing, that such purchase will be for the best interests of the estate of the carrier and will not deprive the holders of obligations senior in lien to the obligations proposed to be purchased, of adequate security and protection; (b) to hold or to retire and cancel any of its bonds or other obligations now held or hereafter acquired by the debtor; and (c) to make voluntary agreements or compromises with any creditor or creditors as to either principal or interest of his or their claims or the security therefor, provided that the court shall find, after hearing, that any such agreement or compromise will be in the best interests of the estate of the carrier and will not unjustly or inequitably affect the claims or security of other creditors.

"(4) The proceedings with respect to any such carrier specified in paragraph (1) of this section under section 77 of the Bankruptcy Act shall be dismissed upon consummation of proceedings affecting such carrier under section 1 of this Act, or upon payment of its matured, unpaid obligations, or the making of other arrangements with reference to such obligations satisfactory to the owners of the claims therefor; and such proceedings may be dismissed under the conditions and in the manner prescribed in subsection (g) of section 77 of the Bankruptcy Act: Provided, That in the event there has been a determination by the United States courts with respect to subordination of any claim, or the issue thereon has not been finally determined, the determination of that one issue, and only that issue, shall be continued and prosecuted to completion and shall be binding on the security holders of such company; but such continuance of the determination of that sole issue shall not delay the dismissal of the proceedings in any and every other respect.

"(5) The appointment, term of office, powers, authority, compensation and fees of each trustee appointed by the court, and of each counsel of such trustee, shall be terminated on or before sixty days after the effective date of this Act: Provided, That if the board of directors of the carrier shall have been elected, pursuant to the provisions of paragraph (11) of this section, prior to the expiration of the afore-mentioned sixty-day period, the appointment, term of office, powers, authority, compensation and fees of such trustees and counsel shall be terminated forthwith.

"(6) The provisions of this section shall not apply if at the time of filing the petition for reorganization under section 77 of the Bankruptcy Act as amended, more than 95 percent of the outstanding voting stock of the debtor railroad corporation shall have been owned or controlled, directly or indirectly, by voting trust or otherwise, by another railroad corporation not a debtor in the same proceeding under the said section 77 with the said debtor and/or by a corporation owning or controlling more than 95 percent of the outstanding voting stock of another railroad corporation; provided also, that this section shall not apply to a railroad corporation if (1) all of its stock is owned directly or indirectly by an operating railroad corporation, (2) both corporations are in the same proceeding under the said section 77, and (3) pursuant to the provisions in this paragraph, this section does not apply to the said operating railroad corporation which owns all of the stock of the said controlled railroad corporation. The term 'corporation' as used in this paragraph shall be deemed to include its trustees appointed under the aforesaid section 77 of the Bankruptcy Act.

"(7) If the United States of America, or any agency thereof, or any corporation (other than the Reconstruction Finance Corporation) the majority of the stock of which is owned by the United States of America, is a creditor or stockholder of any such carrier, the President of the United States or any officer or agency he may designate, is hereby authorized to act in respect of the interest or claims of the United States or of such agency or other corporation.

"(8) The Commission shall designate one or more qualified members of its staff to serve as mediator or mediators in each of the proceedings under section 1 with respect to carriers specified under paragraph (1) of this section for the purpose of bringing the different classes of creditors and other security holders together, of being available to advise with them, of assisting in the effectuation of changes, compromises, arrangements, negotiations, and dealings with the various classes of creditors and other security holders and with individuals, groups, and committees representing creditors or other security holders, of assisting in expediting all stages of the proceedings and the early termination and the consummation of all transactions hereunder, including all steps requisite for the effectuation thereof.

"(9) In proceedings under section 1 with respect to a carrier specified in paragraph (1) of this section the Commission shall have the power, in its discretion, to submit to holders of obligations, any proposed alteration or modification affecting them which the Commission has caused the carrier to submit to such holders under the provisions of the fourth sentence of paragraph (2) of section 1 hereof; in the event that it is satisfied that such alteration or modification has been accepted by or on behalf of creditors of each class to which submission is required under section 1 holding more than two-thirds in amount of the total of the allowed claims of such class which have voted on said alteration or modification, the Commission shall enter an order approving and authorizing the proposed alteration or modification as provided in said paragraph (2) of section 1 hereof: Provided, That it shall enter such order in any case in which such alteration or modification has not been so accepted by the creditors of any class or classes if it finds, after hearing, that the alteration or modification makes adequate provision for fair and equitable treatment for the claims of those rejecting it; that such rejection is not reasonably justified in the light of the respective rights and interests of those rejecting them and all the relevant facts; and that the alteration or modification is fair and equitable, affords due recognition to the rights of each class of creditors and stockholders, and will conform to the requirements of the law of the land.

"(10) If after having submitted a proposed alteration or modification to holders of affected obligations as provided in paragraph (9), the Commission shall not have entered an order approving and authorizing such proposed alteration or modification within a period of twelve months following the date of the filing of an application in accordance with paragraph (2) of this section, or such extended periods as the Commission on application therefor may approve, then the Commission, after hearings, shall formulate and submit to holders of affected obligations such alteration or modification as in its opinion meets the standards set forth in section 1 above; in applying such standards of section 1 for the purpose of any such alteration or modification under this paragraph, the Commission shall give full effect to all changes, facts, and developments since 1940, including, without limitation, for such period total railway operating revenues, operating expenses and other charges, net earnings, the full effect of amortization deductions on earnings of past and future years, improvements to the property, the effect of the released collateral through past or future payment of loans, cash and net current assets, retirements and purchases of debt, including retirements and purchases at a discount that have been made or that can reasonably be made, adjustment and reduction of interest rates on outstanding debt that may be made including the adjustment and reduction of interest rates for prior years. In the event the Commission is satisfied that such alteration or modification has been accepted by the percentages required for acceptance under the provisions of section 1 or of paragraph (9) of this section it shall enter an order approving and authorizing such alteration or modification, unless it finds that, prior to the entry of such order, the alteration or modification submitted under paragraph (9) has been accepted by the percentages required by the provisions of that paragraph or of section 1, in which event it shall enter an order approving and authorizing such alteration or modification submitted under paragraph (9).

"(11) (a) Every carrier to which paragraph (1) of this section is applicable shall call a meeting of stockholders for the election of directors to be held within sixty days after the effective date of this Act. The present terms of office of all directors and officers of such carrier shall terminate upon the election and qualification of their successors, as herein provided, notwithstanding any provision of the charter or by-laws of such carrier or of any State law to the contrary. The terms of office of all directors elected at such meeting shall be the unexpired terms of present directors.

"(b) No holding company, individual, group, partnership, association, corporation, or other entity (excluding any operating common carrier subject to Part I of the Interstate Commerce Act, but not excluding any holding company or other nonoperating corporation which has been held or which may be held to be a common carrier within the meaning of said Act)—

"(A) which exercises direct or indirect control of one or more railroad corporations the properties of which are not in the custody of a court in proceedings under section 77 of the Bankruptcy Act; and

"(B) which also owns shares of voting stock of any railroad corporation to which this Act is applicable, in sufficient number to enable the owner thereof to control such carrier,

"shall, during the period the debtor shall be in possession of its properties and in control of the management and operation thereof under this Act, vote such shares for the election of more than a minority of the directors of any railroad corporation to which this Act is applicable.

"(c) No stock of any common carrier to which paragraph (1) of this section is applicable, which stock is owned or controlled directly or indirectly by, or held for the benefit of, or pledged as security by, any other common carrier to which paragraph (1) of this section is applicable, shall be voted for the election of directors during the proceedings under this Act, unless at the time of filing the petition for reorganization under section 77 of the Bankruptcy Act as amended, the transaction or transactions by which such stock was acquired, and the ownership and control of such stock, had been approved by the Interstate Commerce Commission pursuant to the applicable provisions of section 5 of the Interstate Commerce Act, as amended or unless the two carriers are debtors in the same proceeding under section 77 of the Bankruptcy Act, as amended.

"(d) In the determination of whether a quorum is represented in attendance at any meeting of stockholders of any carrier to which paragraph (1) of this section is applicable, held during the pendenty of proceedings under this Act, for the election of directors or for other purposes, all voting stock standing in the name of, or held for the benefit of or pledged or assigned by, or directly or indirectly controlled by, any carrier, holding company, individual, corporation or other entity to which subparagraph (b) or (c) of this paragraph (11) is applicable which voting stock may be not represented at said meeting shall nevertheless be considered and counted as being represented in attendance at such meeting, notwithstanding any provision of the charter or by-laws of such carrier or the provision of any State law to the contrary.

"(12) Any party having properly filed an application under section 5 of the Interstate Commerce Act to control, or participate in the control of, a carrier to which section 2 of this Act applies, is hereby authorized to intervene generally in and become a party to the proceedings under this Act affecting such carrier.

"(13) No readjustment of financial structure or other proceeding under this Act and no order of the court or Commission in connection therewith shall relieve any carrier from the obligation of any final judgment of any Federal or State court rendered prior to January 1, 1929, against such carrier or against one of its predecessors in title, requiring the maintenance of offices, shops, and roundhouses at any place, where such judgment was rendered on account of the making of a valid contract or contracts by such carrier or one of its predecessors in title.

"(14) In judicial review of any order of the Commission approving or authorizing a proposed alteration or modification entered pursuant to the authority of paragraph (10) of this section 2, the court (and any court on review thereof) shall not be concluded by any determination or finding made by the Commission as to matters either of law or of facts, and the court shall make full and independent reexamination and review of the issues and of the evidence and thereafter shall arrive at a decision in the exercise of its independent judgment based upon such judicial reexamination and review. Any order of the Circuit Court of Appeals relating to any alteration or modification under paragraph (10) of this section 2 shall be reviewed by the Supreme Court of the United States upon appeal made by any person affected by the plan who deems himself aggrieved within sixty days after the entry of such order or decree, pursuant to the applicable provisions of the Judicial Code.

"(15) In the case of any carrier which is under the jurisdiction of the United States Courts on the effective date of this Act, and to which the provisions of paragraph (1) of section 2 of this Act would be applicable if such carrier were in the custody of such courts on such date, and with respect to which carrier, securities under a plan of reorganization approved by the court and Commission had already been issued, a holder of a security of any class which rejected, or was not entitled to vote on, such plan in accordance with subsection (e) of said section 77, may, within ninety days after the date of enactment of this Act, apply to the Commission for amendment of the plan to the extent necessary to permit the issuance, to holders of securities of such class, of options or warrants as described in subsection (b) of said section 77. If the Commission shall find after hearings that the proceeds of the exercise of such options or warrants will be applied in conformance with the requirements of section 20 (a) of the Interstate Commerce Act (including, without limitation, the application of such proceeds to the retirement of outstanding obligations of the carrier), it shall approve such application and shall order the carrier to issue such options or warrants.

"SEC. 3. The provisions of sections 1801, 1802, 3481, and 3482 of the Internal Revenue Code and any amendments thereto, unless specifically providing to the contrary, shall not apply to the issuance, transfer, or exchange of securities or the making or delivery of conveyances to make effective any alteration or modification effected pursuant to section 1 or section 2 of this Act. No income, gain, or profit taxable under any law of the United States or of any State, now in force, or hereafter enacted, shall be deemed to have accrued to or have been realized by such carrier by reason of such an alteration or modification, or by reason of any transaction authorized in the last sentence of paragraph (3) of section 2.

"SEC. 4. If any provision of this Act, or the application thereof to any person or circumstances, is held invalid, the remainder of this Act and the application of such provision to other persons or circumstances, shall not be affected thereby."

And the House agree to the same.

Amend the title so as to read: "An Act to enable debtor railroad corporations, whose properties during a period of seven years have provided sufficient earnings to pay fixed charges, to effect a readjustment of their financial structures; to alter or modify their financial obligations; and for other purposes."

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 1253) to enable debtor railroad corporations expeditiously to effectuate reorganizations of their financial structures; to alter or modify their financial obligations; and for other purposes; submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon and recommended in the accompanying conference report:

The House amendment strikes out all of the Senate bill after the enacting clause. The Senate recedes from its disagreement to the amendment of the House, with an amendment which is a substitute for both the Senate bill and the House amendment. The material differences between the House amendment and the substitute agreed to in conference are noted in the following statement.

The House amendment proposed the reenactment of chapter XV of the Bankruptcy Act for the modification or alteration of obligations of carriers. The Interstate Commerce Commission in 1945 proposed a variation of the principle of chapter XV, while retaining the essential purpose of providing a means for alteration or modification on applications of carriers when necessary in the public interest, as well as in the interest of the carriers and of their security holders. The conference substitute adopts the variation proposed by the Commission in 1945.

The essential principle of chapter XV and of the Commission proposal of 1945 is the provision of means of altering carriers' obligations with fairness to the owners of those obligations, and in order to avoid the drains, wastes and losses consequent upon drastic reorganizations. This underlying principle was in effect reaffirmed by the House when it passed the amendment. The conference substitute adheres to this plan.

The difference between the method of chapter XV and that of the Commission variation is primarily one of lodging in the Commission greater power through the Commission proposal. Under chapter XV the Commission was not expressly charged with the duty of considering proposed alterations or modifications as in substance a reorganization or readjustment plan. Under the Commission proposal of 1945, which is now substantially adopted in the conference substitute, the Commission is charged with such duties.

Under chapter XV the principal proceeding was conducted in court. Under the Commission proposal, which is now included in the conference substitute, the principal proceeding is before the Commission. The court is called on only for purposes of review.

The variation introduced in the Commission proposal of 1945 and now accepted in the conference agreement has had the support of leaders of life-insurance companies, banks, and the railroad industry, as well as of the Commission and also of representatives of railroad labor organizations.

The House amendment included in its first seven sections provision for the relief of railroads which are now in proceedings under section 77 of the Bankruptcy Act and for the relief of their securityholders. The conference agreement also provides such relief, although in considerable part with modifications and differences from the particular form of relief included in House amendment. The conference agreement retains the requirement of the House amendment that before a carrier can qualify for such relief it must show earnings coming up to a specified standard for the 7-year period from 1937 to 1945, inclusive. The 7-year standard has been retained in the conference agreement, with certain improvements introduced so as to recognize actual earnings and not limit the standard merely to the reported earnings. Under the tax laws there were large bookkeeping deductions from earnings in order to effect tax savings; such bookkeeping was authorized by statute and was used by corporations throughout the country, in both the industrial and railroad field as well as in other fields. The Interstate Commerce Commission has on a number of occasions called attention to the fact that there is a difference between reported earnings and actual earnings, which are much higher. The conference substitute has recognized the circumstance thus pointed out by the Commission. In this respect, as well as in certain other respects, the earnings figures included in the 7-year standard are stated somewhat differently in the conference amendment from the form of their statement in the House amendment.

In addition to this condition imposed in the House amendment the conference agreement has also imposed another condition, which was contained in the bill as passed by the Senate. That condition limits the application of this portion of the bill to railroads whose gross railroad operating revenues for any of the calendar years 1942 to 1944, inclusive, were in excess of $50,000,000; any other carriers, debtors in the same proceedings with such carriers, also come under the conference substitute, even though not earning the $50,000,000 revenue just specified. This condition was suggested by the Interstate Commerce Commission.

The House amendment provided a period of 18 months in which carriers coming under the act would be able to work out reorganizations or readjustment of their financial affairs. The conference substitute also provides for an 18-month period, or such longer period as the Commission may authorize. At the end of such period the carrier would file a plan of adjustment with the Interstate Commerce Commission in accordance with the procedure proposed by the Commission in 1945 and above described. The House amendment had provided for proceedings under chapter XV; the difference between the two types of proceeding, under chapter XV and under the variation proposed by the Commission in 1945, is discussed above.

The House amendment provided that control of the properties should be returned to the debtor railroad companies. While the conference substitute also has such a provision, the conference substitute adds that the properties are to be retained in the custody of the court and subject to its supervision.

Under the House amendment carriers would have had the power to use their large surplus liquid resources for the retirement of debt through purchase, discount, and otherwise—in this respect be permitted to avail themselves of the same advantages which have been used by railroads not in the hands of the courts and which the Interstate Commerce Commission has urged all railroads to invoke. Unfortunately railroads that have been in the hands of the courts under section 77 have been deprived of the tremendous opportunities of which nearly all other large railroads have made use. The conference report remedies this. Provision is also made for the proposal of alteration or modification of obligations of carriers by the Commission itself, in the event that the plan, or substitute plans, proposed by the carrier, have not gone into effect.

The House amendment provided for independent reexamination and review by the courts of any plans which might be issued by the Commission. The conference substitute makes similar provision.

The conference substitute contains a provision customary in reorganization statutes protecting reorganizations against taxes of certain kinds. This is the customary practice since no true profit is realized on the exchange of securities, and yet without such a protective provision taxes might be assessable because it might be held that there is an apparent though not an actual profit. The conference agreement also provides for protection against tax on savings effected through retirement of debt; a statute to similar effect has been available to railroads and other corporations and the Congress has already passed a bill to extend that statute temporarily; the companies under section 77 have not been permitted to retire their debt at a discount although most other railroads have availed themselves of this important opportunity to which the Interstate Commerce Commission has also called particular attention.

The conference agreement accepts the limitation, as to the class of carriers covered by the bill, included in paragraph (11) of section (2) of the bill as previously passed by the Senate, but the conference agreement narrows that limitation in certain respects.

Paragraph (15) of section (2) deals with carriers still in the jurisdiction of the United States courts in whose cases reorganization securities have already been issued under a reorganization plan. Paragraph (15) makes it lawful for the carrier, with the approval of the Commission, to amend the plan to the extent of issuing options or warrants to take care of those security holders who would otherwise be wiped out.

On the subject of judicial review, the point was raised in the debate on the bill in the House that any provisions which do not grant the right of appeal as a matter of right are exceptional. The Congress did not intend in chapter XV to foreclose a reorganization plan without the right of appeal against it to a court higher than the court of original jurisdiction. The House Judiciary Committee did not interpret chapter XV to deny the right of appeal as a right. However, the committee readily accepted the proposal to make the congressional intent absolutely certain and clear, that an appeal from the trial court must be granted. Had the conference agreement used chapter XV, instead of the Commission's substitute procedure, the conferees would have insisted on reaffirmance of the right of appeal to the Supreme Court, including the affirmation that Congress intended that such an appeal should be granted as a matter of right in all cases under chapter XV as originally enacted and later reenacted.

Inasmuch as the conference agreement uses the Commission's modification of the chapter XV procedure, the conference agreement provides for the right of appeal to the Supreme Court from the circuit courts of appeals on plans issued by the Commission under paragraph (10) of section 2 of this act.

CALL OF THE HOUSE

Mr. TALBOT (interrupting the reading of the conference report). Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. HENDRICKS). Evidently a quorum is not present.

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

The SPEAKER. On this roll call 247 Members have answered to their names, a quorum.

By unanimous consent, further proceedings under the call were dispensed with.

REORGANIZATION OF RAILROADS

The Clerk concluded the reading of the conference report.

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Speaker, this is the railroad reorganization bill which has been fully discussed. Everyone recognizes its connotations. It has the unanimous agreement of the conferees on the part of the House.

Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion for the previous question.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. WALTER), there were ayes 85, noes 10.

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground a quorum is not present and make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER. Evidently a quorum is not present.

The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 190, nays 54, answered "present" 1, not voting 185, as follows:

FURTHER MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A further message from the Senate, by Mr. Frazier, its legislative clerk, announced that the Senate agrees to the amendments of the House to a bill of the Senate of the following title:

S. 2304. An act to provide for the training of officers for the naval service, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed a bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

S. 2498. An act to provide for fire protection of Government and private property in and contiguous to the waters of the District of Columbia.

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the reports of the committees of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to bills of the House of the following titles:

H. R. 4051. An act to grant to enlisted personnel of the armed forces certain benefits in lieu of accumulated leave; and

H. R. 5223. An act to extend temporarily the time for filing applications for patents, for taking action in the United States Patent Office with respect thereto, for preventing proof of acts abroad with respect to the making of an invention, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 1253) entitled "An act to enable debtor railroad corporations expeditiously to effectuate reorganizations of their financial structures; to alter or modify their financial obligations; and for other purposes."

ARMED FORCES LEAVE ACT OF 1946

Mr. THOMASON. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (H. R. 4051) to grant to enlisted personnel of the armed forces certain benefits in lieu of accumulated leave, and I ask unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the statement.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 4051) to grant to enlisted personnel of the armed forces certain benefits in lieu of accumulated leave, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate to the text of the bill and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following: "That this Act may be cited as the 'Armed Forces Leave Act of 1946.'

"SEC. 2. As used in this Act—

"(a) The term 'member of the armed forces' means any member of the Army of the United States, United States Navy, United States Marine Corps, or the United States Coast Guard.

"(b) The term 'discharge' means (1), in the case of enlisted personnel, separation or release from active duty under honorable conditions or appointment as a commissioned officer or warrant officer; and (2), in the case of commissioned or warrant officers, separation or release from active duty under honorable conditions.

"(c) The term 'spouse' means a lawful wife or husband.

"(d) The term 'child' includes—

"(1) a legitimate child;

"(2) a child legally adopted;

"(3) a stepchild, if, at the time of death of the member or former member of the armed forces, such stepchild is a member of the deceased's household;

"(4) an illegitimate child, but in the case of a male member or former male member of the armed forces only if he has been judicially ordered or decreed to contribute to such child's support; has been judicially decreed to be the putative father of such child; or has acknowledged under oath in writing that he is the father of such child; and

"(5) a person to whom the member or former member of the armed forces at the time of death stands in loco parentis and so stood for not less than twelve months prior to the date of death.

"(e) The term 'parent' includes father and mother, grandfather and grandmother, stepfather and stepmother, father and mother through adoption, and persons who, for a period of not less than one year prior to the death of the member or former member of the armed forces, stood in loco parentis to such member or former member: Provided, That not more than two parents may receive the benefits provided under this Act and preference shall be given to the parent or parents, not exceeding two, who actually exercised parental relationship at the time of or most nearly prior to the date of the death of such member or former member of the armed forces.

"(f) The term 'Secretary' means in the case of personnel of the Army, the Secretary of War; in the case of personnel of the Navy and Marine Corps, the Secretary of the Navy; and in the case of personnel of the Coast Guard, the Secretary of the Treasury, and the designated representatives of each such Secretary.

"(g) The term 'cash' includes a check upon the Treasurer of the United States.

"SEC. 3. (a) Each member of the armed forces shall be entitled to leave at the rate of two and one-half calendar days for each month of active service, excluding periods of (1) absence from duty without leave, (2) absence over leave, and (3) confinement as the result of a sentence of court martial. Except as provided in subsection (b) of this section, such leave may be accumulated in an amount not to exceed one hundred and twenty calendar days. Any leave so accumulated shall not, however, survive death occurring during active military service. Enlisted members or former enlisted members of the armed forces shall be considered to be entitled to such leave from and after September 8, 1939, but shall not be considered to have any leave accumulated or accrued as of the date of the enactment of this Act, or the date of discharge if prior to such date of enactment, in excess of the amount which would have been accumulated and accrued if their leave had been accumulated and accrued from and after September 8, 1939, on the same basis as leave is accumulated and accrued in the case of commissioned officers in the regular components of their respective branches of the armed forces. Except in the case of leave to be settled and compensated for under section 6 of this Act, leave may be taken by a member on a calendar-day basis as vacation or absence from duty with pay, annually as accruing or otherwise, in accordance with regulations to be issued by the several Secretaries. Such regulations shall provide equal treatment for officers and enlisted men, shall establish to the fullest extent practicable uniform policies for the several branches of the armed forces, and shall provide that leave shall be taken annually as accruing to the extent consistent with military requirements and other exigencies. Members who reenlist after the date of enactment of this Act may be authorized reenlistment leave in the discretion of the Secretary, for a period not exceeding ninety days, and such leave shall be deducted from leave accrued during active service prior to reenlistment or charged against any leave which may accrue during future active service or both. In the case of members who are retired after the date of enactment of this Act and after retirement are continued on or recalled to active duty, leave accrued during service prior to retirement may be carried over to the period of service after retirement. Leave taken prior to discharge before or after the enactment of this Act shall be considered as active military service; but leave settled and compensated for under section 6 of this Act shall not be considered as active military service.

"(b) Notwithstanding any other provision of this Act or of any other law or regulation, no member of the armed forces (other than a member on terminal leave on September 1, 1946) shall be permitted to accumulate or to have to his credit, at any time after August 31, 1946, accumulated or accrued leave aggregating in excess of sixty days.

"SEC. 4. Leave to be settled and compensated for under section 6 of this Act shall be compensable as follows:

"(a) In the case of leave accumulated as an enlisted member of the armed forces, on the basis of the base and longevity pay applicable to such member on the date of his discharge from enlisted service if discharged before August 31, 1946, or on August 31, 1946, if not so discharged, and an allowance computed at the rate of 70 cents a day for subsistence, plus, in the case of enlisted members of the first three grades with dependents on August 31, 1946 or former enlisted members of the first three grades with dependents at the time of discharge if prior to such date, an allowance computed at the rate of $1.25 a day for quarters.

"(b) In the case of leave accumulated or accrued as a member of the armed forces as a warrant or commissioned officer, on the basis of the base and longevity pay and allowances applicable to such member on August 31, 1946.

"In the case of all other leave provided under this Act, members shall be entitled during such leave to the same pay and allowances they would receive if not on leave and to any additional or other allowance or allowances otherwise authorized or provided by law for members while on leave. Determination of the number of calendar days of leave to which a member or former member is entitled, including the number of calendar days of absence from duty or vacation to be counted or charged against such leave, shall be made in accordance with regulations to be prescribed by the respective Secretaries, which regulations shall provide equal treatment of officers and enlisted men and shall establish to the fullest extent practicable uniform policies for the several branches of the armed forces. In the case of the leave of enlisted members or former enlisted members attributable to the period prior to the date of enactment of this Act, the Secretary may in the determination of the number of calendar days of absence from duty or vacation to be counted or charged against such leave rely on such records and evidence, including applicant's sworn statements as to the material facts, as he may determine proper. All decisions by the Secretary under this section shall be final and conclusive and shall not be subject to review by any court or by any officer of the United States.

"SEC. 5. (a) Leave to which enlisted members of the armed forces discharged prior to September 1, 1946, and former enlisted members of the armed forces discharged prior to the date of enactment of this Act, are entitled under the provisions of section 3 of this Act shall, to the extent not taken, be settled and compensated for only in the manner provided in section 6 of this Act and if application is made to the Secretary not later than September 1, 1947, or, in the case of any such member or former member whose record is corrected after the date of enactment of this Act to show discharge under honorable conditions, not later than September 1, 1947, or within one year after the date on which such record is corrected, whichever is later.

"(b) In any case in which a member of the armed forces on active duty on September 1, 1946 (other than a member on terminal leave on such date) has to his credit on August 31, 1946, accumulated or accrued leave aggregating in excess of sixty days, such leave in excess of sixty days shall be settled and compensated for only in the manner provided in section 6 of this Act and if application is made to the Secretary not later than September 1, 1947.

"(c) In no event shall the number of calendar days of leave settled and compensated for under section 6 of this Act exceed 120 calendar days; and in no event shall the number of calendar days of leave so settled and compensated for, plus

"(1) in the case of a member on active duty on September 1, 1946 (other than a member on terminal leave on such date), the number of calendar days of leave accumulated or standing to such member's credit on such date, or

"(2) in the case of a member or former member placed on terminal leave prior to September 1, 1946, the number of calendar days of such terminal leave, exceed 120 calendar days.

"SEC. 6. (a) Leave by this Act provided to be settled and compensated for under this section shall be settled and compensated for as follows:

"(1) Settlement and compensation shall be made entirely in cash—

"(i) when the amount due is less than $50;

"(ii) in the case of any enlisted member of the armed forces discharged prior to January 1, 1943; or

"(iii) in any case covered by subsection (b) or (c) of this section.

"(2) In all other cases settlement and compensation shall be made in bonds of the United States to the highest multiple of $25 and in cash to the extent of the full amount of any difference. Any such bond issued pursuant to an application made under subsection (a) of section 5 shall be dated as of the 1st day of January, the 1st day of April, the 1st day of July, or the 1st day of October, whichever next follows the date of discharge, and any such bond issued pursuant to an application made under subsection (b) of section 5 shall be dated as of October 1, 1946. Each such bond shall mature five years from the date thereof. The bonds issued under this Act shall be issued by the Secretary of the Treasury under the authority and subject to the provisions of the Second Liberty Bond Act, as amended, and through such agencies as he may designate. Except as provided in subsection (d), such bonds shall be nonnegotiable and shall not be transferable by sale, exchange, assignment, pledge, hypothecation, or otherwise. Such bonds shall be issued only to and in the names of living members or living former members of the armed forces. In the event of the death of any holder of any such bond or of any check issued pursuant to this subsection, payment of the bond shall be made by the Secretary of the Treasury prior to, upon, or after its maturity upon application at the option of such holder's survivors and payment of the check shall be made by the Secretary of the Treasury upon application by such survivors as follows: To such holder's surviving spouse and children, if any, in equal shares; and if such holder leaves no surviving spouse or child or children, then in equal shares to such holder's surviving parents, if any. If there is no such survivor, any such bond shall be retired, and any such check shall be cancelled and the amount of the bond or check covered into the general fund of the Treasury. Payment of any such bond or any such check to any holder, or any survivor entitled thereto under the provisions of this subsection, between seventeen and twenty-one years of age shall constitute a complete discharge of the obligations of the United States under this Act. Where the Secretary of the Treasury is of the opinion that any holder of any such bond or any such check or any survivor entitled to payment under the provisions of this subsection is, by reason of being either under seventeen years of age or under mental disability, incapable of satisfactorily looking after his own interests, payment of such bond or such check may be made in the same manner, and with the same effect, as settlement and compensation made under the provisions of subsection (c). Interest on each bond issued under this Act shall accrue at the rate of 2½ per centum per annum from the date of such bond to the date of maturity or to the last day of the month in which payment of the principal of the bond is made, whichever is earlier, and shall be paid with such principal. All decisions by the Secretary of the Treasury under this section with respect to the issuance and payment of bonds and under this paragraph with respect to the issuance and payment of checks shall be final and conclusive and shall not be subject to review by any court or by any officer of the United States. The provisions of this section with respect to the issuance and payment of bonds shall be carried out subject to regulations of the Secretary of the Treasury.

"(b) Leave by this Act provided to be settled and compensated for under this section shall, in the case of any member or former member of the armed forces who dies after discharge, or on or after September 1, 1946, if not discharged prior to such date, and before settlement and compensation has been effected, be settled and compensated for, on application therefor, with such member's or former member's survivors, as follows: To such member's or former member's surviving spouse and children, if any, in equal shares; and if such member or former member leaves no surviving spouse or child or children, then in equal shares to his surviving parents, if any. If there is no such survivor, no settlement and compensation shall be made under this Act. Settlement and compensation under this subsection with any such survivor between seventeen and twenty-one years of age shall constitute a complete discharge of the obligations of the United States under this Act.

"(c) Where the Secretary is of the opinion that any member or former member of the armed forces or any survivor of any such member or former member is, by reason of being either under seventeen years of age or under mental disability, incapable of satisfactorily looking after his own interests, such Secretary may settle and compensate under this section with a proper person selected by him for the use and benefit of such member, former member or survivor, without the necessity of resorting to judicial proceedings for the appointment of a legal representative. Settlement and compensation made under the provisions of this subsection shall constitute a complete discharge of the obligations of the United States under this Act. The provisions of this subsection shall not apply when a legal guardian or committee has been judicially appointed for any such member, former member, or survivor, except as to any settlement and compensation made prior to the receipt of notice of appointment: Provided, That no fee, commission, or charge shall be demanded or accepted by any representative of any member, former member, or survivor appointed in accordance with the provisions of this subsection and the exaction or acceptance of any such fee, commission, or charge shall be deemed a misdemeanor punishable by a fine of not exceeding $500 or imprisonment for not exceeding six months, or both.

"(d) (1) Pursuant to regulations prescribed by him, the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs is authorized and directed to accept an assignment of a bond issued to the insured under this section, the proceeds of which shall be used in payment of premiums or in payment of the difference in reserve in case of conversion to insurance on another plan or in payment of a policy loan made prior to July 31, 1946, on a United States Government Life Insurance policy or a National Service Life Insurance policy: Provided, That such assignment may not be used by the insured directly or indirectly as a means of securing in cash the proceeds of such bond or any portion thereof prior to the date of its maturity or the maturity of such policy by death, whichever is the earlier, and such assignment shall be deemed to constitute an agreement by the insured to this effect.

"(2) Any bond assigned under this subsection shall be redeemed at any time, upon presentation to the Secretary of the Treasury, and the proceeds thereof shall be paid and credited to the appropriate fund or appropriation designated by the Administrator.

"SEC. 7. All amounts paid or payable under section 6 of this Act, in cash, bonds, or both, shall not be assignable except as provided in subsection (d) of such section, shall be exempt from claims of creditors, including any claim of the United States, and shall not be subject to attachment, levy, or seizure by or under any legal or equitable process whatever. All such amounts (except interest in the case of bonds) shall be exempt from taxation.

"SEC. 8. There are hereby authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this Act. Amounts expended hereunder shall be included in the annual reports to the Congress by the Departments concerned.

"SEC. 9. The Act approved May 8, 1874 (18 Stat. 43), as amended by the Act approved July 29, 1876 (19 Stat. 102; 10 U. S. C. 842), is hereby repealed. Such repeal shall not affect any unused leave accumulated (including leave accruing at the rate of two and one-half days per month after July 1, 1946) prior to the date of enactment of this Act."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate to the title of the bill and agree to the same.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 4051) to grant to enlisted personnel of the armed forces certain benefits in lieu of accumulated leave, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conferees and recommended in the accompanying conference report:

The House recedes from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate to the text of the bill and agrees to the same with an amendment in the nature of a substitute for both the Senate amendment and the bill as it passed the House.

The conference agreement differs from the Senate amendment and the bill as it passed the House in the following material respects.

The first section of the Senate amendment provided that the act may be cited as the "Armed Forces Leave Act of 1946". The House bill provided the short title "Enlisted Men's Terminal Leave Pay Act". The conference agreement adopts this provision of the Senate amendment.

Both the House bill and the Senate amendment provided that, with certain minor exceptions, enlisted members and former enlisted members of the armed forces should be considered, for the purposes of the payments provided thereunder, to have earned leave at the rate of 2½ days for each month of active service after September 8, 1939. The House bill would have permitted such leave to accumulate in an amount not to exceed 120 days for the period ending 6 months following the termination of the war as established by proclamation of the President or concurrent resolution of Congress. The Senate amendment would have permitted such leave to accumulate in an amount not to exceed 120 days for the period ending August 31, 1946. The conference agreement permits such leave to accumulate, during the period from September 8, 1939, to August 31, 1946, in an amount not to exceed 120 days.

The bill as it passed the House provided for the making of lump-sum cash payments to enlisted men and former enlisted men for unused leave accumulated in accordance with the provisions of the bill. The Senate amendment provided that payment for unused leave considered to have been earned by enlisted men discharged prior to September 1, 1946, should be made in nonnegotiable United States bonds, which would be issued as of the first day of the quarter following the date of discharge. Such bonds would bear interest at the rate of 2½ percent, and would mature 5 years after the date as of which issued. In any case where the amount due is less than $50, or where the member of the armed forces was discharged prior to January 1, 1943, payment would be made in cash. Cash settlement would also be made where the member dies after becoming entitled to payment but before payment is actually made; and in any case where the claimant is incapable of managing his own affairs and the settlement is made with another person acting in his behalf.

The conference agreement retains the provisions of the Senate amendment providing for the issuance of bonds. However, these provisions are modified in the conference agreement so as to provide that the bondholder may use the bond issued to him in payment of premiums upon United States Government life insurance or national service life insurance, or in payment of the difference in reserve in case of the conversion of a policy of such insurance to another policy of such insurance on a different plan, or in payment of a policy loan, including interest thereon, made prior to July 31, 1946, on a United States Government life insurance policy or a national service life insurance policy. A bondholder wishing to use his bond for one or more of such purposes would be permitted to assign the bond for such purposes pursuant to regulations prescribed by the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs, and would be allowed an amount equal to the principal of the bond plus interest accruing up to the end of the month in which the assignment is made. The bonds would be presented to the Secretary of the Treasury for redemption and the proceeds thereof, which would include interest up to the end of the month in which the bonds are redeemed, would be paid and credited to the appropriate insurance fund or insurance appropriation. Provisions are included in the conference agreement to guard against the possibility that the bondholder might use his privileges with respect to payments relating to insurance as a device for obtaining cash for the bond prior to its maturity.

The Senate amendment contained language, not included in the bill as it passed the House, providing that in the case of members of the armed forces appointed to warrant or commissioned grades after June 1, 1945, leave accrued during any prior continuous service immediately preceding such appointment could be carried over to a subsequent period of service. The conference agreement does not contain such a provision.

The bill as it passed the House made no provision with respect to leave for enlisted men subsequent to 6 months following the end of the war. The Senate amendment placed enlisted men who are on active duty on September 1, 1946, or at any time thereafter, on exactly the same basis, so far as leave is concerned, as officers. The conference agreement adopts the provisions of the Senate amendment in this respect.

The Senate amendment provided that notwithstanding any other provision of this act or of any other law or regulation, no member of the armed forces (other than a member on terminal leave on September 1, 1946) should be permitted to accumulate or to have to his credit at any time after August 31, 1946, accumulated or accrued leave aggregating in excess of 90 days, and provided that any leave in excess of 90 days to which he might be entitled on August 31, 1946, be settled and compensated for in the same manner as was provided with respect to leave to be settled and compensated for in the case of members discharged before September 1, 1946. Section 6 of the House bill provided that during any future national emergency or war leave for members of the armed forces should not be permitted to accumulate in an amount exceeding 30 days, and that no payment should be made in lieu of leave. The conference agreement limits the accumulated and accrued leave which a member may have to his credit after August 31, 1946, to 60 days and, in order to prevent forfeiture of leave by a member who continues in service after such date, provides that any leave in excess of 60 days to which he may be entitled on August 31, 1946, be settled and compensated for in the same manner as provided in the Senate amendment. The conference agreement also directs the departments concerned, in promulgating regulations relating to the granting of leave, to provide that leave shall be taken annually as accruing to the extent consistent with military requirements and other exigencies.

Section 10 of the Senate amendment exempted persons on terminal leave from the armed forces from the provisions of sections 109 and 113 of the Criminal Code which prohibit an officer of the United States from acting as counsel, agent, or attorney in matters in which the United States is a party or is interested, and from prosecuting claims against the United States. The House bill contained no corresponding provision. This provision is not included in the conference agreement.

The House recedes from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate to the title of the bill.

R. E. THOMASON,
CARL T. DURHAM,
ROBERT L. F. SIKES,
LESLIE C. ARENDS,
CHARLES R. CLASON,
Managers on the Part of the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. THOMASON] is recognized.

Mr. THOMASON. Mr. Speaker, I want to make a brief but a very frank statement about this report.

The conference on this bill was in session for a good part of 3 days. Your conferees, the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. DURHAM], the gentleman from Florida [Mr. SIKES], the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ARENDS], the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CLASON], and I, stood steadfast for most of those 3 days, at least up until the final vote was taken, on what we regarded as the instructions of the House to pay this terminal leave to enlisted men in cash. I wish to make a brief statement as to the exact situation, and then the matter is left to your own judgment and wishes as to how you shall vote on it.

At these hearings on the part of the conferees there appeared representatives of the Director of the Budget, also representatives of some of the veterans' organizations, who favored this report as we bring it back to you.

The situation, briefly, is this: When this bill went to the other body they had hearings on it, and the chairman of the special committee over there, the Senator from Colorado [Mr. JOHNSON], had been very strong in favor of the payment of this accumulated terminal leave in cash. They called in different representatives of the Government, however, including the Secretary of War, Secretary of the Navy, the Secretary of the Treasury, and the Director of the Budget, and their testimony appears in the Senate hearings. The situation briefly is that we have now brought this back to you to pay this terminal leave partly in cash but principally in bonds. The bonds are to run for 5 years and to bear 2½ percent interest. All amounts due enlisted men under $50 will be paid in cash. All odd amounts not in multiples of $25 will be paid in cash. The estates of all deceased veterans will be paid in cash. All veterans who were discharged prior to January 1, 1943, will be paid in cash for the simple reason that those bonds will soon mature. These bonds, of course, will be staggered because the dates of discharge differ.

The total number of enlisted men who will be eligible for payment in either bonds or cash under this bill is approximately 16,000,000.

The total amount it will cost the Government in either cash or bonds is approximately $3,000,000,000, and the average to each veteran is approximately $166.

The Director of the Budget, or to be more exact, his representative, who spoke with his authority, appeared before the conference and reminded us of something we already knew, that we are in an inflationary period in this country and that the Director of the Budget would not approve the immediate expenditure of $3,000,000,000 in the economy of this country under present conditions. Everybody agrees that might become serious, and cheapen the value of the dollar still more. And I might add that he said this—of course, neither he nor any other person was authorized to speak for the President, but he did make the authorized statement to the committee that this bond proposal had been submitted to the President who approved it with the further statement that he would not approve anything more than that at the present time.

Following that an official representative of the national American Legion, Mr. Hayden, I believe that is the name, came before the conferees, as had Col. John Thomas Taylor, an authorized spokesman for the national American Legion, previously to that, and urged the payment of this leave in bonds, since that was the best we could get, because it is well known to all of those on the conference that in view of the President's statement to the Director of the Budget, and the statement of the Director of the Budget to us—to be perfectly frank about it at the present time, I think it is this or nothing. For these reasons the conferees brought this bill back to the House.

I might also call your attention to the fact that other representatives of the veterans, including Mr. Tate, of the Disables American Veterans, favored this bill. I think in order that you may be fully informed it will be well to read a few lines of his testimony. This is indicative of the attitude of all of the service organizations as far as we could obtain it.

Col. John Thomas Taylor, spokesman for the American Legion, called me himself and urged the adoption of this report.

Mr. William E. Tate, national director of claims, Disabled American Veterans, stated, and I quote from his testimony before the Senate:

> I would like to state our organization is very much interested in seeing that these men receive this benefit, and in view of the testimony of Secretary Sullivan as to the method of payment, we would have no objection to that method being employed. It seems that perhaps it would be of more benefit to the men to get it that way than it would in cash. If it is going to result in inflation, it would decrease the value of the money he gets, so our organization would be in accord with the testimony of Mr. Sullivan.

The statement was also made, although I do not speak with authority, that the American Veterans Committee not only favored this manner of payment in view of present economic conditions but I believe they were the authors of this suggested proposition.

It was also reported to us that the Veterans of Foreign Wars also approved the Senate plan. That was the statement of one of the Senators, although I do not vouch for its accuracy.

I would like to go a little farther and say that after full consideration of this plan and the endorsement of the Director of the Budget as well as the President speaking through him, the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Navy, the Secretary of the Treasury, and the various veterans organizations, the conferees agreed on an amendment which you will find in the report that these bonds can be used to apply on the payment of premiums for veterans' insurance. There were many on the conference, and also some of these men whom I have mentioned who favored the bill, thought this manner of payment would not only encourage thrift for the present but would also encourage the keeping up of life insurance. It is really distressing the way the men are letting their life insurance drop. This would certainly encourage the keeping alive of those premiums for the present.

Mr. Speaker, I do not want to take any extended time but just to boil it down let me make one further statement. I may add that the Senate conferees stood firm and were unanimous that they would not agree at this time to any other solution of the problem except this one. They felt sure that is the way the Senate would feel about it. I may say that I was over at the Senate a little while ago and the Senate unanimously adopted the report. Of course, as I said, this is not altogether satisfactory to the House conferees, it was not my own feeling and not the way I voted in the House on it, but this is something tangible and it will determine the amount due each of these men. I voted for the cash payment and am still for it. I urged it in the conference, but this is better than nothing. When the report was adopted in the Senate a little while ago the Senator from Florida [Mr.

PEPPER] rose and said he would introduce immediately a bill making these bonds payable in cash. If Congress is to adjourn day after tomorrow it will be impossible to get any action at this time; but we will be back in January and if at any time next year or at any time before the maturity of the bonds Congress wants to order these bonds paid, or pass some sort of adjusted compensation as it did after World War I, the Congress may make these bonds redeemable in money.

Mr. GAVIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THOMASON. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. GAVIN. Did I understand the gentleman to say that the President would not approve anything other than the issuance of these bonds?

Mr. THOMASON. I will try to quote the representative of the Director of the Bureau of the Budget who appeared before the conference. He said this plan had been submitted to the President and that the Director of the Budget and the President had approved the plan but that they would not at this time approve anything more than that. Nobody is authorized to speak for the President. Nobody can say he would veto a cash payment. I pressed for a statement that I could quote and the representative of the Bureau of the Budget said that the President would approve this plan but he would not approve of any more at this time, and the Director of the Budget then added that he thought it would be a very bad thing for the country to turn $3,000,000,000 loose on our economy at this time on such short notice. A lot of that money would be recklessly spent. It would add to our inflation problems. I hope when we get back to full production and conditions more stable, we can then make these bonds cashable or negotiable. The dollar of the veteran will probably buy a lot more in a year from now than it will today.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THOMASON. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. As I understand, these bonds are not negotiable except for the payment of premiums on Government life insurance.

Mr. THOMASON. That is correct.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Let me ask the gentleman what is there to prevent the next Congress from making these bonds negotiable?

Mr. THOMASON. Nothing in the world. If this Congress wants to come back in January or next July or next January a year, and economic conditions are better, they can make them payable at any time they see fit.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I think we should pay it in cash right now.

Mr. COLE of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THOMASON. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. COLE of Missouri. I think it is correct to say that apparently they have plenty of cash for Britain but only bonds for our veterans.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THOMASON. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. I believe this is the first time that the Government has put into effect this sort of policy; is that correct?

Mr. THOMASON. I am not able to say. The gentleman is as well informed about that as I am. We just brought the report back here to give you the true situation. It is just this or nothing at the present time as we view it.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. The point I want to make is this: I would like to know why, if it is going to be the policy of the Government to begin to freeze its obligations, they begin with the veteran.

Mr. THOMASON. The gentleman will have to answer that himself, because he knows as much about it as I do.

Mr. GRANGER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THOMASON. I yield to the gentleman from Utah.

Mr. GRANGER. Did I understand the gentleman to say that these bonds could be used only for payment of premiums on Government insurance, or any insurance?

Mr. THOMASON. No; it would be confined to veterans' insurance, convertible national life insurance or insurance of that kind.

Mr. BARRETT of Wyoming. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THOMASON. I yield to the gentleman from Wyoming.

Mr. BARRETT of Wyoming. I am in entire accord with the splendid statement of the gentleman. I favor the payment in cash to enlisted men. Why should not the buck private be treated the same as his officers. Can the gentleman give us any figures as to what the percentage of the $3,000,000,000 would be paid in cash?

Mr. THOMASON. No. Compared to the total sum it would be rather small, but quite a sum because I repeat that the average amount to each veteran amounts to $166. All claims under $50 will be paid in cash, and all odd amounts will be paid in cash. In other words, if a man had $185 coming to him, he would get a bond for $175 and $10 in cash. I also repeat that the estates of deceased veterans will be paid in cash.

Mr. ARENDS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THOMASON. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. ARENDS. I think it was stated that the amount paid to those receiving $50 and less would be approximately $300,000,000.

Mr. BENNETT of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THOMASON. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. BENNETT of Missouri. As I understood the gentleman from Texas, he gave the same figure for the payment in bonds as if they were paid in cash. It would appear to me, since the bonds carry interest, that that would greatly increase the cost of the program. Can the gentleman shed any light on that?

Mr. THOMASON. I can only say that the bonds carry 2½ percent interest. Of course, a veteran may have entered the service in 1943, and he is going to get his bonds in January, say, 1948, on the day of his discharge, and the bonds bear interest from the date of discharge of the veteran.

Mr. DURHAM. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THOMASON. I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. DURHAM. The total amount of payment in the cash bracket is estimated to be $358,450,000.

Mr. THOMASON. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THOMASON. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. RABAUT. I take this opportunity to commend the gentleman from Texas. This has been a matter of controversy between the two bodies, and the gentleman has made a very outright statement, explaining every phase of the negotiations. That is the type of statement that should come to the House on these controversial issues, and the gentleman is to be highly commended for the thorough manner in which he brought it forth. The House favored cash payments, but is conceding to the Senate plan only because action must be obtained now in these closing hours of Congress. The gentleman from Texas, in his legislative role, is forced to bring us the program adopted in conference.

Mr. THOMASON. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. CHAPMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THOMASON. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. CHAPMAN. I think it also should be stated, Mr. Speaker, that the conferees representing the House stood for 3 days stanchly and strongly for the House position on this measure, and agreed to the conference report because it was the only thing left to do.

Mr. THOMASON. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. GORE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THOMASON. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. GORE. I congratulate the gentleman on his very lucid statement. I thought I would oppose the conference report because I favor payment in cash, but the gentleman has made such a plain statement that it is either this or nothing that I shall accept the report.

Mr. THOMASON. I favored cash myself, and so did every Member representing the House at the conference. This does put Uncle Sam's bonds in the hands of every veteran. All of the Senators stood firm on the Senate bill. They said this might encourage thrift and saving and also encourage the keeping up of their very valuable and cheap Government life insurance. But when this inflationary period is over and we are back to full production, the Congress then, if conditions are better, can pay the bonds off with cash. The money will probably buy a lot more then than now.

Mr. GAVIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THOMASON. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. GAVIN. I should like to have the gentleman discuss momentarily the great concern of the administration about inflation. If the administration is concerned about inflation now, why was it not concerned about it when we had before us the $3,750,000,000 British loan? That money is going into circulation.

Mr. THOMASON. I repeat that we did the best we could. We brought this report back to you and we are giving you the truth and the facts. It is this or nothing for the present. We did the best we could under the circumstances. You can vote as you please, but I believe you will think twice before you kill this report. We adjourn Friday and we ought to do the best we can. We have to be practical and face facts.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THOMASON. I yield to the gentleman from Arizona.

Mr. MURDOCK. I commend the gentleman on this statement. I do not know who it was of the conferees who proposed the bonds being used for payments on life insurance, but I think it is an excellent idea. I voted for cash payment and still favor it, but if it is bonds or nothing at this time, I will vote to adopt the conference report.

Mr. THOMASON. The statement was made by a Senator in the conference that the American Veterans Committee gave birth to the idea and brought it to the Senate conferees.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to extend their remarks in the RECORD on the pending conference report, and that those Members who desire to do so may extend their remarks on this subject at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. GRANT of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, I am supporting the House-Senate conference report, which is a compromise on the part of the House for payment of enlisted men's terminal leave in bonds.

I understand that the House conferees reluctantly agreed to the Senate amendments to this bill, which provide a bond method of payment for all amounts over $50, and that when the amount due is under $50, that payment will be made in cash.

I note that some feel that if the veterans are paid in cash, as provided by the House bill, that it will be inflationary. This is, perhaps, true, however, I wish that those who raise an inflationary cry when the veterans are concerned would also apply this viewpoint to some other legislation where, too often, the doors of the Federal Treasury are open. I recall that several years ago, when cuts were made in some of the Federal expenditures, that the so-called economy cut was first applied to the veterans and it did not go much further.

It is, of course, impossible without a more detailed study, to know just how much appropriation will be required for this bill. However, an appropriation bill has been passed containing $2,431,000,000 for this purpose. I believe that it will be found to run higher than this amount.

While over $50 amounts will be paid in bonds, it is with pleasure that we find that the conferees have agreed that the bonds may be used to pay premiums on war-risk insurance, or to convert this insurance into permanent national life insurance. The bonds will be payable in 5 years, bearing 2½ percent interest and issued in $25 bonds. Without going into the merits of the payment of terminal leave to officers, it seems to me that a rank discrimination has been allowed to exist and, since it has existed, there is only one thing that this Congress should do and that is to immediately pass this bill.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. Speaker, it is depressing to know that the only economy ever practiced by this administration has been at the expense of our heroes, the veterans.

The Economy Act which made paupers and street-corner apple sellers of our World War I veterans was passed in the early years of the New Deal.

To those of us who forced this bill to the floor of the House by signing a petition, this move to pay off in scrip, or I O U money, is scandalous. We want our veterans to have cash—negotiable money. Oh, yes; I know, Mr. Speaker, a host of colonels of the War Department appeared up here on the Hill and opposed this legislation to pay these enlisted men for unused terminal leave; but they have theirs, and I swear that a billion dollars in the hands of GI's is no more inflationary than the same amount in the hands of the colonels or brass hats.

Mr. ANGELL. Mr. Speaker, I regret that this bill, H. R. 4051, comes back to us on a conference report requiring the enlisted men to be paid in bonds, rather than in cash. I favor payment in cash. I introduced a bill requiring that enlisted men be paid in cash for terminal pay the same as payment is being made to officers. I am unable to understand why enlisted men should not be accorded the same treatment as officers. The veterans should receive cash, and if it were possible to vote for cash payment I would do so. Under the parliamentary situation we have no choice, and if we vote down this report the enlisted men may receive no terminal pay until the Congress reconvenes in January 1947. I am willing to stay here all summer if necessary to secure a bill requiring payment in cash. At present it seems to be this bill or nothing during the Seventy-ninth Congress. I feel forced, therefore, to vote for the conference report. Next session we should pass a bill requiring payment in cash.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, in presenting the conference report on H. R. 4051, I am greatly disappointed at the provisions contained therein which provide for the payment of this terminal leave to veterans of World War II in bonds instead of cash. I have ever been in favor of the payment of this terminal leave in cash, and I am in complete accord with the House version, which is that the payment of the terminal leave to GI's should be made in cash. I have urged that this terminal leave be paid in cash. I am very sorry that the parliamentary situation is such that we are compelled to vote this conference up or down. This conference report cannot be amended, and, may I say, that I am greatly surprised at the attitude of the President in requesting that the GI's be paid in bonds, and at the same time hiding behind the subject of inflation as an alibi. The commissioned officers have been paid their leave in cash. The GI's are entitled to receive their leave pay in cash. It is tragic, indeed, for the President, and those in control, to approve the payment of terminal leave in cash to commissioned officers, but to demand that the GI's, who fought and who really won this war, accept bonds in payment of their terminal leave.

Mr. Speaker, this policy is both unfair and unjust. The GI's are entitled to be paid in cash, just as the payment has been made to commissioned officers.

However, rather than get nothing for the GI's, as those in power have suggested, we will have to accept the conference report I presume. Yet, I am constrained to say that this conference report is very unfair to the GI's. I would rather that Congress remain in session for several weeks in order that a fair and equitable measure can be reported and passed in favor of the GI's.

It is very unfortunate that the President has sanctioned the payment of our money to UNRRA, to the UNO, and for a huge loan to Great Britain, and for many other items, but when this question is raised to pay the accrued terminal leave to our GI's, he wants to give them bonds, payable in the future. It appears to me that the President wants cash for foreign countries but only bonds for our own veterans.

I am greatly disappointed over this legislation.

Mrs. MANKIN. Mr. Speaker, the officers of our armed forces were given their terminal leave pay in cash and therefore I feel that the enlisted personnel should be paid the same way rather than in bonds, as the Senate insists. As this session is coming to a close and we must either accept the Senate version or lose our chance to get some sort of terminal leave pay for our enlisted men, I shall vote for this bill which pays them with bonds. I serve notice, however, that next January I shall introduce a bill to amend this one that we are now passing. I shall seek by this amendment to change these payments from bonds to cash when the recipient so elects.

Mr. ELLIS. Mr. Speaker, I will support this conference report which provides for the payment of terminal pay to soldiers, as we are told because of the parliamentary situation, that if we vote down the conference report, there is a possibility that no legislation whatsoever relating to this subject will be passed.

It is recalled that the House voted almost unanimously for the cash payment of this obligation. The irony of the situation is that we are informed that the President has stated he will not approve a cash payment proposal because as he states it is inflationary. You are reminded that just a few days ago, this House was literally pounded over the head by the White House, the State Department, and the Treasury to give the British Empire $3,750,000,000. At that time nothing was said about inflation by the proponents. We have been commanded by the spokesman of this administration to give and lend money to all the nations of the world, but when it comes to paying our own veterans, it has to be in 5-year bonds.

I want to express my opposition to this plan of payment with all the force at my command, and I join with many of my colleagues in bitter criticism of this administration for their treatment of the men who wore the uniform of this country.

Mr. ROBERTSON of North Dakota. Mr. Speaker, House Members find themselves in an uncomfortable position today. Our House conferees have withheld against the pressure of the administration and the Senate in favor of a cash payment of terminal leave to GI's. After having held out for a considerable time the House has been compelled to yield because we are soon to run out of time. We are now advised that we have but one choice; to vote this conference report up or down. Under parliamentary rules this is evidently the case, the Senate having already voted on it.

Rather than deny the GI's their rights I propose to vote for this conference report, even though it provides for payment of terminal leave in bonds due in 5 years. It is a gross injustice when measured against the treatment officers have received.

To me it becomes nauseating to always hear the word "inflationary" when the administration is not in approval of a program. On all other matters, including subsidies paid by the Office of Price Administration, there is no reference to inflation. Even the British loan is not considered inflationary. But today we are asked to pay these young men in bonds due in 5 years, because to pay the amount in cash would be inflationary.

Mr. Speaker, I shall support the conference report and vote for payment in bonds reluctantly. I do so because I am advised it is this or nothing, but I shall be among the first, if I am returned to the next Congress, to support legislation for the cash payment of these bonds.

Mr. NORBLAD. Mr. Speaker, the provisions of the conference report requiring payment of enlisted terminal leave in 5-year bonds is, in my opinion, manifestly unfair. As an officer I received my terminal leave in cash and cannot understand why a similar provision cannot be made for enlisted men. There should be absolutely no difference in method of payment.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Speaker, the House finds itself in an unfortunate dilemma in the final consideration of the terminal-pay bill for enlisted men. The House bill, a companion measure to H. R. 4467, introduced by me last October, provided for the payment of cash to GI's in settlement of terminal-leave payments. The bill went to the Senate, which body inserted an amendment that provides for payment in cash where the amount is less than $50 and for payment in 5-year, nonnegotiable bonds, bearing 2½ percent interest, for amounts above $50. The Senate amendment also provides that these bonds may be turned in to the Veterans' Administration for the single purpose of paying premiums on Government war insurance, or to convert the war policies to permanent national service insurance.

By a unanimous vote, the House had approved payment of the terminal-leave pay in cash. Democratic administration leaders in the Senate, who were responsible for the bond amendment, definitely state that if the House does not accept the Senate proposal, there will be no legislation in this session of Congress, which adjourns in 2 days. We are therefore placed in a position of either voting for the Senate proviso, or seeing the legislation killed for the present session. Under the circumstances, those of us, who are anxious to have a bill passed before adjournment, are compelled to accept the Senate amendment. This is no way to legislate. Enlisted men are entitled to a cash payment, the same as is given to all officers. The only thing that we can do, under the circumstances, is to approve the bill in its present form, and when Congress reconvenes in January to speedily approve legislation to make these bonds negotiable, so that veterans who desire to do so may cash them at their face value. I will do my utmost to secure the passage of such legislation.

Members of the conference committee have all stated that the President has objected to the payment of cash in the settlement of terminal-leave pay, because the payment of $2,400,000,000 to American servicemen in cash was inflationary. I do not agree with the President's logic. No cry of inflation was raised by him when he demanded and secured the approval of the $3,750,000,000 loan to the British Government, or in the loaning of $3,500,000,000 by the Export-Import Bank to dozens of foreign countries. Can it be the attitude of administration leaders that when money is given to foreigners it is not inflationary, but when just obligations are settled with American soldiers, who will spend all of the money in the United States for American products, it becomes inflationary? I would say, that such reasoning is a rather peculiar complex. We must rectify the mistake which we are being forced into today, as quickly as possible.

The bill provides that unused leave will be paid for at the rate of 2½ days a month for not to exceed 120 days, using the base pay at the time of discharge, plus 70 cents a day subsistence, and, if married, $1.25 a day additional. Enlisted members of the armed forces, who have been discharged, are required to make application for payment. The Veterans' Administration will announce procedure for payment as soon as plans are perfected. Approximately 15,000,000 veterans will be entitled to terminal leave pay, according to the best estimates of the War and Navy Departments, and the average payment will be around $165.

Mr. GILLIE. Mr. Speaker, it is my personal conviction that the House should stand by its original decision to make terminal-leave pay available to enlisted personnel in cash.

The whole purpose of this legislation is to correct an obvious injustice. This being the case, I believe we should not leave the job half done. Officers and other employees of the Government have not been asked to wait 5 years for money earned through accrued leave. Why should an exception be made once again at the expense of the enlisted man?

If it is really our purpose to place officers and enlisted men on the same footing insofar as these benefits are concerned, our action should extend to the method of payment as well as the payment itself. Why attach strings to it? Why pay the brass hats in cash and tell the GI, who needs the money now, to wait 5 years for the wheels of justice to catch up with him?

I am not overly impressed by those who point with alarm to the so-called inflationary dangers of the House bill, and who express concern over the extra purchasing power which would be made available. If they are sincere, why did they not raise this same issue against the British loan? Our British brothers are getting cash on the barrel head. Why draw the line at our own GI's?

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Speaker, as I indicated a little while ago, when the gentleman from Texas [Mr. THOMASON] yielded to me for an observation, I think that part of the conference report which provides that GI's may use the bonds received in payment under this bill pay for their government insurance is a good and wholesome provision. I approve of it. Of course, it was the will of the House that this pay to enlisted men should be in cash, but if—as the gentleman from Texas, Mr. THOMASON, says—the Senate is adamant on this matter and we cannot get the Senate to recede and concur, we had better pass the measure in this form by accepting the conference report.

I do not think many GI's will condemn Congressmen for acceding to this bond provision. I expect some criticism personally but not a great deal, from GI's, for many of them know that I personally worked with Congressman James O'Connor, of Montana, in the very beginning of the defense program to raise the GI's pay from $30 to $50 and that I later worked with the gentleman from Mississippi, Congressman JOHN RANKIN, toward the same end, and successfully in the last case. Having always been generous with GI's in financial matters, I do not expect to be criticized by them now for being willing to vote to pay them in bonds instead of in cash, when it is obviously impossible to pass the measure providing for cash payments. Let us pass the best bill we can get. When I see one of the authors of this legislation urging its adoption, I know this is the best we can get.

I want it distinctly understood that I feel it is in the interest of the ex-service man to keep up his insurance. I advise it on every possible occasion and I have heretofore voted provisions into law which will induce GI's to keep up their insurance or to better the insurance contract in any possible way. This is one of the reasons that I am sanctioning the conference report today which permits this payment in bonds to be used for payments on the soldier's government insurance.

Mr. ROONEY. Mr. Speaker, justice requires that the enlisted men's terminal leave pay be paid in cash. The officers in our armed forces receive their terminal leave pay in cash. Why should discrimination be made against the enlisted men? If we found it possible to turn over three and three-quarter billions of dollars in cash to Great Britain—I voted against the British loan—we should certainly be able to pay our just debt to the GI Joes in cash.

I signed the petition to discharge the Rules Committee from consideration of the original terminal leave pay bill in cash form. I voted for it in cash form when it was passed by this House. The day before yesterday as a member of the Committee on Appropriations I voted the money to pay it.

With these sound convictions in my mind I now find myself in an extremely awkward position due to the present parliamentary situation. There is no alternative at the moment but to vote up or down on the conference report. If we vote it down it is most likely the enlisted men's original terminal pay leave bill will die and that no further action can be taken until the 80th Congress convenes. This would result in a very unfavorable situation as the veteran would then receive no benefits whatsoever. But if we adopt this conference report at least the enlisted man will have Uncle Sam's bonds and some cash. We will then be in a position to return here next January and change the maturity date on the bonds so as to make them immediately payable. I deplore the adamant attitude of the Senate on this question but have no alternative under the circumstances to do anything other than reluctantly accept the conference report.

Mr. CHENOWETH. Mr. Speaker, I am voting for this conference report for the reason I want to see a terminal pay bill for enlisted men pass at this session of Congress. I am very disappointed that the House conferees saw fit to accept the Senate amendment providing for the payment in bonds instead of cash. Personally, I feel very strongly that these payments should be made in cash, and I can see no excuse for issuing these bonds.

I join with others who have spoken in expressing the hope that another Congress will correct this injustice, and pass legislation that will give our enlisted men cash instead of bonds. It does seem strange that we have cash for every other purpose, even to the extent of making large foreign loans. I do not think we should start to economize on our veterans. These men are entitled to this terminal leave pay and the amount to each will be small. I cannot justify and I will not defend the attitude of the administration in seeking to make these payments in bonds instead of cash, as previously voted by this House.

TERMINAL LEAVE WAS PAID IN CASH FOR OFFICERS—THE SAME SHOULD BE DONE FOR ENLISTED MEN

Mr. REES of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, the conference report on terminal leave pay for enlisted men ought to be rejected and the House version of this bill should be adopted. The Senate bill provides for payment in bonds. The House bill for payment in cash. Of course, the bonds are good and will be payable at maturity with interest, but I think that in view of the fact that the average payment to the veteran is only about $160, the Government ought to let the veteran have it in money so he can use it now in helping to become rehabilitated. The Government paid cash to the officer without hesitancy. Why not treat the GI on the same basis?

It has been suggested that to pay these funds in cash is inflationary. If this appropriation is inflationary, what about the billions of dollars this country is spending for other purposes, including the $4,000,000,000 this Congress approved for the British.

I regret the President has taken the position that he will veto the bill unless payment is made in bonds. The money is due the boys—they ought to have it. If they want to buy bonds they can do so. If they want to buy things that they need right now, they should have a right to do that too.

We did not hesitate to pay billions of dollars in cash for services of all kinds to carry on the war. Since the amount due each veteran is small, let us pay it in cash and not make them wait 5 years or more before they will receive it. Most of them need the money now. Let us be fair about it.

Mr. THOMASON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ARENDS].

Mr. ARENDS. Mr. Speaker, in order to clarify the situation, I should like to propound a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ARENDS. Will the Chair state to the House the reason why this conference report has to be voted up or down at this particular time?

The SPEAKER. A motion to recommit this conference report is, of course, not in order. Therefore, the gentleman is correct when he says it is a question of voting the conference report up or down.

Mr. ARENDS. I think that may clarify to some extent in the minds of some of the Members here as to why it is necessary to now vote this report up or down; there being no other alternative.

Mr. Speaker, I should like to make this statement on the part of the House conferees. All five of us of course wanted to carry out the will of the House, which had voted unanimously to pay this terminal leave in cash. We got to the Senate and faced this situation. The conferees on the part of the Senate were adamant in their position in maintaining that the bill passed the Senate in the way it did, providing bonds, was the only possible form in which any terminal leave legislation could pass that body and no other result would be possible. Therefore, we found ourselves in the position of either saying we would be in disagreement, and reporting the bill in disagreement to the House, and facing the possibility of an anticipated veto. Of course, we could not say a veto was definite but it was probable, and therefore we would have no terminal pay bill at all. The conferees on the part of the House in agreement among themselves, decided to accept the Senate version and come back here and let the House exercise its will in the matter. I see no other way out of it. Personally, I should like to see this money paid in cash. I believe the vast majority of the Members of the House stand in the same position. But we face this situation, either take this or there will be no bill at this particular time. Therefore I choose, as a last resort, to take the bonds.

We did add one feature to the bill which originally was not before the Senate or the House, namely, a provision whereby veterans could use their bonds in payment of insurance premiums or on obligations of indebtedness under insurance loans. In that respect, I should like to give you a bit of information which was made available to us through the Veterans' Administration, because I feel we are adding some inducement to the veterans to transfer their insurance from war-risk insurance to some regular line policy.

There are approximately 13,000,000 or 14,000,000 veterans who are entitled to carry Government insurance. Of this number, there are about 5,500,000 who are carrying war-risk insurance, and of that 5,500,000 there are only 276,000 who have up to this time seen fit to convert their war-risk insurance into regular policies. Therefore, I think that the incentive to let them use these bonds as payment on their insurance premiums is at least helpful to some extent. I hope many of the boys will take advantage of it. As I said before, we had no direct statement and no one told us that the President would veto this bill if it provided payment in full in cash except that the Budget Bureau representative convinced us by what he said that it had to be this way or nothing at all. Therefore, to clarify the situation, and let the House know how the conferees felt, we thought it best to come back here with the conference report in the shape that it is rather than to find ourselves in complete disagreement and not have any legislation at all.

I am glad to yield to the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. MUNDT].

Mr. MUNDT. The gentleman propounded a parliamentary inquiry, but I think the answer that the gentleman received is not quite complete. It is true that we have to vote this conference report up or down, but it is also true, is it not, that if we vote this conference report down, then the chairman of the committee of conference could and would make a motion that the House further insist on its position which, of course, the Senate would take a vote on as to whether or not they want to have this paid in cash or in bonds. Now the Senate has talked in innuendo and by implication, but it has actually taken no roll-call vote as to whether they want this paid in bonds or cash. Am I correct in that statement?

Mr. ARENDS. I think that is correct, but I believe the gentleman from Texas stated the situation very well when he said that if the Congress in the next session feels that these bonds should be made negotiable then we can make them so.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. THOMASON. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman one additional minute.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ARENDS. I yield.

Mr. PATMAN. I am very much impressed with the argument about the insurance, but suppose a veteran converts his insurance to a 20-year payment life or an endowment policy with $200 that he has to his credit. Then suppose he desires to make a cash loan of $150 and he gets the $150 in cash. Would he not have to pay 5 percent interest on that whereas the Government is only paying 2½ percent interest? That is something which I am afraid might be harmful to the veterans instead of being helpful to them.

Mr. ARENDS. Would that not be an exception rather than the rule?

Mr. PATMAN. I do not know. I hope it would be an exception.

Mr. ARENDS. I do too.

Mr. PATMAN. I was just raising that point.

Mr. ARENDS. We are merely trying to give the boys something that we hope the majority of them may take advantage of.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. THOMASON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. DURHAM].

Mr. DURHAM. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman who preceded me has told you that this was the best we were able to do. The Senate Military Committee was reluctant to take this measure up at all and never agreed to take it up until there was an agreement that it would be paid in bonds. That is what we were faced with. We bring the report back to you Members and it is the best we could do. Personally, I do not like it. There is another feature about this report which I think we should think about because this terminal pay stems from the old act of 1874 by which the Army got itself into this predicament of having to pay terminal leave. Personally, I do not like it, and think it never should have been initiated by the Army, but since the officers have been paid terminal pay, I think it our duty to provide it for the enlisted men.

Under this act, after August 31, 1946, there will be no more terminal-leave pay, because the men will thereafter have to take leave or they will not be paid for it. I think that is a fine provision in this act and that we should think of this before we vote down this measure.

Mr. O'HARA. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DURHAM. I yield.

Mr. O'HARA. Are they still paying the officers in cash for terminal leave?

Mr. DURHAM. Certainly. At the present time we are. They will not after this bill is passed. There is no way to pay an enlisted man at the present time unless this act is passed. There is no act on the books that will pay enlisted personnel. Therefore, we are trying to pass this act to pay them something.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DURHAM. I yield.

Mr. JONES. From and after this date the administration does not oppose paying officers in cash, regardless of whether this conference report is adopted? The administration will not oppose paying the officers in cash?

Mr. DURHAM. No; they would not be paid in cash after this act is passed.

Mr. JONES. The officers?

Mr. DURHAM. The officers. Surely. After this act is passed that is true. At the present time they are entitled to it under the old act of 1874, and they are still being paid under that act.

Mr. JONES. Does the gentleman know how much has been paid the officers in cash?

Mr. DURHAM. No. I tried to find that out. The gentleman is a member of the Committee on Appropriations, and I wish he would secure that information for me, if he can.

Mr. JENSEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DURHAM. I yield.

Mr. JENSEN. Has the gentleman heard any talk regarding the proposition that we should pay 3,000,000 Government employees in bonds?

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from North Carolina has expired.

Mr. THOMASON. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman one additional minute.

Mr. DURHAM. A few minutes ago the question was asked, How much would be paid in cash? There are four categories that will be paid in cash. That is, those discharged prior to January 1, 1943, who died after discharge; those discharged after January 1, 1943, with less than $50; those discharged after January 1, 1943, with more than $50, to be paid in cash. That amounts to $358,400,000. So we are paying quite a lump sum in cash. The total estimated cost is $2,679,493,000. The average cost of each individual will be $167.03.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from North Carolina has again expired.

Mr. THOMASON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CLASON].

Mr. CLASON. Mr. Speaker, this conference had only one main issue before it. We had three separate meetings which lasted for a considerable period on that one issue. That was the sole question of whether terminal leave should be paid in cash or by bonds. The first day it was evident that the Senate conferees were standing pat on bonds. All five members of the House conferees were standing pat on cash. The second day the representative of the Bureau of the Budget was present. He was there in person to tell us the situation as he knew it and as it had already been explained to the Senate. I took down his exact words. We were insisting that they tell us, through the Bureau of the Budget, exactly what the position down the street was on this particular issue. He said, and I quote him exactly:

> We have been informed that the President will be opposed to any further cash payment over and above what the Senate bill calls for.

Those were his exact words. We were told that meant that unless we accepted the payment in bonds, as provided by the Senate bill, we could not expect to have any bill at all. Under that bill we find that during the fiscal year 1947 bonds would be issued in the amount of $2,080,000,000, and that $320,000,000 would be paid out in cash. We also know from what has been told us on the floor of the House that during the fiscal year 1947 this House has appropriated between forty-two and forty-seven and one-half billion dollars which will be expended for various purposes. It is hard for me, and I think it is hard for all of the House conferees, to believe that this additional sum of $2,000,000,000 was going to be inflationary to any such extent as to warrant this Presidential position reported by the representative of the Bureau of the Budget. Sixteen million persons will be paid this terminal leave as enlisted men, and will receive on the average $165.73 each. It will range from little up to $800 per man.

The value of the dollar has gone down so much since the start of the war and certainly so far since 1933 that today it is doubtful if those people with $165 each on the average can purchase much of anything—a refrigerator at best for each home; and it is hard to believe that this is any inflationary measure. The five conferees of the House were in this position, however, you either take what the Senate has offered you or the enlisted men will get nothing, and while all five of us refused to go through with this bill on the second conference day, we did agree at the last meeting to bring this measure before you in the House in order that you might know exactly the position of the Bureau of the Budget and of the Senate on this measure. Now it will be up to you, having had this explanation, to determine what action you wish to take. The assurance was given us that unless we took the bonds plus cash payments of about $320,000,000 there would not be any terminal-leave payment made to enlisted men at this time.

I believe it has been pointed out that if bonds are issued under this measure this year Congress will be in a position and will have the time which is not now available to go ahead with this proposition to determine in January or February whether or not the bonds which have been issued shall be made assignable or convertible into cash.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CLASON. I am glad to yield.

Mr. WILSON. Is it not true that under this bill the enlisted men as far as spending power is concerned are going to get practically nothing anyway? Why would it not be much better for us to stay in session until we get a bill passed that will give them some spending power? These I O U's, which they can use 5 years from now, is not the thing they want. We paid the officers in purchasing power, in cash. Why should we discriminate at this time against the enlisted men? As far as I am concerned, I am ready to stay here the rest of the year to get cash for these boys.

Mr. CLASON. Probably a million officers have received better than a thousand dollars apiece in terminal-leave pay in cash, or over a billion dollars, and it does seem as if the President, the Senate, and the Bureau of the Budget are taking an unfortunate position in saying that the 16,000,000 enlisted men must take bonds payable in 5 years. When the opportunity to vote on the right of the enlisted men to convert their bonds into cash comes before the House, I shall favor this right to convert.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. THOMASON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. SIKES].

Mr. SIKES. Mr. Speaker, while I am going to disagree with the policies which are set forth in the present measure, I do want to pay sincere tribute to the work of my colleagues who served as conferees. They made a very earnest, sincere, and determined effort to bring back a bill in keeping with the bill which passed the House. That bill provided for cash payments, and the House adopted it unanimously.

Let me say at the outset that we were able to secure the inclusion of a number of items in the bill now before us which were in the House bill and which I think makes it more satisfactory legislation.

The main point in disagreement, of course, was whether the payment should be in cash or bonds. I disagree with the whole policy of payment in bonds. Our efforts to provide terminal-leave pay for enlisted men was intended to correct inequalities which now exist between the treatment of officers and enlisted men. This bill does not get away from those inequalities; as a matter of fact, it sets up some new ones. For instance, it provides bonds for enlisted men, whereas officers got cash—a billion dollars in cash. It provides that cash will be paid to enlisted men who were discharged before January 1, 1943, and that bonds will be used in payment of those discharged after January 1, 1943. Then it provides for still another change in procedure after September 1, 1946. After that date, all personnel, officers, and enlisted men will receive 30 days terminal leave per year, cumulative to 60 days. There will be no more cash payments after September 1, 1946. Instead, officers and men will be given terminal leave in the manner I have indicated.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIKES. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Can the gentleman give us some outline as to the procedure for paying out these bonds? Will a veteran have to apply for them or will they be given to him automatically if this legislation is approved?

Mr. SIKES. I would be glad to touch on that. The veterans who have already been discharged will have to apply for their bonds. Those who have not been discharged will be paid in cash at the time that they are discharged until September 1, 1946, after which time all of them will have to take leave instead of cash.

The point I am bringing out in that connection is that this legislation leaves a sizable group in the armed forces who are receiving different treatment from their buddies who have been previously discharged. I disagree with that policy. The House bill provided that men and officers would receive terminal-leave pay until the end of the duration and six months, after which both groups would be allowed to accumulate 30 days leave time. We felt that this policy is more in keeping with other service bills.

Mr. Speaker, the statement has been made here that it is bonds or else and I think that is true at least for the present. Your conferees worked hard, they did everything possible to bring back a bill providing for cash payment and I think as far as this session of the Congress is concerned, it is bonds or nothing. That is why I signed the conference report bringing this before us, and I think the same is true for all the House conferees.

I want to point out, however, that if this bill were to be vetoed or were to be deadlocked in Congress, we could come back next spring, pass the bill, and if necessary pass it over a veto, providing for cash instead of bonds as payment and we would then be 4 years ahead of bond payments as far as the average man in the armed forces is concerned.

Already I have heard one Senator say on the floor of that body that he is introducing a bill to make the bonds payable immediately. Each of us knows that within 30 days after we convene next January there will be a score of bills to provide for conversion of bonds to cash. Less than a year from today there will be a discharge petition in the well of the House to correct the action we propose to take today.

Mr. CORBETT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIKES. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. CORBETT. Is it not the gentleman's opinion that if the House votes down this conference report and insists on further disagreement it is impossible to conceive of the Senate yielding?

Mr. SIKES. All that we have had points in that direction. We went into that very thoroughly. Every House conferee insisted to the last on cash. The Senate conferees were apparently determined not to yield and they said the Senate would back them up in that. I have nothing else I can give the gentleman. However, we acted in good faith in assuming that the Senate would stand back of its conferees.

Mr. Speaker, inflation is the main issue in this discussion and I have a terrible fear of inflation. It is something that is near, something that is very dreadful to contemplate, and something that can speedily wreck all that we have done to bring about reconversion and to insure a stable economy.

Mr. KEARNEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIKES. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. KEARNEY. Why is it that when they talk about inflation it is always when some legislation pertaining to veterans comes up for consideration?

Mr. SIKES. I do not think this topic can be limited to veterans' legislation. I am not one of those who will stand here in the well of the House and say we have done nothing for the veteran. This Congress, acting for the Nation, has done more for the veteran than any nation in history has ever before dreamed of doing for the men and women who served in its armed forces. But I confess that I am a little tired of hearing called inflationary only those measures which the "powers that be" happen to be opposing.

Mr. KUNKEL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIKES. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. KUNKEL. Can the gentleman tell me how long it would take to figure out the payments due these men, get the bonds prepared and delivered?

Mr. SIKES. Unquestionably that is going to be a formidable task and one which will require some time. I do not think, however, it is an insurmountable obstacle. That has been gone into in the bill and the machinery has been developed for the speediest possible handling of the problem.

The bill which passed the House would have done a clean-cut job of correcting an inequality. We saw a need for that and we set out to accomplish it. The measure now before us will not achieve that. One result of this bill will be a little more bureaucracy, and a few more dissatisfied and disillusioned GI's. I am reluctant to see it substituted for the House bill.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Florida has expired.

Mr. THOMASON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN].

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, as one who believes the claims of the veterans should be paid in cash, I exceedingly regret the legislative situation we find ourselves in today. It is almost impossible to exercise our real will. The House is unanimously of the opinion the veterans be paid in cash. Apparently we find before us two obstacles, one in the Senate and the other the attitude of the White House. If we persisted and fought the issue out, we might overcome the stumbling block in the other branch of the Congress, but I am afraid from the frank statement of the conferees we could not get the approval of the President. Knowing of the existence of the House bill, he has let it be known he favors the Senate bill.

High officials of the administration have signified to the conferees their opposition to the cash proposition, and it is reasonable to assume they speak for the President. They would not dare to take the position without his support. Therefore, we are indeed in a quandary.

Mr. Speaker, I despair when I hear now the cry of inflation. We have been spending billions of dollars for many things. We spent $4,000,000,000 for subsidies. Many other activities we freely authorized requiring billions of dollars of spending and no one uttered the word "inflation." Now, when we come to legislation in which veterans are concerned, we hear the cry of inflation. If it is true that inflation is caused by excessive spending, then why are we not consistent and stop the wild, reckless, extravagant spending such as has been going on for the last 2 years? The administration voices have been silent heretofore. Now we hear the cry of inflation. Our predicament is that apparently it is the Senate version of the terminal pay or nothing, as my good friend from Texas stated. I believe that the House conferees were sincere and did everything possible to get the House viewpoint to prevail. But they were informed, "it was this or nothing," and apparently that is the same reason why the various military organizations have come to favor the conference report as submitted. Unquestionably if they thought there was a chance to have a cash plan they would continue the fight.

I want to serve notice that nothing is ever settled until it is settled right. If the officers could have cash, then there is no reason on earth why the private soldiers should not be treated the same. After all it is the good old private and noncom who carries the greater burdens of war. I believe, whatever we do today, this fight will continue. If we do not give fair, equal treatment today why then the next Congress will see the injustice is corrected. Eventually the American people will see that fair play prevails.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. In line with what the gentleman has stated, of course, Britain received a loan of $3,750,000,000, and nothing was said about the inflationary tendency of that. But, on top of that, the Export-Import Bank since VJ-day has loaned $3,500,000,000 to foreign countries, which makes over $7,000,000,000, and not one single word was said about inflation when that money was paid out in cash.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. And next year Russia will be here asking for a billion and a half dollar loan and I wonder how many in the administration will then recall it will be inflationary.

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. HINSHAW. There is no doubt but had the war lasted 3 months longer, or the men kept in service 3 months longer, the same amount of money would have been spent in the pay of the Army and the Navy?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. There is no question about that at all. The inflation cry is just a sham issue.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. THOMASON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. ROGERS].

Mr. ROGERS of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I am rather disappointed in that we cannot get cash to pay off these enlisted men. The committee, I know, worked hard to get cash, but could not. At the present time it is up to the House. This is the last clear chance we have this session to grant terminal-leave pay to the boys. Here is a bill that I introduced on September 13, 1945, and since that time I have been working hard for it; and it has had a circuitous route but is now before us for final passage. I hope the membership of this House will not turn it down because we cannot get all cash at this time. What we want is something for these boys.

Let me tell you a solution to this problem. Give the boys the bonds today, so that they will have something, and I will promise the membership of this House that the first bill that I introduce in the Eightieth Congress will be one to make these bonds payable in cash to every applicant and to every holder of those bonds that makes application. That is the best thing to do. That is all anybody could ask now. Congress can do that. We will have something to work on if we do that. If you do not vote for this conference report, then we have absolutely nothing. In the next Congress—and I am quite sure I am coming back—I will introduce a bill or a resolution providing that these bonds shall be made payable in cash to the holder of every bond. Now, that ought to satisfy everybody. That ought to satisfy the Republicans. It ought to satisfy the Democrats, and that is what we ought to do. Let us not go away from here without doing something for the GI Joe's.

Mr. KEARNEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROGERS of Florida. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. KEARNEY. The gentleman says "Let us vote something for these boys." If we adopt this bill we are not voting them anything, are we?

Mr. ROGERS of Florida. We are voting them bonds, which is an obligation of this Government, and is a cash payment deferred for 5 years.

Mr. KEARNEY. It is a bond payable in 5 years.

Mr. ROGERS of Florida. This Congress can amend that and pay it in cash next year. We will be doing something if we do that. Let us compromise on that. We all want cash. I want cash. But it is bonds or nothing at this time. Let us adopt the report.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Florida has expired.

Mr. THOMASON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FENTON].

Mr. FENTON. Mr. Speaker, it certainly has come to a pretty pass in this House when some people can say, "Take this or nothing." As a member of the subcommittee of the Committee on Military Affairs which considered this bill I favored its adoption from the beginning, I regret that the conferees saw fit to bring in this report which does not give the enlisted men the same kind of treatment afforded the officers. Why should any person tell our fighting men just how they are to be paid or how they should expend their own money? In my district there are now about 14,000 or more veterans unemployed, and their unemployment compensation is about to expire, with no chance of their getting any jobs. All these boys could make good use of the cash. I, for one, would rather that they had been paid in cash. Of course, since we have no choice in the matter, I will vote for the conference report.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FENTON. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. SPRINGER. As a matter of fact, these boys who are back home, discharged from the service, and who are without jobs, need this money more at this time than they will need it later.

Mr. FENTON. That is absolutely correct. I would much rather send this report back to conference and insist that the enlisted men be treated the same as the officers. And, I might add, they should be treated the same as foreign countries and other people who are getting everything they want, certainly in money.

Mr. THOMASON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. MARTIN].

Mr. MARTIN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I attended every session of the subcommittee that developed this legislation. I know what we worked on and what we thought we were getting. I had charge of the time on the Republican side during the debate. I have never seen such requests for time to express a unanimous opinion on any legislation as occurred here on June 7 in the general debate. I recall quite vividly that on June 11 the bill passed the House by a vote of 380 to 0. At that time the bill called for cash. All that time we were struggling to make our treatment of GI Joe the same as the treatment accorded the officers. And here today for the first time we are confronted with a parliamentary situation where we are given the defy to vote them bonds or nothing. Bonds that are nonnegotiable, bonds that cannot be cashed for 5 years, except for insurance, when we know GI Joes who cannot afford to carry insurance. Yet we cannot vote them anything but bonds. We must turn them down on cash for their terminal leave and look to some future Congress. I will join the procession here in voting for this bill even though it is for bonds, and then I will join the minority leader, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN], and the author of the bill, the gentleman from Florida [Mr. ROGERS], in their announced purpose to drive forward to make these bonds redeemable long before 5 years have gone by. As long as it is within my power to do so, I intend to join in that drive to make good our word and to take away from Congress the stigma of drawing a line of demarcation in the treatment of GI Joes as compared with the treatment accorded the officers.

Do not tell me that this is an inflationary measure. It just makes an echo come back to me from 1933, when I heard the echo of the famed Economy Act. All of you who were in the service and who worked in ex-servicemen's organizations at that time know what I mean.

Forcing our ex-service enlisted men to take bonds after paying every officer his pay and allowances in cash while in terminal leave is just another outstanding example of the failure of the present national administration to understand the importance of fair and equal treatment of all classes. This bill unmistakably follows the pattern of the Economy Act of 1933 in its vicious discrimination against the GI's. That situation must be corrected by a Congress that is determined to be fair. I sincerely hope the Eightieth Congress will do just that next winter.

Mr. THOMASON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. RIZLEY].

Mr. RIZLEY. Mr. Speaker, the GI's are not going to be fooled by all this wash-wash here this afternoon. I am not criticizing our conferees. They probably got the best report they could thus far. But the Members of the House ought to stand up and vote this conference report down and then let us see whether the Senate will refuse to pay the GI's in cash. You talk about these bonds. Look at this wash-wash that is going on here. The sop now is that we will go ahead and vote for this to be paid in bonds and then probably the first of the year we will make them negotiable so that they can get the cash, but to give them cash now would be highly inflationary. Think of how silly that is. While those boys were over there fighting, this Congress voted more than $4,000,000,000 in subsidies to pay the grocery bills of the people here at home. Think of that. That was not inflationary, according to this administration. Since the boys have come back here, as has been said here this afternoon, we loaned the British about three and three-quarter billion dollars in cash, not bonds. The Export-Import Bank is lending money—millions and billions—to other countries in Europe. But that is not inflationary, they say. But to pay these kids the cash, according to the brass hats, the Bureau of the Budget who speaks for the President, that would be inflationary. Yes, they say if we pay cash to these kids who went over there and did the fighting and dying—just the common GI—is so inflationary that it just must not be done. Of course, paying the officers in cash is not inflationary, according to the same brass hats and the President's spokesman. We ought to have the same courage that these GI's exhibited on the battlefield and kill this conference report and send it back and insist that the men who did the fighting be treated on an equal with the officers and be paid in cash.

Can you justify a policy that singles out the enlisted men and says they and they alone must accept nonnegotiable bonds as our contribution to their terminal leave? Of course, you cannot. We have increased the pay of all those who have entered the service since the war ended. That money is in circulation. Is that inflationary? Let the officers in the Army and the Bureau of the Budget answer that question.

As one Member of this House I am not going to sell the enlisted men short. I have watched this administration spend billions and put billions of dollars in circulation for all sorts of New Deal schemes, and they did not seem to worry about inflation until the veterans became involved. I say again we should vote down this conference report and instruct our conferees to go back and fight it out with the conferees of the other body if it takes all summer.

Mr. THOMASON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from South Dakota, [Mr. MUNDT].

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. Speaker, there is an old saying that nothing is new under the sun. I think that saying must be axiomatic at least when applied to the now-descending sun of the New Deal because as the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. MARTIN], said, "There is something strangely reminiscent about the argument here today."

During the first 100 days of the New Deal in 1933 when there was talk of economy, the economy and cut-backs were leveled solely against the veterans. Now when we hear talk about the inflationary pressures, the attack against inflationary pressures is once again leveled solely against the veteran. It is a strange attitude, it seems to me, for you Democrats to take in a Congress in which the President's party controls both the executive branch and every single Congressional committee in both Houses as well as the steering committees and can put legislation on the calendar for action whenever he wants to do so.

For the majority to create and then capitalize on a situation where, in the closing days of the session with barely a quorum of our membership remaining in the Capitol, it is necessary to accept "this—or else" legislation giving the GI his terminal pay in bonds instead of cash is a distasteful record. I for one resent it as I am firmly of the opinion that GI Joe should get his terminal-leave pay in cash. He should get it the same as was awarded the majors, colonels, and generals who were treated so generously and who received their pay in cash without delay, without restrictions, and without the insulting insinuation that they needed "to be given a lesson in thrift" or had to be required by a paternalistic government to "use their bonds to buy insurance."

Mr. Speaker, since cash was the method of paying the terminal leave consideration for the officers and the "brass hats" then cash should be the method of awarding the same consideration to the enlisted man.

I must confess, Mr. Speaker, I am not highly impressed by the arguments so frequently advanced here this afternoon by speakers from the Democratic side of the aisle when they tell us that President Truman will veto this legislation if we pass it in the form in which it was approved by the House which requires the Government to pay cash to the enlisted men for their accumulated terminal leave. If the President desires to veto such legislation, that is his responsibility and not ours. It is our responsibility to legislate as an independent branch of this Government and to exercise that responsibility in conformity with what we believe to be right. For that reason I shall vote today as I did earlier to make these payments in cash. I signed the discharge petition to get this legislation before the House in the first instance and it then called for cash payments to the GI for his terminal leave and I stand today where I stood then, squarely in favor of such cash payments.

Should the House be forced by the situation created by the proximity of the adjournment date to accept the President's ultimatum and approve this payment by nonnegotiable bonds instead of by cash, I announce now that in the next Congress I shall support the move announced by our minority leader, the gentleman from Massachusetts, JOE MARTIN, and work and vote to have these nonnegotiable bonds made redeemable in cash at the will of their holders. In my opinion, sir, that is no more than simple justice to the enlisted men of this war who in my book certainly deserve to be protected against such discriminatory practices favoring their officers.

The so-called officers' lobby in Washington has a lot of influence and does a good job of taking care of its interests. However, GI Joe must depend upon his Congressman and the sound arguments supporting his cause. Certainly, in the matter of making payments for accumulated terminal leave, there is no valid reason or just argument for paying officers their comparatively large payments in cash while enlisted men are expected to accept their considerably smaller payments in nonnegotiable bonds.

Mr. Speaker, when GI Joe needs the assistance stemming from this terminal-leave pay is in the immediate future. He needs it to help with his schooling, he needs it to help pay the expenses of getting rehabilitated into civilian life, he needs it to help set up housekeeping with his young wife or to help finance his business, farming, or professional activities. Five years from now it is devoutly to be hoped that the great percentage of today's young veterans will be so securely established in some lucrative and constructive activity that the small amount involved in these terminal-leave payments, will be much less important and helpful to them than they are today. Let us therefore make these terminal-leave payments in cash the way the House intended.

To argue that to pay the enlisted man his terminal-leave consideration in cash would be inflationary is indeed a strange line of reasoning to come from the White House today. We heard no such argument when the much larger sum of money involved in the loan to Britain was being debated. Then we were urged to make this loan to make business better and to increase the purchasing power for American products. Surely if $3,750,000,000 loaned to Great Britain is not to be considered inflationary it is nothing more than the argument of expediency for the administration now to say that about half that much money paid to our own enlisted men would disrupt our economy. The slogan of the New Deal must be, "Cash for foreigners but only bonds for the American GI." If that is the slogan, Mr. Speaker, it is neither sensible nor sound. The GI who today has to borrow money under the GI bill of rights pays 4 percent interest. It is not a square deal in my opinion to compel him to take a nonnegotiable bond bearing 2½ percent interest while GI Joe is asked to pay his Government 4 percent. This is especially true when his commanding officers all along the line were given their substantial and sizable terminal-leave payments in the good old folding money of our American currency.

Mr. Speaker, I hope we may yet work out an arrangement whereby the ultimatum served on us by the White House and the conferees to the effect that this legislation must be "this or else" can be modified so that we can pay these boys their cash in the manner the House prescribed. If, however, we are foreclosed from making such a decision today, I shall surely do all within my power to see that the next Congress corrects this injustice and makes these bonds immediately redeemable in cash. I have no sympathy with the point of view of the administration which talks and practices economy and inflationary controls only when matters concerning benefits for veterans and for our old people are up for consideration but which on all other considerations has the unchallenged record of being the most reckless spendthrift of any political party or political administration in American history.

In conclusion, may I state that there is a strange and startling inconsistency in the logic of the White House group which today argues that something like two billion dollars paid to our enlisted men to compensate them for their terminal leave is highly inflationary but which during most of the war insisted on paying out three times that much in subsidies so that the food bills of those who were at home during the war would be less, so that GI Joe upon his return to civilian life would have to help pay for those food bills through paying taxes to retire the debts created to get the money to pay them, and so that the politicians in the executive departments could continue to hope that such subsidies would seduce the public sufficiently so that Americans would continue to vote for Santa Claus.

Mr. THOMASON. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

CALL OF THE HOUSE

Mr. ARENDS. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER. Evidently a quorum is not present.

Mr. GORE. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

The SPEAKER. On this roll call 255 Members have answered to their names, a quorum.

By unanimous consent, further proceedings under the call were dispensed with.

ARMED FORCES LEAVE ACT OF 1946

The SPEAKER. The question is on the conference report.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the ayes appear to have it.

Mr. FORAND. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were refused.

So the conference report was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

STATUE OF NATHAN HALE

Mr. O'TOOLE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 84) authorizing the erection in the District of Columbia of a statue of Nathan Hale.

The Clerk read the title of the joint resolution.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, do I correctly understand that this is a resolution authorizing the Government to accept a statue constructed at private expense and which calls for no expenditure?

Mr. O'TOOLE. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Where is this to be placed?

Mr. O'TOOLE. It will be placed in the District of Columbia wherever the National Commission of Fine Arts designates.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Is this a unanimous report of the committee?

Mr. O'TOOLE. It is.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I withdraw my reservation of objection, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. O'TOOLE. It may interest the gentleman on the other side of the aisle to know that Nathan Hale was a member of the Young Men's Republican Club of New Haven.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. That alone is sufficient reason for passing the resolution.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the joint resolution, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to grant authority to the Second National Bank, of New Haven, Conn., executor of the estate of the late George Dudley Seymour, to erect the bronze statue of Nathan Hale, bequeathed by him to the United States of America, including pedestal, on an appropriate site on grounds now owned by the United States in the District of Columbia: Provided, That the site chosen shall be approved by the National Commission of Fine Arts, and the United States shall be put to no expense in or by the erection of this statute: Provided further, That unless the erection of this statue is begun within 5 years from and after the date of passage of this joint resolution, the authorization hereby granted is revoked.

The joint resolution was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. BARRY (at the request of Mr. PATMAN) was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include certain statements and excerpts.

KEETOOWAH INDIANS OF THE CHEROKEE NATION IN OKLAHOMA

Mr. STIGLER. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (H. R. 341) relating to the status of Keetoowah Indians of the Cherokee Nation in Oklahoma, and for other purposes, and ask unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the statement.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 341) which relates to the status of the Keetowah Indians of the Cherokee Nation in Oklahoma, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate to section 2 and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment, section 2 is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 2. That there is hereby set aside for the use and benefit of the Indians of the Cheyenne and Arapaho Reservation in Oklahoma the remainder of the lands comprising the diminished Seger School Reserve containing approximately five hundred and thirty-seven acres, and the improvements thereon, in section 15, township 10 north, range 14 west, of the Indian meridian, Oklahoma.

"Subject to the consent of the business committee of the Cheyenne and Arapaho Tribes thereto, the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to enter into an agreement with the Colony Union Graded School District Numbered 1, Colony, Oklahoma, for the use by the district of all or any portion of the land, and improvements thereon, described in this Act: Provided, That any such agreement shall contain the express condition that the land therein described and the improvements thereon shall revert to the use of the Indians of the Cheyenne and Arapaho Tribes when no longer used by the said school district for school purposes."

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate to the title of the bill and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"That the title be amended by striking out the words 'Colony Union Graded School District Numbered 1, Colony, Oklahoma', and substitute therefor 'the Cheyenne and Arapaho Indians of Oklahoma.'"

And the Senate agree to the same.

HENRY M. JACKSON,
JOHN R. MURDOCK,
W. G. STIGLER,
KARL E. MUNDT,
Managers on the Part of the House.

ELMER THOMAS,
HENRIK SHIPSTEAD,
E. H. MOORE,
B. K. WHEELER,
JOSEPH C. O'MAHONEY,
Managers on the Part of the Senate.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 341) which relates to the status of the Keetowah Indians of the Cherokee Nation in Oklahoma, and for other purposes, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon and recommended in the accompanying conference report:

Section 2 has been rewritten in order that the original purpose of the Senate amendment might be properly construed. It was the intention of the Senate that this Seger Indian School land be set aside for the Cheyenne and Arapaho Indians and yet be kept available for school purposes so long as it was desired to be so used. Under the amended version of this bill the lands which are now reserved by the United States for school purposes are immediately reconveyed to the Cheyenne and Arapaho Indians. Subject to their approval, the Secretary of the Interior shall enter into an agreement with the Colony Union Graded School District No. 1, Colony, Okla., for the use by the district of all or any portion of this land.

The title of the bill has been amended so as to set out more explicitly the exact nature and intention which the Senate amendment originally purported to convey. The change in phraseology is primarily for clarification purposes.

HENRY M. JACKSON,
JOHN R. MURDOCK,
W. G. STIGLER,
KARL E. MUNDT,
Managers on the Part of the House.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Just what does the bill do?

Mr. STIGLER. This bill only affects the State of Oklahoma. It allows two bands of Indians who call themselves Keetoowahs to organize and receive benefits under the Oklahoma Welfare Act. When the bill went to the Senate, it was amended there. The amendment which was worked out in conference allows the tribe to transfer title to the land and gives the use of the land to the school district. When the school district ceases to use the land for school purposes, the use and the title refers back to this tribe of Indians. It only affects the State of Oklahoma, as I said before.

The conference report was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

BUREAU OF MEDICINE AND SURGERY

Mr. DREWRY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (S. 2401) to amend the act of May 4, 1898 (30 Stat. 369), as amended, to authorize the President to appoint 250 acting assistant surgeons for temporary service.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman explain this?

Mr. DREWRY. A similar House bill (H. R. 6992) was passed on the Consent Calendar.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act of May 4, 1898, entitled "An act making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1899, and for other purposes" (30 Stat. 369), as amended by the act of March 18, 1940 (54 Stat. 54), and as further amended by the act of March 17, 1941 (55 Stat. 43), is hereby further amended so that the last paragraph of the appropriation for the Bureau of Medicine and Surgery (30 Stat. 380) shall read as follows:

"The President is hereby authorized to appoint for temporary service 250 acting assistant surgeons, who shall have the rank and compensation of assistant surgeons: Provided, That not more than 250 of such acting assistant surgeons may be serving in the naval service at any one time: Provided further, That the Secretary of the Navy, in time of war or declared national emergency, may appoint, for temporary service with the compensation of assistant surgeons, such acting assistant surgeons as the exigencies of the service may require."

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

A similar House bill (H. R. 6992) was laid on the table.

EXTENDING BENEFITS UNDER THE UNITED STATES EMPLOYEES' COMPENSATION ACT

Mr. DREWRY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's desk the bill, H. R. 7039, an act to further amend section 304 of the Naval Reserve Act of 1938, as amended, so as to grant certain benefits to naval personnel engaged in training duty prior to official termination of World War II, with Senate amendments thereto, and concur in the Senate amendments.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendments, as follows:

Page 2, line 6, strike out "This" and insert "The."

"SEC. 3. The act entitled 'An act to extend the benefits of the United States Employees' Compensation Act to members of the Officers' Reserve Corps and of the Enlisted Reserve Corps of the Army who are physically injured in line of duty while performing active duty or engaged in authorized training, and for other purposes," approved July 15, 1939 (U. S. C., 1940 edition, title 5, sec. 797), is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"'SEC. 2. As used in this act, the term "in time of peace" shall include that period after September 8, 1945 (the date of formal surrender by Japan), which is prior to the first day on which the United States is, by the action of the Congress or the President, or both, no longer engaged in any war in which the United States is engaged on the date of enactment of this section.'"

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman explain the Senate amendments?

Mr. DREWRY. The Senate amendments were put in to make this legislative enactment apply to the Army as well as the Naval Reserve.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Is that agreeable to the Army?

Mr. DREWRY. It is agreeable to the Army. I have taken the matter up with the ranking minority member of the committee.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendments were concurred in.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

MEDAL FOR SERVICE IN MERCHANT MARINE

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (S. 2236) providing for a medal for service in the Merchant Marine during the present war.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, this is a service medal for everyone who served in the Merchant Marine during the war?

Mr. BLAND. For as much as 30 days, between December 7 and VJ-day, as I recall. A similar bill was unanimously reported, H. R. 5892, by the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries. I took the matter up with the ranking minority Member, and he is here, and I advised him that I was going to call this up.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BLAND]?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the United States Maritime Commission is authorized and directed to procure a medal and suitable appurtenances of appropriate design, including an honorable discharge lapel button, to be awarded to (1) each person who served honorably in a war zone as an officer or member of the crew of vessels owned by or operated by or for the account of the Maritime Commission or the War Shipping Administration for 30 days during the period beginning December 7, 1941, and ending with September 3, 1945; and (2) each person who is entitled to receive a certificate of substantially continuous service pursuant to the provisions of Public Law 87, Seventy-eighth Congress, approved June 23, 1943 (57 Stat. 162). The medal may be awarded posthumously and, when so awarded, shall be presented to such representative of the deceased as shall be prescribed in the applicable regulations. Awards under this act shall be made pursuant to regulations prescribed by the Maritime Commission.

SEC. 2. The Maritime Commission is authorized to expend out of any funds available for expenditure by the Maritime Commission such sums as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this act.

SEC. 3. The manufacture, sale, possession, or display of any insignia, decoration, medal, award, or device, or the ribbon, button, or rosette thereof, or any colorable imitation of any insignia, decoration, medal, award, or device, provided for in this act, is prohibited, except as authorized under such act or any rule or regulation issued pursuant thereo. Whoever violates any provisions of this section shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $250 or by imprisonment not exceeding 6 months, or both.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

A similar House bill (H. R. 5892) was laid on the table.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT NATIONAL PARK

Mr. PETERSON of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 4435, an act to establish the Theodore Roosevelt National Park; to erect a monument in memory of Theodore Roosevelt in the village of Medora, N. Dak.; and for other purposes, with a Senate amendment, and agree to the Senate amendment.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendment as follows:

Page 5, line 2, strike out all after "Park" down to and including "Interior" in line 5.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida [Mr. PETERSON]?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman explain the Senate amendment?

Mr. PETERSON of Florida. Mr. Speaker, this is one of those bill in which the original bill provided that title should be acceptable to the Secretary of the Interior. The Senate struck out that line.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendment was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leaves of absence were granted as follows:

To Mr. CANFIELD, for 1 day, on account of official business.

To Mr. HINSHAW, for the remainder of this session, on account of official business.

To Messrs. HERTER, JACKSON, BARTLETT, and BLAND, to conduct hearings outside of Washington for the Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee.

PROCEEDINGS AGAINST GEORGE MARSHALL

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I send to the Clerk's desk a privileged resolution.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the Speaker of the House of Representatives certify the foregoing report of the House Committee on Un-American Activities as to the willful and deliberate refusal of the following persons to produce before the said committee for its inspection certain books, papers, and records which had been duly subpenaed, and to testify under oath concerning all pertinent facts relating thereto.

CALL OF THE HOUSE

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Speaker, a point of order. I make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the gentleman is interrupting the reading of a resolution that is privileged.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. That is just too bad.

The SPEAKER. The resolution is privileged but a Member may make a point of no quorum at any time.

Evidently there is no quorum present.

Without objection, a call of the House is ordered.

There was no objection.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

SENATE

THURSDAY, AUGUST 1, 1946

(Legislative day of Monday, July 29, 1946)

The Senate met at 11 o'clock a. m., on the expiration of the recess.

The Chaplain, Rev. Frederick Brown Harris, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Eternal God, Father of all, who art above all and through all and in all, without whom life has no spiritual source, no divine meaning or destiny, but with whom there is power for the present and hope for the future: We seek Thee as our fathers before us have sought Thee in former days when the difficulties they faced were as frowning heights before their climbing feet; yet by faith they were led over the peaks to the pleasant valleys and still waters beyond. So lead us on, for Thou only art our guide and deliverer.

Strengthen us with Thy might that the strain of these days may not break our spirits and that no denials of human freedom now loose in the world may intimidate our souls. When the problems which front us seem insoluble, when the very principles for which brave men have died are betrayed, when the seamless robe of world unity is rent in twain, when even the shining river of our dreams seems to sink into the sands of futility, still may we labor on, serene and confident, knowing, while the weeping of hopes deferred may endure for a night, that the joy of Thy sure victory cometh in the morning.

We ask it in the dear Redeemer's name. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. BARKLEY, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of the calendar day Wednesday, July 31, 1946, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

Mr. YOUNG. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to be excused from the Senate for an indefinite period.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, leave is granted.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Messages in writing from the President of the United States submitting nominations were communicated to the Senate by Mr. Miller, one of his secretaries.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Swanson, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had passed without amendment the following bills and joint resolution of the Senate:

INVESTIGATION RELATING TO INTERNATIONAL HIGHWAY FROM CENTRAL AMERICA TO ALASKA

Mr. CHAVEZ submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 317), which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads and ordered to be printed:

Resolved, That the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized and directed to make a full and complete study and investigation with respect to all matters, over which the United States or any agency thereof exercises or may exercise jurisdiction, relating to the construction and maintenance of an international highway extending from Central America to Alaska, and to report to the Senate at the earliest practicable date the results of its study and investigation, together with such recommendations as it may deem desirable.

For the purposes of this resolution, the committee, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized to hold such hearings, to sit and act at such times and places during the sessions, recesses, and adjourned periods of the Seventy-ninth Congress, to employ such clerical and other assistants, to utilize the services, information, facilities, and personnel of the departments and agencies of the Government, to require by subpena or otherwise the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such correspondence, books, papers, and documents, to administer such oaths, to take such testimony, and to make such expenditures, as it deems advisable. The cost of stenographic services to report such hearings shall not be in excess of 25 cents per hundred words. The expenses of the committee under this resolution, which shall not exceed $5,000, shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers approved by the chairman of the committee.

INVESTIGATION OF DESIRABILITY OF ADOPTING A WORLD CALENDAR

Mr. MURRAY (for himself and Mr. SMITH) submitting the following resolution (S. Res. 318), which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations:

Resolved, That the Committee on Foreign Relations, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized and directed to make a thorough study and investigation of the desirability and feasibility of the adoption for use within the United States, and promoting and encouraging the use throughout the world, of a revised calendar, generally called the World Calendar, which shall be in substantially the following form:

The World Calendar

ARMY AIR FORCE DAY

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, I shall not make a long speech, or delay the Senate, but I believe that on this day there should be included in the RECORD, among other articles, an editorial from the New York Times entitled "Army Air Force Day." The editorial speaks better of the great accomplishments of the Air Force in the war, and as to its future, than perhaps I could describe them in the limited time at my disposal. I shall merely say, as a member of the Committee on Military Affairs, that during the past year we held hearings covering a period of months. We had the privilege of having the leaders of the Army Air Forces, General Arnold, General Doolittle, General

Spaatz, General Stratemeyer, and others, testify before us, and I hope, as the New York Times suggests, on this the first peacetime celebration in 5 years, we may recall some of the facts about this great force.

As one Senator, I wish to express my deep appreciation and respect for what the Army Air Forces, together with the other branches of our service, did in making possible our victory. I trust that in the years to come the Army Air Force will not only take no backward step but will progress more and more, not only in the interest of the defense of our country but in the transportation commands and other commands which the Army Air Forces have so well developed throughout the world under the able leader of that branch of the Army Air Force, General George.

I ask that the editorial from the New York Times be printed in the RECORD at this point, together with an editorial from the Washington Times-Herald of today relative to the same subject.

There being no objection, the editorials were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the New York Times]

ARMY AIR FORCE DAY

Today sees the first peacetime celebration in 5 years of the beginnings 39 years ago of what became the mightiest air force in the world. The past tense must be used because in 11½ months of peace the United States Army Air Force shrank to a shadow—both as to size and effectiveness—of the air armada that it was for the final assaults on Germany and Japan. It is, however, now well past the crisis of demobilization that became almost a disorganization, and it is rapidly shaking down into the efficient peacetime organization that makes operative its new slogan: Air Power Is Peace Power.

There probably never will be needed again, air experts believe, the great Air Force of 2,383,000 officers and men and 64,591 planes that was in being at the peak of war operations. Gen. H. H. Arnold, wartime commander of the AAF, says that "the great aerial armadas of World War II are as outmoded as the Macedonian phalanx." Guided missiles and atom bombs will make unnecessary the great destructive fleets that swept over Germany and Japan. The present Air Force complement of 400,000 men can be a more destructive force, therefore, if it is needed, than was the wartime force of almost six times as many.

Two Army Air Forces still remain on active duty, in Germany and Japan, and Army Transport Command still flies 70,000 plane-miles a day on its world routes. In this country five different commands provide the planes, train new men, work out new strategy and tactics, and experiment with jet engines and radio-directed pilotless planes and missiles.

With the lessons of our unpreparedness in 1941 still fresh in mind, the Army Air Force is not the neglected orphan that it was for so many years after the close of the First World War. It would be well not to become too confident that the old lessons will not be forgotten as they recede in memory. More important anniversaries than that of today will be the ones 5, 10, 15, and 20 years from now. All of us, and most of all the fliers, hope the Air Force never will have to fight again, but until peace is secure all over the world we had better have the best.

[From the Washington Times-Herald]

AIR FORCE DAY

Now that peace is threatening to set in, the tendency of the Government is to trim the money needed to keep our Military Establishment in running order. Furthermore, our citizens, who thought they were afflicted with headaches during the war have come up against so many peacetime difficulties that they are inclined to forget about the need to maintain an efficient fighting machine.

It looks now as though we are going to have to keep up with the rest of the world militarily for a long while, what with occupation forces and the need for a bristling attitude just so somebody else won't think we're getting soft and try to move in on us, no names mentioned.

WE ARE GOING TO NEED A BIG AIR FORCE

General Eisenhower has already told us that we will have to keep up an army of 800,000 men merely to fulfill our commitments in occupation, and he is worried about where we're going to get the officers for an army of that size.

He included the Air Force in his calculations, and now the Air Force is doing a little worrying of its own.

Chief spokesman for the Air Force at present is Lt. Gen. George R. Stratemeyer, head of the Air Defense Command, which is charged with keeping the aerial frontier of this continent in a working condition.

It doesn't look as though there is going to be any merger of the Army and Navy right now. The Army is still agitating for it. The Navy has told its propagandists to keep their traps shut, so little is heard from that side.

Failing the merger, the idea of a separate Air Force is quite attractive to military thinkers, and especially to the Air Force. But, even given partial autonomy, the Air Force is still worried.

STRATEMEYER POINTS AT PRECARIOUS POSITION

General Stratemeyer, who is doing some stumping on the subject, believes that we are in a more precarious position, from the aviation standpoint, than we were during World War I. We started that with eight planes, but nobody else had any either. As of last May 1, said Stratemeyer, we had only 36,000 aircraft of all types in the AAF, and only 19,000 of these were first-line planes.

Rapid demobilization has reduced the AAF from over 2,000,000 on VJ-day to 400,000 now. Most of that number are untrained for combat, so that the available bombers and fighters could not be adequately manned.

In short says Stratemeyer, we could not punch our way out of a wet paper bag. And this, he continues gloomily, at a time when the next attack might not be at a point as far away as Hawaii, but directly at New York or Dubuque or Houston. Furthermore, he warns, we won't have a comfortable cushion of time to meet the attack.

Stratemeyer, while admitting the Navy is an officer and a gentleman and very good at fighting on the sea, points out painfully that the Navy has got $385,0000,000 to buy planes while the air force got only $369,000,000.

Jimmy Doolittle, president of the Air Force Association, an organization of veterans, was a little more outspoken about the Navy and its insidious propaganda. He even said the Navy was trying to start a rival air force, which, he declared, we cannot afford. With this we agree.

PLANE WOULD CARRY THE ATOM BOMB

Doolittle has predicted that there will be new and terrible weapons in the air, radar-controlled rockets and the like. But he emphasizes that, as things stand now, the plane is the foremost instrument of peace and the plane would still have to carry the atom bomb.

But Stratemeyer and Doolittle are not so much worried about mergers and the Navy's aims as they are about public apathy toward the Air Force and toward flying.

The Air Defense Command, with its auxiliaries—the Air National Guard, the Air Reserve and the Civil Air Patrol—and such organizations as Doolittle's Air Force Association and the Air Power League, are making a manful effort to arouse the public interest necessary to the restoration of the Air Force.

With this end in view, President Truman declared today Air Force day, so that everyone can hear about the needs and plans of the Air Force, which sums it up in the slogan—"Air power is peace power."

CALL OF THE ROLL

Mr. HILL. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

Mr. HILL. I announce that the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY] is absent because of illness.

The Senator from Nevada [Mr. CARVILLE] is absent by leave of the Senate.

The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GERRY] is necessarily absent.

The Senator from Missouri [Mr. BRIGGS], the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. KILGORE], the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS], the Senator from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN], and the Senator from Maryland [Mr. RADCLIFFE] are detained on public business.

The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH] is absent on official business, having been appointed a member of the President's Evaluation Commission in connection with the test of atomic bombs on naval vessels at Bikini.

The Senator from Louisiana [Mr. ELLENDER] and the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] are absent on official business, having been appointed to the commission on the part of the Senate to participate in the Philippine independence ceremonies.

Mr. WHERRY. The Senator from Maine [Mr. BREWSTER], the Senator from Delaware [Mr. BUCK], the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. HAWKES], the Senator from Kansas [Mr. REED], and the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. STANFILL] are necessarily absent.

The Senator from Vermont [Mr. AIKEN], the Senator from Illinois [Mr. BROOKS], the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. BUSHFIELD], the Senator from Indiana [Mr. CAPEHART], the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. ROBERTSON], and the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY] are absent by leave of the Senate.

The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BUTLER] is absent on official business, being a member of the commission appointed to attend the Philippine independence ceremonies.

The Senator from Iowa [Mr. HICKENLOOPER] is absent by leave of the Senate on official business as a member of the Special Committee on Atomic Energy.

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. SALTONSTALL] is absent on official business, having been appointed a member of the President's Evaluation Commission in connection with the test of atomic bombs on naval vessels at Bikini.

The Senator from Iowa [Mr. WILSON] is absent on official business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MAYBANK in the chair). Sixty-eight Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

REFERENCE OF PRESIDENTIAL NOMINATIONS TO APPROPRIATE COMMITTEE

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, as in executive session, I ask unanimous consent that certain nominations just sent to the Senate by the President, may be referred to the appropriate committee, so that we may secure reports from the committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nominations will be referred to the appropriate committee.

ADDITIONAL APPROPRIATIONS, FISCAL YEAR 1947

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House Joint Resolution 390, making additional appropriations for the fiscal year 1947; and for other purposes.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. MORSE. I am very happy to cooperate with the Senator from Tennessee in his request, with the understanding that it in no way displaces the motion now pending before the Senate.

Mr. McKELLAR. The request is made with that understanding.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Mr. President, I understand that after we finish consideration of the appropriation bill, we may then proceed with the consideration of Senate Resolution 196?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is the understanding of the Chair.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I now renew the request that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House Joint Resolution 390.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Tennessee?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 390), making additional appropriations for the fiscal year 1947, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations with amendments.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, and that the bill be read for amendment, the committee amendments to be first considered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered. The clerk will proceed to state the committee amendments.

The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the heading "Title I—General appropriations—Legislative," on page 1 after line 8, to insert:

SENATE

To enable the Secretary of the Senate to make the additional disbursements and to perform the additional duties and functions required of his office by reason of the enactment of the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946, fiscal year 1947, $173,667; and he is hereby authorized to allocate necessary portions of the said sum to the various Senate appropriations and to make transfers between same, including those contained in the Legislative Branch Appropriation Act for the fiscal year 1947 and those provided for in the said Reorganization Act: Provided, however, That the positions and funds now allocated to any Senator or to any standing committee chairman shall be continued until March 31, 1947, unless otherwise directed by the Senator or the chairman.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, after line 11, to insert:

ADMINISTRATIVE ASSISTANTS TO SENATORS

For compensation of an administrative assistant to each Senator, to be appointed by him, at a base salary of $6,000 per year, to assist him in carrying out his departmental business and other duties, fiscal year 1947, $288,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be available at the beginning of the Eightieth Congress.

Mr. BALL. Mr. President, I think inadvertently the committee in adopting the language of the amendment fixed it so that a Senator would have to pay his administrative assistant a base salary of $6,000, and the intent was to provide that the salary be not to exceed $6,000. So I offer an amendment to the committee amendment, after the word "of", in line 14, to insert the words "not to exceed."

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I have no objection to that amendment. It was the intention of the committee to make that provision, and I thought it had been made. I thank the Senator from Minnesota for calling that matter to the attention of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Minnesota to the committee amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I now desire to offer two amendments to the pending committee amendment, as amended, before it is disposed of. In line 14, on page 2, I move to strike out "$6,000" and insert "$8,000"; and in line 16 I move to strike out "$288,000" and insert "$384,000."

Mr. President, I desire to address myself to these two amendments, and I ask unanimous consent that they may be considered en bloc since they should go together.

Th PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. The Joint Committee on the Organization of Congress took a great deal of testimony from Members of both the House and the Senate. In its report filed on the 4th of March last under the heading "Relieving Members of nonlegislative work load," the committee made the following recommendation:

That each senatorial and congressional office be authorized to employ a high-caliber administrative assistant at an annual salary of $8,000 to assume nonlegislative duties now interfering with the proper study and consideration of national legislation.

Testimony introduced during our hearings estimated that as high as 80 percent of the average Member's time is spent in nonlegislative work. Expansion of governmental activities during the past 25 years has vastly increased the volume of correspondence and the requests for service from the Member's home State and district.

Many of these time-consuming details and errands must be serviced somewhere if the people are to continue to have a clearinghouse for their problems in the Nation's Capital. While it is true that the Constitution does not place this burden directly upon the Congress, nevertheless service to constituents has long been an accepted part of the job of a Member of Congress.

A small part of such service is useful in helping to untangle many problems that would otherwise receive cursory or scant attention. No other governmental agency could perform this function so cheaply or with the patience, understanding, and personal interest of congressional offices. It affords one of the few remaining direct contacts between the citizen and his elected Representative. Constituent inquiries also serve to keep Members alert to problems arising under legislation passed by Congress or from the operation of administrative programs. Your committee has studied ways of divesting Members of some of this nonlegislative work load. We find it is neither possible nor advisable to eliminate this service now performed by congressional offices. But the rendering of this service requires increased help in Members' offices in order that they may have adequate time for their duties as national legislators.

At various times Congress has increased Members' stenographic and clerical help as the work load of services to constituents has increased. But we have done nothing to transfer from Members' shoulders the principal burden of this nonlegislative business. Through the appointment of a competent assistant capable of assuming a large part of this service burden, Members can be released for the performance of their legislative duties.

Therefore we recommend that each congressional office be authorized to employ a high-caliber administrative assistant at $8,000 per year whose duty would be to relieve the Member of a substantial part of the nonlegislative work load and departmental business now carried by the individual Congressman.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I shall be glad to yield in a moment. I wish to complete this statement.

If we accept the committee's recommendation we start with a base maximum salary of $6,000, which, under the existing pay structure would amount to a total of $8,339.10. If such a person were married and had two dependents, the withholding tax would amount to approximately $93.92 a month, resulting in a net salary of $601 a month. If we adopt the amendment which I have proposed, the base salary of $8,000, in addition to the increases provided in the pay acts, would amount to $10,000. A married person with two dependents would have a withholding tax of $116.33, or a net salary of $717 a month.

Mr. President, there is no pride of authorship on my part, or on the part of any other member of the committee in this recommendation. But it was our belief that if we were to obtain the type of person who could in fact act as an administrative assistant and really help to take some of the administrative work load off the shoulders of Senators, such a person would necessarily have to be of high caliber, with broad experience. We did not think of the position as being in the nature of an additional secretary, in the sense in which we ordinarily use the term. We did not think of the salary as representing an increase for existing secretaries. We wished to give Senators the opportunity to appoint to these positions men or women of broad experience who could help to take some of the enormous work load in the departments and other places in the Government from the shoulders of Senators, and thus give Senators more time to discharge their responsibilities on the job for which they were elected under the Constitution, namely, as national legislators performing their duty in committees and on the floor of the Senate.

I do not believe that the salary proposed is excessive. We know that we must pay more money in order to get men and women of the necessary training and experience. We constantly hear the complaint, even from the Chief Executive, that the services of some of the best men in the executive branches are being lost to the Government even with a $10,000 ceiling.

I presented the amendment to the Appropriations Committee on behalf of the majority leader and the minority leader, in order to obtain the kind of assistants which it seems to me are absolutely essential if Senators are to be freed from extraneous work and given more time to do their primary job. If the position which we recommended is created, a base salary of $8,000 is not excessive when we take into consideration the salaries generally prevailing today in industry, and what professional men and women are now making outside the Government service.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. My recollection is that when the congressional reorganization bill was before the Senate there was no objection to the provision for an executive assistant at the figure carried in the bill.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. That is correct.

Mr. BARKLEY. When the bill went to the House, the House did not want the provision, and therefore it was eliminated. But it is my understanding that in the conferences which took place between Members of the House with reference to that legislation the suggestion was made that if the Senate desired to reinsert the provision for the benefit of Senators, the House would have no objection to it, and would agree to it. So what we are attempting to do is to reinsert the provision which we have already agreed to by practically a unanimous vote when we passed the reorganization bill.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. That is correct. While I would be the last to say that the present personnel in Senators' offices might not be entitled to greater compensation, it was not the idea simply to make this the means of increasing the salaries of existing personnel, although there may be some Senators who have persons now in their offices who possess the necessary experience and training. I know of my own personal knowledge of some men of that type in Senators' offices who can no longer be retained, and who will no longer stay in the service of their Senators unless they are given an opportunity for increased compensation.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield.

Mr. HAYDEN. On behalf of the committee, let me say that we took $8,000 a year to mean $8,000 a year. As near as the committee could come to $8,000 a year was to establish a base pay of $6,000 a year, which, as the Senator has stated, with the additions under the existing pay structure, amounts to approximately $8,340.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I can state very positively that when we drew the amendment which was ultimately acted upon by the Senate, the committee provided, as is usual in connection with every such bill, a certain salary, having the basic salary in mind. We recommended a salary of $8,000, knowing full well that that was the base salary. At the same time, of course, we recommended an increase in the compensation of Members of Congress, which was obtained. If the committee had wanted to recommend a net salary of $8,000, it would have recommended in its report a base salary of $6,000; but we recommended a base salary of $8,000.

Mr. President, that is all I have to say. Personally I think it is important for the future activities of Senators in the discharge of their primary responsibility as legislators to have persons of the caliber which can be obtained if the amendment which I have proposed is agreed to.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, the committee gave this question very careful consideration. The figure $8,000 was in the original bill. The Senator from South Dakota [Mr. GURNEY] was the first to call attention to the fact that if we made the base salary $8,000, it would mean $10,000. Additions to the base salary would increase it beyond $10,000, but there is a ceiling of $10,000. The Senator from South Dakota made an argument which was so well put that, as I recall, every member of the committee voted for the figure $6,000, because it really means $8,339. It is $339 more than what was thought to be the salary fixed in the bill. Under those circumstances, it seems to me that the proper figure is $6,000.

Mr. GURNEY entered the Chamber.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I was just saying that the Senator from South Dakota called the attention of the committee to the figure $8,000, and showed that it would really mean $10,000 instead of $8,000. At his suggestion the committee unanimously, as I recall, approved the figure $6,000, because it means a salary of $8,339.

Mr. GURNEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. GURNEY. It was my intention to provide for a maximum of exactly $8,000. But in figuring the basic salary, it was started at $6,000. The committee wished to make it near $8,000; so the basic figure was made $6,000, instead of a gross salary of $8,000.

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes. And the committee was of the opinion that $8,339 was sufficient. I have no trouble with the present salaries. I have never had any trouble. It is said that the employees have to pay taxes out of their salaries. So do Senators. Senators pay a tax of $142.40 a month, which amounts to $1,708.80 a year, which is taken out of the present salaries of Senators. That is bad, but it is something we all have to expect. I do not think Senators should be relegated to ordinary, every-day duties, and have their employees really put forward into the chief place. I do not think that should be done.

Mr. GURNEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. GURNEY. I have no objection to the figure as it appears in the bill.

Mr. McKELLAR. I thank the Senator.

Mr. President, I ask for a vote on the amendment.

Mr. BALL. Mr. President, I wish to speak briefly in support of the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin. I was called out of the subcommittee session when the Senator from South Dakota raised his point about the difference between the base salary and the gross salary. I was anxious to have the amendment worded in such a way that it would provide for a base salary of not to exceed whatever amount was determined upon, because I think some Senators will wish to—I know that I intend to—pick out a young man just out of law school, start him at a lower salary, and hold out to him the prospect that if he delivers the goods and does a good job, he will receive an advancement in salary. But, at the same time, Senators who are ranking members of the major committees which are to be set up under the Reorganization Act will have a tremendous legislative burden on their shoulders, and it is those Senators who will need the type of man whom they will not possibly be able to get for less than a gross salary of $10,000, or more.

We are leaving the matter to the discretion of the individual Senator. If he thinks he does not need a $10,000 a year man, he can pay less. But I think we should leave the way open for the chairmen and senior members on both sides of the aisle, who will be in charge of the smaller number of major committees which we are setting up, and who necessarily will have to devote much more of their time to their legislative duties than they have devoted heretofore, to have in their offices the kind of man to handle the routine of the office and the departmental work whom they cannot possibly get for less than $10,000 a year, no doubt.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BALL. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. I am one of the senior Members. I have a reasonable amount of work to do, and I think I do a reasonable amount of work. I have never experienced the trouble the Senator has mentioned. I have the very best kind of men as secretaries, and they are taking the work off my hands, and they are working at even a smaller salary than is proposed in this bill. The bill proposes a large increase in the salary of a secretary. I do not think we should make the salary too large. If we do, where shall we get the money? If we simply raise everyone's salary, and continue to raise everyone's salary every time such a bill is before us, and especially every time we have—I started to say every time we have an emergency bill, but I believe this is a supplemental appropriation bill, though they amount to the same thing—if every time we have such a bill before us, we raise everyone's salary, I do not know where we shall get the money with which to pay the salaries.

I think we should be thinking about the Government, to some extent, and not merely about individual salaries to be paid to those who work for the Government.

Mr. BALL. Mr. President, let me say to the Senator that in my service with him on the Appropriations Committee, it has amazed me to see how much time he has devoted to that committee. I know he carries a tremendous legislative load, and I do not know how he ever gets any time in his office.

But, Mr. President, I think it would be short-sighted economy not to provide really adequate salaries for such assistants. I think what we have spent in the legislative branch of the Government has been niggardly, in the past, and it is about time that we gave ourselves a staff adequate to do a sound legislative job in determining how and in what manner the $40,000,000,000 a year which we appropriate for the executive departments is spent. If by spending a few million dollars more on the legislative banch, we can cut the $40,000,000,000 national budget even 1 pecent or 2 percent, the investment will be repaid many times over to the taxpayers.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Mr. President, I think we are losing sight of one of the major points which should be considered, and which was mentioned by the Senator from Kentucky in his remarks. The Senate accepted the reorganization bill. It accepted the figure $8,000 for administrative assistants. That was the plan. It would have gone through the House except for the fact that the House did not wish to have a salary of $8,000 for assistants to its Members.

It seems to me that the Appropriations Committee in offering the first amendment designed to carry out the provisions of the legislative Reorganization Act could well stay within the provisions of that act; and since the Senate had already fixed this salary, I think the committee should recommend what had thus been fixed.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. I wish to ask the Senator, in all good conscience, whether he understands or believes that the Senate understood, when it allowed $8,000 for these salaries, that it really meant $10,000. Does the Senator from Utah think that was understood? Does the Senator think it was discussed? Actually, Mr. President, it was not discussed at all. A salary of $8,000 was placed in the reorganization bill.

Now the Senator takes a position which will result in making the actual salary which is paid $10,000, instead of $8,000. that is what the Appropriations Committee objects to.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Mr. President, the Senator from Tennessee is missing my point entirely. I am sure that the reorganization committee and I am sure the Senate understood that the $8,000 figure would be base pay, and accepted it as base pay, the same as it accepted any other salary as base pay. My point is simply this: Is the Appropriations Committee acting quite fairly with the Senate and is it acting quite fairly with its own rights when it says that the Senate did not intend to do that?

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. I wish to say that when the reorganization bill was passed the salaries of all employees had been increased 14 percent. We ourselves had said that there would be an increase of 14 percent. We knew, when we passed that bill, that the base pay of all our employees carries with it an increase of 14 percent, in addition to other increases which have been made from time to time. So that accounts for the difference between the $6,000 base pay and the $8,339 gross pay.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kentucky has the floor. Does he yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I believe I have said all I wish to say at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Then the Chair recognizes the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, as a member of the Appropriations Committee, I wish to say a few words about the pending question. It is true that I have been in the Senate only a short time, but I think I realize at the present time some of the problems with which Senators are faced. There is an enormous amount of work to be done. Senators representing the larger States naturally have a greater amount of work than do Senators representing the smaller States.

The bill we are now discussing is not compulsory. It is optional, insofar as each Senator is concerned. I take it for granted that if we adopt the amendment on the basis of a base pay of $8,000, no Senator will pay the salary to an employee who, he believes, is not honestly earning that salary.

Therefore, Mr. President, I think that the work which can be done by an able and efficient administrative assistant is well worth the base pay of $8,000 per annum. It is true that the pay might run up almost to the $10,000 limit. But during the time I have been a Member of the Senate I have discovered that there is a great amount of work for Senators and their office personnel to perform. Every Senator in order to take care of his committee work and all other legitimate matters which should be attended to for his constituents should be provided with a very able assistant. In Detroit there are men who are rendering service in connection with their private employment which is similar, in importance, to what a United States Senator renders to his Government, and those men are supplied with executive assistants who receive more pay than is provided for assistants to Senators. If we, as Senators, obtain able assistants, we must take them from government or other walks of life. Therefore, if we are going to solve this problem—I refer to the problem of obtaining necessary efficient assistants—we must be willing to pay salaries which are commensurate with the quality of service we expect to receive.

Mr. President, I for one hope that, under the reorganization plan recently adopted, the Congress will be in position to function more efficiently than it has in the past. I can understand perfectly well that one Member of the Congress may determine that he does not need as much help as does some other Member of Congress. He may have a small constituency compared to the population of other States, and he may not need additional help. But I wish to urge on the Members of the Senate that if they expect, under the reorganization plan, to perform all the work which it will be necessary for them to perform, they should receive proper assistance. The reduction in the number of committees will enable us to give our full attention to the work of each committee of which we may be a member, and to perform more efficient service in connection with committee work. We shall thereby be enabled more efficiently to serve our constituents and the country as a whole. The Nation grows larger each year. The work of a Senator becomes more arduous and difficult each year. If we are going to render to our constituents and to the country as a whole the kind of service which we, as Members of Congress, should render, we must have properly qualified assistants and must be willing to pay them adequate and proper remuneration. I know that the people back home will not be disappointed if their Senators and Representatives hire efficient assistants possessing the proper qualifications. The legislative branch of the Government should be placed on just as high a plane, from the standpoint of remuneration, as is the executive or the judicial. I know that the people of the country will be more satisfied if the efficiency of congressional employees is increased.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, a few moments ago the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS] said that the principal reason for the change which has been suggested was that the Senate had already passed upon it. Let us see what is in Senate bill 2177. I find the following language on page 35:

Each such administrative assistant shall receive compensation at the rate of $8,000.

Not base pay, but at the rate of $8,000 a year. The word "base" does not appear in the bill. So the Committee on Appropriations has appropriated exactly at that rate, namely, $8,000, and I think clerks now receive something like $4,500. Some of them now receive as much as $5,000. By this bill they would be raised to $8,000.

If the amendment is agreed to, their salaries will be raised to $10,000, or double the amount they receive at the present time. It seems to me that that is too much of an increase.

Mr. President, I say with all candor that it seems to me that this matter is one on which every Senator should vote, and I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I wish to say a word about the language in Senate bill 2177 to which the Senator from Tennessee has referred.

The legislative counsel, when drafting the bill, and the joint committee, when making the recommendation, utilized this language because it was considered to be language which would result in a base pay of $8,000. When the legislative counsel drew the bill there was raised the very question which has been raised here. They were instructed to draw the bill so as to provide for a base pay of $8,000.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, there is not a statute of which I know that fixes the pay of any employee of the Senate or the House. The law provides that they shall receive pay at a rate of so much. We got into the habit of using the term "base pay" because we granted an increase of a certain percent, based on the salary the employee was receiving under the statute. Every clerk in our offices who receives $5,040—that is the maximum which can be paid by any Senator—receives, in addition, the increases which have been granted.

Mr. President, this amendment and the provision in the bill itself, as well as the provision in the original reorganization bill which was passed, is no reflection on the competency, efficiency, or loyalty of any of our clerical help. We all have efficient, hard working, loyal, and devoted secretaries and clerks. They work not by any clock regulation. They work long hours and remain at night if we want them to remain. Now and then I have found it necessary to take one of my assistants home with me in order to do work which it was necessary to dispose of. If we have a person in our offices who, we think, will fit into this situation, well and good. If we want to bring someone to Washington from our States—I imagine that in some cases that may be done—or bring someone who has had experience and has received special training, such as, for example, a person who may have majored in government when pursuing his studies in the university, it is a matter of our own determination.

We have increased our own salaries, although we were somewhat belated in so doing. We have increased all salaries of Senators and Representatives to $15,000 a year. In view of the amendment which the House put into the bill, $2,500 of the salary is to be tax exempt. The tax experts have figured out that with such exemption the salary of $15,000 a year is equal to approximately $17,000 because of the different bracket the salary is put into when we make out our income tax report. The increase which has here been suggested of from $6,000 to $8,000 is not out of proportion.

After all, the total expense of the legislative branch of our Government is inconsequential when considered with respect to other departments of the Government. We do not spend in a whole Congress for all that we do and for all legislative activities and purposes as much as some of the departments separately of the Government of the United States—and I do not mean the War and Navy Departments, either.

So, it seems to me we are not extravagant in providing a salary which is about half of what we get for an assistant who can supervise our offices, assist in our legislative duties, and take from our shoulders a lot of details and burdens which grow year after year because of the complexity of our Government and because of the relationship between the Government of the United States and every human being who lives within our States and whom we cannot deny or ignore.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I merely wish to point out that in the report of the special committee on Senate bill 2177 we made an estimate of the total increase in the appropriations for the legislative branch of the Government that would be entailed if the bill finally becomes law. It amounted to $12,281,235 I should like to quote this excerpt from the report:

> Surely this is a modest price to pay for increased efficiency in the legislative branch of the Government. Even with this modest increase, the total cost of the legislative branch would be $6,000,000 less than the 1947 Budget estimate for the Office of the Administrator of Civil Aeronautics alone.

Mr. BARKLEY. That emphasizes the point I was making.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I will say to the Senator that I had to search the Budget forward and backward to find an agency or department in Washington the cost of which I could make a comparison with the total cost of the legislative branch of the Government.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I have said all I care to about the matter.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, I desire to say a very brief word about this situation. I think we ought to bear in mind that economy does not consist alone in withholding expenditures of money, but rather economy and efficiency are to be found in the wise use of such expenditures as are provided. There is a greater field for efficiency in the handling of our affairs and in the expenditure of our money and a greater opportunity for economy in doing things wisely than there is in withholding this or that particular sum. As I understand, the difference between the recommendation of the committee and what the Senator from Wisconsin urges amounts to only about $190,000 or $200,000, and I submit that when we compare that with the total expenditure involved in the program upon which we have embarked it is comparatively insignificant, it is not to be taken seriously into account, because I think unless we go forward with the program as outlined in the report and in the legislation which has been handled so wonderfully well by the Senator from Wisconsin, we are putting in jeopardy all we have been striving for in this effort. We have been trying to build an organization that would deal with government as a business, and it becomes us as Senators to deal with it efficiently and wisely. If we are not going to equip this organization to the last degree of efficiency, then we might as well not have started on the program at all.

Mr. BARKLEY. If I may suggest it, we will probably save as much by the reduction in the number of our committees and their staffs under the reorganization plan as this amendment amounts to.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, I want to conclude by saying that, much as I hate to be in disagreement with the chairman of the Appropriations Committee, whom I hold in the greatest respect and for whose zeal and ability I have great admiration——

Mr. BARKLEY. I share in that expression of the Senator.

Mr. WHITE. Everybody does.

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes; everybody does, and I hope the Senator from Tennessee is going to be renominated today in Tennessee by the largest majority he ever received.

Mr. WHITE. Unless there is a Republican there who stands a chance of winning, I agree with what the Senator from Kentucky says.

Mr. BARKLEY. If that is the condition of the Senator's concurrence, then he agrees wholly with me.

Mr. WHITE. I hope this expenditure will be authorized, because I believe it will make a contribution to the great purpose we had in view when we passed the reorganization legislation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MAYBANK in the chair). The Chair will state, in keeping with what the Senator from Kentucky has said, that the weather in Tennessee is fair today.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, I wish to make a further point. In my State of North Dakota the people became so dissatisfied, because their Senators within the last few years were too busy to render all the service required of them, that about 5 years ago various companies got together and formed an organization called the North Dakota Association which has been employing a man in Washington, who has been here constantly I understand, at a salary of $10,000, with an unlimited expense account, just to see to it that the various projects of North Dakota had a proper hearing before the various departments.

I appeal to the distinguished chairman of the Appropriations Committee, who has been here for a long time, to realize that when a new man comes to the Senate he is not as familiar as is the Senator from Tennessee with the processes of legislation, and wants somebody who thoroughly understands things. The chances are that if we get good administrative assistants, should some of us go out of office, our successors who come in would keep the same man we had already employed.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, just a word and then the vote may be taken. This language is perfectly plain. At present the highest salary of an administrative assistant or clerk is $5,000, so I am advised. The language the committee has placed in the bill would raise that salary to $8,335 a year which is probably the largest increase provided for any Government employee. I do not know of any other employees whose salaries have been raised to such an extent.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. That would depend altogether upon whether the particular person is appointed administrative assistant. I think that in some cases what the Senator says might be true.

Mr. McKELLAR. It would be in my case I know.

Mr. BARKLEY. In cases where a Senator wanted to appoint a new person, of course that comparison would not apply.

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes; but I think in 9 cases out of 10 it means an increase of salary to the person now holding the job of more than half as much again, and that is more than Senators' salaries have been increased and more than any others have been increased.

In the present condition of our Treasury, when the Government is not paying its way and taxes are not sufficient to pay what we appropriate, I think the amount in the bill is very reasonable. The language of the La Follette reorganization bill provides as follows, and it cannot be mistaken—

> Each such administrative assistant shall receive compensation at the rate of $8,000 a year.

It does not say $10,000 a year. It says $8,000 a year. If the intention had been to make it more it would have said "base pay," which is exactly what the committee amendment says.

Mr. McMAHON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. McMAHON. I was deeply interested in the comment made by the distinguished chairman of the Appropriations Committee to the effect that we are not collecting sufficient taxes to pay the expenses of the Government. I think we are all aware of that and that we all hope and trust that we may soon balance the Budget.

I might suggest to my good friend that if the Senators had more time to study the demands which are made by the executive departments, which time would be made available to them if they had taken off their shoulders some of the tremendous burdens which have been imposed upon them in the last few years, they would be able to save far more than the increased cost of this amendment and do more to bring the Budget into balance. I have had some experience, both in the executive department of the Government and in private business, and I say without fear of contradiction that, if the business we are called on to do, were to be done in the executive department or handled in private firms the cost would be a minimum of three times what is provided for in the legislative appropriation.

The Senator knows and appreciates that, of course, a Senator's salary cannot measure his responsibility. If a Senator were paid according to the standards of private business, for the decisions which he has to make and the burdens he has to bear, in my opinion, the salary would be not less than $75,000 a year.

While it is true that we cannot make the salary comparable to that, because it is not private business, and we do not come here for personal gain, nevertheless it is the measure of the responsibilities which we have to assume. We should undertake that responsibility with competent help, and if we give ourselves a sufficient amount to hire high class, competent assistants, the gain will definitely be in favor of the people, the taxpayers, of the United States.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, have the yeas and nays been ordered?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, this matter is one of very definite interest not only to the Senate, but to the country as a whole. Only on rare occasions do I stand on this floor and advocate the spending of more money for any purpose, but I support the amendment in this case because I believe the change suggested would be for the good of the country, would add to the efficiency of the Senate, and would increase the effectiveness of the individual Senator. It would enable him to get an outstanding assistant, would relieve him of many of the miscellaneous and manifold duties which fall on his shoulders, and, furthermore, in a Senate where we have seen men die from overwork, where we see men's health impaired, it is absolutely essential not only for the relief of the individual Senator but for the good of the Senate, in the interest of the Government, and for the good of the country as a whole, that we provide adequate assistance for Senators. I believe provision for this one administrative assistant, for a definite, specific purpose, would be a constructive step forward.

As the Senator knows, the provision will not be effective until the first of the year, and it is being put in the bill at this time so that Senators may make their plans for the coming year.

I hope the amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin will be agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE].

Mr. McMAHON. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Andrews	Hart	Myers
Austin	Hayden	O'Daniel
Ball	Hill	O'Mahoney
Barkley	Hoey	Overton
Bilbo	Huffman	Pepper
Bridges	Johnson, Colo.	Revercomb
Burch	Johnston, S. C.	Russell
Byrd	Knowland	Shipstead
Capper	La Follette	Smith
Chavez	Langer	Swift
Connally	McClellan	Taft
Cordon	McFarland	Taylor
Donnell	McKellar	Thomas, Okla.
Downey	McMahon	Thomas, Utah
Eastland	Magnuson	Tunnell
Ferguson	Maybank	Vandenberg
Fulbright	Millikin	Wagner
George	Mitchell	Walsh
Gossett	Moore	Wherry
Green	Morse	White
Guffey	Murdock	Wiley
Gurney	Murray	Young

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Sixty-six Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

The question is on agreeing to the amendments offered by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] which, under the order of the Senate, are to be considered en bloc. The amendments will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In the amendment of the committee on page 2, line 14, it is proposed to strike out "$6,000" and insert "$8,000", and in line 16 to strike out "$288,000" and insert "$384,000."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. WAGNER (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Kansas [Mr. REED]. Not knowing how he would vote, I transfer that pair to the Senator from Missouri [Mr. BRIGGS]. I am not advised how the Senator from Missouri would vote on this question if present. Being at liberty to vote, I vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. HILL. I announce that the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY] is absent because of illness.

The Senator from Nevada [Mr. CARVILLE] is absent by leave of the Senate.

The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. BILBO], the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BURCH], the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GERRY], the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER], and the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. STEWART] are necessarily absent.

The Senator from New York [Mr. MEAD] is detained on official business.

The Senator from Missouri [Mr. BRIGGS], the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. KILGORE], the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS], the Senator from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN], and the Senator from Maryland [Mr. RADCLIFFE] are detained on public business.

The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH] is absent on official business, having been appointed a member of the President's Evaluation Commission in connection with the test of atomic bombs on naval vessels at Bikini.

The Senator from Louisiana [Mr. ELLENDER] and the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] are absent on official business, having been appointed to the commission on the part of the Senate to participate in the Philippine independence ceremonies.

Mr. WHERRY. The Senator from Maine [Mr. BREWSTER], the Senator from Delaware [Mr. BUCK], the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. HAWKES], the Senator from Kansas [Mr. REED], the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. STANFILL], and the Senator from Indiana [Mr. WILLIS] are necessarily absent.

The Senator from Vermont [Mr. AIKEN], the Senator from Illinois [Mr. BROOKS], the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. BUSHFIELD], the Senator from Indiana [Mr. CAPEHART], the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. ROBERTSON], and the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY] are absent by leave of the Senate.

The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BUTLER] is absent on official business, being a member of the commission appointed to attend the Philippine independence ceremonies.

The Senator from Iowa [Mr. HICKENLOOPER] is absent by leave of the Senate on official business as a member of the Special Committee on Atomic Energy.

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. SALTONSTALL] is absent on official business, having been appointed a member of the President's Evaluation Commission in connection with the test of atomic bombs on naval vessels at Bikini.

The Senator from Iowa [Mr. WILSON] is absent on official business.

The Senator from Illinois [Mr. BROOKS] would vote "yea" if present.

The result was announced—yeas 40, nays 24, as follows:

So Mr. LA FOLLETTE's amendments to the committee amendment were agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment, as amended.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, I submit two amendments to the pending joint resolution, which I ask to lie on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendments will be received and lie on the table.

The clerk will state the next committee amendment.

The next amendment was, on page 2, after line 18, to insert:

SENATE POLICY COMMITTEES

For maintenance of a staff for a majority policy committee and a minority policy committee in the Senate, consisting of seven members each, for the formulation of over-all legislative policy of the respective parties, the members of such staffs to assist in study, analysis, and research on problems involved in policy determinations, and to be appointed, and their compensation fixed, by the policy committee concerned, at rates not to exceed $8,000 per annum in any case $15,000 for each such committee, in all, fiscal year 1947, $30,000, to be available at the beginning of the Eightieth Congress.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, after line 4, to insert:

CONTINGENT EXPENSES OF THE SENATE

For purchase, exchange, driving, maintenance, and operation of two automobiles, one for the majority leader of the Senate and one for the minority leader of the Senate, fiscal year 1947, $13,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, after line 9, to insert:

For an additional amount for expenses of inquiries and investigations ordered by the Senate, including compensation to stenographers of committees, at such rate as may be fixed by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, but not exceeding 25 cents per hundred words, fiscal year 1947, $150,000: Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be expended for per diem and subsistence expenses except in accordance with the provisions of the Subsistence Expense Act of 1926, approved June 3, 1926, as amended.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, after line 19, to insert:

OFFICE OF SERGEANT AT ARMS AND DOORKEEPER

For an amount necessary to increase salaries in the Senate Press Gallery, beginning July 1, 1946, as follows: Superintendent from $3,660 to $3,820; one assistant superintendent from $3,000 to $3,200; and one assistant superintendent from $1,920 to $2,100; in all, fiscal year 1947, $540; and the Legislative Branch Appropriation Act for the fiscal year 1947 hereby is amended accordingly.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "House of Representatives," on page 4, after line 14, to insert:

Contingent expenses, folding documents: For an additional amount for folding speeches and pamphlets, at a rate not exceeding $1 per thousand or for the employment of personnel at a rate not to exceed $5.20 per day per person, fiscal year 1947, $15,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, after line 19, to insert:

JOINT COMMITTEE ON PRINTING

Biographical Congressional Directory: To enable the Secretary of the Senate to pay, upon vouchers approved by the chairman or vice chairman of the Joint Committee on Printing, for compiling and preparing a revised edition of the Biographical Directory of the American Congress (1774–1948) as provided for in House Concurrent Resolution No. 163, adopted July 26, 1946, $50,000; and said sum or any part thereof, in the discretion of the chairman or vice chairman of the Joint Committee on Printing, may be paid as additional compensation to any employee of the United States, and shall continue to be available until expended.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 5, after line 7, to insert:

JOINT COMMITTEE ON THE ECONOMIC REPORT

For salaries and expenses of the Joint Committee on the Economic Report created by section 5 of Public Law No. 304, Seventy-ninth Congress, entitled "An act to declare a national policy on employment, production, and purchasing power, and for other purposes", approved February 20, 1946, fiscal year 1947, $50,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Independent Offices," on page 8, after line 4, to insert:

FEDERAL SECURITY AGENCY

Grants to States for maternal and child health services: For an additional amount, fiscal year 1947, for grants to States for maternal and child health services, including the objects specified under this head in the Department of Labor Appropriation Act, 1947, $9,180,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 8, after line 10, to insert:

Grants to States for services for crippled children: For an additional amount, fiscal year 1947, for grants to States for services for crippled children, including the objects specified under this head in the Depatment of Labor Appropriation Act, 1947, $6,130,000.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, have we passed over the item for the Office of Price Administration, on page 7?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There was no amendment in that section. The Senate is now considering the committee amendments.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, are we adopting the committee amendments now?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Certain committee amendments have been adopted.

Mr. WHERRY. What is the pending committee amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment on page 8, after line 10.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 8, after line 15, to insert:

Grants to States for child-welfare services: For an additional amount, fiscal year 1947, for grants to States for child-welfare services, including the objects specified under this head in the Department of Labor Appropriation Act, 1947, $3,490,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 8, after line 20, to insert:

Salaries and expenses, maternal and child welfare: For an additional amount, fiscal year 1947, for salaries and expenses, maternal and child welfare, including the objects specified under this head in the Department of Labor Appropriation Act, 1947, and including also travel, printing and binding, penalty mail, contingent and other expenses, $925,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 9, after line 2, to insert:

The appropriations contained in the four preceding paragraphs shall not be available for obligation until the enactment into law of H. R. 7037, Seventy-ninth Congress.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 9, after line 5, to insert:

PUBLIC HEALTH SERVICE

Mental health activities: For carrying out the provisions of the National Mental Health Act, except section 11, including travel; printing and binding; stationery; and the objects specified in the paragraph immediately following the heading "Public Health Service" in the Federal Security Agency Appropriation Act, 1947, including the purchase, maintenance, repair, and operation of three passenger-carrying automobiles; and an additional $2,380,680 for carrying out the provisions of section 314 (c) of the Public Health Service Act with respect to mental health, fiscal year 1947, $4,358,000, of which not to exceed $109,400 may be transferred without limitation account to the appropriation "Pay, and so forth, Commissioned Officers, Public Health Service": Provided, That there is authorized to be transferred to this appropriation such sums as the Surgeon General may determine to be available in other appropriations of the Public Health Service for mental health activities: Provided further, That determinations of the Director of the Bureau of the Budget of employment authorized under this appropriation shall not be subject to the aggregate numerical limitations set forth in section 607, subsection (g) (1) (A) of the Federal Employees Pay Act of 1945, as amended.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 10, after line 4, to insert:

National Institute of Mental Health: For the acquisition of site or sites, the preparation of drawings and specifications, and the performance of other work for the accomplishment thereof, for the National Institute of Mental Health, as authorized by section 11, Public Law 487, Seventy-ninth Congress, to remain available until expended, $850,000: Provided, That this amount may be transferred, upon the request of the Federal Security Administrator, to the Public Buildings Administration, Federal Works Agency.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 10, after line 14, to strike out the following subhead.

FEDERAL WORKS AGENCY—PUBLIC ROADS ADMINISTRATION

And in lieu thereof to insert the following subhead:

FEDERAL WORKS AGENCY

PUBLIC ROADS ADMINISTRATION

The next amendment was, on page 11, after line 2, to insert:

War and emergency damage, Territory of Hawaii: For carrying out the provisions of section 2 of the act entitled "An act to provide emergency relief for the victims of the seismic waves which struck the Territory of Hawaii, and for other purposes" (H. R. 6918, 79th Cong.), to be expended by the Commissioner of Public Roads in accordance with provisions applicable to its customary operations in the construction, rehabilitation, and repair of roads, highways, and bridges, by contract or otherwise, and necessary expenses incident thereto without regard, outside continental United States, to section 3709 of the Revised Statutes, including personal services in the District of Columbia or elsewhere and employment of personnel outside the continental United States without regard to civil-service and classification laws and section 14 (a) of the Federal Employees Pay Act of 1946, and the purchase of passenger motor vehicles, $8,000,000, to remain available until expended.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 11, after line 20, to insert:

BUREAU OF COMMUNITY FACILITIES

Emergency relief for the Territory of Hawaii: For carrying out the provisions of section 1 of the act entitled "An act to provide emergency relief for the victims of the seismic waves which struck the Territory of Hawaii, and for other purposes" (H. R. 6918, 79th Cong.), $1,300,000, to remain available until expended, of which amount not to exceed $65,000 shall be available for administrative expenses of the Bureau of Community Facilities, including travel, the purchase of two passenger motor vehicles, and personal services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere without regard to section 14 (a) of the Federal Employees Pay Act of 1946.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 13, after line 2, to strike out:

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE

BUREAU OF FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC COMMERCE

Export control: For an additional amount, fiscal year 1947, for "Export control," including the objects specified under this head in the Department of Commerce Appropriation Act, 1947, $600,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 13, after line 8, to insert:

DEPARTMENT OF LABOR

BUREAU OF LABOR STATISTICS

Salaries and expenses: For an additional amount, fiscal year 1947, for "Salaries and expenses," including the objects specified under this head in the Department of Labor Appropriation Act, 1947, $25,000, to be available for obligation until January 31, 1947.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 14, after line 9, to insert:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT

STRATEGIC AND CRITICAL MATERIALS (ACT OF JULY 23, 1946)

For all expenses necessary for the procurement, transportation, maintenance, rotation, storage, and refining or processing of strategic and critical materials for national defense purposes, as authorized by the Strategic and Critical Materials Stock Piling Act (Public Law 520, 79th Cong.), including personal services and rental and maintenance of storage space in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, $250,000,000: Provided, That any funds received as proceeds from sale or other disposition of materials on account of rotation of stocks of strategic and critical materials shall be deposited to the credit, and be available for expenditure for the purposes, of this appropriation.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That completes the committee amendments.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, I offer an amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Alabama will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 10, after line 13, it is proposed to insert:

Hospital and construction activities: For carrying out the provisions of title VI of the Public Health Service Act, as amended (S. 191), fiscal year 1947, including travel; printing and binding; the objects specified in the paragraph immediately following the caption "Public Health Service" in the Federal Security Agency Appropriation Act, 1947; and the purchase of 8 passenger automobiles; $2,425,000, of which not to exceed $147,147 may be transferred to the appropriation "Pay, etc., commissioned officers, Public Health Service" for not to exceed 28 commissioned officers, and not to exceed $41,680 may be transferred to the appropriation "Salaries, Office of the General Counsel," Office of the Administrator, Federal Security Agency: Provided, That this appropriation shall be available for personal services without regard to section 14 (a) of the Federal Employees Pay Act of 1946: Provided further, That the availability of this appropriation is contingent upon the enactment into law of said S. 191.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, a budget estimate had not come before the committee for this item. It has since come in and I suppose there is no reason why the amendment should not be adopted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Alabama.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk and ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Utah will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 20, after line 12, it is proposed to add the following new section:

SEC. 302. Section 2 (a) of the act of June 11, 1946 (Public Law 404, 79th Cong.), is amended by striking out the period at the end thereof and inserting a semicolon and the following: "and the Veterans' Emergency Housing Act of 1946."

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. President, this is the same amendment which I offered a day or so ago to the social security bill. It exempts the veterans' emergency housing program from the administrative act which was passed recently. I explained the other day that the housing program for veterans is being impeded and held up by reason of the fact that all directives and orders necessary to expedite the program must be published in the Federal Register for a period of 30 days. The amendment was agreed to the other day unanimously, but I am now advised that by reason of the parliamentary situation surrounding the social security bill, in order to be absolutely sure that this amendment goes through it should be included in this bill. If it goes through on this bill, it will be stricken from the other bill.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, is the amendment in exactly the same language as the amendment to the other bill?

Mr. MURDOCK. It is in exactly the same language.

Mr. McKELLAR. I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah [Mr. MURDOCK].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk and ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Washington will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. At the proper place in the bill it is proposed to insert the following new paragraph:

VETERANS' ADMINISTRATION

Automobiles and other conveyances for disabled veterans: To enable the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs to provide an automobile or other conveyance, equipped with such special attachments and devices as the Administrator may deem necessary, for each veteran of World War II, whether or not discharged from service, who (1) is entitled to disability compensation or pension under the laws administered by the Veterans' Administration, and (2) is unable, because of the loss, or loss of use, of one or both lower limbs, to use normal means of locomotion or ambulation: Provided, That no part of the money appropriated by this paragraph shall be used for the repair, maintenance, or replacement of any such automobile or other conveyance and no veteran shall be given an automobile or other conveyance under the provisions of this paragraph until it is established to the satisfaction of the Administrator that such veteran will be able to operate such automobile or other conveyance in a manner consistent with his own safety and the safety of others, and will be licensed to operate such automobile or other conveyance by the State of his residence, $30,000,000, to remain available until expended.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, this amendment is offered to the pending bill because of the parliamentary situation with respect to bills which have been introduced in both the House and the Senate providing ambulatory means for so-called amputees.

Most Members of the Senate are familiar with the problem. I need not go into it in detail. These boys have been around the Capitol for many days. They have talked with a number of Senators and Members of the House. The distinguished Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] introduced a legislative bill to the same effect as my amendment, and I understand that Mrs. ROGERS, a Representative from Massachusetts, has introduced a similar bill in the House.

I have spoken with many Senators and Members of the House in the past 3 or 4 days. Everyone with whom I have talked has been hopeful that the legislative authorization for this purpose would clear the House committee and the House, and that we could take it up in the Senate before final adjournment. However, apparently there has been some opposition to the bill in the House. I do not know for what reason. Whether it is a legislative obstacle or whether it is actual opposition to the merits of the bill, I do not know. But unless we do something now in the Senate, or unless the House acts today—and I have been given to understand that it may or may not—the bill may die and nothing will be done for these boys during this session. Many of them will be discharged. Nearly all of them will be on their way out. Many of them are at Walter Reed and other hospitals throughout the country learning how to use the artificial limbs and other ambulatory means which have been furnished them by the Veterans' Administration and the Army. They feel, the doctors feel, and I am sure every citizen who looks into the matter will feel that now that the manufacturers are making automobiles so equipped that a man whose legs have been amputated clear up to his hips can drive them safely and can get a license to drive them, we should provide such ambulatory means for him, so that he can take his place back in society.

At first I believed, as did many others, that there should be a legislative authorization for this matter. But upon examination of the authority of the Veterans' Administration, I do not think such authorization is necessary. I think all we need to do is to appropriate the money for this particular purpose, with the proper safeguards; and then the Veterans' Administration will be able to furnish these ambulatory means. The Veterans' Administration furnishes limbs and wheel chairs and in some cases other means of transportation for unfortunates.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MAGNUSON. I yield.

Mr. HAYDEN. Did I correctly understand the Senator from Washington to say that the basic act creating the Veterans' Administration is sufficient authority of law to justify this appropriation?

Mr. MAGNUSON. That is my understanding. I say frankly that I make that statement solely on the basis of the examination which I myself have made, but that is my conclusion.

Certainly the Army has the means. At first I was uncertain whether we should appropriate the money to the War Department or to the Veterans' Administration. But because of the fact that most of these boys will be out of the Army by the time this matter culminates, and subsequently will be in the hands of the Veterans' Administration, it seems to me it would be proper to let the Veterans' Administration have charge of it. Some of the boys who are in this situation are already out of the Army.

I discussed the matter with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. JOHNSON], who has been intensely interested in this problem. I have no pride of authorship about the measure. The Senator from Wisconsin worked hard on it, too. But because of the legislative situation, I think it is only fair and proper that we do something at this time in this connection. The sum of money involved is $30,000,000, which is a large amount. But, again, it seems to me that if we can furnish a means of locomotion to the amputees who have given practically their all for this country, we should do it, for many of them cannot ride in public conveyances. If they wait for a bus or a streetcar, they have to be assured that they will find a seat on it when they board it.

No doubt many Senators have seen statements in the newspapers to the effect that automobiles are now so constructed that such men can drive them safely. The other evening I was told that two or three amputees at Walter Reed, men whose legs are cut off above their knees, were tending to become psychiatric cases because of their condition, but that when those automobiles were brought there and they were taught to drive them, a complete change occurred in their morale.

So, Mr. President, I think this is little enough for us to do for these men.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MAGNUSON. I yield.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. If anyone has any doubt about the capability of these men, after they are trained, to drive properly equipped automobiles, I should like to call attention to the fact that in the hearrings in the committee there was inserted a record coming from a man in charge of the registration of motor vehicles in Massachusetts, and in it he said that such men had an excellent safety record in driving cars under the Massachusetts license system.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MAGNUSON. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I should like to ask just what an amputee is, as defined in the amendment.

Mr. MAGNUSON. I am sorry that I have not had time to have the amendment printed.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I wish the Senator to know that I am in favor of the proposal, but I wish the term defined, so that there will be no question as to what an amputee is.

Mr. MAGNUSON. I appreciate that that point must be made clear.

The amendment provides in part:

Whether or not discharged from service, who (1) is entitled to disability compensation or pension under the laws administered by the Veterans' Administration, and (2) is unable, because of the loss, or loss of use, of one or both lower limbs, to use normal means of locomotion or ambulation.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. That is perfectly all right.

Mr. MAGNUSON. That would mean that a man who had his fingers off or who had a portion of one leg off and had an artificial limb fitted would be regarded as having normal means of locomotion.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I wish the Senator to know that I think they are entitled to anything we can give them.

It is impossible to legislate anything like a proper compensation for these heroes who have made such magnificent sacrifices to the cause of freedom for all peoples everywhere.

We can, however, through the enactment of such legislation assist these men in equipping themselves with all possible mechanical aids to offset their physical handicaps. These veterans can then enter into the competition of present-day living with less of a handicap. It will speed their readjustment in a normal way of life.

I sincerely hope the Senate will give immediate approval to this amendment.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. MAGNUSON. I yield.

Mr. GREEN. I understood the Senator, when reading the amendment, to say "(1) or (2)."

Mr. MAGNUSON. It is "and."

Mr. GREEN. Yes; I think it should be "and."

Mr. MAGNUSON. I thank the Senator, and I agree that it should be "and," as it is.

Mr. President, I think it should be pointed out that there may be some difficulty in connection with determining what types or makes of automobiles will be used. I do not know how the Veterans' Administration will work out that matter. All of us have some preference for a particular make of car. Some persons prefer Packards, some prefer Oldsmobiles, some prefer Fords, some prefer Cadillacs. I talked to some of these boys the other evening. In fact, one of them, who has lost both legs, is an old friend of mine. I am not attempting to boost any particular automobile or automobile concern, but I think I should tell the Senate that the veterans to whom I have talked say that the Oldsmobile has made great strides in development, insofar as the problem of use by them is concerned, because of the "hydramatic drive" principle. Of course, I can imagine that the automobile manufacturers might enter into some sort of competitive test to determine who could produce the best type of car for this particular purpose. In any event, I am frank to say that I do not know what kind of cars will be used.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MAGNUSON. I yield.

Mr. FERGUSON. It will be within the discretion of the Administrator to decide that; will it not?

Mr. MAGNUSON. Yes; that will be within the discretion of the Administrator, and I am sure he will find the best kind of automobile to use for this purpose.

Mr. FERGUSON. Therefore, he will find the best car for the particular use, and one car might be most satisfactory for one person, and another car might be most satisfactory for another person.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Yes. The only way in which I could accept the amendment was to have it provide that the discretion would be left there.

Mr. FERGUSON. I believe the amendment should be passed.

Mr. REVERCOMB. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MAGNUSON. I yield.

Mr. REVERCOMB. Is there any provision as to any fixed sum of money which may be paid for such cars? Is there any limitation on the amount which may be paid for them?

Mr. MAGNUSON. I am afraid that all I could do in that respect was to provide that that decision should be left to the discretion of the Veterans' Administration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Washington.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, I now offer the other amendment which lies at the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. At the proper place in the bill it is proposed to insert the following new paragraph:

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE

For the purchase, exchange, driving, maintenance, and operation of one automobile for the Chief Justice of the United States for the fiscal year 1947, $6,500.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Washington.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, do I correctly understand that the amendment would provide an automobile for the Chief Justice?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is the understanding of the Chair.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, what does the Chief Justice have to do around Washington that would require the use of an automobile, other than to go back and forth from the Supreme Court to his place of residence? He does not have the duties that a member of the Cabinet has or the duties that the minority leader, the majority leader, the Speaker of the House, and some other officials who are provided with cars have. I am wondering what the Chief Justice or the Associate Justices of the Court have to do, other than to go from their residences to the Court and return. If that is the only purpose for which they use automobiles, I see no reason for providing for the purchase of an automobile for the Chief Justice. If he needs an automobile for his official duties, that certainly would be an argument in favor of providing one for him—but certainly not for his own private convenience in traveling between his home and his office. I think a very serious question is involved.

Mr. MAGNUSON. I may say to the Senator that I do not know just what duties the Chief Justice of the United States has as compared with the duties which members of the Cabinet have, but I know that the Chief Justice of the United States, in occupying the office which, in my opinion, is second to the office of the President of the United States, and I believe is so regarded in the minds of the people generally throughout the country, is called upon from time to time to attend many functions and ceremonies, as well as to perform other duties in connection with his high office. Surely, if department heads of the Government can be supplied with automobiles to drive around town, we owe it to the dignity of the office of the Chief Justice of the United States to furnish him with an automobile and a chauffeur. I have known of former Chief Justices who could not afford such conveniences. I am not in position to say with regard to the present Chief Justice. But I have known of Chief Justices who were not in position to own their own private conveyances. I know of one instance of a Chief Justice who was driven to a memorial service in a broken-down taxicab while other officials of the Government drove to the ceremony in Government supplied cars.

Mr. BRIDGES. They did not include United States Senators. I do not know of any Senators who are driven around in automobiles supplied by the Government, and driven by chauffeurs.

Mr. MAGNUSON. I have seen Senators being driven around in cars operated by chauffeurs.

Mr. President, I shall not press the amendment. I thought, in view of the fact that nearly all department heads, Cabinet officers, and many other officials of the Government require the use of cars in going from their homes to their offices, and from their offices back home, as well to other parts of the city, that the Chief Justice of the United States should be supplied with similar conveniences.

Mr. BRIDGES. I think this matter should be referred to the committee where proper evidence on the subject may be presented. I have a very high opinion of the office of Chief Justice of the United States, and I also have a high opinion of the man who now occupies that office; but he is called upon to perform no outside duties, and I cannot see why he should require the use of a Government-supplied car for the purpose of going nowhere except from his home to his office and from his office back home.

I know that the predecessor of the present Chief Justice felt that it was very unfortunate that members of the Court participated from time to time in outside activities. I think that the Chief Justice of the United States and all Associate Justices of the Supreme Court should confine themselves to their duties in the Supreme Court. Certainly they do not need automobiles to drive around here and there. In making that statement I am not aiming at the office of the Chief Justice, nor the distinguished gentleman who now occupies the office of Chief Justice of the United States, because I have a personal feeling and affection for him. However, I think that if we adopt this amendment it will not be long before we shall be asked to provide Government-owned cars for the use of all Associate Justices.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, that is not at all the intent of the amendment. I wish to assure every Member of the Senate that my amendment is not in any way connected with any suggestion or idea of the present Chief Justice of the United States. The idea is mine entirely. At one time I introduced a bill in the House of Representatives which had for its purpose one similar to that of the amendment which I have offered. But the Chief Justice of the United States is duty bound on many occasions to attend ceremonies in various sections of the city in representing the highest judicial department of the Government.

I appreciate the opinion of former Chief Justice Stone. But he was able to afford the expense of a car and a chauffeur to drive it. The time may come when the Chief Justice will not be able to afford such a convenience. I think it is embarrassing for a man who represents the great judicial department of the Government not to be furnished with an automobile supplied by the Government and a chauffeur to operate it, when other officials who represent various departments, some of which are not so important as is the Supreme Court of the United States, are provided with cars.

Mr. BALL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MAGNUSON. I yield.

Mr. BALL. Did not the Congress recently vote to increase the salaries of all judges by $5,000?

Mr. MAGNUSON. The Congress voted to increase the salaries of all members of the Federal judiciary.

Mr. BALL. Thereby making the salary $15,000.

Mr. MAGNUSON. I do not know just what the increase amounts to.

Mr. BRIDGES. I believe that the Senator from Washington will find that the salary of the Chief Justice of the United States is entirely adequate for him to provide himself with a car to drive back and forth between his home and his office. I agree that too many persons are now riding around in Government-owned cars at Government expense. But the way to remedy that situation is to take the cars away from the bureaucrats who are using them.

Mr. MAGNUSON. The Senator from New Hampshire does not want the Chief Justice of the United States to board himself up in the marble palace across the street, does he?

Mr. BRIDGES. No; but I do not see why the Government should be called upon to provide a car for his pleasure.

Mr. MAGNUSON. The Government is not called upon to do anything of that kind. My thought is that the dignity and the high character of the office of Chief Justice of the United States require a small appropriation to be made for use as I have suggested.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Washington.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, I object. If a vote is to be taken on the amendment I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, I do not wish to embarrass any Member of this body. The amendment is entirely my own idea. Action by the Senate on the amendment might embarrass the great Chief Justice of the United States. In view of the fact that objection to the amendment has been raised, and in view of the further fact that I may be privileged next year to appear before the committee and offer evidence in support of the proposal, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Senator from Washington withdraws the amendment. The order for the yeas and nays is rescinded.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Mr. President, before action is taken on the pending bill I wish to invite attention to the fact that on the calendar there are many bills upon which, much to my great regret, the Senate has not been able to act. I feel that as time goes on the Members of this Congress will regret very much that action has not been taken. One of the bills which I have in mind is Senate bill 2044, to promote the common defense by unifying the departments and agencies of the Government relating to the common defense. It is the so-called Army and Navy unification bill. I am very sad that the Senate has not pushed on to a consideration of that bill.

I am also saddened by the fact that the Congress has not taken up and passed Senate bill 1920, a bill to provide for the demonstration of public-library service in areas without such service or with inadequate library facilities.

I also think that the Congress has made a serious mistake in refusing to consider and dispose of the simple recreational bill such as, for example, Senate bill 2070, a bill to authorize the Federal Security Administration to assist the States in the development of community recreation programs for the people of the United States, and for other purposes.

The one mistake which I regret above all others is in the refusal of the Congress to consider the bill providing Federal aid to education. I refer to Senate bill 181, to authorize the appropriation of funds to assist the States and Territories in more adequately financing their system of public education.

Mr. President, after years of labor in connection with these measures, and after so much time has been spent on them by such Senators as the Senator from Alabama [Mr. HILL] and the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT], it seems very unfortunate that these measures have not been given consideration by the Senate and passed.

I also regret that some of the military bills will not be acted upon by this Congress.

The subcommittees which have considered these bills spent on them not only hours or days, but weeks and months. I speak also of the bill which the present occupant of the chair, the distinguished Senator from South Carolina [Mr. MAYBANK] sponsored as chairman of a subcommittee. He has given literally weeks and weeks of his time, and the fact that the Senate has not seen fit to consider the bill is one of my great regrets.

Mr. BALL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the vote by which the amendment beginning on line 21, page 8, and ending on line 2, page 9, was agreed to, be reconsidered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I do not wish to deprive the Senator from Minnesota of the right to make an argument. The amendment involves a reduction in the administrative expenses of the Children's Bureau with respect to the appropriation contained in the bill. I would not deny unanimous consent, but I shall discuss the amendment.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, will the Senator from Minnesota yield?

Mr. BALL. May I ask the chair, has the unanimous consent been granted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Minnesota? The Chair hears none, and the vote by which the amendment was agreed to is reconsidered, and the question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, I wish to address myself for about 2 minutes to a bill about which the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS] has just spoken. I wonder if the Senator from Minnesota would be willing to yield to me to make a 2 or 3 minute statement, so that it might follow logically after the statement of the Senator from Utah, before the Senator enters upon a discussion of the amendment the vote on which has just been reconsidered.

Mr. BALL. Mr. President, I suggest that the Senator ask unanimous consent to have his remarks follow those of the Senator from Utah. I shall be very brief.

On page 8 of the bill are three amendments increasing grants to States for maternal and child health services, for the services for crippled children, and for child welfare services. These are all grants to States. They are contingent upon the increase in the authorization included in the Social Security Act amendments finally becoming law. They approximately triple the present appropriations for these grants to States.

In the rush of considering these amendments in the committee yesterday I did not get a good chance to examine the item for salaries and expenses of the Children's Bureau in administering these additional grants. I find on examination that the appropriation for administrative expenses contained in the bill is $925,500, as compared with the appropriation for the present fiscal year, which the subcommittee really went into, of $575,000, to administer the grants. All we have done is increase the amounts, and it seems to me that nearly tripling the administrative expenses certainly is not justified.

Mr. McKELLAR. What amount does the Senator suggest?

Mr. BALL. I suggest striking out "925,500" and inserting in lieu thereof "$325,000."

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I wish to be heard on the subject.

The Children's Bureau at the present time is getting for maternal and child health and child welfare services, and crippled children services, a total appropriation of about $10,000,000. I was the author of a bill called the Maternal and Child Welfare Act, which was considered by the Senate Committee on Education and Labor. Hearings were had upon it, and I made an effort, as did others who were with me in that matter, to have the bill favorably reported. However, due to the lateness of the session, it was agreed by the committee that the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT] and I should constitute a subcommittee to work out an increase in the present social security appropriation for those three purposes. The Senator from Ohio and I collaborated in working out an amendment to the present social security law to increase the appropriations to about $30,000,000 altogether. We also agreed upon an increase in the administrative expenses appropriation for the Children's Bureau. At the present time the administrative expenses of the Children's Bureau amount to about $590,000. This amendment calls for an increase of $925,500, which is not in the same ratio as the appropriations.

Both the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. BALL] and I in the last few minutes have talked to Dr. Eliot, of the Children's Bureau, about the proposal of the Senator from Minnesota to reduce the amount, which had been adopted, until the Senator's request for unanimous consent was agreed to. Dr. Eliot strongly insists that these funds are necessary for the Children's Bureau, and she gives me some itemization, in a general way, of what the funds are to be used for.

For example, about $400,000 goes to the health service of the Children's Bureau; $147,000 to the social services; $47,000 for auditing; $37,000 for reporting from the States; $35,000 for administrative expenses; $17,000 for correspondence; $11,000 in the office of the Chief of the Children's Bureau, and the like.

A part of the expenditure contemplates setting up two additional regional offices. They now have eight regional offices. They wish to add two more, which will make 10 for the Nation at large.

Mr. BALL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. BALL. I have served for a couple of years on the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations which considers the budget of the Children's Bureau, and the items about which the Senator is talking are not at all connected with these increased appropriations for grants to States. The Children's Bureau has been trying for at least 2 years, to my knowledge, to get the regular subcommittees of the Committees on Appropriations of both Houses to agree to more regional offices and larger regional staffs. I might say to the Senator that in the Senate we have several times increased the appropriation, and we have had to come down in conference because the House would not agree. But we have managed to hold some increases, and we have built up the regional staffs considerably in the past 2 years.

When the budget estimate came up yesterday there were not copies available for all members of the committee, but the Children's Bureau is trying in this emergency appropriation to approximately triple the present administrative staff, and it seems to me the wrong way to go about appropriating funds.

I suggest to the Senator that we give them $325,000 additional in this bill. They are not going to get the money out to the States immediately, anyway, and that amount will take care of the situation until next January. If they come in then and can show the regular subcommittees that they really need the money and that they are carrying on these other activities, they can get the appropriation.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I appreciate the point of view of the Senator from Minnesota, but I am sure he would not blame me for taking Dr. Eliot's word in this matter, because of her technical knowledge of the subject—everyone knows that she is assistant to the Chief of the Children's Bureau—rather than the more limited knowledge of the able Senator from Minnesota. Dr. Eliot assures me—and gives me the items—that this appropriation is necessary for their administrative expenses. I am sure the Senate would not wish to deny the Children's Bureau the power to use the money Congress is appropriating in the most effective and efficient way.

I hope the amendment of the Senator from Minnesota will not be agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator offer his suggestion in the form of an amendment?

Mr. BALL. Yes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Minnesota [putting the question]. The Chair is in doubt.

Mr. BALL. I ask for a division.

I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Austin	Langer	Overton
Ball	McClellan	Pepper
Bridges	McKellar	Taft
Byrd	Magnuson	Thomas, Okla.
Donnell	Maybank	Thomas, Utah.
Eastland	Millikin	Tunnell
George	Mitchell	Wagner
Green	Morse	Walsh
Hill	Murray	Wiley
Johnson, Colo.	Myers	Young
La Follette	O'Daniel

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. OVERTON in the chair). Thirty-two Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is not present. The clerk will call the names of the absent Senators.

The legislative clerk called the names of the absent Senators and Mr. BARKLEY, Mr. CAPPER, Mr. CHAVEZ, Mr. FULBRIGHT, Mr. GUFFEY, Mr. HAYDEN, Mr. HUFFMAN, Mr. KNOWLAND, Mr. SMITH, Mr. SWIFT, Mr. TAYLOR, and Mr. WHEELER answered to their names when called.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Forty-four Senators have answered to their names. There is not a quorum present.

Mr. McKELLAR. I move that the Sergeant-at-Arms be directed to request the attendance of absent Senators.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Sergeant-at-Arms will execute the order of the Senate.

After a little delay, Mr. WHITE, Mr. VANDENBERG, Mr. HART, Mr. CONNALLY, Mr. O'MAHONEY, Mr. CORDON, and Mr. REVERCOMB entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-one Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. BALL] to the committee amendment on page 9, line 2.

Mr. BALL. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BALL. Mr. President, I should like to state briefly what the amendment is. It is on page 9 of the bill, in line 2, and proposes to strike out "$925,500" and insert in lieu thereof "$325,000." The purpose of the committee amendment is to increase the appropriation for administrative expenses of the Children's Bureau. In the preceding three paragraphs we approximately treble the grants to States for maternal and child-health services, services for crippled children, and child-welfare services. This year the regular appropriation for the Children's Bureau to administer the grants now made is $575,000 for the whole year. In the rush of considering this bill in the committee yesterday the increase, nearly trebling the amount the Bureau now has for this purpose, slipped through, and the figure of $925,500 was inserted in the bill. The Bureau will be administering grants to the same States, for the same purposes. There will be some additional auditing expense. It seems to me that $325,000 in addition to the $575,000 which the Bureau now has should be ample.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, so far as the chairman of the committee is concerned, he is in entire accord with the reduction of this amount. It would be a foolish waste of the people's money to appropriate three times as much for this purpose. I think the Senator from Minnesota is probably very liberal. Certainly we ought not to go beyond the amount which the Senator recommends.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I very much regret that the able chairman of the committee has taken the position which he has announced. The Senate Committee on Education and Labor authorized the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT] and me to work out an increase in the social-security appropriation for maternal and child health services, services for crippled children, and child-welfare services. We agreed upon an increase from $10,000,000, which is the amount of the present appropriation for those three purposes, to approximately $30,000,000. That certainly was not an excessive increase in the appropriation for the Children's Bureau for those three purposes.

As an incident to that appropriation, the Children's Bureau submitted an estimate for an increase in the amount for administrative expense. The present appropriation for that purpose is $575,000. The committee amendment proposes to add $925,500 to the amount of the present appropriation, not quite double the amount of the appropriation for administrative expenses, while the funds which must be administered have been approximately trebled.

The Committee on Appropriations reported the bill with an increase of $925,500 for this purpose, and the Senate agreed to the committee amendment earlier in the day. Although I might have objected to the unanimous consent request of the Senator from Minnesota, I did not wish to deny him the opportunity of making an argument to the Senate, and acquiesced in his request after the Senate had already adopted the committee amendment, which contains a figure of $925,500.

When the Senator from Minnesota mentioned to me that he had in mind an effort to reduce this item, I called Dr. Eliot, Assistant Director of the Children's Bureau, on the telephone. The Senator from Minnesota had an opportunity to speak to her, so that she could tell him how much needed this appropriation was. Then I spoke to her, and she gave me an itemization of the manner in which this money is to be spent. According to her assertion, every dollar of it is necessary for the Children's Bureau effectively to carry out the added program which we have made possible by increasing the appropriation for maternal and child health services, services for crippled children, and child-welfare services. The program contemplates two additional regional offices, making 10 instead of 8, as at present. It contemplates some additional clerical and professional staff, and certain other items incidental to the proper administration of the increased funds.

There is no evidence contrary to what Dr. Eliot has submitted, and what was submitted to the Committee on Appropriations as a basis for the committee's action. In my opinion, it would not be consistent for the United States Senate to appropriate the many increases carried in the bill and then permit the increase in the Children's Bureau appropriation for administering maternal and child-health services, services for crippled children, and child-welfare services to be reduced from $925,500, the figure which is already in the bill with the approval of the committee, to $325,000, which the Senator from Minnesota now proposes, the effect of which Dr. Eliot says would be to make it absolutely impossible for the Children's Bureau properly to administer the increased appropriations which we have made available.

I hope that the amendment of the Senator from Minnesota will not be adopted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. BALL] to the committee amendment on page 9, line 2. On this question the yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. WAGNER. I have a general pair with the Senator from Kansas [Mr. REED]. Not knowing how he would vote, I transfer that pair to the Senator from Missouri [Mr. BRIGGS]. I am not advised how the Senator from Missouri would vote on this question if present. Being at liberty to vote, I vote "nay."

Mr. HILL. I announce that the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY] is absent because of illness.

The Senator from Nevada [Mr. CARVILLE] is absent by leave of the Senate.

The Senator from Virginia [Mr. BURCH], the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GERRY], the Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL], the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. STEWART], and the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] are necessarily absent.

The Senator from New York [Mr. MEAD] is detained on official business.

The Senator from Missouri [Mr. BRIGGS], the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. KILGORE], the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS], the Senator from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN], and the Senator from Maryland [Mr. RADCLIFFE] are detained on public business.

The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH] is absent on official business, having been appointed a member of the President's Evaluation Commission in connection with the test of atomic bombs on naval vessels at Bikini.

The Senator from Louisiana [Mr. ELLENDER] and the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] are absent on official business, having been appointed to the commission on the part of the Senate to participate in the Philippine independence ceremonies.

If present and voting, the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. KILGORE] and the Senator from New York [Mr. MEAD] would vote "nay."

Mr. WHERRY. The Senator from Maine [Mr. BREWSTER], the Senator from Delaware [Mr. BUCK], the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. HAWKES], the Senator from Kansas [Mr. REED], the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. STANFILL], and the Senator from Indiana [Mr. WILLIS] are necessarily absent.

The Senator from Vermont [Mr. AIKEN], the Senator from Illinois [Mr. BROOKS], the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. BUSHFIELD], the Senator from Indiana [Mr. CAPEHART], the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. ROBERTSON], and the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY] are absent by leave of the Senate.

The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BUTLER] is absent on official business, being a member of the commission appointed to attend the Philippine independence ceremonies.

The Senator from Iowa [Mr. HICKENLOOPER] is absent by leave of the Senate on official business as a member of the Special Committee on Atomic Energy.

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. SALTONSTALL] is absent on official business, having been appointed a member of the President's Evaluation Commission in connection with the test of atomic bombs on naval vessels at Bikini.

The Senator from Iowa [Mr. WILSON] is absent on official business.

The Senator from Michigan [Mr. FERGUSON] and the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. WILEY] are detained on official business.

The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. YOUNG] is absent by leave of the Senate.

The result was announced—yeas 18, nays 39, as follows:

So Mr. BALL's amendment to the committee amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no further amendment to be proposed, the question is on the engrossment of the amendments and the third reading of the joint resolution.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, on page 7 of the joint resolution the amount of $26,000,000 is provided for the Office of Price Administration. The Senate will recall that when the OPA appropriation was before us, in the regular bill, we appropriated $56,650,000. In the conference, the appropriation for the Office of Price Administration was increased to $75,000,000. When it was increased to $75,000 000 it was thought that that would be sufficient to carry the OPA beyond the first of the coming year.

But now the Office of Price Administration requests an additional $26,000,000, which would make a total of $101,000,000. The OPA now says that the $75,000,000 will last only until sometime in November of this year, and that it will need $26,000,000 more in order to continue its operations to February 15 of next year.

So, Mr. President, now we find that instead of reducing the appropriations for OPA and cutting down its scale of operations, the reverse is occurring, or at least an attempt is being made to have it occur. It should be very clear even to the unbelievers that an attempt is being made to build up the staff of the OPA and to increase the expenditures to be made by the OPA although there was some question whether it would be continued at all.

Now there is a question in my mind and in the minds of others whether there should be a process of gradual liquidation and whether, instead of requesting more money, the OPA should be requesting less money.

So I believe that there is no justification for the proposed increase of $26,000,000 in addition to the $75,000,000 which was agreed upon in the conference. I think there is no justification at this time for the proposed increase. I think we should leave the matter as it is until the first of the year. Then, if a deficiency appropriation is justified, it could be requested at that time.

Therefore, I move, as an amendment, that lines 13 to 18, inclusive on page 7, be stricken out.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BRIDGES. Certainly.

Mr. HAYDEN. Of course, the Senator is aware that the request of the Office of Price Administration, as made to the Bureau of the Budget, was, if I correctly recall, approximately $138,000,000 for the year.

Mr. MCKELLAR. It was $142,200,000.

Mr. HAYDEN. Very well; I was guessing at the amount. That request was reduced to $106,000,000 by the estimate of the Bureau of the Budget. Then we reduced it, as the Senator has said, on the assumption that the OPA was going out of business.

The testimony before the committee at this time is that new duties have been imposed upon that agency. I say that if we look at the matter from the point of view of businessmen, and when we consider that under the present price arrangements there must be allowances for increased costs, and other things, if proper service is to be furnished the business public, we must provide for sufficient personnel in the OPA to do the job. That is the way the House of Representatives looked at the matter, and that is the way our committee has looked at it. It is a sound business proposition to carry it on in exactly that manner.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. BRIDGES. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. I simply wish to give the reasons why the amount was recommended by the committee. The original estimate of appropriation for this activity was presented on June 11, 1946. The amount was $142,200,000. At that time continuing legislation was pending. Money needs could not be foretold. The committee, therefore, reduced the estimate to $106,650,000, with the thought that such amount would be adequate to support the activity under any continuing legislation until the Congress would have opportunity to provide supplemental funds, if necessary, after December next. It will thus be seen that the appropriation of the smaller amount was to carry over until December next.

In conference, agreement was reached upon an appropriation of $75,000,000, with a view to later supplementation, and that is the amount included in the Third Deficiency Appropriation Act, 1946. The committee now is advised that the agency will not be able to function as contemplated by the continuing legislation within the appropriation heretofore made in the interim between July 1, 1946, and the time it would be practicable to provide a supplemental appropriation after next December. To carry it up to February 15 it estimates that it must have an additional appropriation of $26,000,000, or a total for the 7½-month period of $101,000,000. The committee's further study of the matter has convinced it that the agency is right, and that it would not be able efficiently or effectively to discharge its duties under the continuing legislation between now and the time the next Congress might be expected to provide a supplemental appropriation, unless this additional appropriation is now made. It contemplates an expenditure rate that would make appropriation requirements for the whole of the fiscal year approximately $4,200,000 less than the original estimate presented in late June.

Under these circumstances, it seems to the committee that we should stand by this item.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. BRIDGES. I yield.

Mr. WHERRY. I should like to ask the distinguished Senator from Tennessee if the limitations which apply to the other bill apply also to this appropriation, namely, that none of it shall be spent for propaganda purposes.

Mr. McKELLAR. It is exactly the same.

Mr. WHERRY. That limitation is in full force and effect, is it?

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes; it is in full force and effect.

Mr. WHERRY. I should like to ask whether it is true that the OPA had 38,000 or more employees and that the amount requested was approximately $142,000,000 or $145,000,000 when the regular appropriation bill first came to the Senate?

Mr. McKELLAR. The amount requested was $142,000,000.

Mr. WHERRY. Yes. At that time it was contended that because of the decontrols which no doubt would take place in the administration of the OPA, it would not be necessary to continue that much of a staff or appropriations in so large an amount, because if the bill Congress first passed had been enacted into law, not that much money would have been needed.

Mr. McKELLAR. Quite to the contrary, Mr. President, let me say that the decontrol legislation was not contemplated in the original bill. The additional expense incident to the decontrol legislation is provided for in connection with this $26,000,000.

Mr. WHERRY. I am speaking of the first bill which was passed by the Senate. At that time it was contended by those who wished to reduce these appropriations and it was stated in the showing made before the committee that it would not be necessary for the OPA to have during this year the amount appropriated in the preceding year, or to continue its 38,000 employees. So we reduced the requested $142,000,000 appropriation to $101,000,000. Then, when the matter went back to the House, the House reduced it to $50,000,000. Is not that correct?

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes. And in the conference the sum of $75,000,000 was fixed upon, for the operations of the OPA until the beginning of the next year.

Now it is supposed that the Congress will not meet until January, after it adjourns, and, of course, in view of the decontrol and other systems which are set up, it is necessary to have an additional amount of money.

Although, as everyone knows, I am not too strongly in favor of the OPA, and although I have my doubts about the efficacy of it, nevertheless the Congress has directed this organization to be continued, and it seems to me that the amount proposed to be appropriated should be provided.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, inasmuch as the distinguished Senator has answered the questions I have asked him, I am more positive than ever that the proper way to proceed is not to appropriate the additional $26,000,000 which is requested. I am convinced that we should let the OPA continue with the $75,000,000 which has been granted. It is my understanding that the Decontrol Board does not get its money from the OPA. So the plea that the $26,000,000 will be needed for that purpose is certainly aside from the point.

I should like to say, further, that I talked to some of the OPA officials just this morning, and they told me they had suggested the decontrol of $4,000,000,000 worth of products that did not even come under the Decontrol Board. They, themselves, said that they have suggested the decontrol of those products, and that they are expecting to continue the decontrols.

So, from now until the first of the year, if the OPA does the kind of job which the proponents of the measure said it would do, instead of needing an increased staff and increased appropriations, there should be reductions in the staff and no need for increased appropriations. We have been told time and time again that the OPA would be reduced, and that it would fold up as soon as possible and that decontrols would be made as soon as possible. However, instead of doing that, now we are told that the OPA needs not only the $75,000,000 which we provided in a previous bill, but an additional $26,000,000; and by the time the next Congress convenes, the OPA will need another deficiency appropriation, no doubt, to pay for some other activities it will attempt to add.

Mr. President, I am a member of the Appropriations Committee, and I heard the testimony. I say that the $75,000,000 is sufficient to enable the OPA to function until the new Congress convenes. At that time, if the OPA needs more money in order to be able to enforce the law or to carry out any of the other functions committed to it, I shall be the first Senator to urge an additional appropriation. But in the meantime, I think the Senate should accept at face value the suggestions and arguments of the proponents of the OPA measure, and should depend upon the OPA to decontrol, rather than to control everything it can get its hands on.

Mr. President, I shall oppose the request for the additional appropriation of $26,000,000. I am not sure whether an amendment to strike out the requested $26,000,000 has been offered. If not, I now propose that the figure "$26,000,000" be stricken.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES] has already made such a motion.

Mr. WHERRY. Very well.

Mr. BRIDGES. Yes; I have made a motion to strike it out.

Mr. CORDON. Mr. President, I regret that I disagree with my colleagues on this side of the aisle in connection with this particular reduction in Federal expenditure. It seems to me that logic should take us the other way. I think the record is clear with reference to the position I took on the subject of decontrolling materials and commodities which the Congress could ascertain were in long supply. We decontrolled them. We were required to accept the best compromise which could be made in conference. But in doing so, Mr. President, we did not say to OPA, "Now, as to these items, you may not have any power or control." We said, "You must determine the fact of whether they must or must not be controlled." We provided for a Decontrol Board, but it can do no more than issue orders. Without knowing the fact, I suspect that the Decontrol Board will have to turn to OPA for its factual data. If the constant study which we have directed that agency to make is to be made intelligently—we must assume, however violently the assumption may be, that OPA will at last follow the law—then we must realize that there will have to be a force within that department sufficient in size to continue the study of prices, production, and so forth, throughout all the months in which OPA continues to be in existence. I see no other way in which to do properly the job which we have directed shall be done. In other words, Mr. President, if we cut off the appropriations we will not decontrol prices but we will decontrol OPA. On the one hand, we say to the OPA, "You must do the job" and on the other hand we say, "You cannot do it." That is an illogical situation.

Mr. President, I do not know whether the $26,000,000 additional amount is adequate; but, if we assume that the $75,000,000 was proper under the law which we expected to be administered, under which certain major commodities were to be decontrolled by the Congress, and that the OPA could look forward to the fact that they had nothing more to do in this field, certainly the $26,000,000 would be proper for the purpose of carrying the work of OPA forward into the next year.

If I happen to be a member of the Appropriations Committee next year when the time arrives for the consideration of the deficiency appropriation necessary to carry on the work of OPA until June, I shall at least do what I can in order to determine whether the OPA has so functioned and has handled its personnel so as to justify whatever estimate may be requested at that time for the remainder of the fiscal year. I believe that the Appropriations Committee will then still have an opportunity to see that the funds now appropriated, which will be continuing funds, are wisely spent.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BRIDGES. I have the floor.

Mr. CORDON. Mr. President, I merely wish to call attention to the fact that under the law as it now is, the Secretary of Agriculture makes a finding every 30 days with reference to the supply of agricultural commodities. Based upon such finding those commodities are controlled or decontrolled. An adequate force to handle all those details must be available, and, of course, it cannot be picked up in a minute. The involved type of legislation which was enacted into law is responsible for the fact that the OPA, at least up to the first of next year, must maintain almost as complete an organization as it had when its power of control over prices was absolute and extended to every type of commodity.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BRIDGES. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I should like to ask the distinguished Senator from Oregon if his position is that he does not want to give the OPA an alibi for failure. He wants to see that they are provided with sufficient funds so that they may not come to Congress and say, "Yes, you continued us but you would not give us the necessary tools to do the work, and so we had to fail."

Mr. CORDON. If we fail to give them the necessary money, what the Senator has suggested may turn out to be true. We ourselves have put that organization in a position where its findings of fact cover such a vast number of commodities that they must maintain a large staff in order to do the job the Congress has directed them to do.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. And if we deny them the funds now, they will have a perfect alibi if they fail.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BRIDGES. I yield.

Mr. WHERRY. I should like to say that OPA always has a perfect alibi. I should like to know when they have not had a perfect alibi.

Mr. President, I suggest to the distinguished Senator from New Hampshire that only this morning I talked with an official of the OPA. In view of what has been said by the distinguished Senator from Oregon that we must appropriate the necessary funds for the OPA to study the items in which there will be either a long or short supply, I may say that the official to whom I have referred told me it was a physical impossibility for the OPA to make those studies. He said that the only studies they contemplated making were those in connection with applications which might be filed. He said the OPA would depend primarily on the Department of Agriculture to make those studies, and if the Department of Agriculture said that commodities were in long or in short supply, the OPA would act accordingly.

Mr. President, this proposal is only another method on the part of the OPA to have Congress slip in a $35,000,000 or $50,000,000 appropriation for personnel. The record of the OPA does not justify the Congress in giving them one more dime than the Congress decided to give when the matter was taken up and considered carefully by the committee in the first instance, and when they were granted $75,000,000. If the OPA needs more money at the beginning of next year, let them come to Congress and ask for it. If they run out of money in the meantime, they will get along. Senators do not need to worry about the OPA. The OPA will get along. They always have gotten along.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BRIDGES. I yield.

Mr. HAYDEN. The Senator said that the OPA would act on applications. When a constituent of mine makes an application to the OPA and I try to get action on it, I cannot get it because of a lack of OPA personnel. At least, that is what I am told. I do not intend to let them continue to have that alibi.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HAYDEN. No; I obtained my time from the Senator from New Hampshire.

The situation is just as the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CORDON] has so ably pointed out. We have imposed new duties on the OPA. The money which was furnished the OPA was because of the testimony given before the committee that the work of the OPA would end this coming fall. I think the correct thing to do is to approve the amount of money which the House has voted for.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BRIDGES. I yield.

Mr. WHERRY. The Decontrol Board sets up the plans, formulas, policies, and personnel staff relative to the decontrol appeals which are made to them when applications to the OPA are denied. So the personnel of the OPA is not required in handling such matters. The Decontrol Board has its own personnel.

Mr. CORDON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BRIDGES. I yield.

Mr. CORDON. I merely wanted to call the attention of the Senator to the fact that the Decontrol Board appropriation in this bill is $250,000. Of course the provision of the law giving not only power but responsibilities of that Board in decontrolling in all fields, certainly contemplates that the Board shall have all statistical and factual data necessary upon which to act. I think that we must assume that the work will have to be done by OPA under the direction of the Board.

Mr. WHERRY. The applicants are the ones who spend the money. They are the ones who make the showing. I talked this morning to an official of the OPA about an application from broom manufacturers. He said that the OPA would depend entirely on whether the Department of Agriculture decontrolled broomcorn. He said that if the Department of Agriculture determined not to control broomcorn, the OPA would not control prices. So they will not make any investigation at all. Their work depends on the investigation which is made by the Department of Agriculture, and that Department has its own appropriation. The only thing the Decontrol Board does is to pass in review on the application. The persons who will spend the money and try to obtain relief will be the applicants themselves. When they go before the Department of Agriculture with a question involving agricultural production, of course that Department has its own personnel. When it comes to a question of price control, of course the OPA has to make a review.

Senators may vote to grant the OPA what they desire, but I make the assertion that they can get along with the personnel they have now, and all this money is just so much gravy given to the OPA. That is all it amounts to. They will do just as good a job with what they have now as with $26,000,000 more, and if Senators do not believe that, let them consider the record of the past.

The distinguished Senator who has just spoken said:

> Let us give them the money so that they can function, and bring the applications up to date.

What has OPA done in the past when they had 68,000 employees? Their record bears me out.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, the issue is very simple. We have appropriated $75,000,000, which we assumed, and which we were led to believe, would carry over until after the first of the year, and if at that time OPA is in existence, it can come before the Congress and ask for a deficiency appropriation.

Now they say that $75,000,000 is not sufficient to carry them to February 1, and that they need $26,000,000 more to carry them to February 15. I do not think there will be any great hardship on the country if this increase is not granted, and I do not see why $75,000,000 is not sufficient funds to enable them to administer the law effectively and efficiently for slightly more than half a year. Taking into consideration what they have spent in the past and the fact that this agency is supposedly on the way out and will be out by the end of the year, it certainly would appear to be adequate.

On this question I am going to ask for the yeas and nays, and I ask at this time for a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is the demand for the yeas and nays sufficiently seconded?

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. RUSSELL. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Andrews	Hill	O'Daniel
Austin	Hoey	O'Mahoney
Ball	Huffman	Overton
Barkley	Johnson, Colo.	Pepper
Bilbo	Johnston, S. C.	Revercomb
Bridges	Knowland	Russell
Byrd	La Follette	Smith
Capper	Langer	Swift
Chavez	McClellan	Taft
Connally	McFarland	Taylor
Cordon	McKellar	Thomas, Okla.
Donnell	McMahon	Thomas, Utah
Eastland	Magnuson	Tunnell
Ferguson	Maybank	Vandenberg
Fulbright	Millikin	Wagner
George	Mitchell	Walsh
Green	Moore	Wherry
Guffey	Morse	White
Gurney	Murdock	Wiley
Hart	Murray
Hayden	Myers

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MAYBANK in the chair). Sixty-one Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES] to strike out lines 13 to 18 on page 7 of the bill, being the provision relating to the OPA.

Mr. GURNEY. It is my firm conviction, after listening to the testimony in the Appropriations Committee, that the $75,000,000 which OPA now has is more than sufficient to enable it to carry on until probably February or March of next year. We all know that many items have been decontrolled, first by the OPA itself, and now we have set up a Decontrol Board which will decontrol many other items. Therefore we know that there is not so great a task facing OPA as it had facing it prior to July 1 of this year. OPA used one-hundred-and-forty-odd-million dollars last year. Therefore $75,000,000, in my opinion, is more than sufficient to carry OPA for the first 8 months of the new fiscal year.

I believe for the good of the country it would be well for us not to give OPA any more money now, and then when Congress returns in January, have the Appropriations Committee call the OPA officials before it and ask, "What kind of a job have you done? How many employees do you have on the pay roll now? What job have you got to do from January or February on for the remainder of the fiscal year until June 30?" Certainly OPA can get along on the $75,000,000 already appropriated. That will take care of OPA until the time Congress reconvenes, and then I think Congress should say "If you have done a good job, if you have operated efficiently, we will give you more money." If OPA has not done a good job, if it has not done its work efficiently, we should withhold any further funds. But let us wait and take a look at the situation after the first of the year. I am definitely in favor of the amendment to strike the proposed appropriation of $26,000,000.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES] to strike out lines 13 to 18 on page 7. The yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. WAGNER (when his name was called). Mr. President, I have a general pair with the Senator from Kansas [Mr. REED]. Not knowing how he would vote, I transfer that pair to the Senator from Missouri [Mr. BRIGGS]. I am not advised how the Senator from Missouri would vote if present. Being at liberty to vote, I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. WAGNER. I announce that my colleague, the junior Senator from New York [Mr. MEAD] is detained on official business. If present he would vote "nay."

Mr. HILL. I announce that the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY] is absent because of illness.

The Senator from Nevada [Mr. CARVILLE] is absent by leave of the Senate.

The Senator from Virginia [Mr. BURCH], the Senator from California [Mr. DOWNEY], the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GERRY], the Senator from Idaho [Mr. GOSSETT], the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. STEWART], and the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] are necessarily absent.

The Senator from Missouri [Mr. BRIGGS], the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. KILGORE], the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS], the Senator from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN], and the Senator from Maryland [Mr. RADCLIFFE] are detained on public business.

The Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD] is absent on official business.

The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH] is absent on official business, having been appointed a member of the President's Evaluation Commission in connection with the test of atomic bombs on naval vessels at Bikini.

The Senator from Louisiana [Mr. ELLENDER], and the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] are absent on official business, having been appointed to the Commission on the part of the Senate to participate in the Philippine independence ceremonies.

If present and voting, the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. KILGORE] would vote "nay."

Mr. WHERRY. The Senator from Maine [Mr. BREWSTER], the Senator from Delaware [Mr. BUCK], the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. HAWKES], the Senator from Kansas [Mr. REED], the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. STANFILL], and the Senator from Indiana [Mr. WILLIS] are necessarily absent.

The Senator from Vermont [Mr. AIKEN], the Senator from Illinois [Mr. BROOKS], the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. BUSHFIELD], the Senator from Indiana [Mr. CAPEHART], the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. ROBERTSON], and the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY] are absent by leave of the Senate.

The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BUTLER] is absent on official business, being a member of the Commission appointed to attend the Philippine independence ceremonies.

The Senator from Iowa [Mr. HICKENLOOPER] is absent by leave of the Senate on official business as a member of the Special Committee on Atomic Energy.

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. SALTONSTALL] is absent on official business, having been appointed a member of the President's Evaluation Commission in connection with the test of atomic bombs on naval vessels at Bikini.

The Senator from Iowa [Mr. WILSON] is absent on official business.

The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. YOUNG] is absent by leave of the Senate.

The result was announced—yeas 14, nays 46, as follows:

YEAS—14

So Mr. BRIDGES' amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution is before the Senate and open to further amendment. If there be no further amendment to be proposed, the question is on the engrossment of the amendments and the third reading of the joint resolution.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the joint resolution to be read a third time.

The joint resolution (H. J. Res. 390) was read the third time and passed.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments, request a conference with the House of Representatives thereon, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. McKELLAR, Mr. HAYDEN, Mr. RUSSELL, Mr. OVERTON, Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma, Mr. BRIDGES, Mr. GURNEY, and Mr. BALL conferees on the part of the Senate.

COMPARISON OF ANNUAL EXPENDITURES BY THE UNITED STATES GOVERNMENT AND OTHER GOVERNMENTS OF THE WORLD

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, while we are speaking of appropriations, let me say that I was first appointed to the Senate Appropriations Committee on December 10, 1923, at the beginning of the Sixty-eighth Congress. At that time the expenditures of the Government were a total of a little more than $3,000,000,000. During my service on the Appropriations Committee the expenditures of the Government finally reached in 1945 an all-time peak of $100,000,000,000 as a result of our tremendous war program.

As to our world position on expenditures, while we occupy as a nation about 6 percent of the area of the world, and while we have a population of about 6 percent of the world's population, yet the figures show that as of 1944 the United States Government expended $93,000,000,000, as against about $135,000,000,000 for the rest of the world, or 40 percent of the world's budget.

The 1944 figure for Russia is $48,000,000,000. This is due to the fact that there is a joint budget of the Union and the republics making up that Union. It would be the same as our adding the budgets of all the 48 States to the budget of the National Government. If we did that we would add about six billions to the ninety-three billions for the year 1944.

I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at this point as a part of my remarks a table showing a comparison of total yearly expenditures by the United States Government and other governments of the world. I invite the attention of Senators to the fact that during the past 7 years the United States appropriated approximately 40 percent of all the money appropriated by all the governments in the world. I think this table will furnish valuable information for Senators.

There being no objection, the table was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SUMMARY

For the year 1944, the comparison totals as follows:

United States	93,744
American Republics	2,064
British Commonwealth	33,971
Other countries	97,120
World total	226,899

[1] Estimated for comparative purposes.

[2] Joint budget of the Union and the Republics. (If the general expenditures of all State governments were included with the U. S. Government figures, it would add $5,959,000,000 to the 1944 total of $93,744,000,000.)

NOTE.—The yearly totals given for the United States are the official figures from the Treasury Department. As to the other countries, the methods of accounting and reporting on expenditures and the periods covered vary so widely as to preclude exact comparisons. This table is merely for the purpose of giving a general summary of world budgets from the most reliable information available.

RATE OF POSTAGE ON DOMESTIC AIR MAIL—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. CHAVEZ submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5560) to fix the rate of postage on domestic air mail, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 1 and 2.

DENNIS CHAVEZ,
KENNETH MCKELLAR,
CARL HAYDEN,
WILLIAM LANGER,
Managers on the Part of the Senate.

PHILIP A. TRAYNOR,
JOHN C. BUTLER,
GEORGE D. O'BRIEN,
WILLIAM C. COLE,
Managers on the Part of the House.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. President, I ask for the immediate consideration and adoption of the conference report.

Mr. TAFT. What rate was agreed upon?

Mr. CHAVEZ. Five cents.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the conference report?

There being no objection, the conference report was considered and agreed to.

Mr. WHITE subsequently said: Mr. President, I understand that earlier in the day a conference report dealing with air-mail postage rates was agreed to. The rate on air-mail postage was reduced to 5 cents an ounce. I was asked by the junior Senator from Kansas [Mr. REED] to announce to the Senate when the conference report was considered that he was opposed to the 5-cent rate, and was opposed to the conference report. I make that statement in his behalf.

KARL E. BOND—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. THOMAS of Utah obtained the floor.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for the submission of a conference report?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Mr. President, I should like to make a brief statement. We have been waiting to clear the right-of-way for Senate Resolution 196. I have told 15 or 16 Senators that I could not yield until the legislative situation had been straightened out and the opening statement about the World Court had been made. Then I shall be glad to yield to any Senator.

I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate Resolution 196.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, a point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. WHERRY. I have ready for submission a conference report. It is noncontroversial. Am I not entitled to recognition for that purpose at this time?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield for that purpose?

Mr. WHERRY. The report is noncontroversial.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Mr. President, a conference report is a privileged matter and I must yield for that purpose.

Mr. WHERRY. I do not wish to disturb the distinguished Senator.

Mr. President, I submit the conference report and ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report will be read.

The report was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 783) for the relief of Karl E. Bond, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the sum inserted by the Senate, insert $5,000; and the Senate agree to the same.

H. M. KILGORE,
KENNETH S. WHERRY,
Managers on the Part of the Senate.

ANTONIO M. FERNANDEZ,
E. H. HEDRICK,
Managers on the Part of the House.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the conference report?

There being no objection, the report was considered and agreed to.

Mr. WHERRY. I thank the distinguished Senator from Utah for yielding.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business. Senate Resolution 196 should be considered in executive session.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Is not the Senate now in executive session?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate is now in executive session. There was no objection to the unanimous-consent request.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, a point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. TAFT. What is before the Senate?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Senate Resolution 196.

Mr. TAFT. Have we voted to take it up, in lieu of the calendar?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. By unanimous consent the appropriation bill was taken up, temporarily displacing consideration of the motion to take up Senate Resolution 196.

ACCEPTANCE OF COMPULSORY JURISDICTION OF INTERNATIONAL COURT OF JUSTICE

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate now proceed, in executive session, to the consideration of Senate Resolution 196, as agreed upon earlier in the day.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution (S.

Res. 196) proposing acceptance of compulsory jurisdiction of the International Court of Justice by the United States Government.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Mr. President, I deem vitally important that which we are about to do, not merely because of the action itself but also because we are dealing with a subject which will probably result in a clarification of the relations of Congress with the Executive. I am sure that Senators will wish to discuss all the questions involved, and I, for one, will want all of them discussed. However, in order that we may have a statement on which to base the debate, I ask that I be permitted to proceed without interruption.

Mr. REVERCOMB. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. REVERCOMB. Is the situation now that we are discussing the question whether or not to consider the resolution?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. That question has already been decided, and Senate Resolution 196 is before the Senate in executive session. I am about to discuss the resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. A few moments ago the Senator from Utah asked unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate Resolution 196, and no objection was made.

Mr. REVERCOMB. Is the resolution itself now the pending business?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution itself is the pending business.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that Dr. Wilcox, who has assisted our subcommittee, be permitted to sit by me and help us during the debate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Mr. President, just a little over a year ago the Senate of the United States approved the ratification of the United Nations Charter by the overwhelming vote of 89-2. By that vote we formally and officially accepted the role of leadership in international affairs which destiny and a shrinking world had thrust upon us. By that vote we expressed our determination to cooperate wholeheartedly with the other nations of the world in the all-important task of outlawing war and in settling our disputes by peaceful means.

Since that time the United Nations has slowly but surely gotten under way. The General Assembly convened in London in January and by its actions transformed the Charter into a living, breathing organism. The Security Council, 6 of whose members were elected by the General Assembly, has already been confronted with 5 disputes and has handled them in a courageous and commendable manner. The Economic and Social Council is a going concern and it is my hope that the Trusteeship Council will be organized when the General Assembly meets again in September. The Secretariat, which will form the backbone of the new organization, is hard at work in New York. New staff members are being recruited nearly every day.

While the eyes of the world were focussed on the Security Council meetings in New York another important arm of the United Nations—the International Court of Justice—convened at The Hague. On April 3 without publicity and without fanfare the court held its inaugural sitting in the peace palace. It is with respect to this latter organ of the United Nations that I wish to address my remarks this afternoon.

THE SECURITY COUNCIL AND THE COURT

I know that it is impossible to draw any clear line of demarcation between the work of the General Assembly, the Security Council and the International Court of Justice. In general, however, it may be said that the Security Council, based on the concepts of negotiation, conciliation and compromise, is primarily designed to handle disputes of a political character. The Court, on the other hand, will be called upon to adjust differences of a legal or justiciable nature. These are differences which can ordinarily be settled on the basis of existing rules of international law. I wish to emphasize the point about the Security Council. Ordinarily the nations of the world can be haled before the Security Council in disputes which are of a political nature.

At present, however, there is one curiously inconsistent thing about the jurisdiction of the Security Council and the Court. Under the terms of the Charter the Council is authorized to take cognizance of any dispute or situation which is likely to endanger peace and security. In a sense it may be said that its jurisdiction over political disputes is compulsory and no state can refuse a summons by the Council to appear before it. The Court, on the other hand, has jurisdiction only over those legal cases which the parties, of their own volition, refer to it for settlement. A state may thus ignore the summons of the Court. It may say, in effect, "We believe in the process of judicial settlement, but in this particular case our arguments are weak. Since the chances of securing a favorable opinion are not good, we would prefer not to submit to the jurisdiction of the Court."

The question is, Mr. President, Why should any nation, with a clear conscience, be afraid to take its case before the bar of international justice? Why should any nation which believes in government by law hesitate to accept the impartial judgment of the Court? Why should any nation, great or small, which wants to be fair in its dealings with others, avoid the settlement of legitimate grievances which other nations may have?

If the United Nations is to succeed in the long run, the system of power politics which has prevailed in the world must be superseded by a community of nations whose actions are dominated by the higher concepts of law and justice, and the states of the world must develop confidence and trust in the peaceful methods of settling disputes as so ably outlined in the Charter.

WHAT SENATE RESOLUTION 196 WOULD ACCOMPLISH

The resolution before us today would contribute greatly toward this end. In brief, it would authorize the President to deposit with the United Nations a declaration accepting on behalf of the United States the compulsory jurisdiction of the International Court of Justice. The declaration would cover only certain categories of legal disputes, and would apply only with respect to states which have accepted similar obligations.

That is the immediate purpose of the resolution, Mr. President. There is, however, a far more important purpose, and that is to stimulate throughout the world the acceptance of the Court's jurisdiction in legal cases.

It must be clear to us all that so long as states can place themselves above the rules of international law, the world will be torn by confusion and chaos. So long as sovereign nations can judge for themselves what the law is, there can be no real hope for lasting peace.

Mr. President, in ordinary government and in governmental processes, in order to provide a peaceful method of settling disputes between citizens, a judicial procedure is established. And now in the international field, Mr. President, we have set up a charter which has become a mighty constitution, of which the International Court of Justice is an adjunct; but we will not have taken the whole step to make the Court truly a part of the process if we fail to provide for it such a place in the scheme of things that the settlement of international disputes shall naturally flow through the channels of peaceful processes, rather than through the channels of war.

To be sure, the United States has been a member of the Court ever since the United Nations Charter went into effect. But membership in itself is only a halfhearted beginning. If the member states can flout the Court and can refuse to submit their differences to it, a regime of law in the international community can never be realized.

Compulsory jurisdiction is thus the real test of our loyalty, if we want the Court to succeed, for it is axiomatic that no court can possibly function with full effectiveness unless it has jurisdiction over the parties to a dispute, as well as over the subject matter.

Law and the courts lie at the root of our domestic peace and security in a manner with which we are so familiar that we scarcely give it a thought. How drastically this judicial system would be changed if parties did not need to appear in court unless they voluntarily chose to do so. The entire basis of our domestic life would be revolutionized. Instead of resting on law, its basis would soon become force or the threat of force. I repeat, no court can function effectively unless it has jurisdiction over the parties to a dispute, as well as over the subject matter.

In this country, too, we have always been proud of the fact that the little man, as well as the big man, can get a square deal in our courts. There is no price tag on justice in America; it is meted out to the rich and the poor alike. No one, merely because he possesses power and influence, can refuse to heed the summons of one of our courts. This is as it should be, if the conduct of man is to be regulated by rules of law.

So it should be, too, in the family of nations. Far too often in the past states have resolved their disputes by means of coercion and force, rather than reason and logic. Far too often the scales of international justice have been weighted on the side of troops, airplanes, and battleships. Far too often diplomatic pressure has been the instrument by which the great powers have achieved their national objectives. I am sure you will agree with me that differences cannot be settled on their merits if the courtroom is replaced by the arena of power politics and if justice is sacrificed at the altar of overwhelming might.

COMPULSORY JURISDICTION NOT A NEW IDEA

Lest there be apprehension on the part of some people, I want to emphasize the fact that the idea of compulsory jurisdiction is by no means new. The advisory committee of jurists which met in 1920 to draft the statute of the Permanent Court of International Justice, recommended a statute which would have bound all the contracting parties to accept the compulsory jurisdiction of the court. That was a very distinguished committee of eminent jurists and statesmen, including that great American, who served so ably as a Member of this Senate and as Secretary of State—the Honorable Elihu Root. The committee's proposal of general compulsory jurisdiction was rejected in the League Council and Assembly, and there was substituted for it the so-called optional clause, which is similar to article 36, paragraph 2, of the International Court of Justice. Under this provision, 44 states, including the United Kingdom, China, and France, deposited declarations accepting the court's jurisdiction, as thus defined.

When representatives of the United Nations met last year, first in Washington and later in San Francisco, to draft the statute of the present Court, it was evident that a great body of world opinion supported the idea of compulsory jurisdiction for legal cases. At San Francisco a large majority of the delegations favored such a step but they were willing to forego their position in the interests of securing a general agreement to which every state could subscribe. The United States delegation argued that since a few states could not find it possible to accept compulsory jurisdiction at that time, the insertion of such a provision in the statute might jeopardize the acceptance of the Charter itself. As a result, the optional provision was retained.

Thus, while the Conference bowed to the inevitable, there could be no doubt that there was overwhelming sentiment in favor of compulsory jurisdiction. This fact was clearly demonstrated when the Conference, without dissent, recommended to the members of the United Nations:

> That as soon as possible they make declarations recognizing the obligatory jurisdiction of the International Court of Justice according to the provisions of article 36 of the statute.

THE COURT AND THE CHARTER

One has only to read the Charter to realize that the acceptance of compulsory jurisdiction is the natural and logical sequel to our membership in the United Nations. One of the fundamental purposes of the United Nations, as set forth in article 1, is—

> To bring about by peaceful means, and in conformity with the principles of justice and international law, adjustment or settlement of international disputes or situations which might lead to a breach of the peace.

Moreover, all the members of the United Nations have assumed the solemn obligation, under article 2, to settle their disputes in such a way that peace and security and justice are not endangered.

One does not have to read much further to discover the legitimate role of the International Court of Justice in the United Nations system. By article 7, the Court is established as one of the principal organs of the United Nations. And in article 36 we are reminded that—

> Legal disputes should as a general rule be referred by the parties to the International Court of Justice in accordance with the provisions of the statute of the court.

Our objective now should be to do everything possible to strengthen the Court and to make it an effective part of the United Nations peace machinery. We must bestow upon the Court jurisdiction over legal disputes comparable to the jurisdiction which the Security Council already has over differences of a political nature.

LIMITATIONS WHICH APPLY TO COMPULSORY JURISDICTION

In the past, Mr. President, there has been considerable misunderstanding as to the extent of the jurisdiction the Court would have under the compulsory jurisdiction clause. Certain people evidently assumed that when the United States accepted compulsory jurisdiction, we would be bound to submit all our disputes to the Court. Such an assumption is clearly erroneous. There are at least five important limitations which would apply.

First. The jurisdiction conferred on the Court by this resolution is strictly limited to the four categories of legal cases outlined in article 36 of the Court statute. These are:

(a) the interpretation of a treaty;

(b) any question of international law;

(c) the existence of any fact which, if established, would constitute a breach of an international obligation;

(d) the nature or extent of the reparation to be made for the breach of an international obligation.

I am fully aware of the fact that political and legal questions are inextricably mixed at times, and it is not easy to distinguish between them. It is no doubt true that some political factors can be found in almost every case. At least it is possible for a state to contend that its political interests are vitally affected by a particular case before the Court. It is this very attitude which has been one of the greatest obstacles to the development of an international court system.

Second. The jurisdiction conferred by the resolution is further limited by the element of reciprocity. In other words, when the United States deposits its declaration with the United Nations, it will become bound only with respect to those other states which have deposited similar declarations. Thus if states A, B, and C have accepted compulsory jurisdiction and states X, Y, and Z have not, we will not incur any new obligations with respect to X, Y, and Z.

Third. The compulsory jurisdiction of the Court would apply only to disputes which arise after the declaration has been deposited. It would be impossible, therefore, for a state to revive an old dispute against the United States and take it to the Court for settlement unless we agreed.

Fourth. The resolution also provides that compulsory jurisdiction does not apply when the parties to a dispute agree to take the case before some other tribunal. This reservation is in absolute harmony with the basic philosophy of the United Nations Charter that disputing states should be allowed complete freedom to choose the peaceful procedures they wish to use to settle their controversies.

Fifth. The declaration would not confer upon the Court jurisdiction over matters which are essentially within the domestic jurisdiction of the United States. This limitation is in conformity with the principle expressed in article 2 of the Charter: "Nothing contained in the present Charter shall authorize the United Nations to intervene in matters which are essentially within the domestic jurisdiction of any state or shall require the members to submit such matters to settlement under the present Charter. * * *"

Some concern has been expressed in the past lest the Court be given jurisdiction over controversies involving such domestic issues as immigration and trade barriers. These are vital matters over which the sovereign state has traditionally exercised complete control and we certainly would not want the Court or any other international agency to order us to admit ten or twenty or fifty million additional immigrants to our shores.

The resolution, together with article 2 of the Charter, clearly safeguard our national interests on this point. Moreover, I would remind you, Mr. President, that it is the function of the Court, under the compulsory jurisdiction clause, to decide cases in accordance with the rules of international law. Clearly, therefore, it would be impossible to act since there is no international law dealing with the subject of immigration. That is a matter which we have often dealt with in the Senate and we have never had to take account of the international rights and duties of other states.

The tariff is another case in point. Unless the United States deliberately enters into an international treaty subscribing to certain rights and duties, there is no international law on the subject which the Court could apply.

Sixth. Finally, after a period of 5 years has elapsed, a 6-month notice may be given at any time to terminate the declaration.

I have stressed these limitations, Mr. President, not because I want to minimize the importance of the step we are taking, but because I want to make it perfectly clear that the jurisdiction we are conferring upon the Court is clearly defined in scope.

COURT SAFEGUARDED AGAINST POWER POLITICS

Moreover, as the Washington Post pointed out in its excellent editorial of April 17, 1946, the Court is carefully safeguarded against power politics and political influences. Only the most highly qualified jurist of the various countries who hold the confidence of both the General Assembly and the Security Council can be seated as judges. Nor can any 2 of the 15 judges be nationals of the same state. Moreover, the judges are selected as individual jurists and scholars and not as representatives of any particular country. I am aware of the fact that all courts are made up of human beings and no human being is infallible. Nevertheless, every precaution has been taken to make the International Court of Justice a highly competent and impartial tribunal.

The roll call of the present Court reads like the beginning of a list of the world's outstanding international lawyers. McNair, of the United Kingdom; de Visscher, of Belgium; Basdevant, of France; Hackworth, of the United States, Alvarez, of Chile; Klaestad, of Norway; Read, of Canada; Mo Hsu, of China; Krylov, of the Soviet Union—to mention only a few—are the type of men who should dispel any possible shadow of doubt about the ability, the integrity, or the objectivity of the Court. These are the kind of men who will exert their judicial qualities and their legal wisdom on behalf of international justice and will not be swayed by selfish nationalistic or political influences.

It is, of course, entirely possible that in the future the Court may hand down decisions which do not meet with our complete approval. That is a result which flows from the very nature of the judicial process and one which we should all expect. Many decisions of the Supreme Court, for example, have been roundly denounced by large sections of the American people. But no one would deny that the displeasure or the inconvenience which we may suffer from an occasional decision which we may not agree with, is relatively unimportant compared to the great advantage that accrues from having legal differences between nations settled in the calm and judicial atmosphere of the International Court of Justice.

What I am saying may be put in still another way. Even if a state feels that an adverse decision should result in certain sacrifices which it considers important, it must never be forgotten that the alternative to these sacrifices may be war and destruction. Given the present state of world affairs, the balance of national interest is clearly in favor of doing what needs to be done to construct a solid basis for orderly international relations. This is not always easy, but we have no right to assume that the process of peace making should be easy.

RECORD OF FIRST WORLD COURT GOOD

There is still another argument which should reassure us and that is the splendid record of the first World Court. In 18 years of its history 65 cases came before the Court, some of them very serious international controversies. These cases were handled in such a way as to generate confidence and trust in the Court and the impartiality of its judges. Fifty-one states gave it their formal support and nearly all the states of the world bestowed upon it jurisdiction over certain types of disputes. Not a single government ever refused to comply with any of its judgments. Lawyers and students of government everywhere were practically unanimous in praising the splendid contribution the Court made toward the establishment of a rule of law in the international community.

Unfortunately, the United States never accepted membership in the Permanent Court of International Justice. In my opinion the record of our failure to join the Court constitutes one of the most deplorable episodes in the history of American diplomacy. President Harding, President Coolidge, President Hoover and President Roosevelt each in his turn urged our membership in the Court. On two occasions the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations favorably reported a resolution urging such action. While the 1935 resolution received a 52–36 majority vote on the floor of the Senate it failed to acquire the two-thirds necessary for approval. President Roosevelt's exhortation to the Senate—"at this period in international relationships, when every act is of moment to the future of world peace, the United States has an opportunity once more to throw its weight into the scale in favor of peace"—fell upon deaf ears.

Today these challenging words come ringing down the years to us, as timely as when President Roosevelt wrote them more than a decade ago. This time we will accept the challenge. This time we will carry through. It is now more timely for us to hearken to the words of President Roosevelt than it was when he uttered them. At the present time the United States has become the leader in the establishment of the United Nations. Our representatives are functioning day by day. The International Court has been set up as a result of agreements and statutes worked out in our own country. We have stood by the whole organization to date remarkably well. It has become the cornerstone of our national structure. We have been proud of the fact that we have been enabled to lay aside political ideas, political party interests, and have as a united nation supported all that has been done for the United Nations.

We now stand in that position, Mr. President, and I would that President Roosevelt's words could be sounded in our ears today:

> At this period in international relationships, when every act is of moment to the future of world peace, the United States has an opportunity once more to throw its weight into the scale in favor of peace.

Mr. President, I might go back further. I might quote from President Wilson and from the other Presidents mentioned, but never in the history of the world has a country been given the respect by other nations which the United States has been accorded. Never in the history of the world has a nation been singled out as a leader in establishing a world organization through which the processes of peace may be followed.

Never, Mr. President, in the history of the world has there been set the example of 150 or 160 years of a single nation's work in the establishment of peace for itself, and the building up of a community of states which can speak for all the states, as in the case of our own country. Above all things, one of the processes which has made for the success of our American Federal system, a success which has brought peace and repect for judicial action, has been the adoption of reason rather than forceful means for the settlement of all disputes, and never, I repeat, has a country stood as we stand today in the espousal of such a process. I cannot help saying that the peace of the world surely depends upon our action.

THE RESOLUTION MEETS CONSTITUTIONAL REQUIREMENTS

At this point, Mr. President, I should like to comment briefly on the constitutional issues involved in making a declaration of this kind. While the action contemplated is unique in American history, no one can doubt that our Government has the authority to make such a declaration. As the report of the Committee on Foreign Relations pointed out, the question is simply this: What is the proper procedure to be followed under the Constitution? This problem was discussed at some length in the Senate during our debate on the United Nations Charter, and it was generally agreed that the President could not deposit the declaration on behalf of the United States without congressional approval of some kind.

I trust the Senators who are present will remember that this question was before us, and what we are doing today is in conformity with a decision which we made when the question was discussed at the time we were considering the United Nations Charter.

Personally, I am convinced that either the procedure set forth in Senate Resolution 196, which requires a two-thirds vote of the Senate, or that set forth in House Joint Resolution 291, which calls for a simple majority vote of both Houses, would suffice. This is also the point of view of the State Department. But on this point the Senate has a problem which I trust it will meet.

Mr. President, I for one believe that when the advice and consent provision was put into the Constitution of the United States it was inserted with the complete understanding that advice and consent were two propositions, that there should be a community of discussion between the representatives of the various States with the President of the United States.

I think it is perfectly proper and perfectly logical that in this body initiation might be made toward the negotiation of treaties or agreements with other nations. I think it well that we look back upon our history, and remember the experience of the Father of our Country—remember the ideas he had about considering the Senate of the United States as a council of States. He brought to the Senate things to be discussed.

I remember what I consider one of the greatest constitutional steps taken in the history of our country in keeping with this question was taken just a hundred years ago, when there fell to President Polk the responsibility of negotiating with regard to the Oregon Territory. President Polk had great constitutional questions to meet, not only in the Northwest, but also in the Southwest, and he sent to the Congress and asked for their advice as to how he should proceed with his negotiations. He said:

> As soon as the Senate of the United States will decide the particulars, then I shall enter into negotiation and will report the treaties.

It has been over a hundred years since then, and we have gradually gotten away from that very splendid process. Now we are back to it.

I am happy the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations saw to it that we returned to that practice, and I am happy we are discussing this matter in executive session. I am happy we are giving this proposal all the dignity and all the consideration which should be given to a treaty. I am happy to be able to say that we can take the words of the Constitution and the words of judicial decisions. If we ask the President to make this deposit, the President can say, "That which I am doing is in conformity with the supreme law of the land."

I know of no better way for the Government of the United States to set an example to all the other nations of the world, and to maintain the position of leadership which it has attained and which is recognized, than for the President of the United States to move forward with the dignity and the support which action on the part of the Senate will give him at this time.

There have been cases lately in which the Senate has acted first, not great cases such as this, but cases which were precedents. There were, however, very valid reasons why the Committee on Foreign Relations decided that the declaration should be approved by two-thirds of the Senate, even though it cannot be considered a treaty in the strict sense of the term. It is definitely a part of the advice provision which is necessary to be gone through with before a treaty can be ratified.

In the first place, the declaration will have the binding force and effect of a treaty between the United States and the other States which have accepted the compulsory-jurisdiction clause.

In the second place, the subject matter, the possible settlement of international disputes through arbitration or judicial settlement, has always been considered appropriate for senatorial advice and consent.

Finally, inasmuch as the declaration involves new and important obligations for the United States, the use of the more formal treaty procedure would render impotent any possible objection to the declaration which might be raised on constitutional grounds.

COMPULSORY JURISDICTION MEETS WITH PUBLIC APPROVAL

Mr. President, rarely in my legislative experience have I encountered such an important measure with the people of the country so unanimously in support of it. The President and the Secretary of State have applauded it. The chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee, in his remarkable report to the Senate on the Council of Foreign Ministers' meetings in Paris, listed compulsory jurisdiction as one of the seven steps the United States should take at the earliest practicable moment in order to support the United Nations Charter. Fifteen Senators from both sides of the aisle sponsored the resolution. During the hearings conducted by the subcommittee every witness who appeared was enthusiastically in favor of it. Not a single letter or telegram was received against it.

The wholehearted approval of the American people has been even more strikingly demonstrated by the fact that hundreds of public leaders and scores of great national organizations have enthusiastically endorsed the resolution. On December 18, 1945, the house of delegates of the American Bar Association unanimously approved the acceptance of compulsory jurisdiction "at the earliest practicable time." The American Society of International Law, the American Association of University Women, the General Federation of Women's Clubs, the Federal Council of Churches, the National Education Asscciation, and many comparable groups have likewise formally expressed their approval. It was in complete harmony with this overwhelming public support that the Foreign Relations Committee, without a dissenting vote, reported the resolution to the Senate for its favorable consideration.

COMPULSORY JURISDICTION IN LINE WITH AMERICAN FOREIGN POLICY

If I interpret the statements of our leaders correctly, the heart of American foreign policy may be stated in these terms: Our overriding objective is world peace—a peace based upon justice and law and order and progress in the international community. To achieve that goal we intend to observe scrupulously the principles and purposes of the United Nations Charter. And we intend to cooperate in every possible way within the framework of the United Nations to solve world problems as they arise.

Our determination to back to the hilt the United Nations is a perfectly logical one. There can be no other choice. Either we cooperate earnestly and sincerely with the United Nations or, gambling with the greatest stakes of history, we risk plunging the world once more into darkness and destruction and death.

Either we exert our joint efforts on behalf of peace or we invite once again the disaster of selfish nationalism with each state getting what it can and the devil taking the hindmost.

In short, Mr. President, we cannot afford to be niggardly in our cooperation with the United Nations. We must work wholeheartedly with every organ and agency of the United Nations, including the International Court of Justice.

Since 1789 the United States has taken a leading role in the task of building a regime of law and order in the international community. Today we have a unique opportunity to continue that leadership. Actually, with our tremendous economic power and our military might, we are in a position to impose our will on many other nations of the world if we choose to do so. If, however, we agree to submit our legal controversies to the Court that decision may well mark the beginning of a new era in international relationships.

But what would our position be if we should fail to act? In my opinion such a failure might be interpreted by other nations as an admission on our part that we prefer to rely on force and coercion rather than law and reason.

You know and I know that the United States has no desire to impose its will on other states or take unfair advantage of them in any way. But we would be naive indeed if we were to assume that a mere repetition of this principle would convince other nations of our good intentions. In diplomacy actions speak much louder than mere words. Until we demonstrate in a concrete fashion our willingness to accept the impartial decisions of the Court, we may have a hard time explaining to the small states in particular the apparent disparity between what we say with respect to world peace and what we are actually willing to do about it.

Today, Mr. President, the Senate has a splendid opportunity to carry on the good work it started a year ago when it ratified the Charter. Today it has an opportunity, at a crucial time in world history, to give impetus to the cause of the United Nations and world peace. It has an opportunity to give additional evidence to the world of our good faith. I hope the resolution will be adopted by an overwhelming vote.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. President, I first want to compliment my distinguished and learned colleague from Utah on the very splendid address he has delivered on what I consider to be a very important subject. Last evening I took occasion to point out that in my opinion the resolution we are considering should be given the dignity of a treaty. Its language, in my opinion, required that it be considered in executive session. The requirement that it be adopted by a two-thirds majority indicated to me that at least it was entitled to the same consideration as a treaty. Some Senators in conversing with me about my position took the attitude that I was too technical. But, Mr. President, I call the attention of the Senate to the fact that a constitutional question is never and should never be considered as a technical question.

I was highly gratified, Mr. President, when I walked into the Senate Chamber this afternoon, after having been called away on important business, to find that the Senate was considering the resolution in executive session. In my opinion that entirely removes any question that may be raised in the future as to whether or not we have acted according to our constitutional legislative processes, and in my opinion if the resolution is now adopted by a two-thirds majority in executive session, the question of the jurisdiction with which we vest the International Court of Justice cannot be questioned. That is why I took the position which I did last night. I get some satisfaction out of the fact that the position I took last evening on what was proper legislative procedure on this resolution may have had some influence in causing the Senate to go into executive session for the consideration thereof. I join with my colleague in expressing the hope that the resolution will be adopted.

Mr. HILL obtained the floor.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President——

Mr. HILL. I understand the distinguished Senator from Michigan desires to ask a question of the Senator from Utah. I yield to him for that purpose.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I thank the Senator. I call the attention of the Senator from Utah to the committee report at page 6, and I want to ask for a clarification of the language in what purports to be the reply of Hon. Charles Fahy, legal adviser of the State Department, to the suggestions which were made by Mr. John Foster Dulles. I call the Senator's attention to the fifth paragraph from the bottom of page 6, in which the legal adviser of the State Department is quoted as follows:

> Jurisdiction should be compulsory only when all of the other parties to the dispute have previously accepted the compulsory jurisdiction of the court.

Does that mean that it is the attitude of the State Department that jurisdiction should be compulsory only when all other parties to the dispute have previously accepted the compulsory jurisdiction?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. That is my theory of reciprocity, and that is in keeping, I think, with the resolution itself.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Yet the resolution itself says that we accept compulsory jurisdiction "without special agreement in relation to any other state accepting the same obligation." So I would think that the language of the resolution was directly contrary to the language of the recommendation by the State Department.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. The language of the resolution is in keeping with the charter and with the scheme.

Mr. VANDENBERG. That was not my question. My question is whether or not it is in keeping with the recommendation of the State Department.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. I think it is. I think there is no inconsistency, as I read the English language. For instance, article 36, dealing with the jurisdiction of the Court, provides:

> 1. The jurisdiction of the Court comprises all cases which the parties refer to it and all matters specially provided for in the Charter of the United Nations or in treaties and conventions in force.
> 2. The states parties to the present statute may at any time declare that they recognize as compulsory ipso facto and without special agreement, in relation to any other state accepting the same obligation, the jurisdiction of the Court in all legal disputes concerning—

And so forth. The same obligations of reciprocity, to my mind at least, I will say to the Senator from Michigan, stand out clearly in that language, and there is no question in my mind either as to the meaning of the language of the Charter or the meaning of the resolution in this particular.

Mr. VANDENBERG. If the Senator will bear with me for a moment longer, I will say that I think we are all in agreement as to the objective we are seeking; but, of course, it is highly important that we should be sure we have reached the objective. Mr. Dulles, who certainly is one of the great friends of international jurisprudence, as the Senator knows, has raised a question whether the language of the resolution might not involve us in accepting jurisdiction in a multilateral dispute in which some one or more nations had not accepted jurisdiction. It is my understanding that it is the opinion of the Senator from Utah that if we confronted such a situation we would not be bound to submit to compulsory jurisdiction in a multilateral case if all of the other nations involved in the multilateral situation had not themselves accepted compulsory jurisdiction. Is that so?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. That is surely my understanding. I think reciprocity is complete. All the parties to the case must stand on exactly the same foundation, except that we may waive a right.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I notice that the committee report, at the top of page 7, deals with this precise point. It says that Mr. Dulles' objection might be met by another subsection in the first proviso of the resolution, on page 2, after line 14, reading as follows:

> (c) Disputes arising under a multilateral treaty, unless (1) all parties to the treaty affected by the decision are also parties to the case before the court, or (2) the United States specially agrees to jurisdiction.

As I understand the Senator from Utah, he agrees with me that the situation defined in this suggested reservation is the situation which would exist without the reservation.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. That is true; and since the Senator has used the word "reservation" I think that word is one that can well be avoided and dispensed with in the resolution, because the resolution is initiated by the Senate. It is not a part of an agreement with another nation. So that which the Senator has called a reservation would be a simple amendment to the resolution. I think it is better for us to realize that we are dealing from the beginning with this question, and if the Senator wishes to be doubly assured on a point with respect to which the Senator from Utah is already completely assured, I see no objection to the addition of:

> (c) Disputes arising under a multilateral treaty, unless (1) all parties to the treaty affected by the decision are also parties to the case before the court, or (2) the United States specially agrees to jurisdiction.

The only thing the Senator from Utah is constantly thinking about is that it would be disastrous to the whole United Nations structure, after we have gone through the process of accepting the obligations of the United Nations and making a treaty with other nations of the world to live up to the United Nations structure, for the United States Senate to pass any measure which would in any way affect the structure of the United Nations. That is my stand. I would guard against any such action.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I quite agree with what the Senator from Utah has said regarding my inadvertent use of the word "reservation."

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. I do not want anything which we do here to be labeled as a reservation.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I quite agree with the Senator. That was merely a colloquialism so far as I was concerned.

I was thinking of the addition, on page 2, after line 14, of the precise language suggested in the committee report itself, namely:

> (c) Disputes arising under a multilateral treaty unless (1) all parties to the treaty affected by the decision are also parties to the case before the Court, or (2) the United States specially agrees to jurisdiction.

It is my understanding that the able Senator from Utah would not object to the addition of that language in the pending resolution. I agree with him that it would not be a reservation. Surely we have the original authority, without jeopardizing our objective at all, to add a third definition under the proviso in the resolution.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Personally, I would be willing to go even further than does the Senator from Michigan on this single point. Under subclause (2) I would be willing to say, "The United States and other parties specially agree to jurisdiction." I think that is exactly what reciprocity means.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator further yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. TUNNELL in the chair). Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I agree with the Senator that that is what reciprocity means. In view of my very great respect for the judicial opinions of Mr. John Foster Dulles in this area of jurisprudence, I would be happier if we could spell it out, if the Senator agrees that that would be proper. At the appropriate time I shall offer such an amendment, and I understand that it will be with the approval of the Senator from Utah.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, as the author of the resolution, I accept the suggestion of the Senator from Michigan.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT—APPROVAL OF BILLS

Messages in writing from the President of the United States were communicated to the Senate by Mr. Miller, one of his secretaries, and he announced that on today, August 1, 1946, the President had approved and signed the following acts:

S. 346. An act to amend section 21 of the act of May 28, 1896 (29 Stat. 184; 28 U. S. C., sec. 597) prescribing fees of United States commissioners;

S. 619. An act to amend the act of June 8, 1936, relating to vocational education, so as to provide for the further development of vocational education in the several States and Territories;

S. 1466. An act authorizing rehabilitation on the island of Guam;

S. 1549. An act for the relief of the legal guardian of Duane N. Thompson;

S. 1636. An act to amend the Surplus Property Act of 1944 to designate the Department of State as the disposal agency for surplus property outside the continental United States, its Territories and possessions, and for other purposes;

S. 1674. An act for the relief of Michael Joseph Bennett, a minor;

S. 1717. An act for the development and control of atomic energy; and

S. 1751. An act for the relief of Wayne Parker.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Swanson, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7037) to amend the Social Security Act and the Internal Revenue Code, and for other purposes; asked a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina, Mr. DINGELL, Mr. ROBERTSON of Virginia, Mr. MILLS, Mr. KNUTSON, Mr. REED of New York, and Mr. WOODRUFF were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

The message also announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 390) making additional appropriations for the fiscal year 1947, and for other purposes; agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. CANNON of Missouri, Mr. RABAUT, Mr. THOMAS of Texas, Mr. WIGGLESWORTH, and Mr. DIRKSEN were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

The message further announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the following enrolled bills and joint resolution, and they were signed by the President pro tempore:

S. 191. An act to amend the Public Health Service Act to authorize grants to the States for surveying their hospitals and public-health centers and for planning construction of additional facilities, and to authorize grants to assist in such construction;

S. 528. An act for the relief of Thaddeus C. Knight;

S. 881. An act authorizing the President of the United States to award posthumously in the name of Congress a Medal of Honor to William Mitchell;

S. 1253. An act to enable debtor railroad corporations, whose properties during a period of 7 years have provided sufficient earnings to pay fixed charges, to effect a readjustment of their financial structures; to alter or modify their financial obligations, and for other purposes;

S. 2020. An act granting a right-of-way at a revised location to the West Shore Railroad Co., the New York Central Railroad Co., lessee, across a portion of the military reservation at West Point;

S. 2236. An act providing for a medal for service in the merchant marine during the present war;

S. 2304. An act to provide for the training of officers for the naval service, and for other purposes;

S. 2318. An act to amend the act of May 11, 1938, for the conservation of the fishery resources of the Columbia River and for other purposes;

S. 2401. An act to amend the act of May 4, 1898 (30 Stat. 369), as amended, to authorize the President to appoint 250 acting assistant surgeons for temporary service;

S. 2419. An act to amend further the act of April 6, 1938, as amended by the act of July 9, 1941, entitled "An act authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to exchange sites at Miami Beach, Dade County, Fla., for Coast Guard purposes";

S. 2426. An act providing for the conveyance to the city of Canton, S. Dak., of the Canton Insane Asylum, located in Lincoln County, S. Dak.;

H. R. 4051. An act to grant to personnel of the armed forces equal treatment in the matter of leave, and for other purposes; and

S. J. Res. 84. Joint resolution authorizing the erection in the District of Columbia of a statue of Nathan Hale.

AMENDMENT OF SOCIAL SECURITY ACT AND INTERNAL REVENUE CODE

As in legislative session,

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. TUNNELL in the chair) laid before the Senate a message from the House of Representatives announcing its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7037) to amend the Social Security Act and the Internal Revenue Code, and for other purposes, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments, agree to the request of the House for a conference, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. GEORGE, Mr. WALSH, Mr. BARKLEY, Mr. CONNALLY, Mr. LA FOLLETTE, Mr. VANDENBERG, and Mr. TAFT conferees on the part of the Senate.

FEDERAL AID TO EDUCATION

As in legislative session,

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, on June 13 last the Senate Committee on Education and Labor reported favorably Senate bill 181, a Federal aid to education bill, introduced by my two distinguished colleagues the senior Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS] and the senior Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT] and myself.

It is to me a matter of profound regret that the necessity for the consideration by the Senate of urgent legislation for reconversion from war to peace has made it impossible to bring the Federal aid bill to the Senate floor for debate and passage. This regret is all the more pronounced in view of the strong position taken on the bill by the Committee on Education and Labor and in view of my belief, with which others concur, that the bill as reported by the committee has the support of a substantial majority of the Members of the United States Senate.

The bill undertakes to strengthen our Nation where the most disturbing threat to our national well-being now exists. I refer to the education of American youth. We have approximately 24,000,000 young people enrolled in our public schools. As the evidence before the Committee on Education and Labor discloses, a large proportion of America's children is enrolled in classrooms that are substandard as a result of overcrowding, lack of facilities, and poorly qualified teachers. In addition, more than 2,000,000 young people, children of school age, are not enrolled in any school. We are in the midst of a far-reaching educational depression, not because it is necessary or inevitable but because we have failed to come to grips with the problem and take action to remedy the situation.

Our experiences during the recent war, like those in World War I, uncovered startling conditions which must be corrected. During the recent war we rejected because of educational deficiencies almost as many men as we deployed in combat divisions throughout the Pacific. We rejected more than 2,000,000 for other deficiencies which for the most part could have been prevented through an adequately supported public-school program. Our national wellbeing demands that the Federal Government, through wise and comprehensive policies, assist the States in financing the education of our young people. This it must do if we are to keep our Nation strong. As provided in the bill, such aid must be extended to the States without impairment of State control over education.

The Senate Committee on Education and Labor has found that many of our States, after making great efforts to provide good schools, are unable to finance the kind of educational opportunity which the children of our Nation need. The war has widened the gap between many of our States in their financial ability to support education. The differences in educational opportunity among the States today range as high as 60 to 1 when measured in terms of expenditures per classroom unit. These differences will increase in the days ahead unless the Federal Government acts to correct the condition.

The extent to which our Nation will be great in the years ahead will depend upon the intelligence and character we cultivate in our youth. Whether our Nation will lead or whether it will follow in world affairs; whether it will be strong or whether it will be weak will depend upon the education of our young people.

The Federal-aid-to-education bill is the unfinished business of the Congress. I wish to pay tribute to the loyalty of the hundreds of thousands of school teachers in the Nation who, at great personal sacrifice to themselves, remained at their important work during the war years.

Through their National Education Association, and through the affiliated State and local organizations, they have time and again over the past decade patiently and emphatically brought to the attention of Congress the compelling need for Federal assistance to provide adequate educational opportunity for America's children. I want to express my appreciation particularly to Dr. Willard E. Givens and Dr. R. B. Marston, of the National Education Association, for the invaluable help and support which they have given our efforts in behalf of the bill.

I have worked for more than a decade for Federal aid to education. I shall continue to press for Federal aid to education. When the new Congress convenes, it seems to me its first days should be distinguished by enactment of legislation as embodied in Senate bill 181. There is no reason for delay with further hearings. We have the facts. We know the need. We must have action.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I wish to comment briefly on the bill which has been discussed by the senior Senator from Alabama. He and I worked out the revision of the bill, or the substitute bill, which now is pending in the Senate.

I regret very much that we were compelled to decide that it was not advisable to press for passage of the bill at this time. We reached that decision because it was felt to be impossible to get the bill through the House during the present session, and we did not wish to take the time to have the Senate debate and pass the bill when it did not seem possible to have it enacted into law. We do propose to have the Congress consider it again, and it will be necessary to bring it before the Senate at a future time.

In general, Mr. President, I have felt very strongly that education is a State and local responsibility. I think that unless we can maintain the independence and the power of the State and local governments to control the education of their own children the Federal Government should take no action. It was because of my fear of that that at times I have opposed the different proposals, and I am still opposed to certain proposals for Federal aid to education.

However, the difficulty which has developed during the study we have given to the problem is that in many States, although they are devoting to education as much as or more than the average amount, on the basis of their wealth and the current income spent on education by the entire Nation, nevertheless they are unable to provide an adequate basic minimum education for their children, due to the great difference in income as between the States. The figures in that connection have often been questioned, but today we have fairly reliable figures regarding the income of the people of each State. Those figures show that the incomes of the States vary greatly; they run all the way from a point between $1,100 and $1,200 per capita in Connecticut down to a figure somewhere between $300 and $400 per capita in Mississippi.

So I feel that the Federal Government does have a responsibility to see that every child in the United States has at least a minimum education in order that each child may have the opportunity which lies at the very base of the whole system of our Republic.

Therefore, Mr. President, it has seemed to me that the Federal Government has to help, and that we have to impose safeguards to see that such help does not result in Federal interference with the operation and administration of the schools of the various localities and States. I think the Federal Government's obligation is merely a supplementary one. The bill we have presented makes it a supplementary obligation.

I may say that the States which have had such low incomes that they have been unable to provide an adequate education for all their children are in even a worse situation today, because the inflation of wages and prices is such that it is necessary to increase the salaries of teachers if the teachers are to receive anything like equal treatment with other salaried persons; and even then probably they will not quite receive equal treatment. The difficulty of providing more revenue from State incomes is great. It requires a considerable number of years to adjust the tax system so as to produce a greater income, even though the dollar income of the people of the State has increased.

The plan presented in this bill is based on the theory that before any State shall receive Federal aid to education it must put up 2.2 percent of the income of its people for education. That is somewhat more than the present average throughout the United States. We give the States 3 or 4 years to reach that result; but they must reach it if they are to receive any Federal aid. Then we require that when that Federal aid is received the Federal and State funds shall be so distributed that every school district in the State, which means every child in the State, must receive at least $40 a child a year for the education which is provided. That is a very low standard. Of course, that is the minimum which a State may provide. The various States have considerable differences in respect to the cost of education in rural districts and the cost of education in the larger cities. I do not think we can stop with that minimum.

The facts show that there are districts in which only $12 a year is spent on the education of each child. Certainly we can make a substantial improvement in that situation with this bill at a cost to the Federal Government of approximately $225,000,000 a year. Once we reach that standard it may be that the poorer States will have been brought up in income, or it may be that the Federal Government will have to go further in order to raise the standard still higher. But as a start we think this bill will make possible, for the next 3 or 4 years, a substantial improvement in education in the States which do not have sufficient money to provide a minimum basic education for all the children in the State.

I do not need to expain the rather complicated formula, but the theory of it is what I have advocated, and the bill works out the theory successfully. I may say that the formula does not give any aid to a good many of the States of the Union. Inasmuch as many of the States are able to provide a good basic education for their children, if we were to undertake to provide aid to all the States, it would mean that we would be paying to States which already are providing a good basic education for their childen money which is needed by States which are not able to provide such an education at the present time.

There has been considerable discussion as to whether the money should go to public or private schools. Regardless of the theory as to whether the money should go to private schools, it is perfectly clear to me that we cannot give aid to private schools in a State the policy of which is to deny such aid. If a State has a system of education based on public schools, then it seems to me that if the Federal Government nevertheless provided aid to private schools in that State, it would be doing what I think it never should do, namely, interfering with the administration and policy of education of the State and its local governments. That is what the Federal Government would do if it undertook to bypass the States, and to give aid to private schools in States which prohibit the giving of such aid. The only basis on which I would be willing to provide Federal aid is one under which the administration and the determination of policy as to education would be made by the States and by the local governments which actually provide the education. If we ever reach a point where the Federal Government begins to interfere with policy as to education, then I think we shall be on very dangerous ground, for then the Federal Government will gradually begin to dictate as to the kind of education which will be received by children and will control their education in very much the same way as is done in totalitarian states.

So, Mr. President, I merely wish to say that I am very sorry indeed that we are not able to secure the passage of this bill this year; but I feel confident that when the Senate reconvenes, and comes to consider the matter, it will find that the bill prescribes a sound policy of Federal aid to education, and avoids the dangers relative to such a system.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I wish to add just a word to the remarks of the distinguished Senator from Alabama [Mr. HILL] and the distinguished Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT] in reference to Senate bill 181. As a member of the Committee on Education and Labor, and having listened to the testimony given in regard to this educational bill, and being greatly impressed with the issues involved in this matter, I should like to pay a tribute to the Senator from Alabama and the Senator from Ohio for what I consider to be the outstanding work they did in reviewing the testimony, considering the various drafts of the bill which were presented, and giving us a bill which focuses on the fundamental principle involved in the educational situation, namely, equality of opportunity in education for every child born in the United States, no matter how poor his circumstances may be.

Mr. President, I come from a State which is classified under the formula as one of the wealthiest States of the Union. I am glad to speak for this bill because my State will not gain one cent from the formula. I am proud to say that I have conferred with the Governor and with the Commissioner of Education of my State, and they are wholehearted in their support of a program of this kind. The program will take a part of the income of my State, but the money will be spent in areas where the people are not so privileged as those in my State, and the use of the money will contribute toward bringing up the level of education of those persons who are less fortunate than are the people of my State. I am proud to say that the authorities of New Jersey are glad to have me cooperate in having enacted into law a bill of this kind, and have approved my support of it. Nothing is more important in the postwar period than making it possible for all children in this country irrespective of their economic condition to have equal opportunities in obtaining educations. That is the greatest social service which can be rendered for the future generations. I am glad to identify myself with this important bill introduced by my colleagues.

ACCEPTANCE OF COMPULSORY JURISDICTION OF INTERNATIONAL COURT OF JUSTICE

The Senate resumed the consideration of the resolution (S. Res. 196) proposing acceptance by the United States Government of compulsory jurisdiction of International Court of Justice.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I desire to revert for a moment to Senate Resolution 196. In a few minutes I shall probably be called from the floor for a conference committee, so I wonder whether we can conclude the matter upon which we have found rather complete agreement.

I offer to the pending joint resolution the amendment which I send to the desk and ask to have stated. It has the approval, as I understand, of the Senator from Utah and also the Senator from Oregon. I may add that I consulted the Senator from Vermont, for whose opinion I have great regard, and he also agrees.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 2, after line 14, it is proposed to insert the following:

c. Disputes arising under a multilateral treaty, unless (1) all parties to the treaty affected by the decision are also parties to the case before the Court, or (2) the United States specially agrees to jurisdiction.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I think the amendment was fully explained before.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Michigan.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, I am one of the original sponsors of Senate Resolution 196, and shall vote for it.

The International Court of Justice is dealt with in chapter 14 of the United Nations Agreement, articles 92 to 96, inclusive, which are as follows:

CHAPTER XIV. THE INTERNATIONAL COURT OF JUSTICE

ARTICLE 92

The International Court of Justice shall be the principal judicial organ of the United Nations. It shall function in accordance with the annexed Statute, which is based upon the Statute of the Permanent Court of International Justice and forms an integral part of the present Charter.

ARTICLE 93

1. All Members of the United Nations are ipso facto parties to the Statute of the International Court of Justice.

2. A state which is not a Member of the United Nations may become a party to the Statute of the International Court of Justice on conditions to be determined in each case by the General Assembly upon the recommendation of the Security Council.

ARTICLE 94

1. Each Member of the United Nations undertakes to comply with the decision of the International Court of Justice in any case to which it is a party.

2. If any party to a case fails to perform the obligations incumbent upon it under a judgment rendered by the Court, the other party may have recourse to the Security Council, which may, if it deems necessary, make recommendations or decide upon measures to be taken to give effect to the judgment.

ARTICLE 95

Nothing in the present Charter shall prevent Members of the United Nations from entrusting the solution of their differences to other tribunals by virtue of agreements already in existence or which may be concluded in the future.

ARTICLE 96

1. The General Assembly or the Security Council may request the International Court of Justice to give an advisory opinion on any legal question.

2. Other organs of the United Nations and specialized agencies, which may at any time be so authorized by the General Assembly, may also request advisory opinions of the Court on legal questions arising within the scope of their activities.

It will be noted that the resolution refers to a declaration under paragraph 2 of article 36 of the Statute of the International Court of Justice. That article reads as follows:

ARTICLE 36

1. The jurisdiction of the Court comprises all cases which the parties refer to it and all matters specially provided for in the Charter of the United Nations or in treaties and conventions in force.

2. The states parties to the present Statute may at any time declare that they recognize as compulsory ipso facto and without special agreement, in relation to any other state accepting the same obligation, the jurisdiction of the Court in all legal disputes concerning:

a. the interpretation of a treaty;

b. any question of international law;

c. the existence of any fact which, if established, would constitute a breach of an international obligation;

d. the nature or extent of the reparation to be made for the breach of an international obligation.

3. The declarations referred to above may be made unconditionally or on condition of reciprocity on the part of several or certain states, or for a certain time.

4. Such declarations shall be deposited with the Secretary-General of the United Nations, who shall transmit copies thereof to the parties to the statute and to the registrar of the Court.

5. Declarations made under article 36 of the Statute of the Permanent Court of International Justice and which are still in force shall be deemed, as between the parties to the present Statute, to be acceptances of the compulsory jurisdiction of the International Court of Justice for the period which they still have to run and in accordance with their terms.

6. In the event of a dispute as to whether the Court has jurisdiction, the matter shall be settled by the decision of the Court.

Under the resolution the United States would accept jurisdiction of the International Court of Justice in all legal disputes hereinafter raised concerning (a) interpretation of treaties, (b) any question of international law, (c) existence of any act which, if established, would constitute a breach of international obligation, (d) the nature or extent of the reparations to be made for the breach of an international obligation.

However, the resolution contains a provision reading as follows:

Provided, That such declaration shall not apply to—

(a) disputes the solution of which the parties shall entrust to other tribunals by virtue of agreements already in existence or which may be concluded in the future; or

(b) disputes with regard to matters which are essentially within the domestic jurisdiction of the United States: Provided further, That such declaration shall remain in force for a period of 5 years and thereafter until the expiration of 6 months after notice may be given to terminate the declaration.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for an inquiry?

Mr. WILEY. I should like first to conclude with my statement regarding legal disputes.

(c) Disputes arising under a multilateral treaty unless (1) all parties to a treaty affected by the decision are also parties to the case before the Court, or (2) the United States specially agrees to such jurisdiction.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield in order that I may make an inquiry?

Mr. WILEY. I yield.

Mr. DONNELL. The Senator has read provisions which are incorporated in the resolution. Among those provisions are: "(b) disputes with regard to matters which are essentially within the domestic jurisdiction of the United States."

Mr. President, I wish to say that I approach a consideration of this resolution as one who has long been in favor of the United States adhering to a Permanent Court of International Justice. I was in favor of such in respect to the former court. But I should like to ask the opinion of the Senator from Wisconsin on this point: Suppose that the court itself should take the position that a specific question presented to it was not a matter essentially within the domestic jurisdiction of the United States. Is it the judgment of the Senator that the provision in article 36 of the statute of the Court which reads: "In the event of a dispute as to whether the Court has jurisdiction, the matter shall be settled by the decision of the Court", can be interpreted as meaning that the Court could decide whether or not the specific matter in controversy were one which was essentially within the domestic jurisdiction of the United States, or whether the United States itself could undertake to make that determination?

Before the Senator answers the question I wish to say that I believe the same thought was in the mind of the distinguished Senator from Georgia yesterday when he said:

> Whether this International Court itself, by the acceptance of compulsory jurisdiction upon our part, acquires the function of determining whether a question is essentially a domestic question or whether the Court itself has the final right to say whether any juridical matter submitted to it involves a domestic question.

My question is this: If a particular question comes before the Court and the United States says that the matter involved is essentially within the domestic jurisdiction of the United States, does the Court of International Justice, under the provision which I have read, namely, "In the event of a dispute as to whether the Court has jurisdiction, the matter shall be settled by the decision of the Court", have the right to determine whether the matter is or is not one essentially within the domestic jurisdiction of the United States?

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, I read section 7 of article II setting forth the principles of the United Nations Charter:

> Nothing contained in the present Charter shall authorize the United Nations to intervene in matters which are essentially within the domestic jurisdiction of any state or shall require the members to submit such matters to settlement under the present Charter, but this principle shall not prejudice the application of enforcement measures under chapter VII.

In answering the specific question of the Senator from Missouri, it seems to me that if a nation, for example, the United States Government, takes the position that the controverted matter is one which comes within its domestic jurisdiction, the decision of the United States, I assume, unless there was some clear ground for a difference of opinion with regard to the matter, would be final. In other words, the question would not be submitted.

But there is the other part of the provision which states, "or shall require the members to submit such matters to settlement under the present charter," and so forth.

I assume that if it were a close question we could take the position that the basic law of the Charter stated that we were not compelled to submit the controversy.

If the Senator has any specific hypothetical case in mind perhaps it might illuminate the situation.

Mr. DONNELL. I have no specific illustration to give. I recall the distinguished Senator from Utah making a statement with reference to immigration being essentially within the domestic jurisdiction of the United States. I believe that I quote him correctly. Let us take, for example, the question of immigration. Another nation, taking the position before the Court of International Justice that immigration was not a matter essentially within the domestic jurisdiction of the United States, might institute a proceeding before the Court of International Justice for an adjudication of the question. Suppose that the United States pleads that the matter is one essentially within the domestic jurisdiction of the United States. Suppose further that the Court undertakes to decide the question, and decides that the matter is not one coming essentially within the domestic jurisdiction of the United States. Is the decision of the Court final and determinating, or does the language in Senate Resolution 196 entitle the United States to withdraw from a submission of the question to the Court, even though it was haled into Court by the other nation?

Mr. WILEY. My personal opinion is that if the question was a close one and the United States pleaded that the Court did not have jurisdiction, and the Court held that it did have jurisdiction, the question would be presented of whether or not we would abide by the judicial process. History demonstrates that other nations have violated agreements but the United States has a reputation for keeping them. The question is one for the United States in the first instance to decide. If the Court held against the United States, then the question of what power the Court had to enforce its judgment would arise.

Mr. DONNELL. May I ask the Senator, with his permission, one further question? Has the Committee on Foreign Relations of the Senate, so far as the Senator knows, arrived at a conclusion on the hypothetical question which I submitted, namely, to make it concrete, if the United States says that a matter presented, upon which it has been haled into Court by another nation, is a matter essentially within the domestic jurisdiction of the United States, does the Court itself, under the power I have read—"in the event of a dispute as to whether the Court has jurisdiction the matter shall be settled by the decision of the Court"—have the power to determine for itself whether it possesses jurisdiction, and overrule the contention of the United States, if the Court deems that it is not a matter essentially within the domestic jurisdiction of the United States? Has the Committee on Foreign Relations arrived at a conclusion on that specific question, so far as the Senator knows?

Mr. WILEY. In answer to the Senator's question, I must say that at no time when I was present was that specific matter discussed. But I was not a member of the subcommittee. Perhaps we can gain light from the Senator who was chairman, my colleague, the senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE].

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Mr. President, I think there is only one way to answer a question of that kind, that so far as jurisdiction is concerned, that question is left with the Court itself to decide. Let us remember that the Court is going to develop a rule of law. It has no rule of law as to purely domestic questions, because international law does not deal with domestic questions. in the first place, the Senator would have to discover some subject which is a domestic question, upon which international law has already passed.

Let us for a moment or two put ourselves into the frame of mind in which the founding fathers found themselves when Marshall started handing down constitutional law in America, and came to the place where he was able to say, "Gentlemen, it is a constitution we are interpreting"—whatever his words were, he meant something like that—"a constitution which is set up to last forever."

International law, in the sense of being built upon the decisions rendered by the International Court, is something which is in the process of growth. The Court must act in conformity with the fundamental rules of the United Nations. It must act in conformity with international law which has already become universally recognized as law between nations, and it must act in conformity with its own rule, which is developing.

I suggested the question of immigration, because that is one we are most fearful of, as well as the question of tariffs, to show that so far as international law is concerned, on those subjects there is a void, and that no one of those questions could possibly come before the International Court until the law had developed to such a degree that it would be before the Court.

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, something bearing directly on the point has been called to my attention by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN]. I read first from chapter 1 of the Charter of the United Nations, "Purposes and principles."

ARTICLE I

The purposes of the United Nations are:

1. To maintain international peace and security—

With the emphasis on "international."

> To maintain international peace and security, and to that end: To take effective collective measures for the prevention and removal of threats to the peace, and for the suppression of acts of aggression or other breaches of the peace, and to bring about by peaceful means, and in conformity with the principles of justice and international law, adjustment or settlement of international disputes or situations which might lead to a breach of the peace.

Now we come to the question of whether or not it is a domestic matter. The whole purpose of the Charter and the creation of the United Nations is to bring into being an organization which will handle international disputes, but I am trying to conceive of a situation in which before this Court there might be a mixed matter, and we might, in substance, say to the Court, "This is none of your business," and the Court might say, "We think there is a possible international issue."

In that case, it would seem to me, it would be up to our representatives to present the matter clearly, in a judicial, legal manner, and if the Court were to hold that there was a mixed problem, we would abide by the decision. That is the very purpose of the Court.

Mr. DONNELL. The Senator thinks, then, that the decision of the Court as to whether the matter is essentially within the domestic jurisdiction of the United States would be determinative and conclusive as a decision?

Mr. WILEY. Outside the question of national authority, if the decision of the Court were to outrage common sense and public opinion, and it were shown that the Court was packed, no; but if it appeared that the better way was to follow the judicial attitude, I would say yes. The very purpose is to submit to this higher body problems involving international disputes.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Mr. President, will the Senator from Wisconsin yield?

Mr. WILEY. I yield.

Mr. MILLIKIN. I thought the distinguished Senator from Missouri propounded a very pertinent question when he asked what was the opinion of the Committee on Foreign Relations. It seems to me we can get some enlightenment on that from the report.

Let me invite the Senator's attention to page 5 of the report of the committee, starting with the third full paragraph. I quote:

The fifth limitation is that the proposed declaration shall not apply to matters which are essentially within the domestic jurisdiction of the United States. A provision similar in principle is found in article 2, paragraph 7, of the Charter, providing that nothing in the Charter shall authorize the organization to intervene in essentially domestic matters. The committee feels that the principle is also implicit in the nature of international law, which, under article 38, paragraph 1, of the statute, it is the duty of the Court to apply. International law is, by definition, the body of rights and duties governing states in their relations with each other and does not, therefore, concern itself with matters of domestic jurisdiction. The question of what is properly a matter of international law is, in case of dispute, appropriate for decision by the Court itself, since if it were left to the decision of each individual state, it would be possible to withhold any case from adjudication on the plea that it is a matter of domestic jurisdiction. It is plainly the intention of the statute that such questions should be decided by the Court, since article 36, paragraph 6, provides:

"In the event of a dispute as to whether the Court has jurisdiction, the matter shall be settled by the decision of the Court."

It was also brought to the attention of the subcommittee that a number of states, in filing declarations under the Statute of the Permanent Court of International Justice, interposed reservations similar to that of the resolution under consideration, but in no case did they reserve to themselves the right of decision. The committee therefore decided that a reservation of the right of decision as to what are matters essentially within domestic jurisdiction would tend to defeat the purposes which it is hoped to achieve by means of the proposed declaration as well as the purpose of article 36, paragraphs 2 and 6, of the Statute of the Court.

I have no comment to make at this time other than that is, I believe, an answer to the question asked by the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. DONNELL. I very much appreciate the courtesy of the Senator in calling that to my attention.

Mr. WILEY. I call attention particularly to the fact that the forepart of that which has been read has special application to subdivision "b" of the resolution, "any question of international law."

In the years before we became involved in the Second World War we had a great many disputes on the floor of the Senate as to what was international law, and sometime in the future, perhaps, someone will write up that history and show how great minds in the Senate differed as to what international law was. Therefore, I take it to be all important that this court be given the authority to determine any and all questions of international law.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, if the Senator will suffer an interruption.

Mr. WILEY. I yield.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I should like first of all to say that, in my humble judgment, the legislative history of this resolution, including the report of the august Committee on Foreign Relations, of which I have the honor to be a member, has no bearing so far as the International Court is concerned. We may make legislative history to some extent concerning domestic legislation, but obviously we must say what we mean in this resolution, because certainly the Court will be under no obligation to look back to the legislative history which we make here today.

I think it is clear from the report and from the resolution that it is the intent of the resolution to leave with the International Court the determination, if any dispute shall arise, as to what is and what is not a domestic question. I think the Senate should face that issue clearly.

If the Senator will pardon me further, this does not affect only international law, but if Senators will turn to article 38 of the Court statute, they will find the Court's function is to decide in accordance with international law such disputes as are submitted to it, shall apply—

(a) international conventions, whether general or particular, establishing rules expressly recognized by the contesting states;

(b) international custom, as evidence of a general practice accepted as law;

(c) the general principles of law recognized by civilized nations;

(d) subject to the provisions of article 59, judicial decisions and the teachings of the most highly qualified publicists of the various nations, as subsidiary means for the determination of rules of law.

It seems to me clear, Mr. President, that we are not only in this resolution submitting the principles of international law so far as domestic problems or questions are concerned, but under this article we are submitting the writings of recognized publicists on the subject. Therefore it seems to me that we should recognize that there is validity in Mr. Dulles' memorandum when he calls attention to the fact that—

Article 38 of the statute goes on to recognize as international law not merely international conventions, but international custom, general principles of law recognized by civilized nations, and the teachings of the most highly qualified publicists of the various nations. If the applicable rule of international law is so uncertain that resort must be had to alleged custom, teachings, etc., then the Court can scarcely avoid indulging in a large amount of judicial legislation or political expediency.

If the Senator will pardon me, and I have already trespassed too long on his time, I want to read Mr. Dulles' comment on this very question of domestic jurisdiction. He said:

Compulsory jurisdiction of the Court should not extend to matters which are essentially within the domestic jurisdiction of the United States.

His comment on that statement is:

Article 2 (7) of the Charter, among other things provides, in substance, that nothing contained in the present Charter shall require the members to submit to settlement under the Charter matters which are essentially within the domestic jurisdiction of any state. The declaration under the statute should preserve, and not seem to waive, that limitation.

My view is that the language now contained in this resolution does waive that question, and leaves it within the power and jurisdiction of the International Court of Justice to determine, whenever any question affecting the domestic policy of the United States comes before it, whether that is a domestic or an international problem, and that the United States cannot in any way, shape, or manner, after adopting this resolution, refuse to abide by the decision of the Court on an issue of that kind.

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, I wish to discuss article 38, which my associate has commented on, which provides that:

The Court, whose function is to decide in accordance with international law such disputes as are submitted to it, shall apply—

(a) international conventions;

(b) international custom;

(c) the general provisions of law recognized by civilized nations;

(d) subject to the provisions of article 59, judicial decisions and the teachings of the most highly qualified publicists of the various nations.

And so forth. In relation to that I wish to say that we all know that before and during the Second World War to a large extent the validity of international law simply disappeared. Nations have breached their treaties and their conventions, and thus they broke the silver link which was supposed to bind them together. Article 38 provides the source material for the International Court of Justice in its almost semilegislative authority, like our own Supreme Court under John Marshall; it will be a great opportunity for the Court, headed, as has been suggested by the distinguished Senator from Utah, by great international lawyers, to write a new international law, and that is the only way we can proceed. In view of the fact that the resolution contains an escape clause after 5 years—the testing period—and in view of the fact that the men who will sit on this Court will be dedicated to the greatest job in the world, I believe they will know what a domestic issue is, as well as we do, and why should we interject into this discussion the fear that men who have dedicated their lives to the study and practice of international law should falter in doing their duty on this high plane? But I say again that if any court to whose jurisdiction we submit should in this period of the world's history be negligent of its obligations, or criminal, if you please, or politically corrupt, then I say the public conscience of the world would sustain any government that would say "No."

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WILEY. I yield.

Mr. DONNELL. I am not sure that I understood the Senator's exact comment, but I understood him to say that he did not understand why the question of domestic jurisdiction was injected into this debate.

Mr. WILEY. I believe the Senator misunderstood me.

Mr. DONNELL. Perhaps I misunderstood the Senator. But as I see it, it is of very great importance that we all understand exactly the effect of the provision that our declaration shall not apply to disputes with regard to matters which are essentially within the domestic jurisdiction of the United States. It seems to me to be of highest importance that we should know, if we agree to this resolution, whether or not the provision in article 36 of the statute, that in the event of dispute as to whether the Court has jurisdiction, the matter shall be settled by decision of the Court, gives the ultimate power in the Court to make that decision. I think it is a very proper subject of inquiry. The inquiry was not made at all from any critical standpoint, but in order to elicit what are the Senator's views and, if possible, the views of the Foreign Relations Committee, as to what is the ultimate power of the Court in the event the point is made by the United States that a particular matter is essentially within its domestic jurisdiction. In other words, I think it is important that if we vote for the resolution we should not go home without understanding it clearly to be the fact that there is still vested in the Court the power to determine whether it has jurisdiction of a particular matter which is essentially within the domestic jurisdiction of the United States.

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, I probably used the word "fear" in the wrong sense. What I meant was that I thought that the average individual as well as the learned international jurist has a pretty good idea what a domestic issue is, and there was no reason to fear that the World Court jurists would be swayed from the path of duty. But I am going to yield to my distinguished associate to my left, the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN], who has informed me that under those circumstances the Court has no power. So I want him to explain the situation.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, this Court does not have a sheriff and does not have power of execution. The only power this Court has is moral power, and if the situation should arise to which the distinguished Senator from Wisconsin has alluded, that a state, a party, has been ruled against when it raised the question of jurisdiction, and that state has held up its head and said, "Notwithstanding the decision we know from our history, and our experience, and existing conditions that this is a question which is purely domestic, and that we will disregard the decision of the Court," that state has the final decision instead of the Court. The Court cannot execute its judgment. What that state has done by the convention is to say that it will agree to the decisions of the Court that are within the four corners of the convention, and one of those corners is that the Court has no jurisdiction of domestic affairs, and that a state may stand up in all honor and say, "We will not carry out the decision of the Court on a matter that is purely domestic."

Then what happens? Suppose the vis-a-vis state comes in under the Charter, article 94, and appeals to the Security Council and says, "The United States is standing back and resisting the decision of the Court," which is in our favor, on the ground that the Court has no jurisdiction because the matter is domestic?" Article 94 does not give to the United Nations any power whatever over a matter that is domestic. It provides this:

1. Each member of the United Nations undertakes to comply with the decision of the International Court of Justice in any case to which it is a party.

2. If any party to a case—

And this is what I am trying to illustrate—

If any party to a case fails to perform the obligations incumbent upon it under a judgment rendered by the Court, the other party may have recourse to the Security Council, which may, if it deems necessary, make recommendations or decide upon measures to be taken to give effect to the judgment.

Here is the limitation upon the United Nations under that article. It cannot act except in a case where there is a threat to international security and peace. That is the preliminary foundation for the action by the Security Council. If the position of the United States is not one which threatens international security and peace, the United States is the last arbiter, and has the final word upon a matter which is domestic. Such a position is entirely moral and entirely legalistic, and is within the four corners of our great engagement.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WILEY. For what purpose?

Mr. CONNALLY. I wish to submit an amendment along this line.

Mr. WILEY. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I have more or less enjoyed the remarks of the Senator from Vermont to the effect that in case the Court should decide that a question which the United States considered to be domestic was nondomestic and international we would be justified, as I agree, in defying the Court. I submit an amendment to settle this question.

On page 2, line 14, after the name "United States", I propose to insert "as determined by the United States."

Mr. AUSTIN. That is the amendment which I offered in the subcommittee, and which was not accepted.

Mr. CONNALLY. I am now submitting it in the full committee. The language would then read:

b. disputes with regard to matters which are essentially within the domestic jurisdiction of the United States, as determined by the United States.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, will the Senator from Wisconsin yield so that I may address an inquiry to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. WILEY. I yield.

Mr. DONNELL. Does the Senator from Texas disagree with the observation of the Committee on Foreign Relations which was read by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. MILLIKIN], namely:

The committee therefore decided that a reservation of the right of decision as to what are matters essentially within domestic jurisdiction would tend to defeat the purposes which it is hoped to achieve by means of the proposed declaration as well as the purpose of article 36, paragraphs 2 and 6, of the statute of the Court.

Mr. CONNALLY. I do not agree with that. I think we have the right to adhere 100 percent, if we choose, and we have the right not to adhere at all. Therefore, as between those two extremes, we have a perfect right to adopt an amendment of this character, because the Charter provides that domestic questions may not be considered. The Charter provides that the United Nations have no jurisdiction over domestic questions. But under the Charter the Court might decide that immigration was an international question. It might decide that tariffs were an international question. It might decide that the navigation of the Panama Canal was an international question. It is pretty close to it. It might decide that the regulation of tolls through the Canal was an international question. So I submit the amendment and ask that it be printed and lie on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment submitted by the Senator from Texas will lie on the table and be printed.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I hope Senators will not press for a vote on the resolution tonight, because a group of us are engaged in a conference between the House and Senate on the social-security bill, and we must attend that conference.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator from Texas that I have no intention of pressing for a vote tonight. I shall be very happy to cooperate with the Senator in any reasonable way.

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, the United States has been precipitated to the top in world affairs. We took a leading part in framing the Charter of the United Nations. The part of the Charter which I have already quoted contemplates that nations will submit their legal differences which fall within the categories enumerated to a court constituted and created under the United Nations Charter.

I fully agree that we must meet this challenge head on. I do not believe that the adoption by the Senate of this resolution will ipso facto clear away our international troubles. However, I believe that it is a step in the right direction, and one that we cannot afford to hesitate about taking.

I am not unmindful of the fact that just 18 short years ago this month Secretary Kellogg went to a peace conference in Paris, and there the Kellogg-

Briand Pact outlawing war was signed. I remember how the news of the signing of that pact was received, how all America felt that a new day had dawned. Yes; we were sure that a new era of peace on earth and good will had come.

But at the very time Kellogg and others dreamed about outlawing war, the war lords of Japan were conspiring to seize Manchuria and a part of China. We know that at that time certain European nations did not mean to outlaw war. A few years later Mussolini, bit by the lust for empire, was riding for conquest. Spain was the proving ground for Hitler, Mussolini, and Stalin. And we thought only of the Kellogg-Briand Pact outlawing war.

Then Hitler appeared on the scene in his push for power and dominion. He bluffed the French and went into the Rhineland and the Ruhr. Then he moved into Austria, Czechoslovakia, and Poland, and the Second World War was on.

Why do I bring up these well-known facts of yesterday? We cannot pin all our hopes on the instrumentalities which man creates—agreements between men or agreements between nations. Peace conferences are a good thing, and our prayers are with the men in Paris who are striving to arrive at some basis for international harmony. But it is of importance that we do not fall asleep again as we did after the First World War, when we thought that by an agreement of men, the Kellogg-Briand Pact, we had outlawed war. Public opinion must not again be lulled to sleep. That is why I bring up this question now. There is danger that the people will be led to believe that we can outlaw the lust for power and gain.

We can be grateful that the United States has an ocean between it and Europe; but with the advent of the airplane and other modern inventions we all know that Europe is in our back yard. In the days of Washington and Hamilton the quarrels of Europe seemed a long way off, but now they are just around the corner. It has been said that the world is one world. That is true geographically. But Mr. Ziff, of Washington, says that it is two worlds. He speaks of the ideology for which our country stands, and the ideology for which Russia stands. We all know that ideologically and spiritually we are many worlds. The races of men, like the various levels of rock in a quarry, are stratified. Our problem is to fit these many worlds into the jigsaw puzzle of humanity and seek to find a way for humanity to evolve without the need of the volcanic eruptions of war. That is our problem. We live not in one world, but in many worlds. There are many races and many concepts.

When Hitler went into the Rhineland he did not expect France to stop him, because she was war weary. Hitler was right, but that was the beginning of the Second World War. In 1931, when Japan went into Manchuria—and I might say parenthetically that at that time the Nine Power Pact was in effect—she was sure that the powers were so tired and fearful that they would do nothing. Japan was right; but that was the beginning of the Second World War in the East.

It is now evident to every student of history that there is much similarity between what occurred after the First World War and what is now occurring. It will be remembered that after the First World War Russia was ignored in the Treaty of Versailles. She was out of the picture. The other nations took the pelf—all except America. Russia means not to be ignored now. History pretty much repeats itself. The similarity between 1919 and 1946 is that ours is the only nation that has demonstrated that it does not believe in the slogan of the centuries, "To the victor belong the spoils." Can we persuade the other nations to see the vitality of the opposite of that slogan? That is a part of the process in which we are now engaged. We are attempting to establish a court with international powers, to put into practice the principles of justice.

In recent days the news has come of the bumper crops which are being harvested throughout our Nation. We are reminded that behind everything there are hidden laws. Year after year, throughout the recent war years, the harvests of America have been at the maximum. During all this time we have been giving of our blood and our finances and we have been feeding and clothing the hungry of the earth. Now our larder has been replenished. It has truly been said that it is more blessed to give than to receive.

Now, we are called upon by this resolution to give again—not to give wheat or fats—but to give assurance to the rest of the world that we—the most powerful nation on earth—are ready to agree to settle our international differences by means of an International Court of Justice. I agree with the distinguished Senator from Oregon [Mr. MORSE] that this action on the part of the Senate of the United States will bring reassurance to the thinking people of the earth. They are upset and war weary and tired, and now we shall hold a candle aloft, and they will see that the United States again means what it says.

I repeat that neither the resolution which we are about to adopt nor the treaties to be written at Paris will, ipso facto, cleanse the nations of the earth of their lust for power and dominion. We shall at least hope and pray that this resolution and the treaties will constitute a road block to man's inhumanity to man.

When Stalin started to take over Iran, basing his actions undoubtedly upon the thought that "the Allies are too tired to bother," just as Hitler thought France was too tired, after the last World War, Stalin thought that history would repeat itself. But this time the United Nations went into action, and public opinion was mobilized, and American diplomacy did good work. Then Stalin started for the Dardanelles, again thinking that the other nations were worn out and tired. But an American battleship appeared at the scene, and the United Nations diplomacy again went into action.

So, Mr. President, I do not expect that this great institution, of which we are now to become a member, namely, the International Court of Justice, which is a part of the United Nations, will be perfect. Of course, it will not be perfect because it will be operated by human beings. But, with many of my colleagues, I sense that this is an important step, and that the responsibility upon us who live in America is more than the responsibility which rests upon the people of the other nations of the world because we are the chosen people, if you please, who are selected to lead the way. With all our resources, our manpower, our material wealth, and our spiritual intuition, we have been set apart for a great task at this important hour, and I feel sure that we will not fail to respond to the call.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President——

Mr. WILEY. I am glad to yield.

Mr. MORSE. I wish to say to the Senator from Wisconsin that I appreciate very much the support he has given to this resolution. As the author of the resolution, I wish to say that his support means a great deal to me, and I am greatly indebted to him for it.

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. President——

Mr. MILLIKIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WILEY. I yield.

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. President, who has the floor?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thought that the Senator from Wisconsin had yielded the floor.

Mr. WILEY. No; I yielded for a comment.

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. President, it seems to me that Senators on the other side of the aisle are farming out the floor. All afternoon I have been waiting for an opportunity to make a few remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator who has the floor can yield only for questions.

Mr. WILEY. I yield for a question.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Mr. President, will the Senator from Wisconsin yield to me, to permit me to ask a question of the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS]?

Mr. WILEY. I am very happy to do so.

Mr. MILLIKIN. I should like to ask the Senator from Utah whether he considers the amendment offered by the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] to be consistent with the provisions of the Charter.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Mr. President, the amendment offered by the Senator from Texas will have to be changed. As it is worded, I think it would be inconsistent with our resolution. I have already stated that for us to adopt an amendment which would be inconsistent with the Charter would cause us to go back upon our pledged word—and that would be a very bad thing to do, of course.

The question of the jurisdiction of the Court in the case of domestic issues is very important and very broad. If the amendment of the Senator from Texas should it be adopted, would go so far as to cause a political institution such as the Government of the United States or the Congress of the United States, if it spoke on this question, to make a political decision in regard to what is purely a legal matter, then of course the amendment would be out of harmony with the fundamental principles relating to the Court and the fundamental principles relating to the way in which any court operates. For example, if the Court does not have jurisdiction as to questions which are purely legal, then of course the Court is not a court of justice, but it becomes a political institution—the very thing we are opposed to having it be.

As to the amendment itself, I think it can be worded in such a way that it will not do violence either to the United Nations Charter or to what is the grandest principle of the United States Government, namely, that a political institution does not interfere with a legal prerogative.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Mr. President, will the Senator from Wisconsin yield to permit me to ask another question of the Senator from Utah?

Mr. WILEY. I yield.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Assuming that the purport of the amendment is that we ourselves will be the exclusive judge as to whether a question is a domestic question, and assuming that the amendment would give us that right, would the Senator say the amendment is a valid one?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. As I understand what the Senator means, it seems to me that if the amendment went that far, it would be a contradiction of compulsory jurisdiction itself.

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, I yield the floor.

A NEW WORLD CALENDAR

Mr. MURRAY. As in legislative session, I desire to discuss for a few minutes a resolution which I am about to submit.

On Monday, July 15, of this year, there was introduced in the House of Representatives by Representative KARL E. MUNDT, of South Dakota, a bill of far-reaching importance. I refer to House bill 7041, the enactment of which would adopt, as of January 1, 1950, a new calendar as the timetable of the Nation.

This proposed calendar is referred to as the World Calendar. It has been the subject of widespread study by learned men and women the world over, and has received the endorsement of many groups and organizations interested in the proposal. Following the introduction of that bill in the House, Representative JOHN KEE, of West Virginia, delivered an address on the floor of the House explaining the bill and the purposes to be accomplished through its enactment. The remarks of Representative KEE will be found on page 9158 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of July 16, 1946.

In view of the extended explanation made at that time by him, I shall not take the time of the Senate to explain the bill in detail. I believe the proposal is worthy of early study by this branch of the Congress; and, therefore, on behalf of myself and the junior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH], I am submitting a resolution in the Senate in order to bring the matter to the immediate attention of the Members of this body. Of course, this measure cannot be considered during this session. It is to be hoped, however, that during the recess the Members of the Senate will study the proposal and will be prepared to consider it during the next session of Congress.

Briefly, Mr. President, the new calendar would divide the year into four equal quarters. The revised calendar is balanced in structure, perpetual in form, and harmonious in arrangement. If Senators will read the full explanation which appears in connection with the introduction of this proposed legislation in the House of Representatives, I believe they will find all the details there.

The Newspaper Advertising Executives Association, Inc., and many other important organizations recommend the enactment of this legislation. These organizations constitute important aggregations of business, scientific, educational, labor, fraternal, and private institutions and bodies. In this connection I call attention to the fact that the Newspaper Advertising Executives Association has adopted a resolution asking for favorable action on the proposed world calendar. I ask that its resolution may be printed at this point in the RECORD, in connection with my remarks.

There being no objection, the resolution was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Whereas the Newspaper Advertising Executives Association, Inc., having given serious consideration and study to the proposal that the present calendar (known as the Gregorian calendar) should be revised and simplified more adequately to fit the needs of the world, and having reached the conclusion that the world calendar proposed by the World Calendar Association, of New York City, provides the desired changes:

Whereas the present calendar is undesirable because:

1. It changes every year.

2. Each year begins and ends on a different day of the week.

3. Quarters begin and end on different days of the week and are of unequal length, i. e., 90, 91, 92, 92 days.

4. Months are of unequal length, varying from 24 to 27 weekdays.

5. Days and dates never agree from year to year, causing holidays, anniversaries, birthdays, etc., to wander ceaselessly.

6. The calendar's irregularities preclude comparison of monthly, quarterly, half-yearly and annual periods, and necessitate annual changes in plans, schedules, and operations, and holidays are erratic.

7. Unbalanced in structure, unstable in form, and irregular in arrangement, the present calendar is obsolete.

Whereas the perpetual world calendar is desirable because:

1. It is the same every year in perpetuity.

2. Each year begins Sunday, January 1. Business activities begin with Monday, January 2. The year ends on an extra day, the year-end world holiday.

3. Quarters are equal in length and correspond approximately to the seasons, each quarter begins on Sunday, ends on Saturday, and contains 3 months; 13 weeks; 91 days.

4. Every month has 26 weekdays, plus Sundays.

5. Holidays, anniversaries, birthdays, etc., always fall on the same day and date every year.

6. This revised calendar facilitates accurate comparative statistics and tables, computations of interest, budgets, pay rolls, costs, and the like; it simplifies operating schedules, and timetables, and is a great convenience in the observance of holidays.

7. Balanced in structure, stable in form, and regular in arrangement—the World Calendar is a modern calendar to meet modern needs.

Now, therefore, it is

Resolved, That the World Calendar be adopted by the United States of America.

A copy of this resolution shall be sent to the World Calendar Association, 630 Fifth Avenue, New York City, N. Y.

A copy of this resolution shall be transmitted to the members of the Newspaper Advertising Executives Association, Inc., to the American Newspaper Publishers Association and other NAEA affiliated associations, and the American Standards Association.

A copy of this resolution shall be transmitted to the President of the United States, to members of the Cabinet, and to Members of the House of Representatives and the Senate in the Congress at Washington, D. C., with the request that they take appropriate and necessary steps for the adoption of the World Calendar by the United States of America, and further that they instruct the representatives of the United States to present it to the United Nations Organization for adoption by the member states thereof.

The undersigned president and secretary of the Newspaper Advertising Executives Association, Inc., do hereby certify that the above resolution of endorsement was duly adopted at a regular meeting held on the 16th day of January 1946 in the city of Chicago, State of Illinois.

ROBERT K. DREW,
President.
IRVING C. BUNTMAN,
Secretary-Treasurer.

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. President, similar resolutions have been adopted by other important organizations. They constitute a formidable aggregation of business, scientific, educational, labor, fraternal, and private institutions and bodies. Therefore I also ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD, as part of my remarks, a collection of comments from the press, from various organizations, and from various persons, dealing with this subject.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Columbia (S. C.) State of November 21, 1945]

REFORMING THE CALENDAR

The World Calendar Association is still engaged in its campaign for the adoption of a standardized calendar. In its current quarterly Journal of Calendar Reform it quotes President Truman as saying it is essential for the world's greatest republic to live with the world as a whole. It remarks: "Surely in this new age of law, reason, and science there is great need for a time instrument such as the World Calendar which in arrangement exemplifies law, order, equality, and cooperation."

It is pointed out that the present calendar is always different from year to year. Each month, quarter, and year begins and ends on a different weekday. The months and quarters have varying numbers of days. Its irregularity precludes comparison of periods and necessitates continued changes in routine matters. It is unbalanced in structure, unstable in form, and irregular in arrangement.

The proposed calendar would have four equal quarters, each with one 31-day month followed by two 30-day months. The day after December 30 would be an annual year-end holiday, and the day after June 30 would be a leap-year world holiday every 4 years, dividing the year into two equal parts. The dates of the month would fall on the same weekday every year. Each quarter and each year would begin on Sunday and end on Saturday, and each month would have 26 weekdays.

The Journal contains articles by an engineer, a newspaper advertising executive, a hotel executive, a Kiwanis businessman, and an educator who endorse the idea and point out how it would facilitate their various lines of endeavor. It can readily be seen that a standard calendar would materially facilitate the keeping of books and pay rolls.

[From the Labor Union of Dayton (Ohio), September 28, 1945]

PRACTICAL CALENDAR, POSTWAR SUGGESTION

The World Calendar has been known in America since November 1930. Miss Elisabeth Achelis, president of the World Calendar Association, and guiding spirit of the World Calendar, modestly proclaims that it is not her plan, but the combined effort of many minds.

During 1931 through 1937 she was at the League of Nations and visited many countries where calendrical committees were established. The Council of the League of Nations submitted a draft to the various governments, resulting in the approval of the World Calendar by 14 nations.

With the adoption of the World Calendar for the greater good of mankind, Americans and the world will find the changes are few, the benefits many.

Sunday will continue to be the first day of the week. Days and dates always agree and holidays have their regular days and dates from year to year.

Among endorsers of the World Calendar are the New York State Chamber of Commerce; Pittsburgh, St. Louis, Galveston, and the Chicago Association; American Association for the Advancement of Science and American Institute of Accountants. Commodore Hellweg, United States Navy (retired), Superintendent of the United States Naval Observatory, is a strong advocate, as are Dr. James Truslow Adams, Carrie Chapman Catt, Bishop Manning, Dr. Robert Millikan, Gerald Swope, Dr. Mary E. Woolley, among others.

With conquest of distance and many other changes incident to this day and age, this practical and ideal calendar—would assist flyers in the air, sailors sailing the seven seas, travelers far and near, and civilians at home in their many and varied activities.

BRAVE NEW CALENDAR FOR THE BRAVE NEW WORLD

You'll be hearing a lot of talk about throwing away the old calendar from now on, but don't dismiss it as the routine discarding of the 1945 one. It will likely be a discussion of the virtues of a new world calendar over the Gregorian, now in use. The World Calendar Association has in mind a streamlined year, divided into quarters, so that the first month of each quarter has 31 days, followed by 2 months of 30 days each. One popular feature of the world calendar is the proposed world holiday, to come yearly between the last day of December and the 1st of January. Another bonus world holiday will fall due every fourth year, to be celebrated between June 30 and July 1.

DEMOCRACY

(By Elisabeth Achelis)

"Democracy does not only mean a political system with which we are prone to associate it. It is not the possession alone of political Democratic and Republican Parties, nor Communistic, Labor, Socialist, National, or Isolationist Parties. The system of democracy means any system of just and equal dealing, of nondiscrimination, of like consideration and opportunity to all its component parts or members. It follows the principle of practical equality and considers impartially the rights of the different and separate factors of which the whole system is composed. It is a harmonious grouping, or a commonwealth of separate entities or units, wherein cooperation is the rule, and to which the various parts or groups willingly agree. Each group functions separately in its particular sphere of activity with complete freedom, recognizing at the same time its full responsibility. Each is keenly conscious that it belongs and is vital to the smooth operation of the whole system; it knows, too, that if it fails all fail.

"The system of democracy, whether in government, finance, business, education, social or human relations, although extolled in words, is quite often weak in application, because there is no clear plan to follow. A blueprint is missing. Thus the real meaning, purpose, and scope of democracy is oftimes an abstract idealistic theory to the majority, and because of this it is prevented from being practiced * * * Man yearns for a plan so that he can chart his way unfalteringly along the democratic road. * * *

"For the world to obtain such a plan for its guidepost it is ovious that the system of democracy be more clearly understood in a concrete and simple way, so that every nation and every person can understand, use, and live by it. Democracy is actually a world system, and the world, as the late Wendell Willkie has declared, is one world."

The above article is the first part of a contribution by the distinguished president of the international association advocating the reform of the Gregorian calendar.

The Ethiopians, with their months of equal length of 30 days with five more days at the end of the year, making a total of 365, are probably the only nation in the world following a rational system in reckoning time.

According to the late James Henry Breasted, the first-known solar calendar began in Egypt in the year 4236 before the beginning of the Christian era.

Life in Egypt was dependent upon the annual flood of the Nile, and so at an early date it was necessary for the Egyptian to learn to expect it.

The flooding of the Nile is dependent, to a great extent, if not wholly, on the rainy season in Ethiopia

The Egyptian astronomers learned to correlate the rising of the Nile with the helical rising of the dog star Sirius, that is, the appearance of the star on the eastern horizon at the time of sunrise.

As a result, the Egyptians adopted a solar calendar in which the helical rising of Sirius was the first day of the year.

The solar year is not exactly 365 days long, and so this calendar got further and further out of step with the seasons with the passage of time. By studying the situation, the Egyptian astronomers came to the conclusion that the solar year was 365¼ days long.

The astronomers attempted to introduce necessary reforms to bring the calendar up to date.

In a book published by the Bureau of Publications of Teachers College, Columbia University, Dr. Bhola D. Panth, says: "The authoritarian priests (of Egypt) were powerfully established and, considering the calendar as their peculiarly private preserve, resented any trespass."

The struggle between astronomers and priests went on until 238 B. C., when, by the Decree of Canopus, of King Ptolemy III, a day was added to every fourth year, thus originating our leap year.

While advocating a reformed calendar, Elisabeth Achelis aims also at promoting world friendship. She would have the last day of the year, the Year-End Day, or, as some wish to call it, the New Year's Eve, as a World Holiday.

She says: "The new World Holiday is a world-assembly-day to unite nations in world observance * * * becomes a healing day for nations of the world—a day of amity, of understanding and of good will; a truly democratic day of equal recognition and consideration, of sharing and uniting in the large conclave of the brotherhood of man."

It appears to us that the close of this dire and tragic World War would be the appropriate moment to propagate this idea.

A world-wide holiday would be only a symbol of the unity of mankind, and would leave unsolved many problems as to the couse of war, but symbols or symbolic mass manifestations have their place in the progress of mankind.

[From This Month, Ogdensburg, N. Y., January 1946]

DO WE WANT A NEW CALENDAR?

(By Mark Osborne)

Objections to the present Gregorian calendar are many and world-wide. Days and dates, from year to year, never agree. Weeks stagger crazily in and out of each month. Months are counted on the fingers and knuckles of one's hand, or by reciting a childish rhyme, in order to tell the long from the short. Quarterly periods vary between 90 and 92 days. Half-years are also unequal—from 181 to 184 days. The month of February is ridiculously and disproportionately short. Each successive new year begins on a different day of the week. All holidays change annually with silly irregularity. Nothing ever stays put.

The propcsed World Calendar of 12 familiar months is a worthy successor. It equalizes quarter- and half-years, and makes the calendar perpetual, every year the same.

In government and business there is a definite need for uniformity. Accountants and statisticians who must check comparisons of unequal months, quarters, and fiscal periods have long awaited and wanted a calendar reform. Important dates—for tax payments, inventories, and financial statements—that fall on a Sunday, always present a problem. Pay rolls, budgets, schedules, production—all irregular now because of an antiquated and wasteful calendar—can be stabilized.

[From the Mail Bag, Journal of Calendar Reform, Fourth Quarter, 1946]

The World Calendar impresses me as embodying many desirable features, and as being preferable to any other modification so far proposed. From the standpoint of school schedules, court sessions, meeting dates, etc., the perpetual feature of the World Calendar would of itself make its adoption very worth while, while the equal-quarters feature makes the calendar particularly well adapted to use in comparative statistics. Our present calendar is particularly troublesome and nonuniform in these two respects. (Lyman J. Briggs, formerly Director, National Bureau of Standards, Washington, D. C.)

You are performing an invaluable social service in promoting the World Calendar. Great reforms such as you are advocating come slowly. The World Calendar must be talked about, discussed, publicized, and advocated for a long time before it is accepted. But its world-wide adoption is inevitable if the world moves on toward civilization. Please be assured of my hearty support and appreciation of the effective as well as important work in which you are engaged. (J. P. Warbasse, president emeritus, the Cooperative League of the U. S. A.)

It seems to me the idea has much worth, and personally I am in accord with such a program. Trivial objections should not operate to prevent adoption of the World Calendar. (R. B. Battey, general freight traffic manager, Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad, Chicago, Ill.)

The writer has been interested in the World Calendar for several years and on two occasions contributed articles about it to Business Digest. (R. J. Bayer, editor, Traffic World, Chicago, Ill.)

This is a subject with which I am reasonably familiar and which I approve. There is every good argument in favor of the adoption of a standard regular calendar. (Ward Melville, president, Melville Shoe Corp., New York City.)

Having read in America Clinica the reference to the World Calendar, I decided to write you asking that you have the kindness to send me two World Calendars, one for myself and the other for my brother, who is studying commerce and is also interested. Since it interested me, I believe it will interest my companions and fellow college students. (Miguel A. Gutierrez C., Guatemala, Guatemala.)

Our life today has become so complex that simplification is urgently called for, and your proposed World Calendar would certainly be a great step in the right direction. (Dr. Albert L. Schreiner, New York City.)

It seems to me, now that the United Nations Organization is assured, that the adoption of the World Calendar only awaits the coming into operation of that Organization. (William E. Moore, Alexandria, Va.)

I have continued my interest in the new calendar ever since I became aware of the marvelous work being done in that direction, because to me it is the only possibility of cementing the diversified and divided factions of the world into an organized, smoothly running peace effort. Indeed, one cannot be a member of any progressive movement without realizing the need for a new simplicity in the system of recording the parts of a year. I shall be anticipating receiving your catalog, which I find so very challenging and inspirational. (Lois Bancroft, Bennington College, Bennington, Vt.)

CASTLE CLINTON NATIONAL MONUMENT, NEW YORK CITY—MOTION TO RECONSIDER WITHDRAWN

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, as in legislative session, I ask unanimous consent to be permitted to make a brief statement on a matter which was before the Senate yesterday.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. WAGNER. On yesterday, Mr. President, I entered a motion to reconsider the vote by which House bill 5125, to establish the Castle Clinton National Monument in the city of New York, and for other purposes, was passed.

Castle Clinton was built in 1808 as a fortification at the Battery in New York Harbor. It was later ceded to the city and renamed Castle Garden, when it became a center of public and social life. In the period 1855 to 1890 the structure served as the principal immigration station for the United States, receiving more than two-thirds of the immigrants arriving in that period. More recently the structure housed New York City's Aquarium, until 1941.

From various civic leaders and outstanding citizens of New York City, for all of whom I have the highest regard, I have received conflicting advices concerning the historic value of the proposed monument, its relation to the plans for the Brooklyn-Battery Tunnel passing nearby, and the costs of the project as a whole. I have communicated with the mayor of the city, Hon. William O'Dwyer, to ascertain the official position of the city administration. The mayor has advised me that he concurs in the plan, provided it is understood that a truly national monument is contemplated and that the Federal Government, through the National Park Service, will assume the burden of administration and development.

If approved by the President, the bill gives appropriate assurance on these points. The bill specifically provides that when title to such property is vested in the United States it shall constitute the Castle Clinton National Monument. It further provides that the administration, protection, and development of the Castle Clinton National Monument shall be under the supervision of the Secretary of the Interior, acting through the National Park Service. In any event, the legislation is merely permissive. It simply authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to accept title to the site, in behalf of the United States, from the city of New York.

Under all the circumstances, I ask that the motion to reconsider be withdrawn.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion to reconsider is withdrawn.

ACCEPTANCE OF COMPULSORY JURISDICTION OF INTERNATIONAL COURT OF JUSTICE

The Senate resumed the consideration of the resolution (S. Res. 196) proposing acceptance by the United States Government of compulsory jurisdiction of the International Court of Justice.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, I should like to have the attention of the distinguished Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS] for a moment in connection with Senate Resolution 196.

I specifically suggest to the consideration of the Senator two slight amendments on page 2 of the resolution. I move to amend, in line 7, after the word "declaration", by striking out "should" and inserting "shall"; and on the same page, in line 15, after the word "declaration", to strike out "should" and insert "shall."

The reason I offer the amendment is this: The declaration is one which, if the Senate advises and consents, will be deposited by the President of the United States. The proviso that such declaration should not apply to disputes of one kind and another, and should remain in force for a period of 5 years, and so forth, might be interpreted as being merely advisory. The language should be made clearly mandatory, and I hope that the amendment which I offered will be acceptable to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Mr. President, I see no objection to changing the language of the resolution so as to read in the way the Senator from Missouri has suggested. But I think this should be said: We are giving advice to the President of the United States. He, of course, can do what he wants to do with that advice. There is no law of which I know, nor any directive of which I know, which can be written in "shall" language instead of "should" language when it applies to the President of the United States, thereby taking away whatever discretion he may have in the matter. I believe that his discretion is inherent in his office. There are many treaties which the President of the United States has submitted to the Senate. The Senate in turn has given its advice and consent to those treaties, but the President never allowed them to be put into force. A treaty becomes a law whenever the President, by the use of his discretion, has acted accordingly. Therefore the resolution is, if I may use a word that perhaps I should not use, a little more polite because, by using the word "should," we do not hint that we are taking away Presidential discretion. I am sure the President of the United States will not be averse to having the language changed so that the word "shall" instead of the word "should" appears in the resolution at the places which the Senator from Missouri has designated. I see no reason for resisting the suggested change, Mr. President, and I shall be glad to accept the amendment of the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, I may say that I had previously spoken to the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MORSE] with respect to this matter, and he likewise indicated his consent to the change being made.

I fully appreciate the fact, as the Senator from Utah has said, that there is no legal obligation upon the President to consummate a treaty after it has once been approved by the Senate. But as I see the situation it is quite different from the question of whether we have the right to consent in a particular form of language. In other words, as I see it, we are both advising and consenting. I think we may limit our consent by providing that certain requirements must be inserted and that we will not give our consent other than under those conditions.

I do not believe the President of the United States has the right to conclude a treaty without the advice and consent of the Senate. While he is not obligated to consummate a treaty after it has once been approved by the Senate, I do believe that the Senate has a right, in giving its consent, to attach mandatory conditions thereto.

I appreciate the consideration of the Senator from Utah in giving his consent to my amendment, which I understand he has done.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Yes; I accept the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri is agreed to.

NOMINATION REPORTED AND CONFIRMED

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. President, from the Committee on the Judiciary, I ask unanimous consent to report the nomination of Everett M. Grantham, of New Mexico, to be United States attorney for the district of New Mexico, and I ask for the present consideration of the nomination.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The nomination will be stated.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Everett M. Grantham, of New Mexico, to be United States attorney for the State of New Mexico, vice himself.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, is the nomination one which has been placed on the calendar?

Mr. MURDOCK. No; it is not on the calendar.

Mr. WHERRY. Is the Senator reporting it for the calendar?

Mr. MURDOCK. I have reported it from the Committee on the Judiciary and I should like to have the Senate consider it at this time.

Mr. WHERRY. Will the Senator explain the nomination?

Mr. MURDOCK. The nomination is of Everett M. Grantham of New Mexico to be United States attorney for the district of New Mexico. Both Senators from New Mexico have approved the nomination. A large majority of the committee is in favor of the nomination.

Mr. CHAVEZ. The nomination represents a reappointment. Mr. Grantham, the young man who has been appointed, was United States attorney for the district of New Mexico and left the service to enter the armed forces. He has since returned and this nomination is a reappointment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. TUNNELL in the chair) laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations, which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(For nominations this day received, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

The following favorable reports of nominations were submitted:

By Mr. CONNALLY, from the Committee on Foreign Relations:

William L. Clayton, of Texas, now an Assistant Secretary of State, to be Under Secretary of State for Economic Affairs;

John G. Erhardt, of New York, now a Foreign Service officer of class 1, to be Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary to Austria; and

The following-named persons to be Foreign Service officers, unclassified, vice consuls of career, and secretaries in the Diplomatic Service:

Donald P. Downs, of Nevada;

Lawrence J. Legere, Jr., of Massachusetts; and

Daniel W. Montenegro, of New York.

Executive H (79th Cong., 2d sess.) a protocol dated at Rome March 30, 1946, terminating the Rome convention of June 7, 1905, and transferring the functions and assets of the International Institute of Agriculture to the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations.

By Mr. WALSH, from the Committee on Naval Affairs:

Sundry officers for appointment as commissioned warrant officers in the United States Marine Corps.

By Mr. GEORGE, from the Committee on Finance:

Sundry candidates for appointments in the Regular Corps of the United States Public Health Service.

By Mr. MURRAY, from the Committee on Education and Labor:

Keen Johnson, of Kentucky, to be Under Secretary of Labor, United States Department of Labor; and Ewan Clague, of Pennsylvania, to be Commissioner of Labor Statistics, United States Department of Labor.

By Mr. THOMAS of Utah, from the Committee on Military Affairs:

Maj. Gen. Robert Sprague Beightler, National Guard of the United States, to be brigadier general in the Regular Army of the United States.

CONSIDERATION OF NOMINATIONS

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that consideration of the pending resolution be temporarily laid aside and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the nominations on the calendar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

NAVY DEPARTMENT

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Rear Adm. Herbert G. Hopwood, United States Navy, to be Director of Budget and Reports in the Department of the Navy, with the rank of rear admiral, for a term of 3 years.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Walter A. Buck to be Paymaster General and Chief of the Bureau of Supplies and Accounts in the Department of the Navy, with the rank of rear admiral, for a term of 4 years.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

NATIONAL HOUSING AGENCY—NOMINATION PASSED OVER

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Dillon S. Myer, of Ohio, to be Administrator of the United States Housing Authority in the National Housing Agency.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, I ask that the nomination go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The nomination will be passed over.

UNITED STATES PUBLIC HEALTH SERVICE

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations in the United States Public Health Service.

Mr. HILL. I ask unanimous consent that the nominations in the Public Health Service be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nominations in the Public Health Service are confirmed en bloc.

UNITED STATES COAST GUARD

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations in the United States Coast Guard.

Mr. HILL. I ask that the nominations in the United States Coast Guard be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nominations in the United States Coast Guard are confirmed en bloc.

THE NAVY

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Jonas H. Ingram to be admiral in the Navy, for temporary service, to rank from November 15, 1944.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

Mr. HILL. I ask unanimous consent that the President be notified of all nominations confirmed today.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the President will be notified forthwith.

That concludes the calendar.

ACCEPTANCE OF COMPULSORY JURISDICTION OF INTERNATIONAL COURT OF JUSTICE

The Senate resumed the consideration of the resolution (S. Res. 196) proposing acceptance of compulsory jurisdiction of International Court of Justice by United States Government.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, the Senator from California has very kindly said he would yield to me to make a statement on the very important issue raised with reference to Resolution 196, respecting the jurisdiction or lack of jurisdiction of the International Court over domestic issues.

I think the senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] is quite right in pointing out exactly what it is we propose to do under Senate Resolution 196. It should be understood that we propose to give to the World Court jurisdiction to determine whether or not an issue before the Court that has arisen in a dispute between two nations is an issue which involves international law, or whether it involves a domestic question.

Certainly, as the author of the resolution, I want to have it clearly understood that giving the Court jurisdiction to determine whether an issue is an international-law issue is exactly what the resolution proposes to do. I think that is the next step the United States should take in the development of an international order which would include within it a court for the settlement by judicial processes of disputes arising between nations over matters of international law as set forth in the terms of my resolution.

The senior Senator from Wisconsin particularly called attention to article 38 of the Court Statute, as follows:

1. The Court, whose function is to decide in accordance with international law such disputes as are submitted to it, shall apply—

a. international conventions, whether general or particular, establishing rules expressly recognized by the contesting states;

b. international custom, as evidence of a general practice accepted as law;

c. the general principles of law recognized by civilized nations;

d. subject to the provisions of article 59, judicial decisions and the teachings of the most highly qualified publicists of the various nations, as subsidiary means for the determination of rules of law.

By calling attention to article 38 of the Court Statute I judged that the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] meant to point out the broad basis available to the Court in carrying out its functions of applying principles of international law to disputes arising between nations. I am glad he called attention to article 38 because it is a very important article in giving vitality to the functions of the Court.

However, Mr. President, that section is nothing new. The same provisions existed under the Charter of the old World Court, and the same functions existed under the old World Court. They are simply transposed by the San Francisco Charter to the new World Court as set forth in article 38 of the new Court Charter. It has been under such provisions as are contained in section 38 that we have been able to develop interpretations of existing international law and that the old World Court was able to establish precedents of international law.

So I would stress and underline this premise, that, after all, when we examine the United Nations Charter, already adopted by this Senate, we need to recognize that the World Court is limited in its functioning by existing international law.

Certainly if we are going to have disputes that arise under international law determined by judicial processes, then the power to determine whether or not a dispute involves an international law question or issue ought to be left to the World Court we set up under the Charter. We should be willing to allow that Court like any court to determine if it has jurisdiction over the issues presented to it in a given case.

To me, of course, it seems perfectly obvious that we cannot make very much progress in an attempt to settle disputes arising under international law through the medium of a world court unless we are willing to give to the Court jurisdiction to determine whether or not the issue which has arisen is an issue under international law.

I think the Senator from Vermont made a substantial contribution to the discussion when he called attention to article 94 of the Charter, which reads as follows:

1. Each member of the United Nations undertakes to comply with the decision of the International Court of Justice in any case to which it is a party.

2. If any party to a case fails to perform the obligations incumbent upon it under a judgment rendered by the Court, the other party may have recourse to the Security Council, which may, if it deems necessary, make recommendations or decide upon measures to be taken to give effect to the judgment.

That is, if we grant obligatory jurisdiction to the World Court as proposed in Resolution 196, we are under a clear moral obligation to comply with the decision of the Court on any jurisdiction issue in any case to which we are a party, subject, however, to our rights under article 94 of the United Nations Charter. However, as the Senator from Vermont pointed out, article 94 gives to the Security Council a final check upon any jurisdiction decision of the World Court. I wish to point out that the Security Council's check upon the Court as provided in article 94 is a very effective protection for this country and all other nations against the fears which are being expressed on the floor of the Senate to the effect that the resolution in its present form might enable the World Court to transgress upon our rights insofar as domestic issues are concerned.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. MORSE. If the Senator will permit me to finish, I should like to complete my statement in the interest of continuity, then I shall be very happy to have the Senator's question.

I wish to repeat, Mr. President, that it is my belief and understanding and interpretation that article 94 in effect makes the Security Council a check upon the Court itself. I think that is very fortunate. Hence I would point out that article 94 provides a very important protection to us as a member of the United Nations, as well as to the other nations who fall under the jurisdiction of the Court.

One more point on the remarks made by the Senator from Vermont. He pointed out that, after all, in this whole field of international law any attempt to get nations to agree to settle their disputes by judicial processes rather than by resort to force must rest and necessarily so on moral suasion. Let us be frank about it, Mr. President; the enforcing sanction, after all, is the good faith of the nations concerned. We cannot write, through the medium of this resolution, or through the medium of the various sections of the United Nations, or through any other scratches of the pen that the mind of man might fashion, any system which seeks to regulate, by way of peaceful procedures, relations between nations, that will not in the last analysis, be completely dependent upon the good faith of the nations concerned. I think that on this issue as on so many that arise in the field of international relations we have only fear to fear, as the late President Roosevelt was wont to put it. Why should we fear the Court's jurisdiction? I submit that its jurisdiction is clearly limited by the United Nations Charter. There is no realism in the argument that it might attempt to encroach upon our domestic jurisdiction. If that time ever comes, and I have no fear that it ever will come because there is no reality in the suggestion, but I say, if it should happen, then article 94 would protect us. Further all other nations would be bound to join us in objecting to such an act by the Court because on that issue their interest would be as great as ours. We recognized in the debates on the San Francisco Charter that moral suasion is the ultimate sanction of this new world order and of all its machinery. That, in one way or another, was said over and over again during those debates. It was stressed and I stress it again that the ultimate sanction determining whether or not the nations of the world are going to develop a system of permanent peace, and free future generations from the curse of war, is going to be dependent upon the good faith of all the nations which participate in whatever machinery or organization we set up.

So the plea I have been making throughout the course of the discussion over the World Court, and one which I am sure my colleagues will be bored to hear me repeat again and again, is the plea that we must take advantage of every opportunity to strengthen good faith relationships between nations. I think the resolution we are offering here goes a long way down the road toward the development of amicable relations between and among nations. It helps demonstrate to the world that we really believe in international justice through law.

Now, if I may trespass just a minute or two more, I wish to close my remarks tonight, in view of the fact that the Senator from Texas has offered an amendment to the resolution, by commenting upon the amendment offered by the Senator from Texas. Although I am presently opposed to the amendment I am satisfied that if the amendment should be adopted, still great progress would have been made by the United States in accepting the resolution with the amendment in it. I say that because I think it is perfectly clear that, even with the amendment in the Resolution 196, we have at least obligated ourselves to the compulsory jurisdiction of the Court over all issues clearly within the realm of a dispute involving international law.

However, I hope the amendment will not be adopted because I do not think it is necessary in order to protect our interests and I think there may be a possibility of it being a source of some confusion and misunderstanding.

Some weeks ago when I was thinking about this problem I was inclined to accept such an amendment. I reasoned that if such an amendment were adopted, as far as this Nation is concerned it would not have any effect on the practical relationships between the United States and other nations. I felt that way because I think it is perfectly clear that we as a nation are not going to hide behind any alibi or any excuse for not accepting the jurisdiction of the World Court in a dispute arising between us and another nation, when the issue is one that involves questions of international law.

Obviously we would lose our world standing at once if we welshed on our agreement to be bound by the World Court's jurisdiction over international law issues under the pretense that in a given case domestic issues were involved, when in fact international law issues were involved. In other words, I think it is clear that should we insist upon the type of condition as set forth in the amendment proposed by the Senator from Texas we would still be bound to accept the compulsory jurisdiction of the World Court under my resolution in every case that involved an issue of international law.

In the words of the resolution itself, we would be bound to accept the jurisdiction of the International Court of Justice "in all legal disputes hereafter arising concerning"—

(a) the interpretation of a treaty;

(b) any question of international law;

(c) the existence of any fact which, if established, would constitute a breach of an international obligation;

(d) the nature or extent of the reparation to be made for the breach of an international obligation.

Provided, That such declaration shall not apply to—

(a) disputes the solution of which the parties shall entrust to other tribunals by virtue of agreements already in existence or which may be concluded in the future; or

(b) disputes with regard to matters which are essentially within the domestic jurisdiction of the United States; or

(c) disputes arising under a multilateral treaty, unless (1) all parties to the treaty affected by the decision are also parties to the case before the Court, or (2) the United States specially agrees to jurisdiction.

As a practical matter, it is simply beyond the realm of imagination that the United States, once it accepted the compulsory jurisdiction of the World Court, would refuse to submit an international law dispute to the World Court for a decision, on the pretense that it involved a domestic issue rather than an international law issue. However I fear that the amendment may at least cause some nations to form the false opinion that we are not ready at this time to go all the way in supporting the World Court. I think we ought to go all the way. I think we ought to be willing to say here and now, "We are willing to let a court of international justice determine the question of jurisdiction in a given dispute," because there are plenty of safeguards within the Charter of the United Nations, including the Charter of the Court that protect our rights insofar as jurisdiction over domestic issues is concerned.

Mr. President, I should like to make these additional observations as to why I at least at the present time am inclined to oppose the adoption of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Texas. It would—we cannot get away from it, for that is its purpose—it would reserve to us in the first instance to pass judgment on the question of the Court's jurisdiction in a given dispute. It would do that also for other nations, because, do not forget Mr. President, that if we put such a provision as proposed by the amendment by way of a condition, it follows that whether or not any other nation insists on the same condition in its declaration, our condition would be available to any other nation with whom we might have a dispute. In other words, if we were in a dispute with nation X and it had not filed a declaration containing a condition similar to that proposed by the Senator from Texas, it nevertheless could say, "We, however, raise a question as to whether this particular dispute involves a domestic issue because the declaration of the United States filed with the United Nations reserves such a right."

It is interesting to note, Mr. President, that if we do make that a condition of our acceptance of the obligatory jurisdiction of the World Court, we will be the first nation to impose such a condition. I repeat that, Mr. President, because here again I think we need to recognize the effect upon public opinion in other nations if we make such a reservation. I think it is very interesting to note that of all the declarations that have been filed over the years, not a single nation has seen fit to include within its declaration such a condition as the Senator from Texas proposes in his amendment. I think it not only is unnecessary but I think it will be subject to misunderstanding and will subject us to the criticism that we are not cooperating wholeheartedly in effectuating and implementing the San Francisco Charter. I do not think the amendment can be reconsidered with the fine spirit and intent of the resolution passed at the last plenary session of the San Francisco Conference which read as follows:

That as soon as possible they make declarations recognizing the obligatory jurisdiction of the International Court of Justice according to the provisions of article 36 of the statute.

So, Mr. President, I think we would be establishing an unfortunate precedent if we adopted the amendment. I say that because while the declarations for the number of states under the corresponding article of the old statute contained reservations of the character contained in the present resolution as I have submitted it, none of them contained reservations or conditions such as proposed by the Senator from Texas. And may I say I am using the word "reservations" in a very qualified sense, keeping in mind the comment made earlier this afternoon by the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS] in regard to the implications inherent and pregnant in the word "reservations."

Further I would emphasize again, Mr. President, that by means of such a limitation, the United States would also be barring itself from proceeding against other states in cases which they deemed within their domestic jurisdiction. This is because of the reciprocal nature of the jurisdiction granted under this resolution, to which I have already alluded.

Mr. President, I want to close my comments by citing the views on this issue of a couple of outstanding authorities in the field of international law. I quote first from Professor Hudson, who in his book "The Permanent Court of International Justice," at page 471, has this to say about the suggestion that a reservation on domestic issues be made a condition to accepting obligatory jurisdiction of the court:

It is difficult to see what is accomplished by this exclusion; if a dispute relates to questions which fall within exclusively national jurisdiction, it does not fall within one of the classes enumerated in paragraph 2 of Article 36.

This same view was pointed out in the report of the committee, and it was clearly pointed out by the senior Senator from Utah this afternoon in answering questions which were put to him on the matter.

Professor Hudson goes on to say—and do not forget that Professor Hudson is not only a distinguished professor of Harvard University and a member of the old World Court for a great many years, but also is one of the best recognized authorities in the field of international law.

No State can set itself up as the final judge of what international law leaves to its own jurisdiction.

I think that is the vital point. I think it will be a mistake for us to do that, even though in practice we would accept the compulsory jurisdiction of the World Court in any dispute which we recognize involved a point of international law. I admit that if we agreed to go that far we would be making a substantial step forward, but we would fall far short of what the other nations which have accepted the obligatory jurisdiction of the World Court have done by way of strengthening the court as an instrument for advancing international justice through law. But why not go all the way? Why not recognize what Professor Hudson points out here, that after all we cannot very well set ourselves up as the final judge of the jurisdiction of the Court to which we submit or agree to submit disputes for final determination and still be said to favor the settlement of international disputes by judicial processes.

Professor Lauterpacht says in his book, The Function of Law in the International Community:

In addition to these respective clauses there are reservations concerning matters of domestic jurisdiction * * * which, while of a specific character are so elastic and comprehensive as to reduce considerably the scope of the obligation of judicial settlement.

I might expand the thought of Professor Hudson, Mr. President, by pointing out that under article 36, paragraph 6 of the statute, the court is given power to determine disputes as to its jurisdiction. The whole concept of compulsory jurisdiction is that the court is an organ of the United Nations, capable of assuming these responsibilities. We would be demonstrating, in my judgment, a lack of faith in the court if we withheld the right to make this decision in one of the most important categories of jurisdictional problems.

I feel, for these reasons, that the suggested alteration proposed by the Senator from Texas would be a very serious limitation of the jurisdiction intended to be conferred by this resolution, and contemplated in article 36, paragraph 2 of the statute. I consider that it would be a bad precedent, since this country would be accepting the jurisdiction of the Court to a lesser degree than other states have generally been willing to accept in the past, and than states are expected to accept in the future. As is known, the President and the Secretary of State are both in favor of principles of the resolution as it appears before the Senate at the present time, and I cannot help feeling that the proposed change would cause this contemplated action to fall short of the results which we hope to achieve. Mr. President, I want to say now as I said at the beginning, that I am going to keep my mind open however on the subject. I shall listen with great attention to the case which the Senator from Texas makes for his amendment tomorrow. If I can be assured that at least the major objective that we are trying to accomplish by this resolution will be attained, I will at least give careful consideration to his amendment. But as of the present moment, for the reasons that I have attempted to set forth in the past few minutes, I find myself not in favor of the amendment and hence I hope it will be defeated.

Again I wish to thank the Senator from California.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, will the Senator from California yield for a brief statement?

Mr. KNOWLAND. If it does not entail debate, yes.

Mr. DONNELL. I have been under the impression that the two amendments suggested by myself, namely, to strike out on page 2, at line 7, the word "should" and substitute the word "shall," and to strike out in line 15 the word "should" and substitute the word "shall" had been formally accepted. I understand that those amendments have not been acted upon. Now, in order that we may have official action upon them, I ask of the distinguished Senator from Oregon [Mr. MORSE], the author of the resolution, and the distinguished Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS], who reported the resolution with an amendment, if each of them does hereby accept and, perfect, I should say, the resolution by the changes which I mentioned in said lines 7 and 15?

Mr. MORSE. I am very happy to accept the amendments.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. I accept them. I suggest that we may take action on them immediately.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendments of the Senator from Missouri to the resolution.

The amendments were agreed to.

ITALY'S ASPIRATIONS AND NEEDS—STATEMENT BY ANTHONY M. TAPOGNA

Mr. McMAHON. Mr. President, will the Senator from California yield to me?

Mr. KNOWLAND. I shall be glad to yield to the Senator from Connecticut, I wish to cooperate with the Members of the Senate, but I must decline to yield further.

Mr. McMAHON. I thank the Senator.

Mr. President, as in legislative session, I am offering for printing in the body of the RECORD immediately following my remarks, a statement by Anthony M. Tapogna, president of the Grand Lodge of Connecticut, Order of Sons of Italy in America, on his conception of Italy's aspirations and needs.

I have carefully read Mr. Tapogna's statement, and I am of the opinion that he speaks clearly, concisely, and moderately of the aims of all of those who wish to see fairness and equity done to the people of Italy. We must not forget, Mr. President, that Italy fought with us for over 2 years, and she sacrificed over 250,000 lives and untold millions of her treasure in that fight.

To treat her as a conquered nation, to strip her and punish her is to overlook the fact that the people of Italy threw off the shackles of Benito Mussolini and joined with us in a fight against the enemy. I hope and trust that our Secretary of State will do everything within his power to see to it that Italy is treated fairly and justly at the peace table.

I also wish to have printed in the body of the RECORD, following Mr. Tapogna's statement, a resolution sent to me by the State Department of Connecticut, Italian-American World War Veterans of the United States, Inc.

There being no objection, Mr. Tapogna's statement and the resolution referred to, were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

As head of the order Sons of Italy in America in the State of Connecticut, I voice the hopes and prayers of thousands of members of the order as well as those of many more thousands who are not affiliated with our organization, that out of the profound, complex deliberations of the Paris conference now in session may emerge a peace settlement with Italy that will reflect and exemplify justice, gratitude for her contribution to the Allied cause, and a deep-seated desire that her boundaries shall not be wantonly and rapaciously violated to the end that, with proper spiritual and economic assistance, she will some day resume her station in the great commonwealth of nations.

The great assistance, both financially and in manpower, that Italy contributed to the Allied cause cannot be lightly ignored. Recalling the fact that the people of Italy have contributed a billion dollars in goods and services and 250,000 lives over a period of two war years in the common fight against fascism, Congressman JERRY VOORHIS, of California, introduced this resolution in the House of Representatives: "Resolved, That the Republic of the United States of America which helped Italians to drive out tyranny and freely choose their own form of government use a suitable means to make known to the Italian people that the Republic of the United States of America rejoices in the birth of the Republic of Italy and welcomes it into the democratic community of nations." This is a fine and sincere gesture on the part of a great republic toward a struggling new republic—spiritual food it needs as badly as its people need bread.

However, the Italian people are in great need of material aid. A Washington expert on Italian affairs recently stated, "If UNRRA is to have more usefulness than to keep Italians barely alive until its funds run out, the UNRRA relief program must be geared to a realistic recovery program immediately. To start her industries again, Italy needs a large number of things, ranging from tools and lumber to fish hooks and fertilizer. Other things which UNRRA does not supply Italy but which Italy needs in order to cultivate their land and start their industries again include railroad equipment, machine parts, cellulose, nickel, copper, lead, iron plating, and so forth. These are the necessities for an Italian loan which are similar to the need in other countries that have applied for and are receiving loans from the Export-Import Bank. Thanks to her partisans who saved Italian industrial plants from German sabotage during the war, there is little need for industrial reconstruction in Italy. The great need is for reactivation, now. Italy's large industrial plant will rapidly deteriorate if left in its present state of enforced idleness. Italians will have to work out their own economic and social rehabilitation, but Italy must have our help in order to continue along the long road back to the democratic community of nations. It is necessary, therefore, that a loan in the sum of $5,000,000 be made available to Italy now—the minimum amount which can accomplish something on a reactivation and recovery level. If we are to avert conditions leading to dictatorship in Italy again, it is imperative that economic assistance be given her at the earliest possible moment."

Dr. Lauchlin Currie, president of the Council for American-Italian Affairs declared, "I am only stating a sober fact when I say that the general economic conditions that originally gave rise to dictatorship exist in Italy today." Pointing out that rapid economic progress must be made if the new ideas and institutions, "our ideas and institutions," are not to be discredited in the eyes of the Italian people, he further stated: "Italy is not asking for charity, but for a chance. The factories and the farms are there, and the people are as skilled and industrious as ever. Like England, Italy must export to live; to export she must first import raw materials and fuel. Italy requested a loan from us in February of $940,000,000. In homely terms, and in the finest of American traditions, we should not hesitate to grub stake a good prospect."

America cannot be indifferent to her responsibility of exercising international leadership in the rebuilding of a war-stricken world.

More than 6,000,000 Americans of Italian origin, whose contributions to the war effort bespeak their deep and abiding loyalty to America, are united with all other Americans in the conviction that the first concern of humanity today is a just and lasting peace.

It must be recognized that Italy has, for nearly 2 years, fought on the side of the allies with its entire fleet and with its land and air forces. The spirit of resistance and sacrifice was exemplified by the Italian partisan who, in the words of Marshal Alexander and General Clark, constituted the most effective resistance movement in Europe.

It must be recognized also that a free democratic Italy in the heart of Europe is essential to the maintenance of the very peace of Europe.

It is in this spirit that we urge our Government to insist with all its authority and prestige that Italy be given a peace in accordance with the Potsdam Declaration and the pledges made by President Roosevelt and President Truman.

For the good name and faith of America, and in the interests of a lasting world peace, the Government of the United States should insist:

1. That the boundary between Italy and Yugoslavia be based on the Wilson line as modified by the State Department in September 1945; that Trieste remain, as it is in fact, an Italian city; and that if the port of Trieste is internationalized, it then be put under Italian administration.

2. That France and Italy find an amicable solution to their frontier problems; that because of their importance to the economic life of Italy, Tenda and Briga remain Italian.

3. That the present Austrian-Italian frontier be maintained in view of the paramount economic importance of that region to Italian national life.

4. That all colonies acquired by Italy before the Fascist assumption of power remain Italian. The proposal to transfer such colonies to the United Nations organization does not meet with our approval unless this principle is given universal application and is not used as a pretext to give these Italian colonies to other nations.

5. That war reparations or indemnities be not exacted of Italy—this, in accordance with the declared policy of our Government.

6. That restrictions presently imposed on Italian sovereignty by the terms of the Armistice be abolished forthwith and in advance of the final peace treaty which may yet require several months before it is concluded. This would recognize Italy's rights as a cobelligerent nation.

7. That all restrictions to Italy's resumption of normal commercial and financial relations with other nations be removed forthwith to enable her to acquire basic commodities such as foodstuffs and raw materials which are indispensable to her national recovery.

8. That the remaining units of Italy's Merchant Marine, without which she cannot survive, be restored to her.

9. That in accordance with the Potsdam Declaration, Italy be actually granted the rights of a friendly, peace-loving nation. Italy has clearly earned this distinction through her enormous sacrifices and her gallant contributions to the Allied cause.

10. That Italy be accorded membership in the United Nations organization.

Whereas this organization consists of Americans of Italian extraction who have served in the armed forces of the United States of America in both of the recent World Wars; and

Whereas more than 600,000 such Americans of Italian birth or extraction have served in the armed forces of the United States of America during the first World War and more than 1,600,000 have served in said armed forces during the second World War; and

Whereas more than 10,000,000 Americans of Italian extraction are an integral part of the United States of America, having contributed in its historic birth and development; and

Whereas it is our concern that peace, good will, and justice be promoted among nations, based upon the ideals of America's conception of the "four freedoms" and the Atlantic Charter, and not on power politics, for which we have sacrificed at great cost of life and deprivations: Now, therefore, we the delegates of the various posts of the Department of Connecticut, of the Italian-American World War Veterans of the United States, Inc., in convention assembled on this 28th day of July A. D. 1946, at the Hotel Garde, in New Haven, Conn., hereby solemnly

Resolved, That the Honorable President of the United States of America and the honorable Senators and Congressmen from the State of Connecticut be and are hereby requested to lend their utmost support to adhere to the desire of Americans of Italian descent, and to grant Italy a peace which will insure her a position of honor among nations, in accordance with the promises made her, commensurate with the sacrifices of Americans of Italian descent and in accordance with the promises made to us.

Attest:

ANTHONY IANNOTTI,
State Commander, Department of Connecticut, Italian - American World War Veterans of the United States, Inc.

NEW HORIZONS FOR FREE ENTERPRISE

As in legislative session,

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, I wish to discuss an issue which I believe may prove the decisive factor in opening up new horizons for free enterprise.

The time has come, I believe, when labor and management, with the help of government, must get down to the nugget of what is really needed in America. The sustained stability and progress of our American system of capitalistic free enterprise requires high, real wages, heavy buying power for abundant markets, and maximum production at low-unit costs. These will give us the great increase in the Nation's real wealth which must be the basis of truly higher living standards.

Both of these conditions—high wages and maximum production—must be achieved. Neither, without the other, will be sufficient for a sustained prosperous America under present-day world conditions. The way to get them both, stated simply, is to link them together at the source. This can be done by broad adoption of a system of paying fair, guaranteed wages for average production, and extra-high wages for extra-high production.

The period through which we now pass furnishes problems of no less importance to the future of our Nation than did the active phase of the war which came to an end on VJ-day.

High productivity and widespread distribution of that which our Nation can produce is more sound than the doctrine of scarcity brought about by stoppages of production or by governmental action.

A free economy can better bring about a higher standard of living for our people than any permanent regimented economy of domestic origin or foreign import.

Wartime controls were necessary at a time when we were engaged in a life-and-death struggle with the Axis Powers. Our people understood this and cooperated fully. Controls could not be abolished overnight with the arrival of VJ-day without causing great dislocations to our economy. It is not wise for a man to leave a hospital and immediately go back onto the football field. There needs to be a transition period. In the past year we have been going through such a period.

During the past 30 days the Nation and the Congress have been divided relative to OPA legislation. There has been general agreement that when supply approximates demand controls should be eliminated. Production is the key to this objective.

However, either with or without OPA, price increases were and are inevitable. Without increased production it is squirrel-cage economics to maintain that wages and the cost of raw materials can increase while a simultaneous policy of holding the line on prices is being advocated.

This is what the New York Times had to say on Thursday, June 27. The editorial is brief, and it is quite apropos that I should quote it at this time:

The myth that large wage increases could be granted without the need for price increases has been completely exploded by the events in the first half of 1946. The most recent evidence of the inadequacy of this theory is found in the 91-cents-a-ton increase in the ceiling price of anthracite coal, authorized to compensate producers for the wage increases recently granted. The record is replete with similar experiences in other industries.

Steel: A wage increase of 18½ cents an hour was accompanied by a price rise of $5 per ton, an amount equivalent to the entire wage increase.

Bituminous coal: An increase of 18½ cents an hour plus extras made necessary a rise of 40½ cents a ton in the price.

Meat: An increase of 16 cents an hour was accompanied by price increases equivalent to more than two-thirds of that amount.

Railroads: An increase of 16 cents an hour, later made 18½ cents an hour, led to the recently approved 3- to 6-percent rise in freight rates.

Automobiles: An 18½-cents-an-hour increase made necessary an increase of $16 to $60 a car for General Motors.

In addition, a further rise of 5 percent has been permitted in order to compensate for the higher costs of steel and other parts which in turn had been caused by higher wages.

These instances are typical. Building materials, work clothing, textiles, and many other products could be added to the list. The full impact of these wage increases has not yet been felt. This is particularly true concerning the price increases permitted for coal, steel, and freight rates. Clearly, workers cannot benefit from wage increases which necessitate price increases and hence limit the rise in real earnings. The only fundamental basis for an expansion in real income is found in increased productivity. When wage increases are sharply in excess of those that can be paid out of production the inevitable result will be higher prices.

On November 13, 1945, I wrote a letter to Secretary of Labor Lewis B. Schwellenbach, in an effort to offer a constructive formula for heading off a series of paralyzing work stoppages. These seemed to me to be in prospect then and later those strikes turned out to have a retarding effect upon reconversion. In that letter I stated:

Both as a citizen of the United States and as a Member of the Senate, I have been greatly concerned over the possibility of this Nation going into either a spiral of inflation or descendng into the depths of depression. The very foundations of the Republic would be endangered if either of these two alternatives should take place. The great need at the moment is to increase productivity so that higher wages can be paid to maintain purchasing power and so that a sufficient volume of goods will be put on the market to prevent inflation. In so doing, we will be able to supply the needs not only of our own people but also to discharge the obligations we have elsewhere in the world.

If this Nation is tied up for an extended period of time with work stoppages, it will not only endanger our domestic economic future, but will weaken us in the field of foreign affairs. Every American has a vital stake in finding a formula by which, through conference table methods, employers and employees can get together and break the deadlock faced by some of our great industries.

In order to avert the deadlock between labor and management which appears to be in the making in important industries, Mr. Blair Moody, Washington correspondent of the Detroit News, and the undersigned, have for some time been working on a formula which we believe would offer a constructive solution for settling wage differences in industrial plants, and establishing a continuing and constructive relationship between labor and management in individual companies which may adopt it. This formula it is our desire to pass on to you in the hope that you and your conciliation service might find it helpful in preventing a fatal delay in the rapid reconversion which is so vital if our American standards are to be maintained.

* * * * *

It is our firm belief that productivity and widespread distribution of that which our Nation can produce is more sound than the doctrine of scarcity brought on by either stoppages of production or governmental action. A necessary factor in the success of collective bargaining, of course, is the obligation of both parties to live up to the terms of their contract.

We believe that this "pay-as-you-earn" plan will, if widely applied, increase the production of wealth in the United States and can increase both employees' earnings and employers' profits.

We believe that it can become a major contributing favor in generating in our economic machine the momentum needed to sustain employment and higher standards for millions of American families.

We believe this "pay-as-you-earn" formula can fill a great gap in our collective bargaining system by making it clearly in the interest of labor and management to stop pulling apart and start pulling together. We believe that it is important for responsible Government officials, labor and management, to keep in mind that the public interest is paramount. A break-down in reconversion at this time will not only be detrimental to the parties to the dispute directly involved, but will be most detrimental to the interests of millions of returning servicemen seeking employment, as well as the great body of the public servants who will suffer most through a runaway inflation or a major depression.

The formula which was suggested last November was not meant to be a panacea for all our economic ills or the only possible solution. It was offered, rather, as a starting point for study and discussion, in the hope that out of it would come a constructive alternative to costly industrial warfare.

In this atomic age in which we live, we have at one and the same time a force that can destroy modern civilization or can open up for humanity a golden age wherein atomic power will be the servant, not the master, of the people.

Old World dictatorships still strive to gain for their people a fraction of what our people have long since had. We have provided the highest standard of living ever enjoyed by any people at any time in the history of the world. We have done this despite the fact that we are not the most populous, the oldest in experience, or the richest in natural resources.

It has been brought about because we have been freemen with the protection of a Constitution that guarantees to the individual citizen certain rights that not even the Federal Government itself can take away.

Those of us who firmly believe in representative constitutional government have an obligation to see to it that our American system does not break down. It is in no narrow partisan sense that I speak. Both Republicans and Democrats can join on common ground to oppose those who believe in statism, with its superplanners determining the activities of a regimented populace.

But those of us who believe in the American system must not develop a Maginot line psychology. We cannot maintain our place of leadership in a world which has already largely abandoned the system of free enterprise for socialism, fascism, or communism, unless we keep American free enterprise as a dynamic force. Vast areas of the world have abandoned even a pretense of freedom as we know it.

True, we still retain our lead; but let us not become wedded to the status quo or obstructed by the dead hand of the past. The fable of the tortoise and the hare should not be overlooked.

The constant improvement of the mechanics of government should have our unqualified support. For when we bog down because of archaic rules or customs that stifle the legislative process, we but furnish ammunition for those who do not believe that representative government can meet the problems of our generation.

When men in any governmental capacity lose sight of the fact that a public office is eternally a public trust, there is likewise furnished material for those whose basic ideology is in sharp contrast with ours. Hence, there is the constant necessity for vigorous action to cure the obvious shortcomings, wherever we may find them. Likewise, we must constantly be on the alert to improve our economic system of free enterprise, of which the right of ownership of private property and the incentives furnished by profits from enterprise and wages supporting a decent American standard of living are integral parts.

As a citizen, a soldier, and a Senator, I have had the opportunity of seeing something of conditions in Europe, Asia, and Africa. Few will disagree that, even with the imperfections we freely acknowledge, our people have on the whole by far the highest standard of living. But on this we must not rest. The purpose of the resolution I shall offer is to make sure we do not let it rest; for if we do, there is danger of industrial conflict which could not only cripple production but, if carried far enough, could place in jeopardy our economic and political system.

One out of five families in the United States is getting along on less than $1,000 of annual income. About one out of every two families is having to live on less than $2,000 per year, and more than two out of every three American families have incomes of less than $3,000 a year.

Of the group in the less-than-$1,000-per-annum bracket, their liquid assets, on an average, were $20 per family; 9,300,000 families are in this classification.

Twelve million four hundred thousand families received between $1,000 and $1,999 per annum, and on the average their liquid assets amounted to only $230.

Between $2,000 and $2,999 of income was received by 10,300,000 families, holding liquid assets, on the average, of $470.

In meeting the growing challenge of socialism or communism, the dynamic American system must continue to demonstrate that the bulk of our population has a substantial stake in the maintenance of that system.

Certainly the average American is interested in building for the future, and desires to give to his family a decent American standard of living, insofar as food, housing, and education is concerned. He should be able to do this, and have time for rest and recreation.

He should have the opportunity to earn these things by his own work and initiative, and not be dependent upon a super government, furnishing security from the cradle to the grave, wherein he becomes little more than a statistic in a regimented economy.

Wherein, then, shall we find the catalytic agent that will assure our maintenance of American constitutional government, individual freedom, and our economic system based on private property.

In my opinion, it is to be found in the field of intelligent profit sharing. It should not come as the dictate of Government, but rather, by the voluntary action of enlightened industry. No one plan will suit all business. Whatever the precise plan may do, it should have as its objective the increasing of productivity, to the end that the worker will benefit by increased earnings, the business by greater profits, and the consumer by lower costs.

Profit sharing has a long background of both success and failure. But failures on the long road to freedom did not cause our forebears to abandon the struggle. They learned from the mistakes. Profit sharing has a recorded history going back to 1820. Since that time, American, British, and French firms have made use of some adaptation of the principle.

Among the better known profit-sharing or incentive-wage plans in the United States are those of Sears, Roebuck & Co., the Eastman Kodak Co., the Gannett Newspapers, Bethlehem Steel Corp., Lincoln Electric Co., Procter & Gamble Co., and the Comer Textile Mills.

One of the most successful has been the incentive-wage plan of the Lincoln Electric Co., of Cleveland. This company has achieved world fame as a high-wage payer and low-cost producer of welding equipment. The company's dollar production per worker has increased 500 percent, worker's income has increased 300 percent, and production cost has decreased 67 percent. Selling prices of Lincoln products have been reduced, over a period of 20 years, to about one-fifth of what they used to be. Sales have gone up from less than $1,000,000 a year to $30,000,000. The plant has had no labor conflict, and has had little labor turnover or intentional absenteeism. Stockholders have never missed a dividend since the first one in 1918, and dividends have increased.

Eric A. Johnston, former president of the United States Chamber of Commerce, an outstanding young businessman, has recently established a profit-sharing system in his companies.

In the August 1946 issue of Reader's Digest, he states:

> We say we really want to see more diffusion of the good things of the world. Then what's wrong with profit sharing? What's wrong with giving our workers a real incentive to produce more for their own profit—and ours?

> We ought to be proud of the capitalistic system. Competitive capitalism has just won the greatest war in all history. Let's not be modest about it. Neither Britain nor Russia could have survived without the endless flow of goods from this capitalistic country.

The United States is a Nation of great natural resources. Other nations also possess natural resources as great, if not more extensive, than ours. But America's greatest resource is the intelligence, initiative, and ambition latent in almost every individual. Neither the Government, industry, nor labor have developed this vast resource to the fullest extent possible.

In submitting to the Senate on June 19, 1939, the report on the Survey of Experiences in Profit Sharing and Possibilities of Incentive Taxation, the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] said:

The committee finds that profit sharing, in one form or another, has been and can be eminently successful, when properly established, in creating employer-employee relations that make for peace, equity, efficiency, and contentment. We believe it to be essential to the ultimate maintenance of the capitalistic system. We have found veritable islands of "peace, equity, efficiency, and contentment," and likewise prosperity, dotting an otherwise and relatively turbulent industrial map, all the way across the continent.

This fact is too significant of profit sharing's possibilities to be ignored or deprecated in our national quest for greater stability and greater democracy in industry. The profit-sharing ideal, as an ideal, is invincible.

That ends the quotation from the report of the subcommittee of the Finance Committee.

This report and the hearings before the subcommittee of the Senate's Finance Committee are unavailable for general distribution to those interested. Because of the constructive job done by that committee and to avoid later unnecessary duplication, I am going to request that these documents be republished for the use of the Members of Congress and others who may be interested.

When Congress reconvenes I shall urge the adoption of a resolution providing for a senatorial committee to investigate and report the best means by which the Congress, through use of its taxing and other powers, may provide the strongest possible incentives and the most favorable legislative background for a sustained free economy of maximum production, high wages, fair profits, and stable competitive prices.

This resolution will be directed to the domestic side of our postwar problem. Within the grasp of the American people is the greatest period of prosperity in the history of this or any other nation—a period which under wise policies of management, labor, and government can be prolonged. In wartime, under the driving force of national necessity, we learned for the first time the vast production of which the Nation is capable. That great and proved capacity offers the promise—the sure promise if we now make the most of our potentiality—of an outpouring of peacetime goods which will lift the standard of living for all the American people far above anything that even this Nation has been able to achieve in the past.

But, Mr. President, the very momentum and growth of our economic greatness carry also the germs of a situation which can destroy us from within, if we do not act affirmatively and boldly to meet it—and in time.

No one group or faction in our country can carry us alone to the new and sustained high levels of production and prosperity of which we are capable. It must be a team job. In the industrial field, the field of wages and production, management cannot do the job alone and labor cannot do it alone. Some differences are, of course, inevitable. But neither can live without the other, and neither can achieve, for itself, the maximum which it is possible to achieve, unless it sees the whole picture, recognizes its responsibilities to the public and makes its full partnership contribution to the other, and to the country.

High buying power in the average worker's family is as imperative to the industrialist and the farmer as to labor, for without it the Nation's markets will not be adequate to absorb maximum production.

Maximum production and low unit costs are as important to the worker as to the industrialist, because without them he will have more dollars but a lower actual standard of living—less goods to consume.

Yet today, at the moment we are on the threshold of our great opportunity, we hear the rumbling of a new wage war between labor and management. Great unions are hammering at the idea that buying power must be raised to protect themselves and the Nation against the real danger of a deflation and depression, once the danger of inflation is past. Managements have been demanding more work for the more pay as the only way to keep production up, and warning that merely hiking dollar wages every time a wage contract expires, without corresponding increase in output, would in the long run depreciate the wage dollar and ruin America.

Both are right as far as they go.

But what is needed is for both labor and management to give, as a few in both groups have, equal consideration to both ends of the problem, to set up together a system of wage payments which will make maximum production and the highest possible wage payments, in line with good pricing policies, clearly in the interest of both.

Mr. President, I believe that the broad outline of such a wage system, the principle of it, which, of course, could be varied in application to meet special conditions in individual plants or industries, is at hand. Such a system should have four objectives:

First. To make it clearly profitable for labor as well as management to achieve maximum production and lowest possible unit costs.

Second. To make it clearly profitable for management as well as labor to pay maximum wages.

Third. To make it clearly and unmistakably in the interest of both to keep production moving during periods of contract negotiation, making strikes so unprofitable that they will rarely occur and be unnecessary because all concerned will feel that they are getting their share of the fruits of production.

Fourth. To give the consumer a break through production of more and better goods at lower unit cost. To merely "divide the melon" between industry and labor is not equitable and in the long run would work to the disadvantage of both.

This can be done, Mr. President, by paying fair, guaranteed wages for average production, with an agreement for extra high wage payments for extra high production—by linking together high production and high wages.

Mr. President, it would be, of course, out of keeping with our free system to attempt to impose this or any other wage plan on industry. However, in my judgment, the Congress has two responsibilities in this situation. The first is to get the facts and make them available to anyone interested in the voluntary establishment of such plans.

The second is to study the feasibility of enacting an intelligently discriminating system of incentive corporate taxation which would make it worth while in dollars and cents for management to consider the advisability of instituting profit-sharing systems, or wage systems which provide for a basic standard wage plus an extra payment for extra production.

Such a plan if broadly applied by management and labor working together, might prove the decisive factor in opening up new horizons for our American system of free enterprise.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to submit the resolution.

There being no objection, the resolution (S. Res. 319) was received and referred to the Committee on Finance, as follows:

Whereas the maintenance of the profit system is essential to the preservation of the American competitive capitalistic system under which the United States has attained the largest measure of general economic welfare enjoyed by any people in the world; and

Whereas the exploration of all available means for extending the direct benefits of the profit system to the largest possible number of citizens is highly desirable and important; and

Whereas in 1938 a subcommittee of the Senate Finance Committee held extensive hearings and made a report to this body relative to profit-sharing plans then in operation or had been in operation up to that time which information was of great value: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Senate Finance Committee, or any subcommittee thereof, is authorized and directed to make a complete study, covering the period from 1938 to date of hearings, of all existing profit-sharing systems, between employers and employees, now operative in the United States and to report to the Senate with a special view (a) to the preparation of an authentic record of experience which may be consulted by employers who are interested in voluntarily establishing profit-sharing plans; (b) to the consideration of what advisable contribution, if any, may be made to the encouragement of profit sharing by the Federal Government, including the grant of compensatory tax exemptions and tax rewards when profit sharing is voluntarily established; (c) to the consideration of any other recommendations which may prove desirable in pursuit of these objectives; and be it further

Resolved, That for the purpose of this resolution the committee, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized to hold hearings; to sit and act at such times and places during the sessions, recesses, and adjourned periods of the Senate during the Seventy-ninth and succeeding Congresses; to employ such experts and clerical, stenographic, and other assistants; to require by subpena or otherwise the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such books, papers, and documents, to administer such oaths; and to take such testimony and to make such expenditures as it deems advisable. The cost of stenographic service to report such hearings shall not be in excess of 25 cents per 100 words. The expense of the committee, or any duly authorized subcommittee, which shall not exceed $25,000 shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers approved by the chairman of the committee, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

THURSDAY, AUGUST 1, 1946

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

Rev. Bernard Braskamp, D. D., pastor of the Gunton-Temple Memorial Presbyterian Church, Washington, D. C., offered the following prayer:

O Thou eternal God, who art ever with us and within us, we pray that we may discern and lay hold of the counsel of Thy understanding wisdom and the comradeship of Thy abiding presence as we continue to address ourselves to the duties and responsibilities of another day.

May all the devastating and disintegrating emotions of feverish anxiety, foreboding fear, and craven cowardice be forever dispelled from our minds and hearts. Take away from us any inner bias which expects nothing but evil and which feels that our fondest hopes are merely illusions and beyond all practical realization.

Inspire us with the glad certainty that we have not been created for failure, but for victory, and that behind all darkness there is the radiancy of Thy glory. Enable us by Thy grace to live heroically, hopefully, and helpfully as we face the experiences and adventures of each succeeding day. May we find our joy and strength in doing justly, in loving mercy, and in walking humbly with the Lord our God.

We offer our petitions in Christ's name. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the amendment of the House to a bill of the Senate of the following title:

S. 191. An act to amend the Public Health Service Act to authorize grants to the States for surveying their hospitals and public health centers and for planning construction of additional facilities, and to authorize grants to assist in such construction.

PROCEEDINGS AGAINST GEORGE MARSHALL

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I call up a preferential resolution.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman yield to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. DOUGHTON] to prefer a unanimous-consent request?

Mr. RANKIN. I yield for that purpose.

SOCIAL SECURITY ACT

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 7037) to amend the Social Security Act and the Internal Revenue Act, and for other purposes, with Senate amendments, disagree to the amendments of the Senate and request a conference with the Senate.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. DOUGHTON]?

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, I object.

RULE TO SEND SOCIAL SECURITY BILL TO CONFERENCE

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I yield to to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. COLMER].

Mr. COLMER, from the Committee on Rules, reported the following privileged resolution (H. Res. 747) providing for the consideration of H. R. 7037, to take from the Speaker's table, and to request a conference thereon (Rept. No. 2714), which was referred to the House Calendar and ordered to be printed:

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution the bill (H. R. 7037) to amend the Social Security Act and the Internal Revenue Code, and for other purposes, with the Senate amendments thereto, be, and the same is hereby, taken from the Speaker's table, that the Senate amendments be, and they are hereby, disagreed to by the House, and that a conference be, and the same is hereby, requested with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

RELIEF FOR VETERANS WHO SERVED IN THE ORGANIZED MILITARY FORCES OF THE PHILIPPINES

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH].

Mr. SABATH, from the Committee on Rules, reported the following privileged resolution (H. Res. 748) providing for the consideration of S. 2235, an act to provide a system of relief for veterans, who served during World War II in the organized military forces of the Government of the Commonwealth of the Philippines while such forces were in the service of the armed forces of the United States pursuant to the military order of July 26, 1941, of the President of the United States, and for other purposes (Rept. No. 2715), which was referred to the House Calendar and ordered to be printed:

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the act (S. 2235) to provide a system of relief for veterans, and dependents of veterans, who served during World War II in the organized military forces of the Government of the Commonwealth of the Philippines while such forces were in the service of the armed forces of the United States pursuant to the military order of July 26, 1941, of the President of the United States, and for other purposes. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the act and shall continue not to exceed 1 hour to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and the ranking minority member of the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation, the act shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the act for amendment, the Committee shall rise and report the same back to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the act and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

PROCEEDINGS AGAINST GEORGE MARSHALL

The SPEAKER. The unfinished business is the reading of the resolution in the proceedings against George Marshall, insisted on by the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Mississippi reserve that for a moment?

Mr. RANKIN. No, Mr. Speaker. It will take but a moment to dispose of this.

CALL OF THE HOUSE

Mr. BIEMILLER. Mr. Speaker, I make a point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER. Evidently no quorum is present.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

The SPEAKER. On this roll call 231 Members have answered to their names, a quorum.

The Chair desires to make an announcement. There is a quorum in town. If the roll is called today or tomorrow and a quorum does not appear, the Chair and the House will take such action as may be necessary to bring the Members here.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I move that further proceeding under the call be dispensed with.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. MARCANTONIO) there were—ayes 179, noes 1.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present and make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Thirty-five Members have escaped since the last roll call. One hundred and ninety-six Members are present, not a quorum.

The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 224, nays 11, answered "present" 1, not voting 194, as follows:

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

PARLIAMENTARY INQUIRY

Mr. COLE of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. COLE of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, is it in order to make a motion that the Sergeant at Arms take whatever action is necessary to keep a quorum present in the House Chamber for the remainder of today, any House rules to the contrary notwithstanding? If it is, I would like to make that motion.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would rather not recognize the gentleman for such motion at this time.

Mr. COLE of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, a further parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. COLE of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, when would that motion be in order?

The SPEAKER. Well, the Chair would like to be the judge of that. Not now. The Clerk will continue reading.

The Clerk read as follows:

under seal of the House of Representatives to the United States attorney for the District of Columbia to the end that the said person named below may be proceeded against in the manner and form——

CALL OF THE HOUSE

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Speaker, I make a point of order a quorum is not present.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that you cannot interrupt the reading of this resolution, especially in the middle of a sentence; that such a point of order is dilatory and is being made for the purpose of delaying the proceedings of the House.

The SPEAKER. Well, the resolution is a matter upon which the House must pass. The point of order that a quorum is not present has been made.

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman withhold that a minute?

The SPEAKER. A point of order that a quorum is not present has been made, and unless it is withdrawn that is all the business that can be transacted until the Chair counts. If the Chair finds that a quorum is not present, a roll call will be in order.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. I withhold the point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. RANKIN. Then I demand that the Clerk continue the reading of the resolution.

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman withhold that for a while?

Mr. RANKIN. No, sir. I am not going to let the gentleman from New York run the House; either read the resolution or make the point of order.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Then, Mr. Speaker, I insist on my point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and sixty-nine Members are present, not a quorum.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

The SPEAKER. On this roll call 237 Members have answered to their names, a quorum.

Without objection, further proceedings under the call will be dispensed with.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York has the floor.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a parliamentary inquiry?

Mr. MARCANTONIO. No. I object to dispensing with further proceedings under the call by unanimous consent as stated by the Speaker.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I move that further proceedings under the call be dispensed with, and that we go ahead and legislate in the American way.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Speaker, on that I ask for a division in the American way too.

The question was taken; and there were—ayes 170, noes 1.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground there is not a quorum present and I make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, is a parliamentary inquiry in order at this time?

The SPEAKER. The Chair is rather in doubt about that, but the Chair will recognize the gentleman.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, under the rules of the House, when the House finds itself without a quorum the Presiding Officer must direct the Sergeant at Arms to notify absentees, the Doorkeeper to close the doors, and the Clerk to call the role. These two officials are elected by the House of Representatives, and among their other duties they are to assist the Speaker in enforcing the rules of the House.

In the present case, for instance, the Speaker determined that a quorum was not present and directed the Sergeant at Arms to notify the absentees. He directed the Doorkeeper to close the doors, the Clerk called the roll, and a quorum was found present.

My parliamentary inquiry is this: Under these conditions, inasmuch as we have an adequate force of employees to enforce the rules and inasmuch as there is a lock on every door to this Chamber, and inasmuch as the Chamber has been held to be that space within the four walls of the Chamber——

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MICHENER. I am sorry; not now.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. How about handcuffs?

Mr. MICHENER. Well, I am not discussing handcuffs. However, I assume the Sergeant at Arms would have sufficient authority to enforce legal orders of a legislative body. The people of this country are disgusted with what is transpiring in its Congress. They have a right to be. Certainly there is some power somewhere making it possible for the House to function. Members should either remain on the floor and legislate or resign in favor of someone who is willing to carry on the duties which they were elected to perform. Filibusters are wrong in principle. A little of it is bad enough, but when we have days of it, patience ceases to be a virtue.

Pursuing my inquiry, Mr. Speaker, is not the Speaker clothed with adequate power and can he not direct that the rules be complied with and that all of the doors be actually locked during the roll call, and that all of the doors to the Chamber remain locked until the House votes to dispense with further proceedings under the call? That will prevent the "escaping of 35 Members," as the Speaker just announced, who escaped between the time a quorum was found present and the point of order of no quorum was again made.

The SPEAKER. It is an interesting question, and it has been passed on many times. The Chair certainly has the authority to order the doors closed without further authority from the House. The Chair would not hold that without authority or direction of the House he should assume the authority of locking the doors and keeping the Members from retiring from the chamber. There is a way that the Chair can be clothed with proper authority.

The Chair will count to determine whether there is a quorum present. [After counting.] Two hundred Members are present, not a quorum.

The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 218, nays 14, not voting 198, as follows:

PROCEEDINGS AGAINST GEORGE MARSHALL

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

provided by law.

George Marshall, 205 East Forty-second Street, New York, N. Y.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Speaker, I make a point of order that a quorum is not present.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to yield to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. COLMER], to submit a unanimous consent request.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state for the information of the gentleman from New York that the reading of the resolution has been completed.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. I made the point of order at that point. I will withhold it for the purpose of permitting the gentleman from Mississippi to submit a request.

RULE ON THE SOCIAL SECURITY BILL

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of House Resolution 747.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, which rule is this?

Mr. COLMER. This is the rule on the social-security bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair may say to the gentleman from Mississippi that since the conversation had with the gentleman there has been an additional conversation, and the Chair thinks that perhaps the gentleman may save time by withholding the request for the moment.

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the request for the time being.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, which rule is this?

Mr. COLMER. This is the rule on the social-security bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair may say that there has been additional conversation since speaking to the gentleman and, in the opinion of the Chair, we will make time if the gentleman will withhold his request for the time being.

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw it for the moment.

CALL OF THE HOUSE

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask for recognition.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Speaker, I insist on my point of order.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman reserve the point of order?

The SPEAKER. We are going on with this resolution. The gentleman from New York has no right to withhold it or to yield time either. The gentleman from New York makes the point of order that a quorum is not present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and ninety-four Members are present—not a quorum.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

The SPEAKER. On this roll call 229 Members have answered to their names; a quorum is present.

Without objection, further proceedings under the call will be dispensed with.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I move that further proceedings under the call be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. MARCANTONIO) there were—ayes 164, noes 1.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that there is no quorum present, and I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Ninety-six Members are present; not a quorum.

The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 217, nays 14, not voting 199, as follows:

PROCEEDINGS AGAINST GEORGE MARSHALL

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN] is recognized.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Speaker, I ask for recognition. I have a preferential motion.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi has the floor on the resolution.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, this resolution is citing for contempt one George Marshall, the head of an organization known as the National Federation for Constitutional Liberties with offices at 205 East Forty-second Street, New York City.

Marshall first appeared before a subcommittee in New York. The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. THOMAS] presided at the New York hearing. Marshall produced some of the bulletins and pamphlets published by his organization, but refused to submit anything else, and Mr. THOMAS ordered him to appear in Washington the following week for further examination.

Marshall appeared here in Washington on April 11, 1946. The full committee then demanded of him the production of his books, papers, and records, which he refused. He also refused to testify concerning his affiliation or relationship with the Marshall Foundation.

Marshall's organization is a typical propaganda group which has been cited by the Attorney General, Francis G. Biddle, as a Communist front. It published such booklets as How To Testify Before Congressional Investigating Committees, Native Fascists and How To Spot Them—this is the booklet which contains the embellished Fact Sheet No. 64 of the War Department.

His organization has applied for and received tax relief in being relieved from filing an income tax return.

Marshall refused to give any details concerning the source of revenues of his organization or himself. He merely said that he received no salary and that his private income was sufficient to support him.

You will find a report of his testimony in yesterday's CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

This is one of those many Communist front organizations that are plotting the overthrow of this Government.

They get their inspiration, if not their instructions from Moscow. The Comintern is not dead. It is still carrying on the drive for world revolution, and is using these red fronts for that purpose.

If this is a legitimate outfit then why do they object to showing their records? Why do they object to showing where their funds come from and where they go?

Why all these frantic efforts on the part of a certain radical group here in the House to prevent us from voting on this resolution?

Remember that communism is based upon hatred for Christianity. It is based upon the atheistic doctrine of Karl Marx and its object is to bring about the overthrow of this Government, as well as that of every other government and to replace them with a communistic regime.

That would mean the end of constitutional government throughout the world.

It would mean the end of Christianity throughout the world.

It would mean the end of free enterprise throughout the world.

It would mean the end of human liberty throughout the world.

It would mean the end of the most glorious civilization mankind has ever known.

This great country of ours is the last bulwark against the onward march of that deadly curse. The Christian peoples of Europe who have seen their churches burned and their ministers murdered, their homes plundered, their people enslaved, their men shot, and their women raped, are looking to America to turn back this tide of atheistic fanaticism and save the civilization of mankind from being wiped from the face of the earth.

Your Committee on Un-American Activities is bearing the brunt of the fight to protect this Government from being destroyed by these insidious elements that attempt to carry out the instructions of the Comintern.

We are asking you, the elected Representatives of the people of this great country to back us.

Congress is the hope of this Nation. If we fail to protect our country from these influences, then America is doomed.

Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Speaker, I offer a preferential motion which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. MARCANTONIO moves that the resolution be tabled.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the preferential motion offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. MARCANTONIO].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. MARCANTONIO) there were—yeas 31, nays 138.

Mr. DE LACY. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that there is no quorum present, and I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

Mr. BRADLEY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BRADLEY of Pennsylvania. In view of the fact that there has been constant interruption, I am quite sure that very few Members of the House know the full contents of the resolution.

I would like to vote on it intelligently, and I ask unanimous consent that the resolution again be read. I make that as a serious request.

Mr. RANKIN. I make the point of order, Mr. Speaker, that the gentleman is too late.

The SPEAKER. It is not too late to make a unanimous-consent request at any time.

Mr. RANKIN. I object, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Washington [Mr. DE LACY] objects to the vote on the ground that there is no quorum present.

Evidently there is no quorum present.

The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 33, nays 202, not voting 195, as follows:

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The doors were opened.

The SPEAKER. The question is on ordering the previous question.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. MARCANTONIO) there were—ayes 191, noes 20.

Mr. DE LACY. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present and make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Two hundred and thirty-one Members are present, a quorum.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were refused.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. MARCANTONIO) there were—ayes 189, noes 28.

So the resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT

A message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House by Mr. Miller, one of his secretaries.

FURTHER MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A further message from the Senate, by Mr. Koerber, its assistant enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5560) entitled "An act to fix the rate of postage on domestic air mail, and for other purposes."

AMENDING THE SOCIAL SECURITY ACT AND THE INTERNAL REVENUE CODE

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Speaker, I call up House Resolution 747, and move its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution the bill (H. R. 7037) to amend the Social Security Act and the Internal Revenue Code, and for other purposes, with the Senate amendments thereto, be, and the same is hereby, taken from the Speaker's table, that the Senate amendments be, and they are hereby, disagreed to by the House, and that a conference be, and the same is hereby, requested with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

The SPEAKER. The question is, Will the House now consider the resolution?

The question was taken; and two-thirds having voted in favor thereof, the House decided to consider the resolution.

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Speaker, I have no requests for time on this side.

This is simply a resolution sending the social-security bill to conference. I reserve the balance of my time, and I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ALLEN].

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I reserve my time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. The Chair appoints the following conferees: Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina, Mr. DINGELL, Mr. ROBERTSON of Virginia, Mr. MILLS, Mr. KNUTSON, Mr. REED of New York, and Mr. WOODRUFF.

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may have until midnight tonight to file a conference report and statement on the bill H. R. 7037, the social-security bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. DOUGHTON]?

There was no objection.

STILL FURTHER MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A still further message from the Senate, by Mr. Koerber, its assistant enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had passed, with amendments in which the concurrence of the House is requested a joint resolution of the House of the following title:

H.J. Res. 390. Joint resolution making additional appropriations for the fiscal year 1947, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate insists upon its amendments to the foregoing joint resolution, requests a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. MCKELLAR, Mr. HAYDEN, Mr. RUSSELL, Mr. OVERTON, Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma, Mr. BRIDGES, Mr. GURNEY, and Mr. BALL to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 783) entitled "An act for the relief of Karl E. Bond."

STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS

Mr. SABATH, from the Committee on Rules, submitted the following resolution (H. Res. 751, Rept. No. 2718) for printing in the RECORD:

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution the act (H. R. 2788) to limit the time during which certain actions under the laws of the United States may be brought, with the Senate amendments thereto, be, and the same hereby is, taken from the Speaker's table, to the end that the Senate amendments be, and the same hereby are agreed to.

ADDITIONAL APPROPRIATIONS FOR YEAR 1947

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 390) making additional appropriations for the fiscal year 1947, and for other purposes, with Senate amendments, disagree to the Senate amendments, and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none and appoints the following conferees: Messrs. CANNON of Missouri, RABAUT, THOMAS of Texas, WIGGLESWORTH, and DIRKSEN.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the managers on the part of the House may have leave to file a report whether the House is in session or not.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

POSTAGE RATE ON DOMESTIC AIR MAIL

Mr. O'BRIEN of Michigan submitted the following conference report and statement on the bill (H. R. 5560) to fix the rate of postage on domestic air mail and for other purposes:

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5560) to fix the rate of postage on domestic air mail, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 1 and 2.

PHILIP A. TRAYNOR,
WILLIAM C. COLE,
JOHN C. BUTLER,
GEORGE D. O'BRIEN,
Managers on the Part of the House.

DENNIS CHAVEZ,
KENNETH MCKELLAR,
CARL HAYDEN,
WILLIAM LANGER,
Managers on the Part of the Senate.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5560) to fix the rate of postage on domestic air mail, and for other purposes, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conferees and recommended in the accompanying conference report:

Amendment No. 1: The House bill provided that the rate of postage on domestic air mail shall be 5 cents for each ounce or fraction thereof. This amendment changes such rate to 6 cents. The Senate recedes.

Amendment No. 2: The House bill provided that with respect to mail transported under authority of section 1 of the act of October 14, 1940, the postage rate of 5 cents prescribed by the bill shall be applicable only to first-class mail. This amendment refers to the postage rate of 6 cents in conformity with the change in rate made by amendment No. 1. The Senate recedes.

PHILIP A. TRAYNOR,
WILLIAM C. COLE,
JOHN C. BUTLER,
GEORGE D. O'BRIEN,
Managers on the Part of the House.

Mr. O'BRIEN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the conference report on the bill (H. R. 5560) fixing the rate of postage on domestic air mail, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman explain what the conference report does?

Mr. O'BRIEN of Michigan. The House unanimously passed the bill some weeks ago changing the domestic rate on air mail from 8 cents per ounce to 5 cents. The Senate amended the House bill by raising it from 5 to 6 cents. In a conference last night we made the rate 5 cents. In other words, the position of the House was sustained.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. That is the only change?

Mr. O'BRIEN of Michigan. That is the only change.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

The conference report was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

ICKES' RECKLESS EXPENDITURE OF PUBLIC FUNDS

Mr. GIBSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

Mr. GIBSON. Mr. Speaker, I am sure that every Member of this House was shocked and disappointed to learn of the recent defeat of our able and distinguished colleague from Oklahoma, who has served the State and Nation honorably and well for the past two decades, the Honorable JED JOHNSON.

It is no shock or surprise, however, that one Harold Ickes, known for his reckless expenditure of public funds, as well as his recklessness in handling facts, should continue to vent his spleen against JOHNSON. As chairman of the Interior Subcommittee on Appropriations for the past several years, JED JOHNSON has done more than any other one man in Congress to halt Ickes in his wild and reckless expenditure of public funds. Mr. Speaker, in the Washington Star of Friday, July 26, and in other newspapers throughout the country appeared a libelous article by Harold Ickes, reflecting on the character and conduct of our beloved colleague from Oklahoma who is held in high esteem by every Member of this House. Ickes charged JOHNSON, among other things, with having gutted the Interior Department in the matter of funds and also taking advantage of his position to push the Interior Department around. I have talked to members of his subcommittee, both Democrats and Republicans, and every member has assured me that this charge is an infamous falsehood.

Mr. Speaker, I could use the time allowed me in name calling. I could remind Members of this House of the fact that the author of this slimy smear article has also attempted to smear many other public men, including the President of the United States and members of the President's Cabinet. I could call this character assassin an unmitigated unconscionable liar, but that would not be news to many Members of this House, or others who have had any dealings with this man who beats himself on the breast and calls himself Honest Harold.

I am not presumed to know all the answers to Ickes' recent blasts at the gentlemen from Oklahoma [Mr. JOHNSON] but I do know both men, and I would stake my life on the statement that his several smear articles against the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. JOHNSON] are not based upon facts. JED JOHNSON'S record, both private and public, is as clean as a hound's tooth, a thing that cannot be truthfully said of Harold Ickes.

Surely the public has not forgotten that during the war how Ickes hoarded gasoline on his Maryland farm for the use of his or his wife's chicken farm and that he persisted in using an extra Interior Department automobile or station wagon in peddling eggs and chickens all over Washington. Such brazen effrontery would make the average man hang his head in shame, but not Ickes. I could take considerable time discussing his background, his various lawsuits against members of his own family, his widely publicized action in listing in his five-story building in Chicago as a three-story building for tax purposes in order to beat his taxes, and various and sundry other shady deals too numerous to mention. But Members of this House and the public generally are more interested in his public record as a reckless and irresponsible spender, a record that has never before been equaled so far as I can recall by any public official during my years in Washington.

Members of this House will recall that Mr. Ickes was so reckless in expenditures of long-distance telephone calls and telegrams that during the fiscal year 1943, Ickes' bill for telephone and telegrams alone cost the taxpayers $231,000. That, of course, is a matter of record which I had occasion to look up today in order to refresh my memory. It will also be recalled that JED JOHNSON'S committee reduced the amount for long-distance telephone calls to $40,000, and the record also shows that a year later the Under Secretary of the Interior admitted that this committee action had a "salutary effect upon the whole Interior Department."

Again Ickes says in his libelous article referred to, that the feud between himself and the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. JOHNSON] was caused by his refusal to permit any member of his staff to be smeared unjustly by fake patriots. Here he is undoubtedly talking about his old side-kick, Robert Morss Lovett, who, according to the record, not only admitted but boasted that he was a member of 41 subversive organizations, 5 of which were pointed out to be Communist or Communist-front organizations by the then Attorney General. The same record discloses that the same Robert Lovett also admitted that he had appeared on the same platform with Earl Browder, Communist candidate for the Presidency, at which time he lauded Browder. His testimony is available for anyone who wishes to read it. When Ickes heard of the Lovett testimony and that JOHNSON'S committee was fixing to burn Ickes down for having such a crackpot on his pay roll, he solemnly promised the committee, so I am advised by several members, to get Lovett's resignation immediately, but a year later Lovett was still on Ickes' pay roll. This is the same Ickes who a little later was defending conscientious objectors on the Interior pay roll, according to the printed record, during the war and who was making affidavits that such conscientious objectors were indispensable and irreplaceable. It is true that the gentleman from Oklahoma, JED JOHNSON, went to work to turn the searchlight of publicity against such shameful maladministration. That is evidently what the old man calls being pushed around. Well, we need more JED JOHNSONS in Congress to do more pushing around.

Perhaps the most scandalous and brazen of any of the matters called to my attention, in reading the committee hearings today in connection with the former Secretary and his boasted public record, was his action in forcing by direct order one Ruth Gruber, known to have been one of his several ghost writers, on the pay roll of the Alaska Railroad, where she remained for 4 years and 11 months at a salary of $6,000 per year, plus $7 per diem. This lady was paid, according to the records furnished the committee, and which I have before me, $36,771.24 for work alleged to have been performed in connection with the Alaska Railroad. During this time it was testified that she made some three or four trips to Alaska, rode on free passes on the railroad a few times, wrote some magazine articles about Alaska for which she was paid; but, according to the present manager of the road, Colonel Johnson, and his predecessor, Colonel Ohlson, the young woman performed no services whatsoever in connection with the operation of the Alaska Railroad.

To those of you who would like some interesting and informative reading I would call your attention to the printed hearings in connection with the annual supply bill for the Interior Department for the current fiscal year. The testimony speaks for itself. It is uncontroverted.

For the edification of the House, I quote the following from the hearings referred to before JED JOHNSON's subcommittee, beginning at page 785, as follows:

SERVICES OF RUTH GRUBER

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Colonel, during the course of examining your successor, Colonel Johnson, and also while Mr. Arnold was on the stand, some mention was made of a certain railroad official, or perhaps I should say a former railroad official, whose name the committee first heard in Alaska, as being connected in some way with the Alaska Railroad. Your successor, Colonel Johnson, did not seem to know very much about the work performed by this so-called ex-railroad official. I am sure that the committee would like to have any information that you may be able to give about this very charming person. I refer to Ruth Gruber, who it develops was on the pay roll of the Alaska Railroad for the past 5 or 6 years at the modest salary of $6,000 per year, plus, of course, a per diem, I believe, of $7 per day.

Colonel, would you be good enough to tell the committee how long Miss Gruber was on your pay roll, and what particular functions, if any, connected with the Alaska Railroad she performed at any time?

Colonel OHLSON. Dr. Gruber, Mr. Chairman, was, I believe, initially hired by the Interior Department, and later on detailed by the Secretary of the Interior, Mr. Ickes, to make a study of Alaska for the purpose of assisting in the development of Alaska, and she was placed on the Alaska Railroad pay roll in February 1941.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Did she remain on the pay roll continuously since that time at a top salary of $6,000 per year.

Colonel OHLSON. Yes, sir.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. What duties, if any, did she perform with the Alaska Railroad?

Colonel OHLSON. She wrote several articles that were published in various periodicals and newspapers covering her observations of the scenery and the resources of Alaska.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. All right, she wrote several articles to magazines and newspapers for which it is presumed she was paid. Now, did she give you any help, advice, assistance, or counsel in connection with the operation of the railroad?

Colonel OHLSON. No, sir; she was not engaged in that capacity.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Was she a member of your staff of advisers, rail experts, or a member of your board of directors?

Colonel OHLSON. No, sir.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Please tell the committee just how you operated. To whom did you as general manager report, Dr. Gruber, the Secretary of the Interior, or to the Director of Territories?

Colonel OHLSON. The Alaska Railroad is under the Department of the Interior and the general manager reports to the Director of Territories, who, in turn, refers matters of importance of the railroad to the Secretary for decisions.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Well, now getting back to this ex-railroad official we have learned so far that Dr. Gruber, who has been reported to this committee to be a very fluent "ghost" writer, has written a number of articles about Alaska for which it is presumed she received some remuneration. Do you know if the articles in question were printed under her own name or under the name of the Secretary of the Interior?

Colonel OHLSON. So far as I know, under her own name.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Then for at least some of her articles she received extra remuneration in addition to her salary of $6,000 per year. Did she perform any functions whatever in connection with the operation, maintenance, or general welfare of the Alaska Railroad?

Colonel OHLSON. No; not as far as operation is concerned. She had nothing to do with that.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Now, I believe you say she was placed on the pay roll in February 1941,

Colonel OHLSON. Yes, sir.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. By whose orders?

Colonel OHLSON. By the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. The great Secretary of the Interior! The self-admitted, if not self-named, "Honest Harold," whose great heart bleeds for the American taxpayer, who is shocked at anything that smacks of an impropriety——

Colonel OHLSON. Yes, sir.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Did you object or protest to the order from the Secretary of the Interior to place Miss Gruber on your top pay roll?

Colonel OHLSON. No, sir.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. You offered no protest as general manager of the railroad?

Colonel OHLSON. No, sir; it was a direct order.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Colonel, in introducing you a few minutes ago, I referred to the fact that you had brought the railroad from several millions in the "red" to a few millions surplus. Had you taken the road out of the "red" before you received orders from Secretary Ickes to place this charming lady on your pay roll?

Colonel OHLSON. The railroad had just started in to show a small profit at that time.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. During all those 5 years that Miss Gruber was on your pay roll at the highest salary I believe this law allows, what if anything, did she contribute to the operation of the road. Was it confined to a few trips as a passenger, presumably on a free pass?

Colonel OHLSON. She made several trips over the Alaska Railroad; yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Then, as far as you know, that was the extent of her railroad work during her trips to Alaska?

Colonel OHLSON. Yes, sir.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Then I take it that you did not even call on her to take your place as manager of the road when you were out of Alaska?

Colonel OHLSON. No, sir.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. At no time, then, did she operate the engines? She is not an engineer?

Colonel OHLSON. No, sir.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. During all that time the little lady did not act as conductor, brakeman, engineer, superintendent of the road, or in any other capacity?

Colonel OHLSON. No, sir.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. But simply wrote some articles about Alaska, for which she presumably was paid in order to augment that $6,000 salary you paid her, or should I say gave her, at the direct order of the Secretary of the Interior?

Colonel OHLSON. Yes, sir; that is correct.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. During the time that she was on your pay roll at $6,000 a year, did the Secretary also make you pay her time and a half for overtime?

Colonel OHLSON. No, sir.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. What, no overtime?

Colonel OHLSON. No, sir; no time and a half was paid to Dr. Gruber.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. How amazing; and no extras for foreign-service pay except a measly $7 extra per diem?

Colonel OHLSON. No, sir; her salary was $6,000 per annum.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Only $6,000 per year. And what about that seven "bucks" extra per day? Did she get that also?

Colonel OHLSON. Yes, sir.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Only $6,000—at a time when you were striving to create a surplus that you knew would be needed after the war—at a time when men were offering their lives to preserve the American way of life, and with a terrible war deficit mounting, you paid only $6,000 annual salary to her?

Colonel OHLSON. Yes, sir; also per diem.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. During that time did she make one or more trips to Europe? Are you familiar with that?

Colonel OHLSON. She did. At least one trip.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. During which time she also wrote some very interesting articles and later delivered lectures for which she was paid. One article about Russia, particularly. It was also during the time she was on your pay roll that she became interested, as I recall, in getting European refugees sent to Alaska. Was it during the same trip that she visited Russia?

Colonel OHLSON. Her trip to Russia I am quite sure was prior to her coming to the Alaska Railroad.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Did she go to Europe at your suggestion and in connection with her alleged work as a railroader?

Colonel OHLSON. No, sir.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Then the Alaska Railroad did not urge her to go as your representative for any national or international conclave or for anything even remotely connected with the Alaska Railroad?

Colonel OHLSON. No, sir.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Is it true or untrue that she went to Europe in connection with bringing to the United States the so-called Oswego refugees?

Colonel OHLSON. I had no knowledge of that trip until after her return from Europe.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Well, were there some European refugees established at Oswego after her trip to Europe?

Colonel OHLSON. I believe I read an article on that subject.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Did you read a story in the Washington papers, or other papers, recently, stating that the Secretary of the Interior had suggested that a large number of European refugees be unloaded on Alaska?

Colonel OHLSON. I did, sir.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Well you might be surprised, Colonel, that the Secretary of Interior actually had the gall to ask President Truman to give the lady a Presidential decoration for bringing those refugees to America. Now, Colonel, how many years have you lived in Alaska?

Colonel OHLSON. Seventeen and one-half years.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Is it your judgment that the idea of the Secretary of Interior to flood Alaska with refugees will be received with open arms by the people of Alaska, or would they agree with a well-known Alaskan who ridiculed the suggestion as an "idiotic brainstorm"?

If you care to answer that on or off the record, the committee would like to have that because when the great Secretary of the Interior makes such a suggestion there might be some who think it ought to be given at least consideration. We would like to know what you think about it.

Colonel OHLSON. Until additional resources have been found and developed I doubt the wisdom of a step of that kind.

Mr. ROONEY. Colonel, have you ever heard that song, I've Been Working on the Railroad?

Colonel OHLSON. Yes, sir.

Mr. ROONEY. I have just one question. What, if anything, did the party mentioned here, Miss Gruber, I believe her name is, do to assist you in the administration or operation of the railroad?

Colonel OHLSON. Insofar as the operation and maintenance of the railroad is concerned, Dr. Gruber did not render any assistance.

Mr. ROONEY. Then there should be some explanation of this.

It will be noted that the young woman in question, who visited Alaska a few times during the 4 years and 11 months she was on the pay roll of the Alaska Railroad was interested mainly in getting some refugees sent over from Europe to Alaska. She attempted to sell a number of leading citizens of Alaska on the Ickes proposal of importing the so-called refugees from countries in Europe, but such a storm of protest went up against the idiotic plan that the Department of the Interior was finally forced to change the program and the so-called refugees were sent to Oswego, N. Y., instead. The same Ruth Gruber, according to the record, was even sent by plane to Italy during the war despite the serious shortage of planes and gasoline to travel as the Secretary's official representative to round up these refugees. For this act the great Secretary of the Interior decided that she should be decorated and that her services should go down in history as a great achievement and he actually had the gall, as the gentleman from Oklahoma, Chairman JOHNSON, pointed out, to ask the President of the United States, by letter dated January 31, 1946, to award the said Ruth Gruber the Medal of Merit for her work in connection with bringing a contingent of refugees from Europe to the United States. This, it will be recalled, was shortly before his blow-up as Secretary.

After having been turned down unanimously by the President's board which makes such recommendations, the Secretary then called upon the Secretary of State to give her what is known as the Medal of Freedom. But Secretary Byrnes advised the then Secretary of the Interior by letter, as follows:

> The Medal of Freedom is being awarded by the Army and Navy theater commanders abroad for meritorious action in helping American military personnel in enemy-occupied territory during the war.

The Secretary went on to state that the President's Executive order establishing medals for cases of this character did not apply to any act performed in the United States. This must have come as a terrible blow to the then Secretary whose protégée and alleged ghost writer had drawn down a total of $36,771.24 during a less than 5-year period.

So, Mr. Speaker, in closing this chapter for the present at least with a few high spots in the official record of the man who assumes a holier-than-thou role, who boasts of his alleged virtue, who declares to the world that he is the one and only "Honest Harold"; this man who has questioned the veracity of Presidents and Cabinet members, members of the Supreme Court, and many others in high official life, my closing comment as to him and his smear campaign against all who do not see eye to eye with him would be the old adage "that people who live in glass houses should not throw stones."

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. PETERSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and include therein a report of an inspection trip of the Pan American Highway in Central America.

Mr. Speaker, I have an estimate from the Government Printing Office that the cost will be approximately $120. Notwithstanding the cost I ask consent that the extension may be made.

The SPEAKER. Notwithstanding, without objection, the extension will be made.

There was no objection.

RETIREMENT PLAN FOR PERSONNEL OF MILITARY AND NAVAL SERVICES

Mr. SIKES. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Military Affairs, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill, S. 2460, to provide additional inducements to citizens of the United States to make a career of the United States military or naval service, and for other purposes.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman explain the Senate bill?

Mr. SIKES. I am glad to comply with the request of the distinguished minority leader. This is an enlisted man's retirement bill. It is the outgrowth of action already taken by the passage of S. 1438 for naval personnel. When the bill came up the House committee amended it to include Army personnel. There are differences, however, in the treatment of the men in the two services and the effort has been to reconcile the differences and place the Army and Navy personnel on the same retirement basis.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. MARTIN].

Mr. MARTIN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, the bill now before us really goes a long way toward bringing about uniformity in the retirement provisions for the enlisted personnel of the Army and the Navy. It is a very essential bill to bring about some greater incentive for enlisted men to serve in the armed forces at this time, both Army and Navy. The Army and Navy, the War Department and the Navy Department are in accord on the provisions of this bill.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 4 of the Naval Reserve Act of 1938 (52 Stat. 1176) is hereby amended by inserting after the words "insular possessions of the United States" a comma and the following: "including citizens of the Philippine Islands who are members of the naval service at the time independence of the Philippine Islands becomes effective,".

SEC. 2. Section 204 of the Naval Reserve Act of 1938 (52 Stat. 1179) is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 204. Members of the Navy who first enlisted in the Navy after July 1, 1925, or who reenlisted therein after July 1, 1925, having been out of the Regular Navy for more than 3 months, may upon their own request be transferred to the Fleet Reserve upon the completion of at least 20 years' active Federal service. After such transfer, except when on active duty, they shall be paid at the annual rate of 2½ percent of the annual base and longevity pay they are receiving at the time of transfer multiplied by the number of years of active Federal service: Provided, That the pay authorized in this section shall be increased 10 percent for all men who may be credited with extraordinary heroism in the line of duty: Provided further, That the determination of the Secretary of the Navy as to the definition of extraordinary heroism shall be final and conclusive for all purposes: Provided further, That the pay authorized in this section shall not exceed 75 percent of the active-duty base and longevity pay they were receiving at the time of transfer: Provided further, That all enlisted men transferred to the Fleet Reserve in accordance with the provisions of this section and of sections 1 and 203 of this act shall, upon completion of 30 years' service, be transferred to the retired list of the Regular Navy, with the pay they were then legally entitled to receive: Provided further, That nothing contained within this section shall be construed to prevent persons who qualify for transfer to the Fleet Reserve under the provisions of section 203 of this act from being transferred in accordance with the provisions of this section if they so elect: Provided further, That a fractional year of 6 months or more shall be considered a full year for purposes of this section and section 203 in computing years of active Federal service and base and longevity pay: And provided further, That the provisions of this section shall apply to all persons of the class described herein heretofore or hereafter transferred to the Fleet Reserve, except that no increase in pay or allowances shall be deemed to have accrued prior to the date of the enactment of this amendment. For the purposes of this section, all active service in the Army of the United States, the Navy, the Marine Corps, the Coast Guard, or any component thereof, shall be deemed to be active Federal service."

SEC. 3. Title II of the Naval Reserve Act of 1938 (52 Stat. 1178) is hereby amended by adding thereto a new section to read as follows:

"SEC. 208. Whenever enlisted men of the Fleet Reserve, transferred thereto after more than 16 years' service, or enlisted men transferred from the Fleet Reserve to the retired list of the Regular Navy, perform active duty after July 1, 1925, such active duty, except that which they are required to perform in time of peace under section 206 of this title, shall be included in the computation of their total service for the purpose of computing their retainer or retired pay when in an inactive-duty status, and in the computation of their retainer or retired pay all active duty so performed subsequent to the effective date of transfer to the Fleet Reserve or to the retired list shall be counted for the purpose of computing percentage rates and increases with respect to their retainer or retired pay and shall be based on the enlisted pay received by them at the time they resume an inactive-duty status, including increases in consequence of advancement in rating, longevity, and extraordinary heroism: Provided, That such pay shall not exceed 75 percent of the base and longevity pay of the highest rating to which entitled under the provisions of this section: Provided further, That active duty performed during any period of national emergency declared by the President shall be considered for the purpose of this section as not being active duty in time of peace required by section 206: Provided further, That nothing contained in this section shall operate to reduce the retainer or retired pay and alowances to which any enlisted man would otherwise have been entitled: Provided further, That a fractional year of 6 months or more shall be considered a full year for purposes of this section in computing years of active Federal service and base and longevity pay: And provided further, That persons of the classes described in this section who have been retired or returned to an inactive duty status prior to the date of approval of this section shall be entitled to the benefits of this section from the date of retirement or return to an inactive duty status."

SEC. 4. (a) The authority conferred upon the President by the Act approved June 27, 1942 (56 Stat. 422), as amended, to appoint commissioned warrant and warrant officers of the Regular Navy to commissioned grades or ranks is hereby extended to include authority to appoint chief petty officers of the Regular Navy who have completed not less than 3 years of service as chief petty officers to commissioned grades or ranks in like manner and under the same conditions and circumstances, except as otherwise provided in this subsection, as is provided in that act, as amended, for the appointment of commissioned warrant and warrant officers to commissioned grades or ranks.

(b) The authority conferred upon the President by the act approved June 27, 1942 (56 Stat. 422), as amended, to appoint commissioned warrant and warrant officers of the Regular Navy to commissioned grades or ranks is hereby extended to include authority to appoint any enlisted man of the Regular Navy who has not, on the date of such appointment, attained his thirty-third birthday and who has served continuously and immediately prior to such appointment in the Regular Navy for a period of not less than 4 years to the commissioned grade or rank of ensign in the line or staff corps of the Regular Navy in like manner and under the same conditions and circumstances, except as otherwise provided in this subsection, as is provided in that act, as amended, for the appointment of commissioned warrant and warrant officers to commissioned grades or ranks: Provided, That the authorized number of commissioned officers of the line and of each staff corps to which appointments pursuant to this subsection may be made will not be increased according to the number of appointments made, and officers appointed pursuant to this subsection shall not be carried as extra numbers in the grades or ranks in which appointed.

(c) In computing the years of service necessary for appointment to commissioned grade or rank pursuant to the act approved June 27, 1942 (56 Stat. 422), and pursuant to this section, at least 1 year of such service shall have been in the Regular Navy. The remaining portion of such service may have been active duty in a reserve component of the Navy after September 8, 1939, and before the termination of the present war as proclaimed by the President or established by act or resolution of the Congress.

SEC. 5. (a) Subsection 8 (c) of the act approved July 24, 1941 (55 Stat. 604), is hereby amended to read as follows:

"(c) An officer or enlisted man on the retired list of the Regular Navy or Marine Corps who was placed thereon by reason of physical disability shall, if he incurs physical disability while serving under a temporary appointment in a higher rank, subject to the provisions of subsection (e) hereof, be advanced on the retired list to such higher rank with retired pay at the rate of 75 percent of the active-duty pay to which he was entitled while serving in that rank."

(b) Subsection 8 (e) of the act approved July 24, 1941 (55 Stat. 604), is hereby amended to read as follows:

"(e) The benefits of this section shall apply only to an individual who incurs physical disability in line of duty in time of war or national emergency. In the case of those officers and enlisted men to whom subsection (c) hereof is applicable retirement in the next higher rank shall be effected upon a finding by a naval retiring board that the disability was incident to the service while on active duty in the higher rank and upon a rating by such board, in accordance with regulations prescribed by the Secretary of the Navy, at not less than 30 percent permanent disability. In all other cases officers and enlisted men shall be retired in accordance with existing law providing for the retirement of officers or enlisted men."

SEC. 6. (a) Section 4 of the act approved October 6, 1945 (Public Law 190, 79th Cong.), is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 4. Whenever any enlisted man of the Regular Army shall have completed a minimum of 20 but less than 30 years of active Federal service, he may, under such regulations as the Secretary of War shall prescribe, upon his own request be transferred to the Enlisted Reserve Corps and thereupon will be placed on the retired list of the Regular Army. An enlisted man so transferred and retired shall receive, except when on active duty, monthly retired pay at the rate of 2½ percent of the base and longevity pay of the enlisted grade held at the time he made application for retirement multiplied by the number of years of active Federal service, not to exceed 30 years. The retired pay authorized by this section shall be increased 10 percent for any enlisted man who is credited with extraordinary heroism in line of duty: Provided, That the determination of the Secretary of War as to extraordinary heroism for purposes of this section shall be final and conclusive for all purposes: Provided further, That the total retired pay (including the 10-percent increase for extraordinary heroism) authorized by this section shall not in any case exceed 75 percent of the total enlisted base and longevity pay such enlisted man was receiving at the time he made application for retirement: And provided further, That any fractional part of a year amounting to 6 months or more shall be counted as a complete year for the purpose of computing retired pay, but shall not be counted for the purpose of determining eligibility for retirement under this section."

(b) The number of years of service to be credited in computing eligibility for retirement under this act or any other act providing for retirement of enlisted men of the Army shall include all active Federal service performed in the Army of the United States, the Navy, the Marine Corps, the Coast Guard, or any component thereof.

(c) Any enlisted man retired under the provisions of section 4 of the act approved October 6, 1945 (Public Law 190, 79th Cong.), shall, commencing the first day of the month following the effective date of this act, receive retired pay computed as provided in section 6 of this act.

SEC. 7. Any enlisted man who is transferred to the Enlisted Reserve Corps pursuant to the provisions of section 6 of this act shall remain a member thereof until his active Federal military service performed prior to such transfer plus the period of his service in such corps equals 30 years, and while a member of such corps shall be subject to perform such periods of active duty as may now or hereafter be prescribed by law.

SEC. 8. (a) Each enlisted man of the Regular Army retired under the provisions of section 6 of this act or the provisions of section 4 of the act approved October 6, 1945 (Public Law 190, 79th Cong.), who performs or has performed active military service subsequent to retirement shall, upon relief from such active duty, receive retired pay on the same basis as received by him prior to his recall to active duty, or in the amount resulting from a recomputation, as provided herein, whichever is the greater. Such recomputation shall be made in the same manner as provided in section 6 of this act on the basis of the enlisted grade held at the time of relief from active military service, or the enlisted grade in which originally retired, whichever is higher: Provided, That the service to be credited shall include periods of active Federal service subsequent to retirement: Provided further, That the retired pay shall not exceed 75 percent of the enlisted base and longevity pay he was receiving in his active-duty status.

(b) Each enlisted man of the Regular Army retired under the provisions of the act of March 2, 1907 (34 Stat. 1217; 10 U. S. C. 947), or under the provisions of the act of June 30, 1941 (55 Stat. 394; 10 U. S. C. 982a), who performs or has performed active military service subsequent to retirement shall, upon relief from such active duty, receive retired pay in the amount received by him prior to his recall to active duty, or on the basis of his grade and length of service at the time of relief from active duty, whichever is the greater: Provided, That the amount of his retired pay shall not in any event exceed 75 percent of the enlisted base and longevity pay of the highest enlisted grade held by him.

SEC. 9. No back pay for any period prior to the date of enactment of this act shall accrue to any person by reason of the enactment of this act except as otherwise provided in section 30. No person, active or retired, of any of the armed forces, shall suffer, by reason of this act, any reduction in any pay, allowances, or compensation to which he was entitled upon the effective date of this Act. Retired enlisted personnel of the Navy and Marine Corps, personnel of the Navy and Marine Corps who are members of the Fleet Reserve or Fleet Marine Corps Reserve, and personnel of the Navy and Marine Corps who become eligible and who apply for transfer to the Fleet Reserve or Fleet Marine Corps Reserve shall receive an opportunity to elect to receive retainer and retired pay under the provisions of this act or to receive such pay under the provisions of law in effect immediately prior to the date of the enactment of this act, and these persons shall be entitled to receive the pay elected.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

ESTABLISHMENT OF A NATIONAL PARK IN THE OLD PART OF THE CITY OF PHILADELPHIA

Mr. PETERSON of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 2851) to provide for investigating the matter of the establishment of a national park in the old part of the city of Philadelphia, for the purpose of conserving the historical objects and buildings therein, with Senate amendments, and concur in the Senate amendments.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendments, as follows:

Page 6, line 9, strike out "without regard to" and insert "in accordance with the provisions of."

Page 6, line 10, strike out "or" and insert "and."

Page 6, line 20, strike out all after "Act." down to and including "investigation." in line 24 and insert "There is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $15,000 to carry out the provisions of this act."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman explain this?

Mr. PETERSON of Florida. Mr. Speaker, there are two Senate amendments. One of the amendments reduces the appropriation by $10,000. The other provides that the employees shall be under the civil service.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, both of them are good amendments.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendments were concurred in.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

TRUST ASSOCIATION OF H. KEMPNER

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (S. 334) for the relief of the trust association of H. Kempner.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman explain just what this legislation is?

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Speaker, this bill was passed by the Senate the other day and it merely gives the right to these people to go before the Court of Claims and have a trial on a claim made against the first Alien Property Custodian and a German concern. If the Court of Claims should decide that this firm in Texas is entitled to the money this will come out of the funds of the first Alien Property Custodian of the First World War. It does not cost the Government a single dollar. It merely gives them the right to go to the Court of Claims to find out where the money has gone and if it was paid to people who were not entitled to it.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. How much money is involved?

Mr. BLOOM. I do not recall the exact figure offhand, but payment would not be made out of American funds.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon the Court of Claims (a) to hear the claims of the Trust Association of H. Kempner, of Galveston, Tex., against the Government of Germany and nationals of Germany for reimbursement for losses alleged to have been sustained as a result of the sale of certain cotton by such trust association to certain mills in Germany during the years 1923 and 1924, and to determine the amounts of any such losses, and (b) to determine the total of the various amounts wrongfully paid out of the Trust of Germann & Co. while its property was being administered by the Alien Property Custodian.

SEC. 2. The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed (a) to credit the Trust of Germann & Co. with an amount equal to any amounts found by the Court of Claims under clause (b) of the first section of this act to have been wrongfully paid out of such trust, and to charge such sum against the German special-deposit account, created by section 4 of the Settlement of War Claims Act of 1928, or against any other funds or property of the Government of Germany or of nations of Germany in the possession or under the control of the Government of the United States or which may hereafter come into the possession or under the control of the Government of the United States, (b) to pay, to the Trust Association of H. Kempner, out of such special-deposit account or such other funds, the amount so credited to the Trust of Germann & Co. and so charged against such special-deposit account or such other funds, or so much thereof as does not exceed the amount of any losses found by the Court of Claims under clause (a) of the first section of this act to have been sustained by the Trust Association of H. Kempner: Provided, That such payment shall not be made unless and until such trust association executes and delivers to the said Trust of Germann & Co. a complete assignment of all claims and demands of the said Trust Association of H. Kempner against the Government of Germany and nationals of Germany arising out of the sale of such cotton during the years 1923 and 1924.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 2, line 6, strike out "Secretary of the Treasury" and insert "Alien Property Custodian."

Page 2, line 18, strike out "Trust Association of H. Kempner" and insert "Secretary of the Treasury."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. BLOOM asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD in two instances, in one to include a history of the Confederation Internationale Des Societies D'Auteurs et Compositeurs, which will hold its convention sessions at the Library of Congress in the city of Washington October 21 through October 26, 1946, and in the other to include an address by Ira A. Hirschman over the network of the Columbia Broadcasting System, on Saturday, July 13, 1946.

J. P. KERR AND ROBERT T. KERR

Mr. FERNANDEZ. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's desk the bill (H. R. 2093) for the relief of J. P. Kerr and Robert T. Kerr, with Senate amendments thereto, and concur in the Senate amendments.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendments, as follows:

Page 1, line 5, strike out "$9,618" and insert "$6,600."

Page 1, line 10, strike out "$9,618" and insert "$6,600."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Mexico?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, the Senate amendment cuts down the amount?

Mr. FERNANDEZ. That is correct.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Mexico?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendments were concurred in.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

WESLEY A. MANGELSDORF

Mr. FERNANDEZ. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's desk the bill (H. R. 2480) for the relief of Wesley A. Mangelsdorf, with Senate amendment thereto, and concur in the Senate amendment.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendment, as follows:

Page 1, line 5, strike out "$5,000" and insert "$9,000."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Mexico?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman explain this bill?

Mr. FERNANDEZ. In this case the Senate increased the amount from $6,000 to $9,000 after receiving a supplemental report from the Navy Department which clearly indicated that the man had been injured far more severely than the Navy thought when the first report was submitted.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman explain the nature of the case?

Mr. FERNANDEZ. This bill as passed by the House appropriated the sum of $5,000 to Wesley A. Mangelsdorf, of San Francisco, Calif., in full settlement of all claims against the United States for personal injuries, medical, and hospital expenses, and other losses sustained as a result of a collision between the car in which he was riding and a United States Coast Guard truck on the Bayshore Highway near Redwood, Calif., on March 9, 1944. The Senate after receiving a supplementary report from the Navy Department increased the sum to $9,000 and the Navy approved the increase. Your subcommittee considering the claim originally agree with the Senate amendment and request the House to concur in the amendment.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Mexico?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendment was concurred in.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

ALBERT WHILDEN

Mr. FERNANDEZ. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's desk the bill (H. R. 5093) to confer jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to hear, determine, and render judgment upon the claim of Albert Whilden, with a Senate amendment thereto, and concur in the Senate amendment.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendment, as follows:

Amend the tile so as to read: "An act for the relief of Albert Whilden."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Mexico?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, as I understand this is simply a change in name?

Mr. FERNANDEZ. It simply corrects the title.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I withdraw my reservation of objection, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Mexico?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendment was concurred in.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

THOMAS L. BRETT

Mr. FERNANDEZ. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's desk the bill (H. R. 6381) for the relief of Thomas L. Brett, with a Senate amendment thereto, and concur in the Senate amendment.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendment, as follows:

Page 1, line 6, strike out "$2,500" and insert "$1,000."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Mexico?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendment was concurred in.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

CAESAR HENRY

Mr. FERNANDEZ. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's desk the bill (H. R. 6399) for the relief of Caesar Henry, with a Senate amendment thereto, and concur in the Senate amendment.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendment, as follows:

Page 1, line 6, strike out "$5,000" and insert "$2,000."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Mexico?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendment was concurred in.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

AUTHORIZING THE LEASING OF INDIAN LANDS FOR BUSINESS

Mr. FERNANDEZ. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's desk the bill (H. R. 2586) to authorize the leasing of Indian lands for business, and for other purposes, with Senate amendments thereto, and concur in the Senate amendments.

The Clerk read the title of the bill:

The Clerk read the Senate amendments, as follows:

Page 1, line 6, after "lands", insert "situated within the State of Washington."

Amend the title so as to read: "An act to authorize the leasing of Indian lands situated within the State of Washington, for business and other purposes."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Mexico?

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman explain the nature of this legislation?

Mr. FERNANDEZ. Mr. Speaker, the bill authorizes the leasing of lands for periods not to exceed 25 years of unallotted or tribal lands for public, religious, educatonal, or business purposes. The Senate amendment makes the provision applicable only to Indian lands in the State of Washington. In asking to concur in the Senate amendment, the Committee on Indian Affairs no doubt believes that this is the best we can get at present. They probably believe that half a loaf is better than none. I do not know why the Senate adopted the amendment, and the report does not give any reason for it, unless it was thought best perhaps that the Indians in Washington should experiment and see how well they can get along with their lands before we extend the God-given right of life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness to Indians in general. In any event, the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs has requested that we ask the unanimous consent of the House to concur in the Senate amendment.

Mr. DE LACY. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield, was the committee unanimous in approval?

Mr. FERNANDEZ. Yes; the committee unanimously approved the bill, but now this is the best we can do. We are willing to take this now and see about the rest later.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Mexico?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendments were concurred in.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT

A message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House by Mr. Miller, one of his secretaries, who also informed the House that on the following dates the President approved and signed bills of the House of the following titles:

On July 31, 1946:

H. R. 5590. An act to provide for the uniform administration of efficiency ratings.

On August 1, 1946:

H. R. 1850. An act for the relief of Louise Zerweck;

H. R. 5311. An act to amend Revised Statutes 4921 (U. S. C. A., title 35, Patents, sec. 70), providing that damages be ascertained on the basis of compensation for infringement;

H. R. 5911. An act to establish an Office of Naval Research in the Department of the Navy; to plan, foster, and encourage scientific research in recognition of its paramount importance as related to the maintenance of future naval power, and the preservation of national security; to provide within the Department of the Navy a single office, which by contract and otherwise, shall be able to obtain, coordinate, and make available to all bureaus and activities of the Department of the Navy, world-wide scientific information and the necessary services for conducting specialized and imaginative research; to establish a Naval Research Advisory Committee consisting of persons preeminent in the fields of science and research, to consult with and advise the Chief of such office in matters pertaining to research; and

H. R. 6371. An act to amend certain provisions of the National Service Life Insurance Act of 1940, as amended, and for other purposes.

CITY OF ALBANY, N. Y.

Mr. BYRNE of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (S. 2332) to provide that the unexpended proceeds from the sale of 50-cent pieces, coined in commemoration of the two hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the founding of the city of Albany, N. Y., may be paid into the general fund of such city.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is their objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 2 of the act entitled "An act to authorize the coinage of 50-cent pieces in commemoration of the two hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the founding of the city of Albany, N. Y.," approved June 16, 1936, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following: "And unexpended proceeds may be paid by such committee to the city of Albany, N. Y., for deposit in the general fund of such city."

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EASTERN AND WESTERN CHEROKEES

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Indian Affairs be discharged from the further consideration of the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 381) directing the Comptroller General to restate the account of the Eastern and Western Cherokees under the treaty of 1846 rendered by him November 19, 1942, and give them the benefit of the law governing partial payments, and that the joint resolution be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arizona?

There was no objection.

GEORGE WASHINGTON MEMORIAL PARKWAY

Mr. HOLMES of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 2283) to amend the act entitled "An act for the acquisition, establishment, and development of the George Washington Memorial Parkway along the Potomac from Mount Vernon and Fort Washington to the Great Falls, and to provide for the acquisition of lands in the District of Columbia and the States of Maryland and Virginia requisite to the comprehensive park, parkway, and playground system of the National Capital," approved May 29, 1930.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman explain the bill?

Mr. HOLMES of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, this bill amends sections 1 (a) and 1 (b) of the George Washington Memorial Parkway Act of May 29, 1930 (46 Stat. 482), to eliminate from those sections so much of the language thereof as prohibits the expenditure by the United States of any money for the construction of the George Washington Memorial Parkway on the Maryland side of the Potomac.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. This merely authorizes the acquisition of additional property?

Mr. HOLMES of Massachusetts. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I withdraw my reservation of objection, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 1 (a) of the act entitled "An act for the acquisition, establishment, and development of the George Washingon Memorial Parkway along the Potomac from Mount Vernon and Fort Washington to the Great Falls, and to provide for the acquisition of lands in the District of Columbia and the States of Maryland and Virginia requisite to the comprehensive park, parkway, and playground system of the National Capital," approved May 29, 1930 (46 Stat. 482), is amended by striking out the third proviso and by striking out of the fourth proviso the words "and the construction of said roads."

SEC. 3. Section 1 (b) of such act is amended by striking out the last sentence thereof.

SEC. 3. So much of section 1 (b) of such act as precedes the first proviso thereof is amended to read as follows:

"(b) For the extension of Rock Creek Park into Maryland, as may be agreed upon between the National Capital Park and Planning Commission and the Maryland National Capital Park and Planning Commission, for the preservation of the flow of water in Rock Creek, for the extension of the Anacostia Park system up the valley of the Anacostia River, Indian Creek, Paint Branch and Little Paint Branch, the Northwest Branch and Sligo Creek; of the Oxon Run Parkway from the District of Columbia line to Marlboro Road; and of the George Washington Memorial Parkway up the valley of Cabin John Creek, Little Falls Branch, and Willet Run, as may be agreed upon between the National Capital Park and Planning Commission and the Maryland National Capital Park and Planning Commission, $1,500,000."

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

FIRE PROTECTION OF GOVERNMENT AND PRIVATE PROPERTY, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Mr. HEALY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (S. 2498) to provide for fire protection of Government and private property in and contiguous to the waters of the District of Columbia.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman explain the bill?

Mr. HEALY. This bill will make it possible for the Navy Department to transfer to the District of Columbia a fire boat which is now surplus to its needs.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I withdraw my reservation of objection, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in order to provide for fire protection of all Government and private property in and contiguous to the waters of the District of Columbia, the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, authorized to transfer, without exchange of funds, a fireboat of the YTB–225 type, excess to the Navy's needs, to the government of the District of Columbia, and the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby authorized to accept, operate, and maintain such fireboat, and to dispose of the obsolete fireboat now in their possession.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

JURY COMMISSIONERS, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Mr. HEALY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (S. 2125) to amend the act entitled "An act to establish a Code of Law for the District of Columbia," approved March 3, 1901, and the acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman explain the bill?

Mr. HEALY. Mr. Speaker, this bill concerns the reappointment of jury commissioners in the District of Columbia, and is the same bill that was discussed on the floor last Saturday. It makes possible the immediate reappointment of a jury commissioner whose term has expired. Under the present law 3 years must elapse before a commissioner may be reappointed.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I understand they get only $250 a year.

Mr. HEALY. The maximum salary for that position is $250 a year.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I withdraw my reservation of objection, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 198 of the act to establish a Code of Law for the District of Columbia, approved March 3, 1901, and the acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto, constituting the Code of Law for the District of Columbia, as amended, is hereby further amended by striking out therefrom the following sentence: "No person who has served as such Commissioner shall be eligible for reappointment within three years of the date of the expiration of his term of service."

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

REGULATING SALE OF MILK IN DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Mr. HEALY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (S. 2479) to amend the act entitled "an act to regulate within the District of Columbia the sale of milk, cream, and ice cream, and for other purposes," approved February 27, 1925.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, this is quite a technical bill and I would like to have the gentleman from California explain the bill.

Mr. HEALY. Mr. Speaker, this bill provides for an amendment of the act controlling the method of pasteurization of milk. The law as it now reads makes it possible for the dairy industries to use only the old-fashioned method of pasteurization which requires a period of 30 minutes' time. In recent years a new pasteurization method requiring only 15 seconds has been developed, but it cannot be used under the existing law. This bill has been approved by the Health Department of the District of Columbia, by the United States Public Health Service, the Bureau of the Budget, and the District of Columbia Commissioners.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the third paragraph of section 13 of the act entitled "An act to regulate within the District of Columbia the sale of milk, cream, and ice cream, and for other purposes," approved February 27, 1925, be amended to read as follows:

"The term 'pasteurized' as used in this act shall be held to mean the process of heating every particle of milk or milk products (1) to a temperature of not less than 143 degrees Fahrenheit and, if heated to not more than 159 degrees Fahrenheit holding at such temperature for at least 30 minutes, or (2) to a temperature of not less than 160 degrees Fahrenheit and holding at such temperature for at least 15 seconds."

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

A similar House bill (H. R. 7114) was laid on the table.

FEES IN DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Mr. HEALY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (S. 2408) to amend the act of February 9, 1907, as amended, with respect to certain fees.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman explain the bill?

Mr. HEALY. Mr. Speaker, nurses, in order to be eligible to practice their profession in the District of Columbia, must make application and pass an examination. At the present time the fee is $10. This bill will increase the fee to $15. The reason is that the present fee of $10 does not cover the cost of rendering this service to those who make application to practice the nursing profession.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Is that the only change?

Mr. HEALY. That is the only change.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the first sentence of section 4 of the act of February 9, 1907, entitled "An act to define the term 'registered nurse' and to provide for the registration of nurses in the District of Columbia," as amended (D. C. Code, sec. 2-404), is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 4. That every nurse desiring to register in the District of Columbia shall make application to the nurses' examining board for examination and registration, and at the time of making such application shall pay to the treasurer of said board $15."

SEC. 2. That the first sentence of section 9 of the act entitled "An act to define the term 'registered nurse' and to provide for the registration of nurses in the District of Columbia," as amended (D. C. Code, sec. 2-408), is amended by substituting, in lieu thereof, the following:

"SEC. 9. That all expenses incident to the execution of the provisions of this act shall be paid from fees collected (a) from schools of nursing, (b) from registration or reregistration of nurses, and (c) from the following services—

"(1) for repeat examinations of nurses;

"(2) for the evaluation of each high-school record of a candidate for admission to a school of nursing;

"(3) for verification of records;

"(4) for a duplicate certificate of registration upon proof acceptable to the nurses' examining board that the original certificate has been lost or destroyed;

"(5) for duplicate annual registration cards;

"(6) for mailing a certificate of registration a second time if no notification of change of address has been made; and

"(7) for proctoring examination for out-of-State applicants when the examination is held at a time other than the regular examination of the District of Columbia. The fees referred to in clause (c) shall be reasonable fees fixed by the nurses' examining board, subject to the approval of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia."

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

AUTHORITY OF PARK POLICE

Mr. HEALY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (S. 2220) to authorize the United States Park Police to make arrests within Federal reservations in the environs of the District of Columbia.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman explain the bill?

Mr. HEALY. Mr. Speaker, I will yield to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SMITH], who introduced the bill and who will explain it.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, the Park Police under the present law have no authority to make arrests on other Government reservations in the surrounding territory of the District of Columbia. In other words, they can make arrests on Mount Vernon Boulevard but they cannot make an arrest on the Pentagon grounds. This bill gives the police authority over all Government reservations.

Mr. O'HARA. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I yield.

Mr. O'HARA. Have there been any hearings on this bill?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. I do not think there have been any hearings. The bill was passed by the Senate and I was in hopes that the bill would go through without objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

Mr. O'HARA. Mr. Speaker, I object.

APPPOINTMENT OF JUDGES TO MUNICIPAL COURT, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Mr. HEALY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (S. 2374) to authorize the appointment of three additional judges of the municipal court for the District of Columbia and prescribe the qualifications of the judges of such court.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I think it is quite unlikely that this is so urgent a matter as has been claimed. We are being asked here to appoint three new judges, and they had not awakened to the fact that they needed these judges until several weeks ago. If they had needed three judges, I think they would have known of it some months ago. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I object.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES—RAILROAD UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE ACT

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States which was read by the Clerk:

To the House of Representatives:

I hereby request the return of H. R. 3420, a bill "to provide for refunds to railroad employees in certain cases so as to place the various States on an equal basis, under the Railroad Unemployment Insurance Act, with respect to contributions of employees," and my message of July 31 appertaining thereto.

HARRY TRUMAN.

THE WHITE HOUSE, August 1, 1946.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the request of the President will be complied with, and the Clerk will transmit the papers requested.

There was no objection.

Mr. DE LACY asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an excerpt.

Mr. SOMERS of New York asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a speech by the minority leader of the State of New York.

SPECIAL ORDER GRANTED

Mr. DE LACY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may address the House, at the conclusion of the legislative business and any other special orders today for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington?

There was no objection.

PETROL CORP.

Mr. SOMERS of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (H. R. 6112) for the relief of Petrol Corp.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman explain the bill?

Mr. SOMERS of New York. I intend to offer an amendment to the bill.

This bill deals with a small corporation, the Petrol Corp. of Pennsylvania. It was a corporation which in the last war was brought under the control of the Petroleum Administration. It had been doing a business of some proportions by serving the consuming trade. It was called upon to render such service under the Administration's new suggestions and had to go out and reequip itself for that work. Consequently, it suffered a great loss. The purpose of the bill is to give them an opportunity to state their case before the court.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I understand the amendment which the gentleman proposes to offer will simply send it to the Court of Claims.

Mr. SOMERS of New York. Yes.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. This simply gives the firm the right to go to the courts?

Mr. SOMERS of New York. Yes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Chairman of the Board of Reconstruction Finance Corporation be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed, for and on behalf of the United States of America, forthwith to enter into a written agreement with Petrol Corp., a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, which shall provide for final determination of the following question by an arbitration board composed of three members, one to be selected by the Chairman of the Board of Reconstruction Finance Corporation, one to be selected by Petrol Corp., and the third to be selected by the two thus chosen, under the provisions contained in sections 2, 5, and 7 of the United States Arbitration Act: "What amount, including interest, should be paid Petrol Corp. to compensate it equitably for excess costs and expenses it incurred, above its actual normal costs and expenses equitably determined, in helping to maintain supplies of petroleum products on the Atlantic coast from September 1, 1941, to October 10, 1945?"

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay Petrol Corp. from the general fund in the United States Treasury not otherwise appropriated such sum of money as may be necessary to pay the amount of the award as determined under section 1 hereof." The amount of such award shall be paid by the Secretary of the Treasury on the presentation of a copy of the award of said arbitration board, duly certified by the arbitrators, or a majority thereof.

Mr. SOMERS of New York. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SOMERS of New York: Strike out all after the enacting clauses in lines 1 and 2 in said bill, commencing with line 3 and ending with line 11 on page 1 of said bill, and commencing with line 1 and ending with line 13 on page 2 of said bill, and insert in lieu thereof the following: "That jurisdiction be, and the same is hereby, conferred upon the Court of Claims of the United States, notwithstanding any prior determinations, any statute of limitations, rights of appeal, releases or prior acceptance of partial payments, to hear, determine, and render judgment upon the claims of Petrol Corp. (a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania and having its main office in Philadelphia) against the United States for so much of the amount of its extra costs and expenses, with respect to wartime petroleum directives, regulations, recommendations and requests made by Government agencies and officials, in maintaining supplies of petroleum products in the Atlantic coast area for the period from September 1, 1941, to October 10, 1945, as has not previously been reimbursed to it.

"SEC. 2. In determination of such claims the United States shall be deemed to be legally obligated to reimburse Petrol Corp. for the amount by which the Court of Claims finds that such aggregate extra costs and expenses exceeded its like actual normal costs and expenses, as equitably determined by said court, less payments of such costs previously reimbursed to it.

"SEC. 3. Any suit brought under the provisions of this act shall be instituted within 1 year from the date of the enactment of this act.

"SEC. 4. From any decision or judgment rendered in any suit presented under the authority of this act, a write of certiorari to the Supreme Court of the United States may be applied for by either party thereto, as is provided by law in other cases."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to confer jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to hear, determine, and render judgment upon the claims of Petrol Corp."

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. CROSSER asked and was given permission to revise and extend the remarks he made on the bill, H. R. 1362, the retirement bill, and to extend his remarks in two other separate instances.

Mr. GORSKI asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a descriptive analysis of the Wheeler-Reed bill which appeared in the Wall Street Journal of Monday, July 29, 1946.

Mr. KELLEY of Pennsylvania asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an editorial on the Conciliation Service.

Mr. HUBER and Mr. ROONEY asked and were given permission to extend their own remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. FERNANDEZ (at the request of Mr. GORE) was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an editorial.

Mr. GORE. Mr. Speaker, my distinguished colleague from Tennessee [Mr. DAVIS] has an estimate of the cost of extending his remarks in the RECORD on the subject, Profit Enhancement Through Compensation Incentive in the amount of $160. Notwithstanding the estimate, I ask unanimous consent that he may be allowed to make the extension.

The SPEAKER. Notwithstanding the excess, without objection, the extension may be made.

There was no objection.

Mr. PATTERSON (at the request of Mr. DOYLE) was given permission to extend his remarks and include a communication.

Mr. DOYLE asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include extraneous matter.

Mrs. SMITH of Maine asked and was given permission to revise and extend her remarks and also to extend her remarks in the RECORD and include an editorial from the Christian Science Monitor.

Mr. GAMBLE asked and was given permission to extend his own remarks in the RECORD in two separate instances, including editorials and news articles.

SPECIAL ORDER GRANTED

Mr. HUBER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 5 minutes today at the conclusion of the other special orders.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

CONGRESSIONAL WAR PARENTS' ASSOCIATION

Mrs. BOLTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mrs. BOLTON. Mr. Speaker, on July 27 I was granted unanimous consent which I shall not use to insert into the permanent RECORD of that date the list of the membership of the Congressional War Parents' Association, the roster of their children in the armed forces, and the list of memorial plaques presented by the association to those Members of the Congress whose sons made the supreme sacrifice. I want to call attention to the fact that an additional plaque was given to the widow of one of our own colleagues, Vincent F. Harrington, who resigned from the House of Representatives on September 6, 1942, and became a major in the Army Air Forces. He died while serving in England November 29, 1943.

The distinguished senior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES], secretary of the association, is inserting the pertinent data in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of this date. This makes possible the printing of a full record as a Senate document, this second insertion constituting a supplement to Senate Document No. 94, entitled "America's Fighting Congress," which was printed during the first session of the Seventy-eighth Congress. Members will be able to secure copies through the Senate document room.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. SUNDSTROM asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD on veterans' housing and include a newspaper article.

Mr. RICH (at the request of Mr. HOWELL) was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include copy of an address delivered by Mr. J. P. Seiberling.

Mr. HOWELL asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include copy of a resolution introduced today.

Mr. McDONOUGH asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a statement by former Senator Guy M. Gillette.

Mr. VURSELL asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include copy of a letter.

HOUSING

Mr. GEARHART. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. GEARHART. Mr. Speaker, I hold in my hand a clipping from a central California newspaper which tells a most discouraging story of the grossly inadequate housing situation in and adjacent to the city of Fresno in that State. As this article clearly reveals, housing conditions in the San Joaquin Valley of California are rapidly deteriorating, worsing to a situation that must be described today as shocking.

As revealed in the photographs which illustrate this article, 12 people—4 families, if you please—are crowded into 1 five-room cottage; a mother and 3 small children are crowded into 2 small attic rooms; 11 people, 3 of them war veterans, are crowded into a brush and canvas hut on an irrigation canal bank; a wounded veteran, his wife, and small child live—if it can be called that—in a 9 by 11 foot storeroom on an alley; another war veteran and his wife and small daughter have been compelled to seek shelter in a garage behind a church. According to this shocking article, over 1,200 are today compelled to seek shelter in buildings, huts, and shacks that all would agree are utterly unfit for human habitation, this under conditions that would be considered intolerable in normal times.

Day before yesterday the House Committee on Banking and Currency, after careful and most sympathetic consideration of the housing problem, finally determined that, under legislation already on the statute books, the executive departments were possessed with ample authority to meet and solve the emergency housing problem—if they would but grapple with it forthrightly. If this is true, Mr. Speaker, why has this intolerable situation not been corrected long ago? Why have citizens of this great Republic, many of them its valiant defenders in the war just triumphantly concluded, been compelled to find shelter in hovels utterly unfit for occupancy by human beings—when, as I said before, it has been found as a fact by the members of this great legislative committee that the executive departments have long been possessed of sufficient authority under legislation already on the statute books to squarely meet the problem?

If it is just a case of cutting the red tape—let us cut it; slash it and slash it right now. Mr. Speaker, this is an emergency of the first order. It will not brook any delays. Dilly-dallying around cannot be further tolerated. The Nation is demanding results—and results right now.

Let the housing authorities take heed, reorganize themselves, coordinate their efforts—and get going. The American people are demanding much more than the promises they have been getting. They want houses, homes, decent places in which to live. And in the pursuit of this objective they are entitled to the solicitous and—I must add—the immediate consideration of every official of the Federal Government who can contribute anything, however slight, to the ending of this impossible situation with which we are now confronted.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. BYRNES of Wisconsin asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD in two instances.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD in two instances and to include certain tables, newspapers and extracts.

Mr. SCHWABE of Oklahoma asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD in four instances and include excerpts.

Mrs. LUCE (at the request of Mr. TALBOT) was given permission to extend her own remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. JENKINS asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an article written by a very distinguished clergyman of his home city.

Mr. WEICHEL asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include copy of a bill.

Mr. DIRKSEN asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include editorials.

Mr. SCHWABE of Missouri asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a short magazine article.

Mr. JUDD asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an article by Felix Morley.

Mr. SPRINGER asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. ARNOLD (at the request of Mr. ELLSWORTH) was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a newspaper article.

Mr. ELLSWORTH asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. STEFAN asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include three letters.

Mr. GAVIN asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an editorial from the Bridgeport Post.

Mr. ANGELL asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a letter.

Mr. BEALL asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an editorial from the Cumberland Daily News.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD in two instances and include a statement by the Comptroller General and a newspaper article.

Mr. HAYS asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include certain information on European relief supplied by the International Red Cross.

THE AMERICAN PEOPLE SHOULD BE RESPECTED BY THEIR GOVERNMENT—NOT INSPECTED

Mr. RAMEY. Mr. Speaker, yesterday I had a special order of 40 minutes, but a motion to adjourn prevented my taking it. I therefore ask unanimous consent that that speech may be inserted at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAMEY. Mr. Speaker, the speech I am about to begin is prompted by a long-held conviction, namely, that the American people should be respected, not inspected, by their Government. Prompted thusly, I might also add that this speech has been hastened by a letter that I received the other day from a constituent. It seems that the writer included a check for $25 which he had sent to his Aunt Hattie out in Indiana in the list of expenses, donations, and so forth, which are deductible from income taxes. Aunt Hattie, however, was not deductible, although my constituent honestly thought so. So after paying his taxes, with the $25 check deducted, he settled down to earn more money so that he could pay next year's taxes, which he did. Then another year went by and he again paid his taxes. And again he went back to work to earn money to buy food to give him strength to earn money to pay taxes. The year was about half gone when one day the telephone rang and a voice at the other end of the wire asked my friend to drop by an office about a little tax matter. So my friend went.

Do you know what had happened? Well, I will tell you. The majestic Government of the United States had discovered that $25 check given 3 years ago to Aunt Hattie. Moreover, the Government had had its Indiana man check into the matter, and that worthy discovered that Aunt Hattie had a bankroll of her own. She was not a dependent and she had never needed the money. My friend explained that he does not know just why he gave his Aunt Hattie that $25, but he did. All of a sudden, he said, some 3 years before it came over him—"Why not give Aunt Hattie $25." And he did. The check was dated on Christmas Eve and that may account for the matter. So my friend, after talking to the man who called him, and looking up his own records, and going back to his office and then returning, paid the Government $1.37 on back taxes which represent the "breakage" as they say at the race tracks, on the $25 that Aunt Hattie got. Meanwhile it had cost him $4.60 in time lost, and heaven knows how much it cost the Government, checking up and verifying the facts of life about Aunt Hattie over in Indiana. It must have cost the two of them—my friend and the Government—about $15 to collect $1.37, which is now marked "paid," and the incident closed. Everybody took a licking except Aunt Hattie.

Now, as a matter of fact, I have a tremendous respect for the Internal Revenue Bureau. It, the Veterans Bureau, and the Weather Bureau are the most respectable agencies of government that we have. I would not for the world belittle the officials of the Revenue Department. Because, I feel, that if they work hard enough and on the right cases they will get many times $1.37 which is pretty close to pin money in my home town, and practically a deficit—it is so small—in Washington. But my point is that if this fine bureau—the Internal Revenue Bureau—can inspect the people in this fashion, what do you think happens when other lesser, newer and useless governmental agencies get on a prying, spying binge?

My text, therefore, is—the American people should be respected by their Government, not inspected. Carthago delenda est, I say to myself. This has got to stop.

Speaking quite seriously, it is a fact that especially since the New Deal came into power and the Government pay-roll swelled to several million people, there has been an increasing disrespect for the people themselves, and an uncontrollable desire to inspect on the part of the nonelected. They know they do not live in a gold fish bowl.

This contempt for the public takes two forms, it seems to me.

First of all, there is the condescending, patronizing attitude toward the people. Many of our jobholders, like the movie men who make all pictures so that they can be understood by the worst of the cretins, assume that they are dealing with 140,000,000 people, the smartest of whom are duller and more stupid than the average feeble minded case in our State institutions. Everybody, they seem to say to themselves, is dumb but us.

When they speak to you they do it as though they were saying "I have generously waived my rights of rank, and am willing to hold conversation with you. Now, listen to me." Then the monologue begins. This, of course, is due in great measure to the fact that they have been in office too long. Of course, there are many fine men and women on these jobs, fine as individuals, but when they act officially and together, they become self-righteous or better than thou. You know that in every town the finest fellows are members of the better than thou society, but when they get together something freezes over all of them. Their state becomes something of a disease and they sit together once a week and reflect on how important they are. There is also a strange feeling which takes possession of appointed Government employees and gives them an air of proprietorship, and an attitude of condescension and contemptuous and reluctant tolerance toward everybody else. Their manners would be insolent in a bishop speaking to a black beetle.

So much for that. What is the second occupational ailment? I will try to define it. It is the fascination that comes over every person who gets an appointive political job, which fascination directs him to look into other people's affairs. They are all seized, it seems, by an uncontrollable desire to do something prying, sneaking, meddlesome, and critical. This, of course, is partly due to the Mrs. Grundy in all of us. Mrs. Grundy, you will remember, watched other people's business. The very name came to be proverbial for that portion of society whose opinion as to the proprieties is narrowly conventional. Acting clandestinely, under false pretenses, and on specious information, these job holders become officiously intrusive. They are furtive, underhand, craven, stealthy, smirking, surreptitious, hyprocritical. They are first cousins to the stool pigeon, and they seem to like the work.

It is ironic that when a man becomes fascinated by the job of investigating and prying he also develops a devotion to duty which more respectable hobbies seemingly do not beget. A man can have a habit of going about and doing good. Sometimes he has relapses. A man may suddenly espouse the Golden Rule as a precept of life. He gets tired of it, and becomes acquisitive again. A man may take a sincere oath never to bore anybody with a speech, but after he has lived up to it for a few months or sometimes a few years, he starts broadcasting again. But when a man becomes bent on inspection, he is incurable and no dipsomaniac is more devoted to the bottle than he to the peephole. Here, Javert, the insatiable cop of Victor Hugo's Miserables, seems to be the model. Javert was the very incarnation of devotion to duty, fictionally, but he was an unstable character compared to some of our inspectioneers in government.

So, we have an aggregation of men and women, too long in office, influenced by the Grundy complex, and spurred on by the drama of Javert, who have made what they hope is a lifetime career of inspecting the people. Our people do not like to be inspected. We are willing to enlist and go to war, we are willing to pay taxes to prevent poverty and to build public improvements, we are willing to join the line in front of the tax window, or the theater window, or the grandstand gate, or the nylon counter, and patiently await our turn. But we are not willing to be checked up and inspected every 5 minutes of the day. We do not like to have our blood tested and we do not like to be finger-printed. Yet, to this we have submitted all these years. An explosion is likely to occur. Like the late Oliver Hereford, we are coming to the point at which the desire to throw a raw egg into an electric fan is well-nigh irresistible.

The New Deal appointees in the various bureaus know our heights and weights, our ages, how many children we have, what our parents died of and at what age. How much we earn. How much we give away, if any. The type of blood which flows somewhat hesitatingly in our veins. The motor number on our car as well as the number of the license tag. What are our favorite newspapers. What radio programs we listen to. Whether we have fascist or communistic tendencies. How much canned goods we have in the pantry. Our social security numbers. How much life insurance we have, and how much we have borrowed on it. Our draft numbers. And how many suits of clothes we own, if any, other than the one we have on. Would you like to know how much clothing there is stored away in moth balls? How many trees in the parks? Our Government can tell you. For our Government has made a census and asked questions, counted, and found out.

Knowing all these things, you would think they would be satisfied. But they are not. I am told on good authority that the Government Printing Office has at least a dozen questionnaire jobs on the presses ready to be mailed at once. Perhaps they will not be mailed until after election. What shall we do about it, my friends? As for me, I say Carthage must be destroyed. I will continue to claim that the people should be respected, not inspected, by the Government.

The first Republican State convention was held at Jackson, Michigan, on July 6, 1854. The main issue was the protection of basic human rights. Under inspection by our Government, the basic human rights of the individual are invaded. When the Government respects its people the individual becomes free—happy. The Government gives him recognition, not serfdom. Inspection by Government breeds mental anarchy. When the Government respects its people, the people respond by good works and honesty. People are inherently honest. When you officially distrust them, instinctively they rebel. Revolutions are not created by the common people. Oppression by Government causes revolutions.

The American people must be respected by their Government, not inspected.

SPECIAL ORDER GRANTED

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House today for 5 minutes after other special orders and to include as a part of my remarks a letter from Dr. Klotznick of the Prosthetic Appliances Advisory Commission.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

KARL E. BOND

Mr. FERNANDEZ submitted a conference report and statement on the bill (H. R. 783) for the relief of Karl E. Bond.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. O'HARA asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD in three instances and include articles in each.

Mr. RANDOLPH asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD in two instances, and include in one a list of votes he cast in the House.

Mr. SABATH asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD in two instances; to include in one an editorial, and in the other a letter.

BROOM MANUFACTURERS CHISEL FARMERS

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

There was no objection.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, it would seem that during these perilous times, when every effort should be made to get the country back to full production and to make certain that the farmers secure reasonable prices for their farm commodities, that too many manufacturers and others are attempting to take advantage of the present situation to chisel, browbeat, and to force down the price of everything that the farmer has to sell, while the price of living and the cost of labor continues to mount higher and higher.

As an example, the broom manufacturers are now making a desperate attempt to chisel the broomcorn growers of Oklahoma. Before OPA went out the ceiling on broomcorn was $300 a ton. In fact, it has been at $300 a ton for more than 3 years, although the price of growing broomcorn has constantly mounted. During the past several weeks, with OPA in the balance, the normal price of broomcorn went from $375 to $400 a ton, which is a reasonable price considering the increased cost of labor that the farmer must pay for growing same. Now, with controls still off, buyers are telling farmers the price is back to $300. Broomcorn farmers cannot pay 80 to 90 cents an hour for labor and make a profit at this reduced price.

Farmers of Oklahoma and the Nation surprised the world in the matter of production during the war, although handicapped by lack of manpower, the greatly increased cost of farm labor, when they could not secure labor at any price. American farmers actually were able to increase production and thus not only feed our own armed forces but help feed armies of the Allied Nations. Except for the heroic efforts of farmers in the matter of production, which is admitted by all, we could not have begun to win the war. For the broom manufacturers now to attempt to chisel and browbeat the broomcorn growers is inexcusable and should not be tolerated.

CAMPAIGN EXPENDITURES

Mr. BONNER. Mr. Speaker, from the Committee on Accounts, I submit a privileged resolution (H. Res. 750) and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That there shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House not to exceed $25,000 for the expenses of the select committee appointed under authority of House Resolution 645 to investigate the campaign expenditures of the various candidates for the House of Representatives in both parties.

SEC. 2. That the official committee reporters may be used at all hearings held in the District of Columbia who are not otherwise officially engaged.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

VETERANS' ADMINISTRATION

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (H. R. 7130) to authorize the Veterans' Administration to reimburse State and local agencies for expenses incurred in rendering services in connection with the administration of certain training programs for veterans, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I hope the gentleman will explain the bill.

Mr. RANKIN. A similar bill has passed the Senate, and I am going to substitute the Senate bill. It was taken up before the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation one day this week and it was agreed to unanimously.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, if the gentlewoman will yield, may I ask the gentleman to explain this legislation?

Mr. RANKIN. Authority for Veterans' Administration to reimburse State and local agencies for expenses incurred in rendering services in connection with the administration of certain training programs for veterans; to put ceiling on total amount of income plus subsistence allowance for training on-the-job programs; provision for veteran to work way through college and earn a reasonable amount without losing right to subsistence allowance; and setting up of standards "for other training on-the-job."

The bill was introduced at the request of General Bradley, Administrator of Veterans' Affairs after clearance by the Bureau of the Budget.

The purposes of the bill are: First, to give authority to the Veterans' Administration to reimburse State and local agencies for expenses incurred in rendering services in connection with the administration of certain training programs for veterans; second, to place a ceiling on the total amount of compensation for productive labor and subsistence allowances that may be received by veterans taking on-the-job training; three, a clarification of the law to permit a man to help work his way through college and earn a reasonable amount without losing his right to subsistence allowances; and four, the procuring of standards "for other training on the job."

The Veterans' Administration has been concerned for some time about the possible abuses of the program in connection with training on the job. Reports have been made to the effect that abuses are being practiced in this field. The number of veterans training on the job have been increased from 24,627 on January 1, 1946, to 228,523 on May 31, 1946. A check of two groups of trainees of 5,000 each shows that approximately 26 percent are receiving wages or salary, not including subsistence allowance, of $150 or more per month and of this number approximately 6 percent are receiving $200 or more a month. It is believed that Congress did not intend that the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs should pay full subsistence allowance to a veteran who is receiving compensation for productive labor in such amounts and the provisions of section 2 of this bill are designed to correct this situation by providing that the rate of subsistence allowance plus compensation received for a veteran without dependents shall not exceed $175 per month and one with dependents not in excess of $200 per month.

Section 2 of the bill also contains a provision to correct the present situation where a veteran who is pursuing a course of education or training under the Servicemen's Readjustment Act of 1944, as amended, in a school, college, or university and is engaged in full-time gainful employment not a part of his course or training, so that he may receive subsistence allowance. To prevent this veteran from receiving subsistence allowance and at the same time to allow it to a veteran who is in training on the job and receiving compensation for productive labor as above outlined is unjust and should be remedied as it will be by the approval of this bill. The adoption of the standards as proposed by section 3 of the enclosed draft to be applied by all States in approving establishments as qualified to furnish "other training on the job" and to implement the authority by which States and local agencies may be reimbursed is designed to protect the interest of the veterans and bring about sound administration without interference in any way with the standards set up for apprenticeship courses in the various States.

No information is available to indicate the extent to which State and local agencies would incur expenses in connection with the activity contemplated by the bill and the extent to which it would be necessary to reimburse them. Neither is it possible to approximate the amount of subsistence allowances which would be paid to veterans who are employed other than in connection with their college courses or the amount withheld or reduced in the cases of those veterans who are compensated while training on the job. However, it is thought by placing a ceiling on the amount of income plus subsistence allowances the amount saved thereby should considerably offset the expenses involved in other provisions of the bill. A reasonable estimate of savings would be $5,000,000 per month on the subsistence allowance ceilings, plus the savings from the standards provided.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I wish to say that a rule was granted on this bill after a hearing was had.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a similar Senate bill, S. 2477, be considered in lieu of the House bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 3 of Public Law No. 16, Seventy-eighth Congress, as amended by section 401 of the Servicemen's Readjustment Act of 1944, is amended by inserting at the end thereof a new sentence as follows: "Any such appropriation shall also be available for use by the Administrator in reimbursing State and local agencies for reasonable expenses incurred by them in (1) rendering necessary services in ascertaining the qualifications of industrial establishments for furnishing on-the-job training to veterans under the provisions of part VIII of such regulation, and in the supervision of industrial establishments furnishing such training, or (2) furnishing, at the request of the Administrator, any other services or facilities in connection with the administration of programs for training on the job under such provisions, or (3) furnishing, at the request of the Administrator, information concerning educational opportunities available in schools and colleges."

SEC. 2. Paragraph 6 of part VIII of Veterans Regulation No. 1 (a) as amended, is hereby amended to read as follows:

"6. While enrolled in and pursuing a course under this part, such person, upon application to the Administrator, shall be paid a subsistence allowance of $65 per month, if without a dependent or dependents, or $90 per month, if he has a dependent or dependents, including regular holidays and leave not exceeding 30 days in a calendar year. Such person attending a course on a part-time basis, and such person receiving compensation for productive labor whether performed as part of their apprentice or other training on the job at institutions, business, or other establishments, or otherwise, shall be entitled to receive such lesser sums, if any, as subsistence or dependency allowances, as may be determined by the Administrator: Provided, That in no event shall the rate of such allowance plus the compensation received exceed $175 per month for a veteran without a dependent or $200 per month if he has a dependent or dependents."

SEC. 3. Paragraphs 11 of part VIII of Veterans Regulation No. 1 (a) is hereby amended, to read as follows:

"11. (a) As used in this part, the term 'educational or training institutions' shall include all public or private elementary, secondary, and other schools furnishing education for adults, business schools and colleges, scientific and technical institutions, colleges, vocational schools, junior colleges, teachers colleges, normal schools, professional schools, universities, and other educational institutions, and shall also include business or other establishments providing apprentice or other training on the job, including those under the supervision of an approved college or university or any State department of education, or any State apprenticeship agency or State board of vocational education, or any State apprenticeship council or the Federal Apprentice Training Service established in accordance with Public Law No. 308, Seventy-fifth Congress, or any agency in the executive branch of the Federal Government authorized under other laws to supervise such training.

"(b) As used in this part the term 'Other training on the job' shall include courses offered by establishments approved by the appropriate agency of the State or the Administrator whenever such courses of training on the job are furnished in accordance with the following provisions:

"1. Any establishment desiring to undertake an on-the-job training program will be required to submit to the appropriate State approving agency a written application setting forth the course of training for each job for which a veteran is to be trained. The written application covering the training program will include the following:

"a. Title and description of the specific job objective for which the veteran is to be trained.

"b. Length of the training period.

"c. Schedule listing various operations for major kinds of work or tasks to be learned and showing, for each, job operations or work, tasks to be performed, and the approximate length of time to be spent on each operation or task.

"d. Wage or salary to be paid at the beginning of the training program, at each successive step in the program, and at the completion of training.

"e. Entrance wage or salary paid by the establishment to employees already trained in the kind of work for which the veteran is to be trained.

"f. Number of hours of supplemental instructions required.

"2. The appropriate approving agency of the State or the Administrator may approve the application of the establishment when such establishment is found upon investigation to have met or made provision for meeting the following criteria:

"a. The training content of the program is adequate to qualify the veteran for appointment to the job for which he is to be trained.

"b. There is reasonable certainty that the job for which the veteran is to be trained will be available to him at the end of the training period.

"c. The job is one in which progression and appointment to the next higher classification are based upon skills learned through organized training on the job and not on such factors as length of service and normal turn-over.

"d. The wages to be paid the veteran for each successive period of training are not less than those customarily paid in the establishment and the community to a learner in the same job and who is not a veteran and are in conformity with State and Federal laws and applicable bargaining agreements.

"e. The job customarily requires a period of training of not less than 3 months and not more than 2 years of full-time training.

"f. The length of the training period is no longer than that customarily required by the establishment and other establishments in the community to provide the trainee with the required skills, arrange for the acquiring of job knowledge, technical information, and other facts which the trainee will need to learn in order to become competent on the job for which he is being trained.

"g. Provision is made for related instruction for the individual veteran who may need it.

"h. There is in the establishment adequate space, equipment, instructional material, and instructor personnel to provide satisfactory training on the job.

"i. Adequate records are kept to show the progress made by the veteran toward his job objective and a periodic report showing the conduct and progress made in the course of training on the job will be provided for the Veterans' Administration.

"j. Appropriate credit is given the veteran for previous job experience, whether in the military service or elsewhere, his beginning wage adjusted to the level to which such credit advances him and his training period shortened accordingly. No course of training will be considered bona fide if given to a veteran who is already qualified by training and experience for the job objective.

"k. A copy of the training program as approved by the State agency is provided to the veteran and to the Veterans' Administration by the employer.

"l. Upon completion of the training the veteran is given a certificate by the employer indicating the length and type of training provided and that the veteran has completed the course of training on the job satisfactorily.

"3. The Veterans' Administration is not authorized to award the benefits under this part, if it is found by the Administrator that the course of apprentice training or other training on the job fails to meet the requirements of this paragraph."

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

A similar House bill (H. R. 7130) was laid on the table.

REMOVING LIMITATIONS ON AMOUNT OF DEATH COMPENSATION OR PENSION PAYABLE TO WIDOWS AND CHILDREN OF CERTAIN DECEASED VETERANS

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (S. 2100) to remove the limitations on the amount of death compensation or pension payable to widows and children of certain deceased veterans.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, this is a particularly worthy measure, because up to now a widow could receive compensation for no more than four children, and this takes away the limitation on the number of children. I know in my own district there are widows who have 8, 9, or 10 children.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman explain the bill?

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, the bill would remove the aggregate monthly limitation on death compensation and pension for widows and children. Under existing law in wartime service-connected death cases the aggregate monthly limitation as to widows and children is $100; in peacetime service-connected death cases the limitation is $75; in World War I and II non-service-connected death cases the top limitation is $74 for widows and children. Dependent parents in service-connected death cases receive compensation at full rates, there being no limitation as to aggregate monthly amount affecting them.

In order to establish uniformity the bill also removes the aggregate monthly limitation under Veterans Regulation 1 (a), part III, paragraph III, which pertains to a very small number of nonservice-connected death cases involving widows and children of the Spanish-American War. There is no aggregate monthly limitation under existing law pertaining to wars prior to April 21, 1898. The service pensions laws pertaining to non-service-connected death of veterans of the Spanish-American War including the Boxer Rebellion and Philippine Insurrection under which practically all widows and children of such veterans receive benefits do not contain any aggregate monthly limitation.

The bill will benefit only those service-connected cases where there is a widow and four or more children.

The Veterans' Administration favors the provisions of the bill in its present form and the Bureau of the Budget states there would be no objection to removing the top limitation as to wartime or peacetime service-connected cases, but as to non-service-connected cases it is stated that it should be considered as not being in accord with the program of the President.

On the question of removing the top limitation on nonservice-connected death cases for widows and children there would be a comparatively small number of cases affected thereby at slight additional cost and to allow limitation on nonservice-connected cases only would work hardship and inequalities as to this group as distinguished from the other groups.

In non-service-connected death cases the limitation would affect the widow with eight or more children only and in cases where payments are made to children, there being no widow, it would be limited only in cases involving 13 or more children.

An estimated number of 2,000 cases of deceased veterans at an estimated cost of $264,000 the first year would be affected by this legislation.

The purpose sought to be accomplished when the top limitation was placed on the amount of pension payable in death cases was originally established has long since lost its significance and it is earnestly requested that this measure receive immediate approval.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Under this bill there must be more than four children before they can receive any additional benefits?

Mr. RANKIN. Yes.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. This simply means that if there are eight children you take care of the additional four children?

Mr. RANKIN. Yes.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. The present law would take care of only four?

Mr. RANKIN. The present law limits it to four. Very few cases would be covered under this bill.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I withdraw my reservation of objection, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the following acts or parts of acts, which limit the total amount of death compensation or pension payable to widows and children of certain deceased veterans, are hereby repealed:

(a) The last sentence of subsection (a) of section 14 and the last sentence of subsection (b) of section 14 of the act entitled "An act to provide more adequate and uniform administrative provisions in veterans' laws pertaining to compensation, pension, and retirement pay payable by the Veterans' Administration, and for other purposes," approved July 13, 1943 (57 Stat. 554).

(b) Subsection (b) of section 2 of the act entitled "An act to compensate widows and children of persons who died while receiving monetary benefits for disabilities directly incurred in or aggravated by active military or naval service in the World War," approved June 28, 1934, as amended (58 Stat. 804).

SEC. 2. Subparagraph (b) of paragraph III of part III of Veterans Regulation 1 (a), which limits the total amount of death compensation or pension payable to widows and children of deceased veterans of the Spanish American War, the Boxer Rebellion, or the Philippine Insurrection, is hereby repealed.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. CANFIELD asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a radio address delivered at Teeterboro, N. J., today by Lt. Gen. Carl A. Spaatz, commanding general of the Army Air Forces, in connection with Air Forces Day.

RECONSTRUCTION FINANCE CORPORATION

Mr. JENSEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD and include the report of the House Expenditures Committee on the Comptroller General's interim report on the audit of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa?

There was no objection.

Mr. JENSEN. Mr. Speaker, in compliance to the Government Corporations Control Act of 1945, the General Accounting Office, under the able direction of our former colleague, the Honorable Lindsay Warren, Comptroller, audited the books of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and issued an interim report of their findings. This report was criticized to some degree by the RFC officials.

The Expenditures Committee of the House made an investigation as to the accuracy of the Comptroller's report and submitted the following report regarding same:

REPORT OF HOUSE EXPENDITURES COMMITTEE ON COMPTROLLER GENERAL'S INTERIM REPORT ON AUDIT OF RFC

JULY 31, 1946.

Mr. MANASCO, from the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments, submitted the following report:

The Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments, to whom was referred the letter of the Comptroller General of the United States to the Speaker, dated June 19, 1946, printed as House Document 674, submits the following report with reference to such letter and the matters connected therewith:

On June 17, 1946, the Director, Corporation Audits Division of the General Accounting Office, addressed a letter to the Board of Directors of Reconstruction Finance Corporation stating that the Division had found such inadequacies and other deficiencies in the accounting function of the Corporation and its subsidiaries and affiliated Corporations that it would be impossible to make a satisfactory audit of the Corporation's affairs for the year ended June 30, 1945, and that this might also prove true with respect to the year ended June 30, 1946.

Concurrently with the delivery of this letter to the Board of Directors of RFC, the Comptroller General transmitted copies to the Congress as an interim report under section 5 of the act of February 24, 1945 (59 Stat. 6). See House Document No. 674, Seventy-ninth Congress.

The Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments, to which this letter was referred, opened hearings on July 2, 1946. Mr. Frank H. Weitzel, assistant to the Comptroller General, and Messrs. T. Coleman Andrews, CPA director; Howard W. Bordner, CPA deputy director; and Theodore Herz, CPA assistant director, of the Corporation Audits Division of the General Accounting Office, appeared and testified on behalf of the Comptroller General. On July 10, 1946, Mr. Charles B. Henderson, chairman of the board of directors, and Mr. Henry A. Mulligan, director and treasurer, of RFC, appeared with a number of officers and employees of RFC and testified on behalf of the Corporation. After full consideration the committee finds as follows:

1. That the accounting system of RFC covering its nonlending activities is inadequate and otherwise deficient, as reported by the Comptroller General. Notwithstanding their prepared statements, the officials of the Corporation, when questioned by the committee, made admissions which confirmed the findings and opinions of the auditors. They further admitted that they were months behind in their account keeping of nonlending activities.

2. That accounting is one of the most important responsibilities of management and that RFC thus far has failed to discharge this responsibility satisfactorily or to recognize its full extent. This failure undoubtedly was due in part to the exigencies of war, but this may not be accepted as full justification. The continuing lack of adequate accounting control of its war activities from their inception down to date may render the Corporation forever unable to give full financial account of some of these activities.

3. That a satisfactory audit of a corporation's affairs cannot be made unless the corporation's accounting is adequate, accurate, and up to date. It is the duty of auditors only to review complete accounting data and no part of their duty to undertake accomplishment of the accounting function or otherwise relieve management of its responsibility therefor. Adequacy of accounting implies the establishment of procedures that will assure timely, orderly, and accurate recording in books of account of all assets, liabilities, capital, income, and expense, not merely cash receipts and disbursements, and timely preparation of statements from the accounts that show how the corporations' capital is being employed and afford the directors and managers of the corporations and the Congress a clear basis for operating and policy decisions. The committee recognizes that accounting is not the sole objective of administration, but it believes that the Congress has a right to expect the accounting of the Government's corporations to be equal to, if not better than, the best found in private corporations.

4. That the letter to the board of directors of RFC was framed with restraint and fairness, and as indicated by this letter as well as by those who appeared before the committee for the General Accounting Office, the attitude of that office toward the Corporation is one of objectivity and desire to be constructively helpful.

5. That the Comptroller General acted with propriety and in keeping with the requirements of the law in transmitting to the Congress immediately a copy of the letter of June 17, 1946, to the board of directors of RFC.

6. That RFC should accept the proffered aid of the auditors and their recommendations.

COAST GUARD

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (S. 2256) to amend the Servicemen's Readjustment Act of 1944.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman explain the bill?

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, in time of peace the Coast Guard operates under the Treasury Department, in time of war, or when the President shall so direct, it operates as a part of the Navy. While operating as part of the Navy, the authority contained in section 301 of the Servicemen's Readjustment Act of 1944, with respect to former personnel of the Coast Guard, was exercised by the Secretary of the Navy. However, by Executive order the Coast Guard was returned to the jurisdiction of the Treasury Department on December 28, 1945, and the functions to be performed by section 301 of the Servicemen's Readjustment Act are presently authorized to be performed by the Secretary of the Treasury with respect to former personnel of the Coast Guard. This authority will continue during the First War Powers Act of 1941. However, after the expiration of this act no authority exists to review the discharges or dismissals of former personnel of the Coast Guard and it is believed that they should have the same right to review of their discharges or dismissals as former personnel of the other branches of service.

This situation was not contemplated at the time the Servicemen's Readjustment Act of 1944 was considered by the Congress and it is a provision that should be made to place personnel of the Coast Guard on a parity during peacetime with the rest of the armed forces.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 301 of the Servicemen's Readjustment Act of 1944 (58 Stat. 286) is amended by changing the period at the end of the section to a colon and by adding the following: "And provided further, That the authority conferred upon the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy by this section shall vest in and be exercised by the Secretary of the Treasury, at such times as the Coast Guard is operating under the Treasury Department, with respect to the discharge or dismissal of former personnel of the Coast Guard, and that the findings of boards established pursuant to such authority shall be final subject only to review by the Secretary of the Treasury."

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

UNITED STATES GEOLOGICAL SURVEY

Mr. WHITE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (S. 2029) to authorize the Director of the United States Geological Survey to produce and sell copies of aerial or other photographs and mosaics, and photographic or photostatic reproductions of records, on a reimbursement of appropriation basis.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Idaho?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, as I understand it, this bill simply applies to the sale of maps and so forth, the money to go into a revolving fund instead of into the general fund of the United States Treasury. How much money is actually involved?

Mr. WHITE. Very little money is involved in the pending bill. It is incumbent upon the Geological Survey to make copies of maps for cities that want to get the contour of their water frontage and things of that kind. But under the present law these small appropriations are made for such items. When they use up the money in making these maps, the money that is paid to the Department goes into the general fund of the Treasury and soon the Department is left without sufficient funds to carry on its work. If this bill is passed, the money will be put in a revolving fund and will be used in carrying out the provisions of the act.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, why should that not be covered by annual appropriations?

Mr. WHITE. There is a regular appropriation made every year for certain work of the United States Geological Survey. But under the mandatory provisions of existing law, cities, towns, and universities that want copies of these maps can have them by paying the regular price. But when they pay for them, the money goes into the general fund and not to the credit of the Geological Survey. The provisions of this bill would provide that the money go to the credit of the United States Geological Survey and provides a revolving fund so that the work can be carried on.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Idaho?

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Speaker, for the time being, I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is heard.

CONSUMER PURCHASES OF HOUSEHOLD ARTICLES

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, as Members of the House know, President Roosevelt in 1941 issued an Executive order restricting use of consumer credit. This was a wartime measure and was instrumental in curbing consumer purchases of such things as refrigerators and other household articles. This order is popularly known as regulation W and is administered by the Federal Reserve Board. It was an emergency measure designed to halt buying of those commodities which were in short supply because of the war.

Regulation W requires the buyer to make a one-third down payment on most of his purchases. He is generally required to pay off the balance in 12 months. If, for example, he paid only $25 down on a $100 refrigerator, the merchant could be put in jail. The law says he must accept a minimum of $33.33 in this transaction. The customer might find it convenient for his budget to pay off the balance in 13 months and such arrangements might be agreable to the merchant but such a transaction would be criminal today in most cases.

Now that the war is over and we are running into a period of the greatest production in our history, I see no reason why regulation W should continue to be the law of the land. On the contrary, I strongly urge that the order be abolished entirely and quickly.

I understand that there are those in responsible policy-making positions in the Federal Reserve Board who take the position that regulation W should be made a permanent law. Their argument is that the country would be armed with a weapon to beat down inflationary pressures that might arise from time to time and that the demand for goods could be controlled by controlling credit.

Credit is the life blood of the American economy. Reasonably easy credit results in mass buying and therefore mass production which lowers prices. Our high standard of living is the result of low-cost production which we could never have achieved if we did not have mass consumption. And we would never have had mass buying without extension of credit to consumers.

We are now running into a situation where we are going to have enormous production with a possible cut in domestic markets as the result of Government controls on consumer credit. There is no point in mass production unless these things can be put into the hands of the people and it is simply impossible to have mass purchases when the law requires stiff down payments with quick and full payment of the balance.

The inflationary pressures caused by consumer credit are greatly exaggerated. Any student of the problem knows that the real dangers of inflation are caused by Government spending and not by consumer buying or extension of reasonable credit.

A recent bulletin issued by the Federal Reserve Board reveals that accumulated savings in this country amount to about $130,000,000,000. These savings include bank deposits, Government bonds and cash. The report shows that 50 percent of those in the lower income brackets own 3 percent of these savings or less than $4,000,000,000.

Here we have one arm of the Federal Reserve saying that the people should be denied credit and the other arm saying that these very same people do not have sufficient cash to meet the requirements of regulation W.

There is, of course, plenty of cash around. But it is in the hands of the very people who are already supplied with the things they need. If labor and industry depended on this group for a market for the things they produce we would be faced with an immediate depression.

Wealthy people and those in the upper income brackets obviously do not need credit for household appliances. They buy these things for cash. Regulation W is, therefore, discriminatory. It rules that the wealthy can have all the vacuum cleaners and washing machines they want. It denies these things to the lower income groups.

If the average consumer does not have the cash we think he has—and, according to the Federal Reserve Board, he does not have the cash—what can we say about the returning veteran? Certainly a man who has been in the armed forces for a year or 4 years has not saved much, if anything, from his meager income, and yet millions of these men are attempting to reestablish themselves in civilian life. They need homes and we have provided the machinery which, if properly operated, will make it easier for them to get homes. But a home is useless if it cannot be furnished, and I am of the belief that relatively few veterans have the necessary cash to make the down payments required by regulation W.

I wish to advise the Federal Reserve Board that, if and when I return to this House in January, my first order of business will be the introduction of a bill which will make it mandatory on the President to exempt veterans from provisions of this regulation. I feel certain that a majority of this House will go along with me on that proposition. I would have introduced such a measure long ago had it not been for the pressure of business pending before the House Banking and Currency Committee, of which I am a member.

I certainly will oppose any move to make regulation W a permanent law. This restriction is repugnant to the American mind. Simply expressed, this regulation forbids me from making a private contract with my neighborhood merchant. I cannot go to a small store in my district and offer the merchant $5 down on a $100 article. This clearly is a violation of my constitutional right of private contract.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. LEA asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

COMMITTEE ON INTERSTATE AND FOREIGN COMMERCE

Mr. LEA. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Subcommittee on Transportation of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce may have until the first of January to file a report with the Clerk.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

DISPOSAL OF SURPLUS PROPERTY

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, it would be an act of great wisdom in my opinion if we could get an experienced businessman to head the War Assets Administration and handle disposal of surplus property. If recent revelations have shown anything, they have shown that, with full recognition of the strong points possessed by the Army, there are instances where Army officials are, to say the least, not the most astute businessmen that can be found. One cannot but be deeply concerned with such charges as those of the Comptroller General, and certainly in the disposal of surplus property it would be extremely wise if some businessman like William Jeffers for example who did so good a job as Rubber Director or Donald Nelson with his long merchandising experience could be induced to take over that job and carry it through to a speedy completion with maximum possible return to the taxpayers.

THIRTY-NINTH ANNIVERSARY OF THE ARMY AIR FORCES

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from West Virginia?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, today marks the thirty-ninth anniversary of the Army Air Forces of the United States. I believe the membership of the House will want to recognize for a moment this important occasion. In the Signal Corps of the War Department of the United States 39 years ago, one officer, two enlisted men, and no planes whatsoever, was the beginning of this great air-power potential. During World War II America had more than 85,000 planes in operation at one period and we had personnel in the Army Air Forces of more than two and one-half million.

We owe a tremendous debt to the early pioneers in aviation, particularly in the Air Forces of the United States. Today we look forward, not to air power with its destructive, devastating effects, but as the major instrument for bringing about permanent peace on the earth.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from West Virginia has expired.

VETO MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES—COX BROS.

The Speaker laid before the House the following veto message from the President of the United States which was read by the Clerk:

To the House of Representatives:

I return herewith, without my approval, enrolled enactment H. R. 1469, entitled "An act for the relief of Cox Bros."

It appears that, in response to an invitation for bids by the constructing quartermaster, Fort Lewis, Wash., for the rental of tractors and scrapers to the Government, Cox Bros. submitted a bid wherein they proposed to rent to the Government two tractors and scrapers, with operating personnel and maintenance, at $7.40 an hour, or with maintenance but without operating personnel at $5.90 an hour. In the space provided therefor the contractor specified an initial sale price of $15,000 for one tractor and of $14,500 for the other, which amounts represented the prices at which the Government might purchase the tractors under the provisions of the recapture clause contained in the specifications accompanying the invitation. On the date the bids were opened, Cox Bros. requested permission to withdraw their bid for the alleged reason that errors had been made therein with respect to the initial sale prices of the tractors. However, such permission was refused and on December 10, 1940, the bid was accepted. Thereafter, by letter of January 16, 1941, Cox Bros. informed the constructing quartermaster that, in entering the initial sale prices on the form provided therefor, they erroneously inserted prices of $15,000 and $14,500 instead of the correct prices of $18,750 and $18,125, respectively.

In connection with the alleged error of the contractor, it appears that the specifications provided that the initial sale price should represent a fair and just appraisal of the unit "as is," taking into account the original purchase price thereof, its age and past service, but that bidders' initial sale price should not exceed the original cost plus 25 percent, less a yearly depreciated value of 15 percent. The contractor alleges that in entering the initial sale price of the tractors in its bid, it overlooked the fact that it was permitted by the specifications to add 25 percent to the original cost of the equipment and that, if it had done so, the initial sale price at which the Government could have purchased the equipment would have been $7,375 greater than the price specified in its bid.

However, it is to be noted that, under the specifications on which bids were submitted, it was the responsibility of bidders to fix the initial sale price of their equipment at the fair and just appraised value thereof and the formula using the original cost plus 25 percent, less depreciation, merely constituted a ceiling which the appraised value was not to exceed. The record shows clearly that the initial sales price stated in the contractor's bid was exactly what it had intended to insert in the bid as the appraised value of the equipment. At no time prior to submitting its bid did the contractor intend to fix the appraised value on the basis of the original cost plus 25 percent. Under such circumstances, I do not feel that the record supports the conclusion that the contractor made a mistake in its bid so as to warrant the relief proposed by the legislation.

Furthermore, there is no evidence that the contractor suffered any out-of-pocket loss by reason of the alleged mistake and the effect of the legislation would be to grant the contractor a profit of $7,375 in addition to that contemplated at the time its bid was prepared and submitted.

Also, to grant relief under the circumstances here present would be to accord preferential treatment to the contractor concerned, would be tantamount to a discrimination against other contractors, and would tend to encourage disregard of contractual obligations and carelessness on the part of bidders on Government contracts.

HARRY S. TRUMAN.

THE WHITE HOUSE, July 31, 1946.

The SPEAKER. The objections of the President will be spread at large upon the Journal and without objection the message and bill referred to the Committee on Claims and ordered printed.

There was no objection.

VETO MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES—NAVAL RECORD OF FORMER MEMBERS OF THE CREWS OF REVENUE CUTTERS ALGONQUIN AND ONONDAGA

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following veto message from the President of the United States which was read by the Clerk:

To the House of Representatives:

I am returning herewith, without my approval, H. R. 1498, Seventy-ninth Congress, an act "to correct the naval record of former members of the crews of the revenue cutters Algonquin and Onondaga."

The purpose of this bill is to confer a naval status upon the entire period of service rendered by the crews of the revenue cutters Algonquin and Onondaga during the war with Spain. The crew of the former vessel had 73 days' naval service and the crew of the latter had 17 days' naval service prior to August 17, 1898, when, hostilities with Spain having ceased, the vessels were turned back to the Treasury Department.

In withholding his approval of a substantially similar bill of the Seventy-third Congress (H. R. 5018) President Roosevelt said, "it stretches the imagination to declare men on revenue cutter for 17 days on the Great Lakes in August 1898 to be entitled to all the privileges of Spanish War veterans."

By conferring a military status upon the members of these crews, the bill would make them eligible for pension based upon 90 days' service. Members of the Algonquin are now eligible for pension based on 70 days' service (at a somewhat lower rate than for 90 days' service) provided they meet other statutory requirements. The bill would also authorize death pensions for widows and children of these crew members; and other benefits to crew members such as hospital and domiciliary care and burial allowances.

During the wars in which the United States has engaged, large numbers of persons have rendered valuable assistance in a civilian capacity to our armed forces. In granting veterans benefits, Congress has long differentiated between active military service and civilian employment with the armed forces. Approval of the bill would constitute a departure from this policy which I cannot justify.

TIDELANDS TITLE ACT—VETO MESSAGE

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following veto message from the President of the United States, which was read by the Clerk:

To the House of Representatives:

I return herewith, without my signature, House Joint Resolution 225, entitled "A joint resolution to quiet the titles of the respective States, and others, to lands beneath tidewaters and lands beneath navigable waters within the boundaries of such States and to prevent further clouding of such titles."

The purpose of this measure is to renounce and disclaim all right, title, interest, claim, or demand of the United States in "lands beneath tidewaters," as defined in the joint resolution, and in lands beneath all navigable waters within the boundaries of the respective States, and to the minerals in such lands. The phrase "lands beneath tidewaters" is defined so broadly as to include all lands, either submerged or reclaimed, situated under the ocean beyond the low-water mark and extending out to a line three geographical miles distant from the coast line or to the boundary line of any State whose boundary, at the time of the admission of the State to the Union, extended oceanward beyond three geographical miles. Lands acquired by the United States from any State or its successors in interest, or through conveyance or condemnation, would be excluded from the operation of the measure. There would also be excluded the interest of the United States in that part of the Continental Shelf—lands under the ocean contiguous to and forming part of the land mass of our coasts—which lies more than 3 miles beyond the low-water mark or the boundary of any particular State.

On May 29, 1945, at my direction, the then Attorney General filed a suit in the United States district court at Los Angeles, in the name of the United States, to determine the rights in the land and minerals situated in the bed of the Pacific Ocean adjacent to the coast of California and within the 3-mile limit above described. Thereafter, in order to secure a more expeditious determination of the matter, the present Attorney General brought suit in the Supreme Court of the United States. The case in the district court was dismissed. I am advised by the Attorney General that the case will be heard in the Supreme Court and will probably be decided during the next term of the Court.

The Supreme Court's decision in the pending case will determine rights in lands lying beyond ordinary low-water mark along the coast extending seaward for a distance of 3 miles. Contrary to widespread misunderstanding, the case does not involve any tidelands, which are lands covered and uncovered by the daily ebb and flow of the tides; nor does it involve any lands under bays, harbors, ports, lakes, rivers, or other inland waters. Consequently the case does not constitute any threat to or cloud upon the titles of the several States to such lands, or the improvements thereon. When the joint resolution was being debated in the Senate, an amendment was offered which would have resulted in giving an outright acquittance to the respective States of all tidelands and all lands under bays, harbors, ports, lakes, rivers, and other inland waters. Proponents of the present measure, however, defeated this amendment. This clearly emphasized that the primary purpose of the legislation was to give to the States and their lessees any right, title, or interest of the United States in the lands and minerals under the waters within the 3-mile limit.

The ownership of the land and resources underlying this 3-mile belt has been a subject of genuine controversy for a number of years. It should be resolved appropriately and promptly. The ownership of the vast quantity of oil in such areas presents a vital problem for the Nation from the standpoint of national defense and conservation. If the United States owns these areas, they should not be given away. If the Supreme Court decides that the United States has no title to or interest in the lands, a quitclaim from the Congress is unnecessary.

The Attorney General advises me that the issue now before the Supreme Court has not been heretofore determined. It thus presents a legal question of great importance to the Nation, and one which should be decided by the Court. The Congress is not an appropriate forum to determine the legal issue now before the Court. The jurisdiction of the Supreme Court should not be interfered with while it is arriving at its decision in the pending case.

For the foregoing reasons I am constrained to withhold my approval of the joint resolution.

HARRY S. TRUMAN.

THE WHITE HOUSE, August 1, 1946.

The SPEAKER. The objections of the President will be spread at large upon the Journal and the bill and message ordered to be printed. Without objection, further proceedings on this message will be postponed until tomorrow.

There was no objection.

ROBERT SPRAGUE BEIGHTLER

Mr. DURHAM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (S. 2480) authorizing the appointment of Robert Sprague Beightler as permanent brigadier general of the line of the Regular Army.

The Clerk read the title of the bill

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman please explain this bill?

Mr. DURHAM. Mr. Speaker, this bill permits Robert Sprague Beightler to be made a brigadier general in the Regular Army. As major general he commanded the Thirty-seventh Division throughout the recent war. He was also an officer in the last World War. He has a wonderful record.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, Major General Beightler is a resident of my district. He is the only major general who commanded a division throughout the war with the Thirty-seventh which made a remarkable war record. He was commander on the island of Luzon and is at the present time in command of the Fifth Service Command of the Central States. He is one of the outstanding soldiers of this war and the President is to be congratulated on recognizing his unusual ability.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may I say this is a very distinct honor and recognizes the great accomplishments of a wonderful man. The President, in initiating this, is to be complimented, everybody concerned should be complimented, and we ought to grant this request.

Mr. GORE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, this is quite an unusual procedure and insofar as I am informed, unprecedented for the Congress to pass a bill giving an officer the rank of general; but in view of the report which I have read, showing that this man is entitled to this recognition but under the regimentation and rules of the Army he cannot be given it, I shall offer no objection.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. It is a recognition by the President of the United States of unusual military service.

Mr. WEICHEL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. WEICHEL. Mr. Speaker, General Beightler was outstanding in his command of Ohio's Thirty-seventh Division, with full confidence of his men. This is an especial tribute and a high honor to a great soldier of Ohio. To the President's tribute by this legislation, may I add the appreciation and best wishes of the people of Ohio.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That, notwithstanding any other provision of law, the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, is authorized to appoint as permanent brigadier general of the line of the Regular Army, Robert Sprague Beightler, presently serving in the grade of major general in the National Guard of the United States, Army of the United States.

SEC. 2. Any person appointed pursuant to the provisions of the first section of this act shall be counted for the purposes of provisions of law establishing the authorized number of brigadier generals of the line of the Regular Army.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members who desire may be permitted to extend their remarks regarding General Beightler at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAMEY. Mr. Speaker, we in Ohio are proud of General Beightler. A hero of two wars as well as a public official above reproach. One of his soldiers, Walter Tillman, now in the Veterans' Bureau who was with him in World War I and who was familiar with his works as director of highways in Ohio, said:

He was the only man both in military and civilian life whom neither a soldier nor a man in any walk of life ever criticized.

I concur with all that has been said in his behalf as well as the action we are taking now.

LEGISLATIVE POLICY

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Speaker, I cannot let this day pass without making certain observations. When we had the filibuster in this House against FEPC I failed to recall any orders given to get Members from the restaurant, closing the doors, and things like that, nor do I recall the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER] making a request for stringent and severe action to be taken against absent Members. I do hope that the precedent that was set today will be followed in the future when we have the call of Calendar Wednesday in order to enact FEPC legislation.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. NEELY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute, to revise and extend my remarks, and include excerpts.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from West Virginia?

There was no objection.

[Mr. NEELY addressed the House. His remarks appear in the Appendix.]

CANCER RESEARCH

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, just a few words in reply to the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY]: I gather from what he has just said that those who voted against giving the President $100,000,000 to find a cure for cancer will be held responsible for all the deaths from cancers which will occur in the next year or so.

I believe if he were better informed on the subject of cancer he would not make that statement. No one who has studied the subject of cancer could possibly say what he did.

The gentleman apparently does not know of the extensive work which is being carried on in the field of cancer research in the many medical centers throughout the world. Nor does he seem to understand what it really takes to do research work in this field. One would think from his expressions that a cure for cancer can be bought from over the counter, the only desideratum being $100,000,000.

Nor does the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY] appear to know of the great advance which medical science has already made in curing malignant growths. True, we are still far from having solved the problem. But those who are familiar with the subject understand that much has already been accomplished.

My judgment is that if the $100,000,000 had been voted it would have been spent for boondoggling, just as so much of the money which Congress appropriates is spent. The Treasury of the United States has become a veritable haven for almost every conceivable kind of racketeer. The manner in which this proposition was presented to Congress would lead one to suspicion that somebody thought they saw a chance to raid the national purse on a grand scale.

The SPEAKER. Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from California [Mr. PHILLIPS] is recognized for 15 minutes.

THE TEACHERS AND THE GOVERNMENT

Mr. PHILLIPS. Mr. Speaker, any discussion of education today would soon be like the story of the four blind men and the elephant. It would take the shape of the individual interest of the writer. If I were interested, as I am, in figures, I could remind the reader that the United States spent in 1940 a total of over $3,000,000,000 for public and private schools, and that over 30,000,000 students were in elementary and high schools and colleges. I could point with pride to the drop in illiteracy to 1.5 percent* and to the increasing growth of teacher-training schools, vocational training, and adult classes. The GI of World War II had between 3 and 4 years more schooling than the GI of World War I.

If I were interested in both education and government, which I am, I could speak of the obligations or the restrictions of government, when it comes to education. The best word on that is still

*This figure of 1.5 percent is for illiterate native whites in 1930, the last year this classification was used by the Census Bureau. That year foreign born illiteracy was 9.9 percent; Negroes 16.3 percent—for city Negroes only, it was 5 percent; and the average for the Nation was 4.3 percent. In the following years the Census Bureau changed the formula to show ages and years in school. Comparable figures for 1940 would give an average of 3.5 percent for the Nation.

Selective Service adopted a still different formula during the war, and called it "functional illiteracy." It meant the men who had less than 5 grades in school and the percentage was 6.1.

the church letter of some 25 years ago, which said simply, "The State has a right to insist that its citizens shall be educated." It could be only a short step for any writer to point with pride to the patient work of the teachers, or to view with alarm the apparently increasing influence of a small but articulate group who forget Pope's comment on forms of government: "Whate'er is best administered is best," or Penn's sage advice that, "If men be good, government cannot be bad."

Thus, in the final analysis, a discussion of education resolves itself into a discussion of human beings; teachers and principals and school superintendents and parents, and Congressmen, too, if you want. Education is what these people make it. A cry to desert the old and seize the new, or to let the correctable faults of the old overshadow the consistent failures of the new, will not save either education or government.

The inflammable and articulate minority do not represent education, Mr. Speaker, any more than they represent government. We have them in the schools; we have them in the professions and in business; we have them in the Congress, we even have them in the California delegation. They are the ones who have been promised the earth, and who have fallen for the promise; they are the ones who are being "used" for the circulation of the factless propaganda of New Deal agencies, now dying on the vine in Washington. Fear has been combined with promises of leadership, or just ordinary deception, to lead the country toward the quicksands of national socialism. These are the busybodies of Paul's letter to the Thessalonians.

It is time we checked ourselves. Education is still education; serene and sound and everlasting. Look at the statistics. The inflammables fade into insignificance and peace descends again on the faith and works of the calm and overwhelming majority of the teachers of America.

This is a time of decision, however. It is a time of crisis. The aftermath of any war is a trying period in the history of a nation. This was the worst war, and so it will be the worst aftermath. Sanity must assert itself. Facts must be sorted from fallacies. The teacher and the doctor and the minister have been the community's influential citizens, by right of position. That suggests obligation, as well as opportunity.

The teacher has a personal interest in this positive attitude. The teacher is in the white-collar class or the middle class, which gets the attention of the newspapers and the columnists, but little other protection except as they themselves can help government give it. The effects of any marked success, on the part of the inflammables, would be tragedy to the great majority of the group for whom they profess to speak.

America is strong. It became strong through production and through organization. Education never overlooked organization. The teachers in my State, California, express their views and their wishes through an organization known as the California Teachers Association. My knowledge of the work of the CTA goes back to my service in the State assembly and the State senate, and I still recall with pleasure my acquaintance with its representatives in Sacramento, and its constructive and successful work there. The State associations express themselves through the National Education Association. It is held in high regard here in Washington. I observe that these teachers' organizations start on the local level. They start in the community and in the district. I observe, too, that where teachers express themselves through the local organizations and then through the State organization, and in turn through the national, there have been few instances of error or misunderstanding, and fewer instances in which the teachers have been led astray. The good results are not personal, but national, and benefit education. I earnestly recommend that the teachers build up and support these local, State, and national organizations.

Mr. Speaker, I have the same faith in education that I have in the Nation, because to me the two are inseparable. I want to see that faith supported by positive action on the part of the teachers. It is not enough negatively to have nothing to do with the vacuous theories of government of the men and women whose feet are said to be firmly planted in the clouds, and whose isms end in "ski." It is necessary to help the corresponding group in the Government, which faces the same difficulties here in Washington, and together work out the best, the most progressive, and the safest solutions.

SPECIAL ORDER GRANTED

Mr. REES of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that today, following any special orders heretofore granted, I may be permitted to address the House for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. GORE). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from Washington [Mr. DE LACY] is recognized for 10 minutes.

NATIONAL GERIATRICS INSTITUTE

Mr. DE LACY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and include at the end of my remarks the bill H. R. 7222.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington?

There was no objection.

Mr. DE LACY. Mr. Speaker, I am proud that the State of Washington leads the Nation in its consideration for the aged. Our State pays the highest old-age pension in the land. We define a needy senior citizen as one who does not have the equivalent of $75 a month in income. We also provide dental care, hearing aids, artificial limbs, and other care.

But these benefits did not come on a silver platter. Many of us have waged an uphill fight to win justice for the people who pioneered the State and found themselves thrown out to starve in their advanced years.

The Washington Pension Union and the old Washington Commonwealth Federation, of which I was president, took up this fight when the aged in our State got only $12 a month. We put initiatives on the ballot, carrying the issue directly to the people. We stumped the State for State and Federal legislative candidates pledged to decent treatment to senior citizens.

This fight has gone on for more than 10 years. During the course of it we had to defeat two governors, pass two State laws by initiative, and two by the State legislature. In one year thousands of hard workers went out and got 258,000 signatures on initiative 151, which set up the basic liberal pattern which our State pension law still follows.

And, as Members of this House know, our Democratic congressional delegation has always been in the forefront of every fight for social security and for a national pension system.

Our long running fight for justice to the aged has been hard, but satisfying work to the thousands who took part in it. It has proved the vitality of our democracy. It has shown that people can write their own security measures, put them on the ballot by initiative, pass them, and get the benefits of them for the whole State. It has shown the value of a united, progressive people's movement.

I am proud to have had a part in this great work and pleased to see the hard work which the Washington Pension Union still carries on to safeguard the basic act and see that senior citizens get what is coming to them under it.

There is another province of care for our aged, however, in which it is not our State, but the State of Indiana which leads the Nation.

I refer to the science of prolonging life, the study of the causes of old age and its diseases, the relatively new science of geriatrics.

Yesterday I introduced a bill, H. R. 7222, to establish a National Geriatrics Institute, to provide for needed research in the prevention and cure of diseases and ailments common to old age, with the view of preventing the commonest causes of senescence, senility, and unnecessarily early death.

I was astonished to find our Republican friends last week voting almost solidly against H. R. 4502, thus, with a handful of like-minded Democrats, blocking an extended Government research program into the causes and cure of cancer, America's No. 2 killer, today.

Although a majority of this House could not be moved to begin a more adequate cancer-research program by the shocking fact that one out of eight is now dying of that dreadful disease, I nevertheless am confident that my bill for a research institute to study the causes, disabilities, and diseases of old age, with the purpose of broadening, enriching, and prolonging human life, will receive a favorable hearing.

All of us, even Members of Congress, grow old. All of us expect to die and are quite willing that the event be postponed as long as possible. Each of us hopes to lead a long, healthy, and useful life.

And quite apart from our own hopes and desires in the matter, America's population is growing older. We all know, of course, the progress which has been made in reducing infant mortality. In 1915 nearly 100 babies died out of each 1,000 born. By 1943, only 40.4 babies died out of each 1,000 born—eloquent testimony to the progress of medical practice and public health measures during the intervening years.

Yet while this substantial advance has been made at the beginning of the life span, life expectancy after 40 has increased but slightly.

The figures are interesting:

	Years
Life expectancy at birth, in 1900:
White male	48.23
White female	51.08
Colored male	32.54
Colored female	35.04
Life expectancy at birth, in 1942:	Years
White male	63.65
White female	68.61
Colored male	54.28
Colored female	58.00

Thus, between 1900 and 1942, life expectancy for these four groups increased by a figure between 15 and 22 years, but life expectancy after 40 increased only by a figure between 2 years, 10 months, and 4 years, 7 months.

The figures are:

	Years
Life expectancy at age 40, 1900–1902:
White male	27.74
White female	29.17
Colored male	23.12
Colored female	24.37
Life expectancy at age 40, 1942:
White male	30.27
White female	33.86
Colored male	25.92
Colored female	27.51

Nevertheless, the proportion of people over 65 to the whole population is steadily increasing. In 1900, 18 percent were over 65; in 1940, 27 percent were over 65. During the last census decade, the number of persons over 65 increased 35 percent, while the total population increase was only 7.2 percent in the same period.

Soon one-third of our population will be over 50 years old, and in 40 years it is expected that there will be twice as many over 65 as there are now.

The health and welfare of this large and growing group, therefore, properly becomes the concern of the Nation, particularly as there is ample reason to believe that what we now view as the inevitable disabilities of old age are not inevitable at all, but may be reduced in severity, postponed, or avoided, and that human life itself may be usefully prolonged to as much as 140 years.

Work in this field has just begun. The first meeting of the American Geriatrics Society was held in 1942. Somewhat more study seems to have been given to problems of old age in the Soviet Union, where the late Dr. Alexander Bogomoletz, director of the Kiev Institute of Experimental Biology and Pathology, and his staff have conducted some remarkable research.

One field study of the people of Sukhum, reported by Dr. Bogomoletz in the Prolongation of Life, found a dozen men whose ages ranged from 107 to 135 in this one community.

All these old men—

were well and fit and proved to be excellent hosts. Some of them climbed the trees supporting grapevines in order to get for their visitors the finest grapes. * * *

One of these men, 107 years of age, stubbornly denied his right age and insisted he was only 70. Confronted by his cronies and witnesses, he confessed: "I want to get married. * * * Who would want to marry a man of 100? But any woman will marry one of 70" (p. 55).

In support of his belief that people can live longer and more creative lives if not cut off by disease or avoidable disabilities, Dr. Bogomoletz reminds us that Titian finished his famous Christ Crowned With Thorns at age 95 and died 4 years later of the plague. Other famous painters—Tintoretto, Laurens, Greuze—died in their eighties, active to the last. Waldeck lived to 109 and exhibited new paintings in 1875, when he was 101 years old. Verdi, the great composer, died at 88. Victor Hugo, Tolstoy, Goethe, all lived and worked well into their eighties. George Bernard Shaw has just passed his ninetieth peppery birthday. And our own vigorous Jacksonian journalist and poet, William Cullen Bryant, lived and fought for 84 years.

This House, too, furnishes its own examples of men who have served this Nation ably for decades, whose wisdom, intellectual clarity, and physical and mental vigor are justly considered remarkable.

If all of us cannot hope to make such lasting contributions to the world as these distinguished artists and public figures have made in their advanced years, many millions now living can hope to live as actively and vigorously for even longer years, if students in the new science of geriatrics are correct.

One hundred active, healthy, and enjoyable years should become the new threshold of human life.

"I cannot name a single authority who has studied * * * man's longevity," observes Dr. Bogomoletz, "who has not asserted that man's death before he is 100 years old is due to the accumulation of unfavorable circumstances such as illness, overwork, lack of personal or social hygiene."

Admittedly such observations fall in the class of shrewd guesses, for we simply do not know the possible length of human life. What is needed is systematic study on a scale impossible to private agencies.

Among the many reasons for the neglect of such studies and for what history will call criminal indifference to the aged are:

The character of our labor market, which in many industries demands young men and women for hard, fast work draining much nervous energy. This ages the young and deprives the old of useful employment.

Lack of community facilities to keep alive the interests of older people.

Neglect of illnesses of the aged because they are unspectacular drudgery, are chronic, and nearly always command low fees for treatment.

The assumption that little can be done to postpone or prevent disabilities of old age or to prolong the average life span.

Insufficient public attention to cold, damp living or working conditions; overwork at jobs that bring no pleasure or satisfaction; hunger, poverty, worry caused by economic insecurity—all of which weaken bodily and mental health.

It was not in the Garden of Eden that man lost his dream of long life. It is not in the magical waters of the Fountain of Youth which the Spanish explorers so logically sought in the beautiful State of Florida that man will find immortality. What has killed people long before their physical limits of life is not knowing how life can be lengthened and enriched, not being able to produce the necessities required to sustain a long-lived population, not being willing to face the social fight to clean up the working and living conditions which prematurely age people and breed indifference to their problems.

Under President Roosevelt we began, and in his memory we continue, the fight for healthier and happier living and working conditions. Today we have the labor and the machinery and the technical knowledge to produce an abundance for all, young and old. And in the science of geriatrics, we are finding the direction in which to look for longer and better lives.

The bill I have introduced establishes a National Geriatrics Institute in the Public Health Service. It provides for exact research into the disabilities of old age and the means of lengthening life, for the development of curatives, regimens, methods of treatment, and for public dissemination of helpful knowledge.

It is my hope that H. R. 7222 will receive the careful attention of the Members during the coming recess and that it may be favorably heard and acted on at the next session of Congress.

The text of that bill is as follows:

H. R. 7222

A bill to establish a National Geriatrics Institute to promote longevity in the United States and to provide for study and research in the field of the prevention and cure of diseases and ailments common to old age and for the widespread dissemination of the results of such study and research in an effort to prolong the lives of all American citizens, and for other purposes

Be it enacted, etc., That it is the policy of the United States Government to promote the longevity of its citizens by undertaking research and study in the field of geriatrics and making available to its people all the information obtainable on methods of prolonging and enjoying life.

SEC. 2. There shall be established and maintained within the Public Health Service a National Geriatrics Institute, hereinafter referred to as "the Institute," for the purpose of study and research in the field of the prevention and cure of diseases and ailments common to old age.

SEC. 3. The Surgeon General of the United States is authorized—

(A) to establish necessary research laboratories and buildings, suitably equipped and provided for, for the exclusive use of the Institute and, in cooperation with existing agencies and departments of government, utilize any existing laboratories and hospital and health facilities which in his judgment may be appropriate to carry out the purposes of this act and which are available for such use;

(B) to appoint a Director of the Institute who shall serve for a term of 5 years and shall be subject to reappointment by the Surgeon General at the expiration of his term or terms;

(C) to appoint such other personnel as shall be necessary to carry out the purposes of this act.

SEC. 3. (a) The Director shall undertake all necessary and possible research in the field of the prevention and cure of diseases and ailments common to old age and shall make all information regarding such research and the results of such research available to the medical profession, schools, colleges, hospitals, health centers, State health agencies, and departments and to the general public.

(b) The Director is authorized to utilize the facilities of universities and colleges and of State departments of health or other appropriate agencies of State governments where such universities and colleges and State agencies agree to undertake research necessary to any study undertaken by the Institute.

(c) Where research or study by any university or college, operated not for profit, or by any appropriate agency of any State government is considered appropriate and necessary to the purposes of this act by the Director, in consultation with the Surgeon General, the Surgeon General is authorized to enter into agreement with such university or college or State agency. Such agreement can provide for the necessary research with the cost to be shared between the Federal Government, the college, or university or State agency involved: Provided, That in no event shall the Federal Government provide more than 50 percent of the total cost of such project or projects.

(d) In the interest of providing free access to all scientific information, the Director is authorized to exchange information and the results of any and all research with any agency or department of government of any other nation or nations undertaking similar studies and research, and to make available to the medical profession, schools, colleges, hospitals, health centers, State health agencies and departments, and the general public any information obtained as a result of such exchanges of information or research.

SEC. 4. (a) Any scientific development, including the development or compounding of any new drug or drugs or scientific formula, produced as a result of the study or research provided for in this act, shall not be subject to patent by any private individual, corporation, or partnership and all such scientific developments shall remain the property of the people of the United States.

(b) To carry out the provisions of section 4 (a), the Surgeon General is authorized to make available on equal terms and conditions to all interested individuals, corporations, or partnership any such scientific development, including any formula for the production of new drug or drugs or methods of treatment.

SEC. 5. There is authorized to be appropriated, not to exceed the sum of $15,000,000, to cover the cost of establishing the Institute, and from time to time such additional sums as necessary to maintain the Institute and to carry out other provisions and purposes of this act.

Mr. RAMEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DE LACY. I yield.

Mr. RAMEY. I, too, hope for the happiness that this would bring. But would the taxpayers pay for it?

Mr. DE LACY. I think that this research requires public support. After all, you know, the doctors cannot afford to put too much time in on a lot of these old folks whom they consider to have chronic ailments. If we could get at the root of it, the ailments probably could be eradicated and they could live a long time.

Mr. PHILLIPS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DE LACY. I yield.

Mr. PHILLIPS. Is this earnest hope that the gentleman has based on the report of the discovery of a Russian scientist that he had a method of prolonging life to 100 or 150 or 180 years?

Mr. DE LACY. In part. We have a distinguished American scientist here in Washington, D. C., with the American Geriatrics Society. The great State of Indiana has set up a Geriatrics Institute. Likewise, there has been very useful work done by the Soviet Union.

Mr. PHILLIPS. Does the gentleman realize that that Russian scientist died the other day at the age of 64?

Mr. DE LACY. I am also aware of the fact that people with the profoundest belief in immortality have gone to join their fathers.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. MURDOCK] is recognized for 15 minutes.

ATOMIC ENERGY

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Speaker, the greatest physical force known to our universe is now in the hands of puny man. What will he do with it? Will it prove to be a Frankenstein monster which will destroy its new master as many predict? No doubt that will depend on how much of a master man shows himself to be. Upon this showing I firmly believe depends the course of human history.

Congress recently devoted its attention to the matter of domestic control of atomic energy, and we passed the bill (S. 1717) which is now law. At this moment the Councils of the United Nations are considering the Baruch plan and other plans of international control based very largely upon the agreement reached by President Truman, Prime Minister Attlee, and McKenzie King. In my judgment, the very outcome of history hinges upon wise action both by this Congress on domestic control and the United Nations' authority in the field of international control of atomic power. We have done in this Congress the basic work of legislation for domestic control. We must now prayerfully await the wisest possible action concerning international control of this great new force.

Having listened to the hearings before the Senate Committee on Atomic Energy, I was greatly impressed with the provisions of S. 1717 on which the House acted a few weeks ago. The RECORD will show that I voted against certain amendments offered to that bill in the House. I did not agree with my colleagues in the House who insisted on placing the control in the hands of the military, nor did I agree with my colleagues who wanted to apply patent laws and regulations to discoveries made and to ideas ordinarily patentable in connection with fissionable material and the production of atomic energy. Accordingly, I was satisfied and pleased when the conferees brought back a report which differed so little from the original Senate bill, S. 1717.

Why do I prefer civilian control of atomic energy? Because as I said at the time of House action on S. 1717, it is a principle of the American Constitution and of our form of government to make and keep the military always subservient to the civil power. I cannot believe that any military authority can possibly be more loyal to our Government than the right kind of civilian authority. I believe the same loyalty may be expected from both.

Assuming that the civilian board will be appointed by the President and will consist of five of the greatest minds and most patriotic spirits among our citizenry, such civilian authorities will have a view singly to the public interest, safety, and welfare. No military board could surpass that kind of civilian board in absolute patriotism and loyalty to the best interests of the country. The patriotism and devotion to duty of a civilian board being equal to that of any military board, and vice versa, I must have other reasons for preferring a civilian board of control in this case.

Yes, I have other reasons for this preference, all of which I will not attempt to enumerate, but I do wish to point out one—and that is that a civilian board of control is far more likely to consider other uses of atomic energy than military uses. On the other hand, I greatly fear that a military board would think narrowly, if not exclusively, of this great new power for military and destructive purposes. If it is humanly possible to make atomic energy safe in the hands of man, to prevent its use in destruction or for purposes of war, and instead make it available for use in the ways of peace, that thing we must strive to do, and I think a civilian board of control would move in that direction more surely than would a military board.

Atomic energy is such a new and such a powerful force recently come to the hand of man that we scarcely know its tremendous possibilities, even for destruction. The top-notch scientists do not claim to perceive its possibilities for good, excepting dimly. Those who know most about atomic energy, while they can see its awful destructive power, which cannot be adequately described excepting in superlative terms, are inclined to believe that its possibilities for good, for productive and constructive effort and for utilization for man's happiness and welfare are far greater even than its destructive powers. I am slow to believe that those optimistic scientists who speak of the blessings which may flow from man's use of atomic energy are indulging in wishful thinking. From their deep knowledge they are sure that its powers for good are even more superlative than its powers for evil.

Every one of the top-notch scientists from whom I have gathered a little information made me see this critical problem presented to society, if we are to use the atom's power for good without the likelihood of its being used for evil. The scientists point out that if you produce fissionable material such as plutonium, intending to use it in the right ways of peace, you have then gone along 75 percent of the process of producing it for the wrong ways of war and for destruction.

Such being a scientific fact, society dare not use atomic energy in peaceful ways nor permit it to be so used unless we can absolutely guarantee that no segment of society can use it for war against the rest of humanity. Right there lies the greatest task of international control. Unless we can solve this problem and outlaw the use of atomic energy in war, man can neither hope to survive in a civilized state nor can he hope to avail himself of the knowledge of atomic power in the pursuits of peace. This makes imperative the strongest kind of international control, one which must be effective and not a mere series of international promises.

We are told by medical men that the possibilities of beneficial use of fissionable material and radio-active substances in the field of medicine and public health are beyond the wildest stretch of the imagination. While we are cautioned not to be too optimistic at once about the use of atomic energy in industry and in everyday living, as it is not ready to compete with the present sources of power used by our industrial society, neverthless this great cheap source of power may be a welcomed supplement in certain phases of our industrial life where huge blocks of cheap power is required.

Naturally I think of atomic energy as supplemental to hydro-electric power in the West, where there is a need for electric power, even greater than all the existing hydro-electric plants can supply. What may we expect from this power use of atomic energy? Nothing—unless we can make it safe and quarantine against its use as an instrument of destruction and war. If we can make it safe in peaceful uses in all parts of the world, what are the prospects? I am, of course, unable to say, but I do know that they will be greater than our wildest dreams. This is the riddle of the Sphinx, a failure to answer which means death.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HUBER] is recognized for 5 minutes.

ABOLISH CAPITAL PUNISHMENT

Mr. HUBER. Mr. Speaker, I have today introduced a resolution to amend the Constitution of the United States by abolishing capital punishment.

During the past few years we have witnessed a world that has been drenched with the wanton shedding of human blood. Millions have been tortured and their bodies consumed by the incinerators of those who had no regard for the rights or dignity of man.

If we, the citizens of the United States, are to contribute to a just and lasting peace, it is imperative that we abolish the primitive practice of capital punishment. In our several States and under Federal statutes, we still indulge in the barbaric custom of strangling, burning, shooting, or asphyxiating those condemned wretches who have violated the laws of our States and Nation. If a crime should be committed against one of my loved ones, I would be the first to demand personal vengeance, regardless of the hideous form or nature in which such vengeance would be exacted.

That, of course, would be following the brute instinct which is inherent in all mankind. On second and calmer thought, we would all reflect upon the age-old truth that "Vengeance is mine, saith the Lord."

We try our felons, demanding the death penalty. The press plays up every dramatic incident in connection with the atrocious crime that has been committed—the demeanor of the witnesses, the stern faces of the jurors, as the judge, God-like, intones the sentence that directs us, the people, to violently and in a manner prescribed by law, still the heart of the luckless mortal in our midst.

We decry lynching and crimes of violence occurring in our society. If in this enlightened age the State can legally determine that one of our citizens shall die, and thereupon take such steps according to the laws of the State and Federal Government to hang (strangle), electrocute (burn), shoot, or asphyxiate, while the populace in Roman holiday mood, noting the press and radio accounts, waits with bated breath for the details of the last supper, the mental attitude, and last-minute religious contacts of the condemned, how can we prevent crimes of violence, how can we impress upon our citizens the need to prevent lynching?

We must make our people realize that no person, State, or government has the right to take human life; that it is God-given, and that practically all criminologists, penologists, and religious leaders agree that it is no deterrent to the commission of crime. Those who have violated the laws of our land must be punished and safely incarcerated for the protection of our people.

To those who complain that offenders who are released may again indulge in offensive conduct endangering the safety of the populace, I say that is the definite responsibility of society and if we are unable to cope with such a situation then we, the members of society, have failed morally, socially, and scientifically, and that it is better to be the guardian of our brother than to be his executioner.

Note: In many places in our land we see signs, "Beware the dog."

Example: We suffer antisocial beasts to exist but snuff out the life of our fellow man.

Mr. RAMEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUBER. I yield.

Mr. RAMEY. I will say to my distinguished colleague that he has no doubt read the book, which is not a story but is entitled "Convicting the Innocent." They are actual trials and convictions of some 234 men and women who later have been found to be innocent. Some innocent men have been electrocuted. I think there was one in Ohio at one time electrocuted by our own State and who was later found to be innocent.

Mr. HUBER. I thank the gentleman for his observation. It is a very good reason for supporting this resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HUBER] has expired.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. REES] is recognized for 10 minutes.

WE WANT NEITHER WITCH HUNTING NOR WHITEWASHING—WE WANT LOYALTY IN GOVERNMENT

Mr. REES of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, my attention has been called to a recent statement that appeared in the press criticizing my report as a member of the Subcommittee on the Civil Service, because I asked for further inquiry with regard to people employed in government whose loyalty is questioned. I certainly have no objection to the majority report that suggests the appointment of a committee from some of the agencies to look into practices and procedures. I have no objection to the report as far as it goes, but it does not, in my judgment, get at the meat of the problem. I want you to look at the suggestions made in my additional report and then tell me whether they are unreasonable.

I called attention to the fact that there is no uniform policy among Federal agencies with respect to my investigating and removing employees who are known to be disloyal. In too many cases, agencies of government had not strictly adhered to the principle of "reasonable doubt" in favor of the Government on questions of loyalty. Is there anything wrong about that?

I further stated that in many instances where the loyalty of individuals has been questioned, they have been held in abeyance so the employee whose loyalty has been questioned remained on the pay roll several months and in many cases, 2, 3, and 4 years, before decisions were made. If you think such procedure is proper, I would like to have you justify it.

Further attention was directed to the fact there is too much susceptibility and too much attention given to outside influence in making decisions with respect to fitness of many employees in government. I hardly see how anyone can justify that sort of thing being carried on in our Government.

Although the Civil Service Commission has furnished an array of figures, their own records and the records of other agencies, show that very few people have been removed from the pay rolls even where there is a clear case of disloyalty. I do not see how anyone can justify that procedure. The Civil Service Commission says that once a person is employed, there is nothing it can do to secure his removal, even though their own files show such person to be unfit for the job.

Mr. Speaker, in my brief report I said we need a thorough house cleaning in all cases of doubtful loyalty. I stated very definitely we should be absolutely fair, but that doubt as to loyalty, as well as in other cases, ought to be resolved in favor of the Government.

Mr. Speaker, after all, employment in the Government should be regarded as a high privilege. I recommended that the House Civil Service Committee study the standards and directives and policies of Government agencies with regard to questions of loyalty, as well as other questions that should come to our attention and that the committee should devise by legislation, if necessary, ways and means of eliminating without delay, employees whose fitness for service is unsatisfactory, especially those who are not loyal to the American Government.

Mr. Speaker, it was not my intention to speak further about the majority report of our subcommittee. I do not find fault with it even though most of it is from testimony made on behalf of the Civil Service Commission. The principal recommendation in that report is for the appointment of an interdepartmental committee. That recommendation does not go far enough. We have had such committees before. Little, if anything, was accomplished by its service.

Now, Mr. Speaker, because I have asked that the Civil Service Committee, which is the committee responsible for legislation of this kind to make a further study of the problems I have mentioned, it is being suggested that to do such thing is wrong and is described as "witch hunting." I am surprised anyone would take such unfair position. If for no other reason, this study and investigation is justified for the protection of the hundreds of thousands of loyal people employed in government.

I am informed the Civil Service Commission, as well as some other agencies do not want the study and investigation continued. If the majority of the Civil Service Committee, as well as the majority of this House, do not want the study continued and are willing to let things drift along, in the face of the facts that have been presented, I will, of course, abide by the decision of the majority, but as a minority Member of Congress, as well as a minority member of the Civil Service Committee, I am not going to stand idly by without raising my voice against a thing in which this Congress and the people of this country ought to be vitally interested.

Mr. Speaker, I regret the hearings covered only a period of a few days. We only scratched the surface. They should have been longer, but the testimony submited came from responsible people in Federal service who have the interest of their Government at heart. If that testimony were disclosed, I would not even need to suggest that further study and inquiry be made. I want to add further, that I have the support of men and women in high and responsible places in government who tell me, by reason of their experience and knowledge of the facts, that my position is sound.

My only interest in this matter is to see that our Government and its institutions are protected. I shall continue to use my energies in that direction. It is my duty to do so. Every agency ought to cooperate, instead of criticize, in promoting the highest degree of loyalty in our Government.

Mr. Speaker, before closing, let me call attention to a glaring example that has only recently been brought to public view. I would like to know who is responsible for permitting one Albert Jacobson to get on the pay rolls in 1939 as a Government clerk, when disbarment proceedings had already been filed against him and when he had been charged on a half dozen cases of serious irregularities. That was 2 years before the war started. Somebody was responsible for permitting this man, not only to get on the pay roll, but to bypass hundreds of deserving employees and was promoted to a $9,000 position with the responsibility of handling and juggling war contracts involving hundreds of millions of dollars. Can it be possible that nobody cares how he got on the pay roll and who permitted him to get this responsible job? Can it be possible that a case like this should not be investigated? Incidentally, Mr. Jacobson has not been discharged up to this time. He has only been suspended.

Mr. Speaker, we have too many instances of what is regarded as "knowing the right person" in order to secure the best jobs. The example I have given you is different from a Government clerk whose case has just been called to my attention and who had a record of good or very good for several years, but is now being given a grade of unsatisfactory and being discharged because he does not seem to get along with his chief. I say to you, it is a shame and a disgrace that Jacobson or anyone like him should be allowed to stay on the pay roll when a telephone call concerning his record should have been enough to discharge him. He ought to be removed and he ought to be tried for violations of trust in office. The same thing goes for two high Army officers involved with him, who should be tried immediately for violations of trust during a critical war period.

Mr. Speaker, let me reiterate. I am not in favor of "witch hunting." Neither am I in favor of "whitewashing." All I ask is that a constructive and careful study be made of this important problem of loyalty in government.

As a minority member I still say we have a duty that we cannot evade, if we are going to live up to our responsibility.

FURTHER MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A further message from the Senate, by Mr. Koerber, its assistant enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate insists upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 7037) entitled "An act to amend the Social Security Act and the Internal Revenue Code, and for other purposes"; disagreed to by the House; agrees to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. GEORGE, Mr. WALSH, Mr. BAILEY, Mr. CONNALLY, Mr. LA FOLLETTE, Mr. VANDENBERG, and Mr. TAFT to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The SPEAKER. Under previous order of the House, the gentlewoman from Massachusetts [Mrs. ROGERS] is recognized for 5 minutes.

AUTOMOBILES FOR AMPUTEES

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I would like to read a letter from Dr. Klopsteg, who is chairman of the National Committee on Prosthetic Devices. The military services and Veterans' Administration are affiliated with the committee. He says:

MY DEAR MRS. ROGERS: Your effort and your splendid motives in endeavoring to secure for veteran amputees things to alleviate their disabilities and in a measure compensate them for their loss are most commendable.

I am especially interested in those who have become totally blinded and totally deafened, and the bilateral amputees, or those who have lost an arm and a leg, or three of their limbs. I understand that the two quadrilaterals are already well cared for.

I wish you every success in your endeavors to secure automobiles for these seriously handicapped veterans.

It was a great pleasure and privilege to meet you, and I am gratified that you were able to be present and see what the Committee on Prosthetic Devices is trying to do for our amputees.

Cordially yours,

PAUL E. KLOPSTEG.

I wish to say, Mr. Speaker, that the efforts of many of the Members of Congress to secure automobiles for the amputees, the paraplegics, those who have lost the use of their limbs, is just a part of this great program that the Army has undertaken in order to try to rehabilitate these men and the Veterans' Administration has a fine rehabilitation program started.

It is particularly important to have automobiles for the men for their rehabilitation for a couple of years or so, because not enough has been done in the way of giving them satisfactory arms and legs. I have great hopes that great strides will be made by them. In 150 years really practically nothing has been done until very recently in the matter of making lighter and more useful artificial arms and hands. They are making progress now. It is not too rapid, but when it is compared with the last 150 years it is real progress.

I have every confidence, Mr. Speaker, that the Rules Committee in spite of what I think is great and unnecessary delay will report out a rule which would provide the necessary equipment, automobiles, and conveyances for these men.

It is just a part of a great rehabilitation program started by the Army and getting into full swing gradually. I think under the law the Veterans' Administration has the power already to supply conveyances as a part of their rehabilitation program. The Army teaches these amputees and paraplegics to drive automobiles and it is extremely interesting to see the disabled boys, driving cars safely. In Massachusetts our registrar of motor vehicles tells me they have fewer motor accidents with amputees and paraplegics than with other groups of people.

I am sure the Congress will not adjourn without passing legislation for their benefit.

Mr. RAMEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentlewoman yield?

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I am very glad to yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. RAMEY. And the expense would not be as if the veterans had to be hospitalized.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Yes; it is a most worthy, most justified cause. As a matter of fact, so far as expense is concerned, we should not consider that anyway, but, as a matter of fact it will, in my opinion, save a great deal of expense because the boys can live at home and ride to and from the hospitals for the treatment they need. Thus it saves hospital expense and it also enables the boys to work beside. When men are hospitalized in any Veterans' Administration hospital the cost is $10.33 a day. So, from every angle it is a wise measure.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unnimous consent to include as part of my remarks an amendment the Senate just put into the third deficiency bill appropriating money to acquire these automobiles.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

(The matter referred to follows:)

VETERANS' ADMINISTRATION

Automobiles and other conveyances for disabled veterans: To enable the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs to provide an automobile or other conveyance, equipped with such special attachments and devices as the Administrator may deem necessary, for each veteran of World War II, whether or not discharged from service, who (1) is entitled to disability compensation or pension under the laws administered by the Veterans' Administration, and (2) is unable, because of the loss, or loss of use, of one or both lower limbs, to use normal means of locomotion or ambulation: Provided, That no part of the money appropriated by this paragraph shall be used for the repair, maintenance, or replacement of any such automobile or other conveyance and no veteran shall be given an automobile or other conveyance under the provisions of this paragraph until it is established to the satisfaction of the Administrator that such veteran will be able to operate such automobile or other conveyance in a manner consistent with his own safety and the safety of others, and will be licensed to operate such automobile or other conveyance by the State of his residence, $30,000,000 to remain available until expended.

CANCER RESEARCH

Mr. RAMEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 3 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAMEY. Mr. Speaker, I regret very much the hymn of hate sounded by the gentleman from West Virginia, whom I have always admired.

When the so-called cancer research bill was before the House our physicians, Dr. JUDD, of Minnesota, and Dr. SMITH, of Ohio, and I believe Dr. MILLER, of Nebraska, informed the House that the outstanding physicians of the country had been conducting that research properly for a number of years, and further directed the attention of the House to the fact that this new proposed research bill would be a politicians' affair, that people might be appointed from any walk of life who might know nothing about cancer or cancer research. If any of these physicians are here I would like to ask them if that is not correct, that our attention was so directed?

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAMEY. I yield.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. I have not been in touch too closely with cancer research for some time. I want to make clear a point that I believe is cloudy in the mind of a great many Members, namely, whether or not cancer is on the increase. The best statistics we have on that point come from Copenhagen. Statistics have been kept there for perhaps 40 or 50 years. The last time I examined them they did not show that cancer is on the increase. Apparently it is because we live longer and also other diseases are not killing as many people as they used to that cause people to believe cancer is on the increase. So far as I know there is no scientific evidence to substantiate the claim that is being made that cancer is on the increase.

Mr. RAMEY. This would have been a political board when there has already been research and study properly made for years. Just the use of taxpayers' money to buy another election under the name of health research. A wicked subterfuge.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. If the Congress had appropriated $100,000,000 for cancer research, there is not a cancer research institution in all the world that would have the slightest idea as to what they would do with that amount of money. People who talk about cancer research or research in any field of medicine get the idea that you can do it with money; but research is something that is in the heads of men. The great discoveries in medical science have not been made because there were a lot of funds available: Those discoveries have been made because brains were available to make them. If this House could get rid of the idea that you can do these things with money we would all be better off.

Mr. RAMEY. And politicians should not take the place of men in the professions who have been making an unselfish study for years. They did not require money. They gave.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. When politicians begin to meddle in any kind of research, they destroy that research.

Mr. RAMEY. I thank the gentleman for his contribution. I hope the gentleman from West Virginia will take his hate message from his word when he revises his remarks. We have always looked upon him as a Christian gentleman. In these closing days of the session all of us are under an 18-hour daily schedule and unusual strain. We hope this outburst is emotional due to the heavy toll of the strain on the gentleman from West Virginia and that this is not a ruling passion of the inner man.

Hate has killed more than disease. Hate makes disease, war, pestilence, and famine.

SENATE JOINT RESOLUTION REFERRED

A joint resolution of the Senate of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and, under the rule, referred as follows:

S. J. Res. 158. Joint resolution to provide for the appointment of a National Commission on Individual War Memorials, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Library.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

Mr. ROGERS of New York, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee had examined and found truly enrolled a bill of the House of the following title, which was thereupon signed by the Speaker:

H. R. 4051. An act to grant to personnel of the armed forces equal treatment in the matter of leave, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bills and a joint resolution of the Senate of the following titles:

S. 191. An act to amend the Public Health Service Act to authorize grants to the States for surveying their hospitals and public-health centers and for planning construction of additional facilities, and to authorize grants to assist in such construction;

S. 528. An act for the relief of Thaddeus C. Knight;

S. 881. An act authorizing the President of the United States to award posthumously in the name of Congress a Medal of Honor to William Mitchell;

S. 1253. An act to enable debtor railroad corporations, whose properties during a period of 7 years have provided sufficient earnings to pay fixed charges, to effect a readjustment of their financial structures; to alter or modify their financial obligations; and for other purposes;

S. 2020. An act granting a right-of-way at a revised location to the West Shore Railroad Co., the New York Central Railroad Co., lessee, across a portion of the military reservation at West Point;

S. 2236. An act providing for a medal for service in the merchant marine during the present war;

S. 2304. An act to provide for the training of officers for the naval service, and for other purposes;

S. 2318. An act to amend the act of May 11, 1938, for the conservation of the fishery resources of the Columbia River and for other purposes;

S. 2401. An act to amend the act of May 4, 1898 (30 Stat. 369), as amended, to authorize the President to appoint 250 acting assistant surgeons for temporary service;

S. 2419. An act to amend further the act of April 6, 1938, as amended by the act of July 9, 1941, entitled "An act authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to exchange sites at Miami Beach, Dade County, Fla., for Coast Guard purposes."

S. 2426. An act providing for the conveyance to the city of Canton, S. Dak., of the Canton Insane Asylum, located in Lincoln County, S. Dak.; and

S. J. Res. 84. Joint resolution authorizing the erection in the District of Columbia of a statue of Nathan Hale.

BILL PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT

Mr. ROGERS of New York, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee did on this day present to the President, for his approval, a bill of the House of the following title:

H. R. 4051. An act to grant to personnel of the armed forces equal treatment in the matter of leave, and for other purposes.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 13 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until tomorrow, Friday, August 2, 1946, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1517. A letter from the Assistant to the President, the American Academy of Arts and Letters transmitting the official report of the American Academy of Arts and Letters for the year ending December 31, 1945; to the Committee on the Library.

1518. A letter from the Chairman, National Advisory Council on International Monetary and Financial Problems, transmitting a draft of a proposed bill to permit investment of funds of insurance companies organized within the District of Columbia in obligations of the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

1519. A letter from the Assistant Secretary, National Institute of Arts and Letters, transmitting the official report of the National Institute of Arts and Letters for the year ending December 31, 1945; to the Committee on the Library.

1520. A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Interior, transmitting one copy each of various legislation passed by the Municipal Council of St. Croix and the Legislative Assembly of the Virgin Islands; to the Committee on Insular Affairs.

1521. A letter from the Attorney General, transmitting a report showing the special assistants employed during the period from January 1 to June 30, 1946, under the appropriation "Compensation of special attorneys, etc., Department of Justice"; to the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments.

1522. A letter from the Attorney General, transmitting a draft of a proposed bill to authorize payment of claims based on loss of or damage to property deposited by alien enemies; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

1523. A letter from the Acting Director, Bureau of the Budget, transmitting the fourth quarterly report of personnel ceilings as determined and fixed by him, for the quarter ending June 30, 1946; to the Committee on the Civil Service.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 2 of rule XIII, reports of committees were delivered to the Clerk for printing and reference to the proper calendar, as follows:

Mr. COLMER: Committee on Rules. House Resolution 747. Resolution providing for the consideration of H. R. 7037, a bill to amend the Social Security Act and the Internal Revenue Code, and for other purposes; to take from the Speaker's table, and to request a conference thereon; without amendment (Rept. No. 2714). Referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. SABATH: Committee on Rules. House Resolution 748. Resolution providing for the consideration of S. 2235, an act to provide a system of relief for veterans, and dependents of veterans, who served during World War II in the organized military forces of the Government of the Commonwealth of the Philippines while such forces were in the service of the armed forces of the United States pursuant to the military order of July 26, 1941, of the President of the United States, and for other purposes; without amendment (Rept. No. 2715). Referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. SABATH: Committee on Rules. House Resolution 751. Resolution providing for the consideration of H. R. 2788, a bill to amend title 28 of the United States Code in regard to the limitation of certain actions, and for other purposes; without amendment (Rept. No. 2718). Referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. MAY: Committee on Military Affairs. S. 2460. An act to provide additional inducements to citizens of the United States to make a career of the United States military or naval service, and for other purposes; without amendment (Rept. No. 2720). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union.

Mr. O'TOOLE: Committee on the Library. Senate Joint Resolution 158. SENATE

FRIDAY, AUGUST 2, 1946

(Legislative day of Monday, July 29, 1946)

The Senate met in executive session at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

The Chaplain, Rev. Frederick Brown Harris, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father God, who art without beginning or end of days, who countest the nations as the dust of the balance, who puttest down the mighty from their seat and has exalted the humble and the meek, allowed by Thee, we have been called to be servants of the Nation in a tense and tortured time, when the world has been plowed with violence, when the sun was blackened and the moon became as blood, when wars and rumors of war vexed the earth. In such a day Thou didst summon us to unleash the might of freedom against rampant evil bent on enslaving all peoples and didst lead us to a victory which insures to men of good will a golden chance to build a world that at last shall be a fit dwelling place for Thy children.

Through this crucial period we have been at best unprofitable servants. Now unto Thy holy keeping we commit ourselves, and all that we have done and said, as this day there is written "The end" to the chapter of our endeavors during these momentous times. With a solemn sense of the finality of it all the volume is closing. For all our regrets we cannot cancel one word or erase one act. Wilt Thou bless and strengthen all that here has been worthily done, as we have followed flickering lights in a dark hour. Pardon and overrule what has been done unworthily, or left undone, or done amiss.

And now may the Lord bless us and keep us, may the Lord make His face to shine upon us and be gracious unto us, may the Lord lift up the light of His countenance upon us and give us peace—peace in our own hearts, peace in this dear land of ours, and peace throughout all the earth, now and evermore.

We ask it in the dear Redeemer's name. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. BARKLEY, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of the calendar day Thursday, August 1, 1946, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. GURNEY] may be excused from attendance upon further sessions of the Senate during this Congress.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

CLAUDE PEPPER, Chairman.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS INTRODUCED

Bills and joint resolutions were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

(Mr. ANDREWS introduced Senate bill 2505, to provide for the extension and completion of the United States Capitol, which was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and appears under a separate heading.)

By Mr. BYRD (for himself and Mr. BUTLER):

S. 2506. A bill to bring Federal revenues and expenditures into balance; to the Committee on Finance.

By Mr. MEAD:

S. 2507. A bill relating to the effective date of death compensation and death pension awards in the case of interned dependents of deceased veterans; to the Committee on Finance.

By Mr. TAYLOR:

S. 2508. A bill to provide income-tax credits for individual taxpayers whose income falls below level necessary for minimum decent standard of living, and to equalize treatment given individuals as compared to corporations under the Internal Revenue Code; to the Committee on Finance.

By Mr. MEAD (for himself, Mr. KNOWLAND, Mr. LANGER, Mr. MAGNUSON, Mr. TUNNELL, Mr. MITCHELL, Mr. TAYLOR, Mr. HUFFMAN, Mr. GUFFEY, Mr. WAGNER, Mr. THOMAS of Utah, Mr. WALSH, and Mr. MORSE):

S. 2509. A bill for the better assurance of the protection of persons within the several States from mob violence and lynching, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

(Mr. ANDREWS introduced Senate Joint Resolution 188, proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States relating to the Judiciary, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and appears under a separate heading.)

(Mr. ANDREWS introduced Senate Joint Resolution 189, proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States authorizing Congress to provide for the trial of certain crimes and of suits at common law by juries of fewer than 12 members, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and appears under a separate heading.)

EXTENSION AND COMPLETION OF THE UNITED STATES CAPITOL

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to introduce for appropriate reference a bill providing for the extension and completion of the United States Capitol.

In this connection, let me say that in 1937, under the leadership of the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY], the bill was passed by the Senate, but it was rejected by the House. However, I understand that now the leadership of the House is committed to the provisions of that bill, which provides for the completion of the front portion of the Capitol, which never has been completed, and which is architecturally incomplete. Anyone can understand that if he will get into an airplane or a blimp and pass over the Capitol and see just exactly how the dome of the Capitol projects out over the front portico. Also, the front is made of standstone, and the pillars are made of sandstone, and it is necessary to keep them constantly painted and repaired. They are entirely different from the beautiful fluted granite columns which front the eastern portion of the Senate wing and the eastern portion of the House wing.

Mr. President, in this connection, I desire to make an explanation of why this condition has existed and how long it has existed. I ask unanimous consent to have the bill, together with a statement in connection with the introduction of the bill, printed at this point in the RECORD as a part of my remarks for future guidance of Congress.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the bill will be received and appropriately referred, and the bill and statement will be printed in the RECORD.

The bill (S. 2505) to provide for the extension and completion of the United States Capitol, introduced by Mr. ANDREWS, was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the central portion of the Capitol shall be extended, reconstructed, and replaced in substantial accordance with either scheme A or scheme B of the architectural plan submitted by the joint commission of Congress and reported to Congress on March 3, 1905 (H. Doc. No. 385, 58th Cong., 3d sess.), with such modifications as the Commission may determine, excepting so much of said plan as relates to a sculptural group in the pediment of the House wing, and excepting so much of said plan as relates to the west front of the Capitol and to the two broad flights of terrace steps on the west of the Capitol. The joint commission hereinafter provided for shall determine whether the substance of scheme A or scheme B shall be adopted.

SEC. 2. The extension, reconstruction, and replacement herein authorized shall be carried out under the direction and supervision of a commission, which is hereby created, to be known as the Commission for the Extension and Completion of the United States Capitol, and to be composed of the President of the Senate, the Speaker of the House of Representatives, the chairman and the ranking minority member of the Senate Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds; the chairman and the ranking minority member of the House Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, the minority leader of the Senate, the minority leader of the House of Representatives, and the Architect of the Capitol. The Architect of the Capitol shall perform such services under this act as the Commission may direct.

SEC. 3. The construction contemplated under this act, including the necessary traveling expenses, the letting of contracts, advertising, purchase of materials, supplies, equipment, and accessories in the open market, the employment of all necessary architectural, engineering, and other personal services (all without reference to sec. 35 of the Public Buildings Act approved June 25, 1910, as amended, Sec. 3709 of the Revised Statutes, or the Classification Act of 1923, as amended), and the purchase of necessary technical and other books, shall be under the control of the Architect of the Capitol, subject to the direction and supervision of the Commission.

SEC. 4. The total cost of the extension, reconstruction and replacement, and other items enumerated in section 3 herein authorized shall not exceed the sum of $5,000,000, and a contract or contracts for any portion or all of such amount may be entered into in accordance with section 3. A sum not exceeding $5,000,000 is hereby authorized to be appropriated to carry out the provisions of this act.

SEC. 5. Appropriations made pursuant to this act shall be disbursed in the same manner as other appropriations under the Architect of the Capitol through the Division of Disbursements, Treasury Department.

The statement presented by Mr. ANDREWS is as follows:

EXTENSION AND COMPLETION OF THE UNITED STATES CAPITOL

The United States Capitol Building, as presently constructed, has never been completed architecturally. The north wing of the old building, containing the Supreme Court Room, was constructed during the period 1793 to 1800. The south wing of the old building, containing Statuary Hall, was constructed during the period 1800 to 1811. After the burning of the Capitol in 1814 these sections of the building were reconstructed and the central portion of the old building constructed during the period 1815 to 1829.

The Senate and House wings, containing the present Senate and House Chambers, were not constructed until the period 1851 to 1865, and the old wooden dome was not replaced with the present cast-iron dome until the period 1856 to 1865.

The present Senate and House wings and dome were designed by and constructed under the direction of Thomas U. Walter, who served as Architect of the Capitol during the period 1851 to 1865. Mr. Walter's plans never contemplated leaving the old building in its present state. His plans contemplated extending the old portion of the building eastward and reconstructing in marble this portion of the building which is constructed of Acquia Creek sandstone, a material that is not durable and is disintegrating with the years, notwithstanding the fact that this portion of the building is painted about every 4 years.

In his annual report to Congress November 1, 1863, Mr. Walter stated:

"The eastern portico of the old building will certainly be taken down at no very distant day, and the front be extended eastward, at least to the front line of the wings, so as to complete the architectural group and at the same time afford additional accommodations to the legislative department of the Government. * * *"

In his annual report to Congress the following year, November 1, 1864, Mr. Walter again stated:

"Now that the new dome and the wings of the Capitol are approaching completion it must be apparent to everyone that the extension of the center building on the east to the line of the new wings becomes an architectural necessity. I have, therefore, prepared plans for thus completing the work in harmony with what has already been done and will place them in the Capitol for future reference.

"I do not suppose, nor would I recommend, that any action be taken by Congress in reference to such an improvement until the war is ended and the financial condition of the country becomes settled and prosperous; but inasmuch as it is my purpose to retire from these works as soon as the dome is finished, I deem it incumbent upon me to leave upon record my views as to their final completion."

Numerous efforts have been made during the past 80 years by the three men who have served as Architect of the Capitol since 1865, including the present Architect, to carry into effect Mr. Walter's plans for the extension and completion of the Capitol. Bills have been introduced in the House and Senate for this purpose from time to time and hearings held by the Public Buildings and Grounds Committees of the House and Senate, but the necessary enabling legislation has never been enacted.

Extensive hearings were last held by both the Senate and House committees in 1935 and again by the Senate committee in 1937. On both of these occasions the Senate passed a bill authorizing the extension and completion of the Capitol, but in each instance the bill was not reported out by the House committee.

The bill which I am introducing today provides for the extension and completion of the Capitol. It creates a Joint Congressional Commission under whose direction the work would be accomplished. It provides for the reconstruction of the old portion of the east front of the Capitol in marble, and the extension of this section of the building eastward—the exact distance to be determined by the Commission. The project is to be carried forward in substantial accordance with either scheme A or scheme B of the architectural plan submitted by a previous Joint Commission of Congress in House Document No. 385, Fifty-eighth Congress, March 3, 1905. The bill authorizes an appropriation of $5,000,000 for the project.

In offering this bill, I again wish to emphasize that the extension and completion of the United States Capitol is recommended in order that (1) there may be corrected the architectural defect in the building which exists due to the skirt or base of the dome extending over the east portico in such a manner as to give the appearance of an apparent lack of support to the dome; (2) the Members of the Congress may be provided with much-needed additional accommodations; and (3) a durable construction for the central portion of the building may be provided by the replacement of the existing sandstone with marble.

AMENDMENT TO CONSTITUTION RELATING TO THE JUDICIARY

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to introduce a Senate joint resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States. The amendment relates to the judiciary. I wish I had time to explain it. I realize that perhaps this may be the last day of the present Congress, and I also realize that probably this is the last day I shall appear on this floor. But this is a matter on which I have worked for several months, and I trust that the joint resolution will be favorably considered by our Judiciary Committee. I feel that if the committee looks into the matter thoroughly, it will recommend the passage of the joint resolution by this body. Its passage and the subsequent ratification of the constitutional amendment will mean much to our beloved Constitution and I wish I had time to explain all the details of the matter.

I request that the joint resolution be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 188) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States relating to the Judiciary, was received, read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled (two-thirds of each House concurring therein), That the following article is hereby proposed as an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which shall be valid to all intents and purposes as part of the Constitution, in lieu of section 1 of article III thereof, when ratified by the legislatures of three-fourths of the several States:

"ARTICLE —

"SECTION 1. The judicial power of the United States shall be vested in a Supreme Court, and in circuit courts of appeal, district courts, and such other inferior courts as the Congress may from time to time ordain and establish. The justices and judges of said courts shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. They shall hold their offices during good behavior and as herein provided, and shall receive at stated times for their services a compensation which shall not be diminished during their continuance in office.

"SEC. 2. The Supreme Court shall be composed of a Chief Justice, appointed from the United States at large, and not less than eight associate justices, not more than one of whom shall be appointed from territory within the jurisdiction of the same circuit court of appeals.

"SEC. 3. Any justice of the Supreme Court and any judge of any circuit court of appeals or district court who shall have held a commission or commissions as such justice or judge for a period of 10 years may voluntarily retire upon attaining the age of 70 years, and thereafter, upon his request shall continue to receive the same annual compensation. Any retired Justice of the Supreme Court or any senior judge of a circuit court of appeals shall be subject to call by the Supreme Court to sit as a member thereof in any case in which a member or members are disqualified by reason of interest, or unable to participate because of illness, or unavoidable absence. Any case before the Supreme Court involving the interpretation or construction of a State or Federal Constitution shall not be adjudged except upon concurrence of a majority of the full Court.

"SEC. 4. This article shall be inoperative unless it shall have been ratified as an amendment to the Constitution by the legislatures of three-fourths of the several States within 5 years from the date of its submission to the States by the Congress."

AMENDMENT TO CONSTITUTION RELATING TO TRIAL OF CERTAIN CRIMES AND SUITS AT COMMON LAW BY JURIES

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. President, I have one more joint resolution to amend the Constitution of the United States. It would authorize Congress to provide for the trial of certain crimes and suits at common law by juries consisting of fewer than 12 members. If we try a lawsuit at common law in any of our States, it is tried before a jury of six. Many criminal cases, except capital cases, are tried before juries consisting of only six members. There is no reason why the United States Government should not be able to try its cases before juries consisting of the same number of members as are used in the trials of cases in our various State courts. In many cases in which the United States Government is involved, jurors are sometimes required to attend court for days at a time and, in the end, perhaps render a verdict against some poor man who has stolen, for example, $5 worth of stamps. It is like the laboring of the mountain which brought forth a mouse. If this resolution is adopted it will save the Government many hundreds of thousands of dollars, and without any sacrifice of justice.

I ask unanimous consent to introduce the joint resolution for appropriate reference, and I request that it be printed in full in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 189) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States authorizing Congress to provide for the trial of certain crimes and of suits at common law by juries of fewer than 12 members, introduced by Mr. ANDREWS, was received, read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled (two-thirds of each House concurring therein), That the following article is hereby proposed as an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which shall be valid to all intents and purposes as a part of the Constitution when ratified by the legislatures of three-fourths of the several States:

"ARTICLE —

"SEC. 1. The Congress shall have power to provide, by appropriate legislation, that the trial of any crime for which the maximum penalty is less than death or life imprisonment or that the trial of any suit at common law shall be by a jury of fewer than 12 members.

"SEC. 2. This article shall be inoperative unless it shall have been ratified as an amendment to the Constitution by the legislatures of three-fourths of the several States within 7 years from the date of its submission to the States by the Congress."

CALL OF THE ROLL

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, I desire to address the Senate for a few moments at this time, to make some reference to the speech delivered by the junior Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HART] last week. I should like to have him present, and, without losing my right to the floor, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Andrews	Hill	O'Mahoney
Austin	Hoey	Overton
Ball	Huffman	Pepper
Barkley	Johnson, Colo.	Radcliffe
Bilbo	Johnston, S. C.	Revercomb
Bridges	Knowland	Russell
Byrd	La Follette	Smith
Capper	Langer	Stewart
Chavez	McClellan	Swift
Connally	McFarland	Taft
Cordon	McKellar	Taylor
Donnell	McMahon	Thomas, Okla.
Downey	Magnuson	Thomas, Utah
Ferguson	Maybank	Tunnell
Fulbright	Millikin	Vandenberg
George	Mitchell	Wagner
Gossett	Moore	Walsh
Green	Morse	Wheeler
Guffey	Murdock	Wherry
Hart	Murray	White
Hayden	O'Daniel	Wiley

Mr. HILL. I announce that the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY] is absent because of illness.

The Senator from Nevada [Mr. CARVILLE] is absent by leave of the Senate.

The Senator from Virginia [Mr. BURCH] and the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GERRY] are necessarily absent.

The Senator from Missouri [Mr. BRIGGS], the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. EASTLAND], the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. KILGORE], the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS], the Senator from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN], and the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. MYERS] are detained on public business.

The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH] is absent on official business, having been appointed a member of the President's Evaluation Commission in connection with the test of atomic bombs on naval vessels at Bikini.

The Senator from Louisiana [Mr. ELLENDER] and the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] are absent on official business, having been appointed to the commission on the part of the Senate to participate in the Philippine independence ceremonies.

Mr. WHERRY. The Senator from Maine [Mr. BREWSTER], the Senator from Delaware [Mr. BUCK], the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. HAWKES], the Senator from Kansas [Mr. REED], the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. STANFILL], and the Senator from Indiana [Mr. WILLIS] are necessarily absent.

The Senator from Vermont [Mr. AIKEN], the Senator from Illinois [Mr. BROOKS], the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. BUSHFIELD], the Senator from Indiana [Mr. CAPEHART], the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. GURNEY], the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. ROBERTSON], the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY], and the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. YOUNG] are absent by leave of the Senate.

The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BUTLER] is absent on official business, being a member of the commission appointed to attend the Philippine independence ceremonies.

The Senator from Iowa [Mr. HICKENLOOPER] is absent by leave of the Senate on official business as a member of the Special Committee on Atomic Energy.

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. SALTONSTALL] is absent on official business, having been appointed a member of the President's Evaluation Commission in connection with the test of atomic bombs on naval vessels at Bikini.

The Senator from Iowa [Mr. WILSON] is absent on official business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Sixty-three Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, it had been my intention to address the Senate for a few minutes at this time. I find, however, that the distinguished senior Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN] will have to leave shortly in order that he may assume his new duties as our delegate on the United Nations Council. I share with him the desire to have an opportunity to vote on the pending resolution.

I am, therefore, going to yield the floor at this time in order that we may proceed with the World Court resolution, and shall ask recognition at a later time in the day.

REORGANIZATION OF CONGRESS—STATEMENT BY THE PRESIDENT

As in legislative session,

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, the President of the United States has just affixed his signature to the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946, in the presence of all the members of the joint committee who were in the city. I ask unanimous consent that the clerk may read the statement which the President issued at the time he signed the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the clerk will read as requested.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

The Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946, which I signed today, is one of the most significant advances in the organization of the Congress of the United States since the establishment of that body.

Both as United States Senator and as President, I have had occasion to observe some of the outmoded organizational and procedural traditions that have burdened the legislative branch. The problem of reorganizing and modernizing the Congress has been a peculiarly difficult one, and session after session the Members of the Congress found themselves unable to take decisive steps in tackling the problem.

The Seventy-ninth Congress, however, approached the task with vigor and in a sound and orderly manner. I have nothing but admiration for the way in which the investigation of congressional organization was conducted and particularly for the leaders who formed the special investigating committee and who wrote and sponsored the bill.

I realize that in the process of congressional consideration, compromises and adjustments had to be made and some desirable provisions were deleted. However, the passage of this act shows that progress can be made, and I anticipate that the Congress will continue to pay attention to those parts of the legislative-reorganization problem not yet solved.

The present act should permit easier and closer relations between the executive agencies of the Government and the Congress. The expanded staff of the congressional committees and of the agencies in the legislative branch can become a valuable link between the policy-making deliberations of the Congress and the practical administrative experience of the executive branch.

The legislative budget and the provisions on the handling of appropriations will undoubtedly result in clearer and more realistic relationships between the income and expenditure sides of the budget. Further, the changes in the dates for the transmitting of the President's economic report and the report of the Joint Committee on the Economic Report, required under the Employment Act of 1946, will result in proper integration between the legislative budget and the national program for maximum employment. The joint committee will now present its findings and recommendations to the Congress before February 1. The four revenue and appropriation committees in carrying out their new responsibilities under the Reorganization Act, therefore, will have the benefit of the joint committee's report for their over-all appraisal and recommendations on Federal receipts, expenditures, debt, and surplus. This timing is essential today when Federal fiscal policy is so closely related to the Nation's economic conditions.

One other provision of the bill deserves special praise—that which raises the salary of Members of Congress from $10,000 to $12,500 plus an expense allowance of $2,500. This is a long overdue step in providing adequate compensation for our Federal legislators.

AUTHORIZATION FOR SPECIAL COMMITTEE TO INVESTIGATE PETROLEUM RESOURCES TO FILE FINAL REPORT AFTER ADJOURNMENT OF CONGRESS

As in legislative session,

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent on behalf of the Special Committee to Investigate Petroleum Resources that the committee may be permitted to file its final report after the adjournment of this session by depositing it with the Secretary of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

PRODUCTION, TRANSPORTATION, AND MARKETING OF WOOL—ARTICLE BY CHARLES E. B. DICKINSON

As in legislative session,

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, in view of the discussion that has taken place in the Senate recently with reference to legislation relating to the production, transportation, and marketing of wool, I ask to have inserted in the RECORD an article recently published in the New York Daily News Record of July 31, 1946, entitled "Needed Cooperation Between Dealers and Growers."

This article discusses the question from the standpoint of the grower and the dealer.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CITES NEED OF COOPERATION BETWEEN DEALERS AND GROWERS

(By Charles E. B. Dickinson)

It is not unnatural that wool growers demonstrated a certain amount of feeling about the defeat for this term of the wool measure. That they should demonstrate the attitude that there is another day, and another year, is something different, in its implication.

It may be a natural follow-up to the fact that wool enjoyed a special privilege in a sense during the war and is approaching the time when it must be weaned away from the nursing-along attitude that accompanied the recognition of the essential nature and need for that commodity, for peacetime purposes.

One important thing the wool grower has not properly appraised as yet and that is that operations in the wool textile industry as a whole, have moved away from old methods, and that the actual community of interest that exists in the business must be accepted at its proper rating.

It is unfortunate that users of wool have been allowed to become as dissatisfied as they have. One of the most important figures in the industry said not long ago, "I know of no other industry in which the source of the raw material is as indifferent to the welfare of its customers as is the wool-growing industry."

That is a real misfortune in these days of increasing interest in the conditions of resale of one's product. It was on that basis that the critic spoke.

Subsidies are unpopular in this country, for the one who actually pays the bill, the consumer, knows they are only a blind for political purposes. There is a 7½- to 10-percent differential in favor of the use of better grades of Australian wool, due to the greater care in baling and delivering in a cleanly manner.

It may annoy the grower to have the dealer call this to his attention. It is his duty, however, and he would be derelict if he did not do so. Foreign-grown wools find their way into his machinery too readily for that to happen, overlong.

In this period, when there is political intrigue in matters pertaining to the tariff it behooves the grower to get closer to the dealer rather than to drive him away. In fact getting closer together has been the trend in the industry for the last score of years.

Long ago the retailer demonstrated a desire to get closer to the machinery by asking for monthly meetings at which the troubles of the industry could be threshed out. That trend resulted in more and more fixed positions, such as the chains, the tie-ups, and the specialization. These put a very effective limitation upon trading and gambling in the industry for each move was designed to heighten the efficiency of that particular division of the industry under its changed set-up.

Fixed prices have prevailed for the product of the chains for a long time. Economic gyrations due to political or social upheavals cannot be avoided. However, no one branch of the industry can operate in a free, unrestricted manner while others have their limitations.

Notwithstanding, long ago, it was prophesied that ultimately the wool business would be done on a brokerage basis, the time for that has not arrived as yet, and the dealer should not be penalized in a time when earnings on a larger scale are necessary for tax purposes, is absolutely essential.

He has openly said that the legislation, now considered dead, for this term of Congress anyway, would put him out of business. That should not be, for the dealers, as has been said before, perform a very useful function.

Perhaps it would not be amiss if the growers made an effort, or those who represent them, to learn the reason for the other fellow's point of view. That has been the policy of the cloth manufacturer for a long time and it has paid dividends in inventories. The community-of-interest idea that is growing so steadily in the industry includes the grower, the dealer in wool, and the processor thereof. What affects one affects the other.

WORK OF THE SENATE COMMITTEE ON NAVAL AFFAIRS, SEVENTY-NINTH CONGRESS

As in legislative session,

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a report made by me of the work of the Senate Committee on Naval Affairs, Seventy-ninth Congress,

There being no objection, the report was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

WORK OF THE SENATE COMMITTEE ON NAVAL AFFAIRS, SEVENTY-NINTH CONGRESS

(By DAVID I. WALSH, chairman)

Prior to the beginning of the Seventy-ninth Congress, January 1945, and during the early months of the war, the Committee on Naval Affairs of the Senate completed practically all of its work in connection with authorizing the construction of naval vessels, planes, bases, shore facilities, and the procurement of naval personnel to effectively prosecute the war.

Although most of the committee work during the Seventy-ninth Congress concerned postwar activities, several major bills in connection with the prosecution of the war were considered:

Public Law No. 13, approved March 1, 1945, authorized an additional expenditure of $1,500,539,500 for the development or establishment of naval shore facilities. Approximately $1,000,000,000 of this amount was for advance base construction for the Pacific, $230,000,000 for ship repair and laying-up facilities, $28,000,000 for hospital facilities, and $59,416,500 for aviation facilities.

Public Law No. 140, approved July 6, 1945, amended the law relating to the conservation, care, custody, protection, and operation of the naval-petroleum and oil-shale reserves. This bill amended existing law by authorizing the extraction of oil from the Elk Hills Naval Petroleum Reserve under a unit contract plan, to provide additional oil which was required for military operations in the Pacific Ocean areas.

Public Law No. 142, approved July 6, 1945, increased the amount of oil which could be taken from the naval-petroleum reserves from 15,000 barrels per day to 55,000 barrels per day. Since the end of the war the daily amount produced has been greatly reduced.

On July 12, 1945, a bill, S. 1258, was introduced authorizing the acquisition and conversion of 200,000 additional tons of auxiliary vessels for the United States Navy. At the request of the Navy Department, no action was taken on this bill. In view of the progress of the war it became apparent that these additional vessels would not be needed for war service in the Pacific area.

Recent laws require the Naval Affairs Committees of the Senate and the House of Representatives to approve proposed purchases, leases, or disposals of land by the Navy Department, thus greatly increasing the work of the committees. Approximately 1,500 requests for purchase, lease, or disposal have been submitted for the consideration of the committees. All but a few of these departmental requests were approved. The committee has consistently recommended a reduction in the number of leases and has urged that no additional purchases be made.

Under existing law, all persons temporarily promoted above the rank of captain in the Navy, and colonel in the Marine Corps, must be confirmed by the Senate. All initial appointments in the Regular Navy and all transfers from the Reserve Corps, or transfer of temporary officers, to the Regular Navy, must also be confirmed by the Senate. Approximately 16,000 nominations were approved by the committee and favorably reported to the Senate. Many of these nominations were routine, but several were of major importance.

POSTWAR ACTIVITIES

The greater part of the work of the Committee on Naval Affairs during the present Congress relates to the establishment of a postwar Navy.

On June 19, 1945, the Committee on Naval Affairs of the Senate, and the Committee on Naval Affairs of the House of Representatives, met jointly to consider, in executive session, the Navy Department's plans with respect to a postwar Navy. On September 10, 1945, Senate Concurrent Resolution No. 30 was introduced to express the sense of the Congress with respect to the composition of the postwar Navy. No action was taken on this resolution by the Senate Committee on Naval Affairs at the request of the President of the United States. The President stated that he was not prepared to make a final decision on this matter until after he had made a study of the postwar defenses required by our country as a whole. Although no action was taken upon the basic resolution fixing the size of the postwar Navy as to the size of naval craft, it was decided, unofficially, to proceed to establish the size of the postwar Navy with respect to personnel. Public Law No. 347, approved April 18, 1946, authorized an increase in the number of line officers in the Regular Navy from 12,760 to 23,760, with proportionate increases in the Marine Corps and the Staff Corps of the Navy. The bill also authorized the transfer of Reserve officers, and temporary officers, to the Regular Navy, and the Regular Marine Corps.

Many of the bills which have been considered by the Senate Committee on Naval Affairs since VJ-day have related to the status and rights of officer and enlisted personnel. The most important of these are as follows:

S. 2304, a bill to provide for the training of officers for the naval service to meet the shortage of officers which the Naval Academy is unable to supply. This bill increased the number of students at Naval Reserve Officer Training Corps colleges to 15,400, and provided that these young men will receive their education at Government expense. It is anticipated that hereafter appointments to the Regular Navy will be approximately 50 percent from the Naval Academy, and 50 percent from Reserve officers or enlisted men.

Public Law 305, approved February 21, 1946, authorized the President to retire certain officers and enlisted men of the Navy, Marine Corps, and Coast Guard. During the war Navy selection laws providing for the retirement of naval officers were suspended. The purpose of Public Law 305 is to authorize the retirement of older officers whose retirement would have been effected had the war not intervened, and to reduce the excessive number of officers commissioned in the higher ranks during the war.

S. 1438, a bill to provide additional inducements, including retirement and retirement pay benefits, to citizens of the United States who make a career of the United States military or naval service, was passed by both Houses of the Congress. Certain features of this bill were not satisfactory to the Army, and the provision authorizing the transfer to the Fleet Reserve of enlisted men who have had 16 years of active service was eliminated. This bill is one of the most important ever proposed to invite young men to join and make the Navy a career, to provide for their transfer to the Fleet Reserve, retirement, or commissioning as officers in the Navy. S. 2460, a substitute bill for S. 1438, passed the House on August 1, 1946. Although it was impracticable to insert in this bill provisions authorizing transfer of enlisted men to the Naval Reserve after 16 years of active service, it is hoped that at the next session of the Congress it will be possible to establish, for the Navy at least, authorization for enlisted men to transfer to the Fleet Reserve after completing 16 years of active service.

Other important personnel legislation enacted is as follows:

Public Law No. 244, approved December 3, 1945, to adjust the pay and allowances of members of the Navy Nurse Corps.

Public Law No. 255, approved December 11, 1945, to provide for a temporary increase in the age limit for appointment to the United States Military Academy and the United States Naval Academy.

Public Law No. 250, approved December 7, 1945, to authorize the head of the Postgraduate School of the United States Navy to confer masters' and doctors' degrees in engineering.

Public Law No. 402, approved June 10, 1946, to establish the civilian post of academic dean of the Postgraduate School of the United States Naval Academy.

Public Law No. 284, approved December 28, 1945, provided more efficient dental care for the personnel of the Navy and Marine Corps.

S. 2401, which passed the Senate on July 29, 1946, and the House on July 31, 1946, authorized the President to appoint 250 acting assistant surgeons for temporary service in the Navy. The purpose of this bill is to provide an efficient method of obtaining young doctors for the Naval Service.

Public Law No. 297, approved February 12, 1946, amended article 38 of Articles for the Government of the Navy relating to general courts martial. This act improved the general courts martial system in the Navy, and its purpose was to speed up courts martial procedure.

S. 2253, reported to the Senate on June 14, 1946, provided for retirement and retirement annuities of civilian members of the teaching staff at the United States Naval Academy and the postgraduate school at Annapolis, Md. The purpose of this bill was to improve the conditions at Annapolis so as to insure the best possible type of teachers and instructors for future naval officers.

Several laws were enacted relating to and consolidating previous laws and practices regarding the transportation of naval personnel and their dependents, and their household effects. Many Navy claims and relief bills were approved by the committee and passed by the Senate.

Three important bills were enacted by the Congress relating to the rehabilitation of the island of Guam. The Navy intends to fortify and maintain Guam as a permanent naval base in the Pacific.

The committee held many hearings in the fall of 1945, and the winter of 1946, investigating the demobilization programs of the armed forces, and suggested procedures which speeded up and made more efficient the demobilization of military personnel. This was most helpful in hastening demobilization.

The committee spent a great deal of time studying the conditions of employment at navy yards, and the Navy's procedure in laying off excess employees at naval shore establishments. Although no new legislation was enacted on this subject, the Navy Department and the Civil Service Commission changed in many respects the so-called efficiency-rating system and amended the regulations with respect to discharges. The committee is of the opinion that the method now in effect can be substantially improved.

Several other important matters considered by the committee, and upon which the committee took action, were as follows:

House Joint Resolution No. 307, approved June 25, 1946, authorized the use of naval vessels to determine the effect of atomic weapons upon such vessels.

S. 1917, approved by the Senate on July 26, 1946, enacted certain provisions which were formerly included in the annual Naval Appropriation Act into permanent law.

Public Law No. 512, approved July 16, 1946, authorized assistance to the Republic of China in augmenting and maintaining a naval establishment. The enactment of this act reduced the necessity of maintaining large numbers of naval and Marine Corps personnel in far-eastern waters.

S. 1547 received final approval of the Senate on July 26, 1946. This bill authorizes the distribution of obsolete vessels, trophies, relics and material of historical interest by the Secretary of the Navy to States, cities and other municipalities, and to various historical and nonprofit organizations.

On July 23, 1946, the Senate gave final approval to H. R. 5911, which established an Office of Naval Research in the Navy Department to plan, foster, and encourage scientific research in naval matters.

It was found impractical at this session of the Congress to complete the following:

The establishment of a postgraduate school at a permanent location on the west coast to provide for the postgraduate training of naval officers. A subcommittee has been appointed to investigate possible sites.

The construction of aviation facilities at or near the Naval Academy, Annapolis, Md., for the indoctrination of midshipmen in aeronautics. The committee reported a bill which passed the Senate.

Extensive hearings were held on the plan to merge the War and Navy Departments into a Department of National Defense which would more effectively integrate and coordinate the activities of the three major components of our national defense, namely, the Ground Forces, the Naval Forces, and the Air Forces. Action was not completed on this proposal and the hearings should be resumed at the next session of the Congress.

NUMBER OF BILLS

A total of 227 bills or resolutions were referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs during the Seventy-ninth Congress. The Congress was in session for approximately 18 months. During this time the committee met 101 different days. The usual committee meeting was of 2 hours' duration but on many occasions hearings were held both in the morning and afternoon, at which times from 5 to 6 hours per day were spent on committee business.

CONCLUSION

The Senate Naval Affairs Committee was established December 10, 1816, and is one of the 11 original standing committees of the Senate. Prior to 1816, select committees were appointed to handle any particular legislation as it came up on the Senate floor.

During the 130 years of its existence, the Committee on Naval Affairs has recommended to the Congress and the Congress has approved legislation providing our country with a Navy which has been capable of preventing any enemy outside of the continental limits of the United States from bringing war to our shores. During this time we have maintained a Navy capable of meeting and defeating our enemies at sea and keeping war at a safe distance from our own coasts.

Upon the expiration of the Seventy-ninth Congress, the Committee on Naval Affairs will cease to exist and will be merged with the Senate Military Affairs Committee, under the reorganization of Congress, into a Committee on the Armed Forces. It is hoped that the new committee will establish and will continue to adhere to a sound naval policy which will enable us to command the sea and air approaches to the Western Hemisphere, and provide the instrumentalities of war capable of protecting us until such time as means other than warfare are developed to settle international disputes.

TRUST ASSOCIATION OF H. KEMPNER

As in legislative session,

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 334) for the relief of the Trust Association of H. Kempner, which was, on page 2, line 17, to strike out "Secretary of the Treasury" and insert "Trust Association of H. Kempner."

Mr. CONNALLY. I move that the Senate concur in the House amendment, since it involves merely the correction of a clerical error.

The motion was agreed to.

AMENDMENT OF SOCIAL SECURITY ACT AND INTERNAL REVENUE CODE—CONFERENCE REPORT

As in legislative session,

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, since the conference report on the social security measure, House bill 7037, must go to the House for final action, I now submit the conference report and I ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the clerk will report the conference report.

The Chief Clerk read the conference report, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7037) to amend the Social Security Act and the Internal Revenue Code, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 42 and 52.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 2½, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 14, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 27, 28, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 37, 38, 39, 40, and 41 and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 13: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 13, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 2, line 13, of the Senate engrossed amendments strike out "July 17" and insert "July 16"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 15: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 15, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 3, line 3, of the Senate engrossed amendments, strike out "July 1, 1947" and insert "January 1, 1948"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 26: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 26, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following: "Notwithstanding any other provision of this title, no compensation shall be paid to any individual pursuant to this title with respect to unemployment occurring prior to the date when funds are made available for such payments."; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 29: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 29, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: On page 5, line 6, of the Senate engrossed amendments, strike out "'$15,000,000'" and insert in lieu thereof "'$11,000,000'"; in line 10, strike out "$7,500,000" and insert "$5,500,000" in line 11, strike out "$50,000" and insert "$35,000"; in line 12, strike out "$7,500,000" and insert "$5,500,000"; in line 17, strike out "'$7,500,000'" and insert "'$5,500,000'"; in line 19, strike out "'$10,000,000'" and insert "'$7,500,000'"; in line 23, strike out "$5,000,000" and insert "$3,750,000"; in line 24, strike out "$40,000" and insert "$30,000"; in line 25, strike out "$5,000,000" and insert "$3,750,000."

On page 6, line 6, strike out "'$5,000,000'" and insert "'$3,750,000'"; in line 8, strike out "'$5,000,000'" and insert "'$3,500,000'"; in line 10, strike out "'$30,000'" and insert "'$20,000'"; in line 14, strike out "$1,500,000" and insert "$1,000,000."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 30: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 30, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"(c) The amendments made by subsection (b) shall not require amended allotments for the fiscal year 1947 until sufficient appropriations have been made to carry out such amendments, and allotments from such appropriations shall be made in amounts not exceeding the amounts authorized by the amendments made by this section."

Amendments numbered 43, 44, 45, 46, 47, 48, 49, 50, and 51: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 43, 44, 45, 46, 47, 48, 49, 50, and 51, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be stricken out and in lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by such Senate amendments insert the following:

"SEC. 501. Old-Age Assistance.

"(a) Section 3 (a) of the Social Security Act, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

"'SEC. 3. (a) From the sums appropriated therefor, the Secretary of the Treasury shall pay to each State which has an approved plan for old-age assistance, for each quarter, beginning with the quarter commencing October 1, 1946, (1) an amount, which shall be used exclusively as old-age assistance, equal to the sum of the following proportions of the total amounts expended during such quarter as old-age assistance under the State plan with respect to each needy individual who at the time of such expenditure is sixty-five years of age or older and is not an inmate of a public institution, not counting so much of such expenditure with respect to any such individual for any month as exceeds $45—

"'(A) Two-thirds of such expenditures, not counting so much of any expenditure with respect to any month as exceeds the product of $15 multiplied by the total number of such individuals who received old-age assistance for such month, plus

"'(B) One-half of the amount by which such expenditures exceed the maximum which may be counted under clause (A);

and (2) an amount equal to one-half of the total of the sums expended during such quarter as found necessary by the Administrator for the proper and efficient administration of the State plan, which amount shall be used for paying the costs of administering the State plan or for old-age assistance, or both, and for no other purpose.'

"(b) Section 3 (b) of such Act is amended (1) by striking out 'one-half', and inserting in lieu thereof 'the State's proportionate share'; (2) by striking out 'clause (1) of' wherever it appears in such subsection; (3) by striking out 'in accordance with the provisions of such clause' and inserting in lieu thereof 'in accordance with the provisions of such subsection'; and (4) by striking out ', increased by 5 per centum'.

"SEC. 502. Aid to Dependent Children.

"(a) Section 403 (a) of the Social Security Act, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

"'SEC. 403. (a) From the sums appropriated therefor, the Secretary of the Treasury shall pay to each State which has an approved plan for aid to dependent children, for each quarter, beginning with the quarter commencing October 1, 1946, (1) an amount, which shall be used exclusively as aid to dependent children, equal to the sum of the following proportions of the total amounts expended during such quarter as aid to dependent children under the State plan, not counting so much of such expenditure with respect to any dependent child for any month as exceeds $24, or if there is more than one dependent child in the same home, as exceeds $24 with respect to one such dependent child and $15 with respect to each of the other dependent children—

"'(A) Two-thirds of such expenditures, not counting so much of any expenditure with respect to any month as exceeds the product of $9 multiplied by the total number of dependent children with respect to whom aid to dependent children is paid for such month, plus

"'(B) One-half of the amount by which such expenditures exceed the maximum which may be counted under clause (A);'

and (2) an amount equal to one-half of the total of the sums expended during such quarter as found necessary by the Administrator for the proper and efficient administration of the State plan, which amount shall be used for paying the costs of administering the State plan or for aid to dependent children, or both, and for no other purpose.

"(b) Section 403 (b) of such Act is amended by striking out 'one-half' and inserting in lieu thereof 'the State's proportionate share.'

"SEC. 503. Aid to the Blind.

"(a) Section 1003 (a) of the Social Security Act, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

"'SEC. 1003. (a) From the sums appropriated therefor, the Secretary of the Treasury shall pay to each State which has an approved plan for aid to the blind, for each quarter, beginning with the quarter commencing October 1, 1946, (1) an amount, which shall be used exclusively as aid to the blind, equal to the sum of the following proportions of the total amounts expended during such quarter as aid to the blind under the State plan with respect to each needy individual who is blind and is not an inmate of a public institution, not counting so much of such expenditure with respect to any such individual for any month as exceeds $45—

"'(A) Two-thirds of such expenditures, not counting so much of any expenditure with respect to any month as exceeds the product of $15 multiplied by the total number of such inviduals who received aid to the blind for such month, plus

"'(B) One-half of the amount by which such expenditures exceed the maximum which may be counted under clause (A);

and (2) an amount equal to one-half of the total of the sums expended during such quarter as found necessary by the Administrator for the proper and efficient administration of the State plan, which amount shall be used for paying the costs of administering the State plan or for aid to the blind, or both, and for no other purpose.'

"(b) Section 1003 (b) of such Act is amended by striking out 'one-half', and inserting in lieu thereof 'the State's proportionate share.'

"SEC. 504. Effective Period.

"Sections 501, 502, and 503 shall be effective with respect to the period commencing October 1, 1946 and ending on December 31, 1947."

Amendment numbered 53: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 53, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment, insert the following:

"TITLE VI—VETERANS' EMERGENCY HOUSING ACT OF 1946

"SEC. 601. Section (a) of the Act of June 11, 1946 (Public Law 404, Seventy-ninth Congress) is amended by striking out the period at the end thereof and inserting a semicolon and the following: 'and the Veterans' Emergency Housing Act of 1946'."

And the Senate agree to the same.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the report?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the report.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator briefly explain it?

Mr. GEORGE. I shall be glad to do so. There were of course a great many amendments made in the Senate to House bill 7037. Many of them were technical. Generally speaking, all the technical amendments and clarifying amendments were accepted by the House. The material changes made in important provisions of the bill relate primarily to title IV of the bill dealing with maternal and child welfare. Roughly speaking, the House concurred in all these several amendments, but reduced by about one-third the appropriation provided in the bill as passed by the Senate. In round figures the Senate had brought up these several appropriations to approximately $30,000,000, and the effect of the conference was to reduce these increases made by the Senate to about $21,000,000 or $22,000,000.

The first item, for instance, was increased from $5,820,000, to $15,000,000 by the Senate, but the conferees cut that increase back to $11,000,000. And so on, through the various categories dealing with child welfare and maternal welfare appropriations.

The other important amendment made related to title V of the bill, the so-called variable grants provision, which the Senate inserted and which personally as chairman of the Senate conferees I regretted much to give up. The net effect of the agreement reached in conference was to eliminate the variable grants provision. But in the case of old age and blind benefits the Federal Government, under the conference report, is to match two-thirds up to $15, and above $15 up to $45. The matching is to be as provided in the present law, 50-50 on the part of the State and the Federal Government. So that every State will actually receive an additional allotment out of Federal funds, whether they be the so-called low income States or the high income States.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GEORGE. I yield.

Mr. LANGER. I did not quite understand about the matching in the case of old-age assistance benefits. Up to what amount is the Government to contribute two-thirds.

Mr. GEORGE. Up to $15 for each aged person or each blind person.

Mr. LANGER. Might I inquire whether the age was left at 65?

Mr. GEORGE. The age was left at 65, just as under existing law. I might say now that this provision is temporary, and contrary to the provisions made for maternal welfare, and so forth, which become permanent in the law; but this provision is temporary and runs for only five quarters, beginning with the quarter commencing October 1, 1946, running through the entire calendar year 1947.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GEORGE. I yield.

Mr. WHERRY. As I understand, after the rate of $15 is reached the States and the Government match equally up to $45.

Mr. GEORGE. That is correct. Forty-five dollars is the technical limit fixed in the bill. Actually, of course, if the State is paying $50, it will receive $25 from the Federal appropriation. But if the State is paying only $45, it will still receive $25 out of the Federal appropriation.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. GEORGE. I yield.

Mr. LANGER. Does the Federal Government contribute two-thirds of $15, regardless of the total amount?

Mr. GEORGE. Yes; that is the effect of the provision.

Mr. LANGER. So if the total amount is $40, the Federal Government contributes two-thirds of the first $15, and the remainder is matched on a 50-50 basis.

Mr. GEORGE. The Senator is correct. That is true in the case of the aged and blind. In the case of dependent children, the Federal Government matches to the extent of two-thirds, up to $9. There has been a readjustment of the ceiling for the first child and for subsequent children; but in each case the Federal Government will match two-thirds of the first $9 paid in the case of a dependent child or children.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GEORGE. I yield.

Mr. WHERRY. Is it the idea, in making this provision temporary, that there may be further legislation in the next Congress which will be more in keeping with the bill as passed by the Senate?

Mr. GEORGE. The idea is, of course, that the whole social-security system must be overhauled.

That leads me to say that title VI of the bill, which called for a study and report by the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation by October 1 next year, was disagreed to by the House, and the Senate conferees acquiesced in that dsagreement. The House conferees took the position rather strongly that many of the members of the House Ways and Means Committee, which has a membership of 25, wish to participate in any social-security studies which are made, so the Senate conferees were persuaded to eliminate that provision.

Mr. WHERRY. That does not mean that the Senate committee will not continue to study the question, does it?

Mr. GEORGE. No. It simply means that there will not be an express provision of the law requiring the joint committee to make a study.

Mr. WHERRY. I am hopeful that the study will continue under the able leadership of the chairman of the Finance Committee, because I feel that we certainly need to put forth every effort possible to put into effect at least the provisions of the bill as passed by the Senate.

Mr. GEORGE. I think that is the view that is almost unanimously accepted by the members of the Finance Committee, as well as by members of the Ways and Means Committee of the House.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GEORGE. I yield.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. If the State pays $15, will the Federal Government pay an additional $10, so that the total will be $25? Suppose the State pays $15, will the Federal Government pay an additional $10?

Mr. GEORGE. No. It is the other way around. Of the first $15 paid by the State for any aged or blind person, the Federal Government will contribute $10, or two-thirds of the $15. If the State pays benefits beyond that amount, the matching is on a 50–50 basis, as under existing law.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GEORGE. I yield.

Mr. MAYBANK. I wish to commend the Senator for the excellent report, and the great assistance it will mean to many of those who have been in dire need of increased pensions.

Mr. GEORGE. My hope is that all the States will bring their minimum payments to the aged and blind at least up to $15. Only $5 of it would be payable by the State during the next five quarters, and $10 would be paid out of the Federal Treasury. That should act as an incentive to bring the minimum payments up to $15.

One further amendment, relating to certain provisions of our income-tax laws, was disagreed to very vigorously by the House conferees, and that amendment was stricken in the conference report.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GEORGE. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. Was that the amendment with reference to annuities which I offered in the committee?

Mr. GEORGE. That is the amendment which the distinguished Senator from Kentucky offered, and which was approved by the Senate.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I wish to express my very deep regret that that amendment was eliminated in the conference. What the amendment did was to provide that when an employee and an employer enter into a contract by which an annuity is purchased, and under which the employer makes a contribution for the purchase of an annuity for the benefit of the employee at some future date, the employee should not be required to regard that contribution for the purchase of an annuity as income for the year in which the annuity is purchased. It should be regarded as income for income-tax purposes only when the employee begins to receive benefits by reason of the annuity. For a long time the Treasury adopted that policy by its own regulations. All the amendment did was to provide that contracts made between 1938 and the effective date of the Revenue Act of 1942 should not be charged to the employee as income until he begins to receive benefits from the annuity. The amendment was eminently fair. The idea of charging an employee, in the year in which the annuity is purchased, the entire amount as income for that year seems to me to be the rankest injustice. The Senate approved the amendment. I understand that the Treasury opposed it, although it had adopted it as a policy prior to 1942.

I merely wish to state that in connection with the next tax bill I intend to press this amendment in the committee and in the Senate. I hope it will be agreed to hereafter, because it seems to me only common justice that employees who enter into contracts with employers for the purchase of annuities ought not to be charged income tax until they begin to receive benefits from the annuities.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GEORGE. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. I agree with the Senator from Kentucky. I believe that when the next tax bill comes over from the House we ought to undertake a comprehensive study of the pension-trust provisions. This is only one of the respects in which I believe the Treasury has assumed a very arbitrary position, and assumed power which I think is not in accord with the provisions of the law which was enacted in 1942.

Mr. BARKLEY. I thank the Senator. I agree entirely. This amendment could not possibly have been of any great importance to the Treasury, although it is of considerable importance to the individuals who, as employees, have entered into contracts for the purchase of annuities under which they do not begin to reap benefits until years in the future. I hope that in addition to this injustice we may correct some of the other injustices in the present tax laws.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Georgia suffer a brief interruption in order that I may make a short statement?

Mr. GEORGE. I am glad to yield to the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. As one of the conferees, I regret very much that this bill did not reach the Senate in time for a full consideration of the urgent necessity for an overhauling of the Social Security Act. I think it should be emphasized—because some do not understand it—that the Senate cannot act on a matter of this kind until the House acts first, because under the Constitution, legislation carrying taxes must originate in the House of Representatives. I, for one, regret very much that the House conferees would not accept the amendment offered by the able Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] providing for a thorough study, commencing at once, by the staff, under the auspices of the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation, of the entire problem of social security.

However, the House conferees objected to the amendment. They resisted it strenuously, and we had to yield. But, with all due respect to the very able membership of the House Ways and Means Committee, and with all due respect to their prerogatives under the Constitution, in having the power to initiate legislation of this character, I wish to express, very respectfully, the hope that at the beginning of the next session of Congress, speedy and adequate consideration will be given by the Ways and Means Committee to the urgent necessity of eliminating some of the horrible injustices which exist under the present system; that the House will act in sufficient time so that the Senate, as the coordinate body, may have its full right, under the Constitution, to consider this matter; and that then, if there are differences between the two Houses, ample time will be afforded for an adequate, full, and free conference, such as we cannot have now, when faced with adjournment.

I thank the Senator.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I wish to concur wholeheartedly in the statement made by the able Senator from Wisconsin. I think it a matter of great regret that this bill did not reach the Senate until Friday of last week, so that we were not able to do many things which should be done in connection with our social-security law.

Mr. President, it would seem unnecessary to call attention to other amendments, inasmuch as they are set forth in the conference report. One of the amendments was agreed to in order to avoid the possibility of the raising of a point of order in the House.

Therefore, Mr. President, I move the adoption of the conference report.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. GEORGE. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. I wish to say a word on this matter. As one of the conferees on this bill, I agree with the statement made by the Senator from Wisconsin. I think the whole subject matter should receive thorough study and examination.

Mr. President, some years ago, in an effort to aid the weak and poor States with regard to old-age assistance, I introduced in the Senate a bill providing for a Federal contribution of two-thirds of the money up to $15, and thereafter for a Federal contribution of 50 percent. That provision is what is now incorporated in the present conference report. I did not move its adoption in the conference, because I was under instructions to sustain the Senate's position. The adoption of that provision was moved by the House conferees. They moved the adoption of the plan whereby Federal money supplies two-thirds of the payments up to $15, and thereafter Federal money provides 50 percent of the payments. I am very highly gratified that the plan was finally adopted, rather than the present harsh method of a 50-50 arrangement, which results in having the old-age assistance which is paid to a man who lives in a poor State amount to a mere pittance, whereas a man living in a rich State will receive a large amount.

Mr. President, I think that ultimately we shall have to revamp the whole system; but this is at least a beginning of the right kind.

Therefore, I express approval of the conference report, and I hope it will be adopted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

Mr. McFARLAND. Mr. President, the adoption by the Senate of the conference report on the social security bill, which includes increases for the needy aged, the blind, and dependent children, is an event of more than passing interest to millions of America's senior citizens, our needy blind, and also our dependent children. I believe the Congress is deserving of commendation for having taken this important step because we thereby give recognition to the fact that the greatly increased cost of living had left these aged persons, the blind, and dependent children in an anomalous position.

Personally, I feel rather strongly about this legislation. More than 2 years ago I sought to secure approval of an amendment which would have eliminated the so-called need clause from the Social Security Act. I felt then, and I still believe, that the need clause was and is an unfair imposition on many deserving people who are the recipients of old-age assistance in every State in the Union.

Despite the fact that revenue matters and tax changes must originate in the House of Representatives, I introduced in March of 1945 an amendment to the Social Security Act which would have permitted those who receive old-age assistance to obtain outside employment and allowing the income from such employment to supplement their old-age assistance payments without prejudice to the amount of such payment. Subsequently, in January of this year I offered legislation which would have increased by 35 percent the amount of the Federal contribution to the various States for old-age assistance, aid to the blind and to dependent children. I pointed out at that time that the Congress had given general recognition to the fact that the cost of living in this country had risen tremendously by increasing substantially the salaries of practically all Federal employees. Moreover, our Government had recognized this increase in cost of living by endorsing substantial hourly wage increases in all industry. Unfortunately, that proposal for a variable increase in old-age assistance and for the blind and dependent children met with opposition from representatives of some of the States.

In June of this year I introduced another amendment which provided for a flat increase of $5 per month to be borne by the Federal Government in payments to those receiving old-age assistance and for payments to the blind. An increase of $3 per month for dependent children was also provided. In that amendment I was joined by 12 Members of this body, and we finally have been successful in securing the adoption of this proposal to the Social Security Act amendment which we have now passed.

I would like to point out that this amendment will not cost any State a penny. The entire increase is to be borne by the Federal Government. Frankly, I still believe that the increase which we are approving is still far from sufficient to meet the greatly increased cost of living which those who are to receive this payment must face. I believe it is important to remember that these aged persons, the blind, and dependent children rarely if ever have any means of supplementing their present wholly inadequate and meager income. In many States the total amount of the old-age assistance payment is so small that these people find it difficult to exist, let alone live decently. In my own State of Arizona the maximum payment to the aged is $40 per month. If the State contributes a maximum of $20 per month as it now does this legislation will increase that payment by $5 per month, bringing the total maximum payment to $45 per month. Similarly, the maximum monthly payment to the blind in Arizona will be increased by $5 while the maximum monthly payment to dependent children will be increased from $18 to $21 for the first child and for each additional child from $12 to $15.

I hope that my State will immediately take the necessary steps to see to it that the State contribution is not decreased so that the aged, the blind, and dependent children will have the benefit of the increased Federal payment which we have now secured.

I am happy that we have accomplished at least this much in adding to the income of these needy citizens and future citizens of this country. I look forward to the day when our senior citizens may further implement their income so that they may be able to live in decent comfort during their declining years.

OPA PRICES ON COTTONSEED, COTTONSEED OIL, AND BYPRODUCTS

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, as in legislative session, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the body of the RECORD a statement which was sent to Mr. Paul Porter, Administrator of the OPA, by the junior Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL], the junior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. EASTLAND], and myself. The statement is in reference to cottonseed problems, and what we believe to be in the best interests of the southern farmer who produces cottonseed, cotton linters, and their byproducts. I wish to state that we sent this statement to Mr. Porter after holding conferences on the subject, and after careful deliberation among ourselves. Our purpose in sending it to Mr. Porter and the OPA was so that the OPA would know the situation of the cotton farmer and would do something before very long about it, because the cotton crop is already commencing to move. We wish Mr. Porter to be fully aware of the fact that the present price ceilings on cotton linters and cottonseed are adversely affecting our farmers, and will continue to do so unless the prices are adjusted in keeping with other prices.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

The price of cottonseed at the oil mills should be $70 per ton to allow cotton producers a price for their cottonseed which will compensate them for the increase in the cost of their production and bring the price of one of their principal products in line with the prices received by producers of other oil-bearing seeds and competitive animal fats and oils.

The price which the farmer receives for cottonseed has actually decreased during the war. In 1941 Leon Henderson, Civilian Price Administrator, announced that $60 per ton was a fair price for cottonseed, based upon the cost of production at that time. Since 1941 the cost of living has increased 34 percent, while the cost of producing cotton and cottonseed has increased over 100 percent. Far more labor is required in producing cotton and cottonseed than in any other major crop, and the labor cost on the cotton farms of the South has increased 333 percent. In 1942 cottonseed was actually lower than in 1941. The United States Department of Agriculture's support price on cottonseed that year was established at $50 per ton for the 1942 crop. In 1943 the farm price was $53 per ton, as a result of an increase of $10 per ton allowed in cottonseed mill prices in that year, and no change has been made in the support prices from that time to date.

It must be remembered that cottonseed is not a byproduct, but that the average cotton farmer supports his family 4 to 5 months during each year on the income from his cottonseed. The income from cotton is usually used up by the time the crop is made, and the farmer lives during the fall and winter largely from the cottonseed income. Normally, 25 percent of a cotton farmer's total income comes from the sale of cottonseed.

The argument is used and we present it at this point in this brief to clear up a popular misconception that cottonseed prices today are above parity. This statement has been made by a Government official and is foolish. During the base parity period of 1909–14 there was practically no cottonseed industry. Cottonseed at that time was used principally as a low grade, cheap nitrate fertilizer and, of course, was not worth very much. This industry has grown up since the base parity period and is today the principal source of vegetable fats, oils, and proteins, in America.

Government support prices on competing oil seeds, however, have been increased considerably during the same period. Soybean prices were increased from an average of $1.55 per bushel in 1942 to $2.04 per bushel for the 1946 crop which is equivalent to about $14.50 a ton or 31.6 percent. Flaxseed prices were increased from $2.40 per bushel in 1942 to $3.60 on the 1946 crop or about $40 per ton or 50 percent. Oil from flaxseed does not compete with cottonseed because it is inedible but flaxseed meal competes directly in mixed feeds. Peanut support prices were increased from $133 per ton on shell peanuts in 1942 to $160 per ton for the 1945 crop which will probably mean around $165 a ton or a total increase of $32 a ton or about 24 percent. Though cottonseed is the most important single source of vegetable oil, cottonseed has received no incentive when the cost of production has increased enormously.

Although comparable support prices have not been in effect on other competitive oil seed products the results show that their prices have increased also. Prices received by farmers for tung oil increased about $10 per ton while prices on olives for crushing increased $80 per ton in the same period.

The average increase in support prices on the principal vegetable oil-bearing seeds if applied to the support price of cottonseed would mean a price for seed at almost $70 per ton at the mill today.

The reason these cottonseed prices have been held down is largely because the price of the byproducts, cottonseed oil, cottonseed meal, linters and hulls have been steadfastly held down. Ceiling price on cottonseed oil was fixed in 1941 at a rate which averaged about 12⅝ cents a pound for the standard quality and has never been changed. The price of cottonseed meal was increased $10 a ton in 1943 and in May of this year increased again $14 a ton. Hulls were stabilized under the maximum average price regulation in 1941 and were fixed by the OPA in 1943 at $13 a ton and have not been changed. Linters were fixed in 1941 at from 9 to 11 cents per pound for first cuts depending on quality and from 4 to 4¼ cents per pound for second cuts. These prices were rolled back in January 1946, to 7 cents for first cuts and 3.8 cents for second cuts, which was done to help the rayon industry. Cottonseed linters are used extensively in the manufacture of rayon and the price roll back this year was done unfairly and unjustly to lower the cost of production of rayon and thus enable them to compete with products of American Cotton Textile Industries. Prices which farmers have received for cottonseed have averaged from $4 to $5 per ton under the support price at the mills which accounts for the cost of transportation and ginning.

Increases in prices on butter, a direct competitor to cottonseed oil which is used in oleomargarine and other butter substitutes, have shown even further increases from 34 cents a pound for 92-score butter at the wholesale markets in New York in 1941 to 47 cents a pound June 14, 1946, then 57.4 cents a pound June 17, 1946, and to 71½ cents a pound recently. Lard prices were 8.9 cents a pound for prime steam tierces in Chicago in 1941, 13.8 cents a pound during the war and recently were quoted at 15.05 a pound.

The world price on all cottonseed products is considerably higher than the present prevailing prices of the United States. The world price for first-cut cottonseed linters is 13 cents per pound, while OPA is holding down the American producer to the pitifully low level of 7 cents per pound. In fact, foreign-produced cottonseed linters are imported into this country at 13 cents per pound and UNRRA has been paying the Brazilian producers this same amount for first-cut linters produced in that country. This is also true of second-cut linters. The world price level is 7 cents per pound against 3.8 cents which OPA has forced upon the American producers and in addition cottonseed oil from Mexico sells today at 26 cents per pound against 12.58 cents in this country, while cottonseed meal and cottonseed in Mexico are worth $100 per ton.

The price of cottonseed today is not sufficient to return to the grower enough to pay for the picking of his cotton as it has always done. For years the cotton farmer has depended on the money he gets from the sale of his cottonseed to pay the cost of picking his crop. He has usually been able to do that but labor has advanced to the point where the income from the seed will no longer pay for picking the crop.

Last year the cost of cotton picking averaged about $2 per 100 pounds across the belt according to BAE figures. In the irrigated sections of the West it was considerably higher, in the Mississippi Delta it was set at $2.40 per 100 pounds with extra allowances, and many had to pay as much as $3 in some sections of the belt. At this rate, it costs the farmer about $28 to pick a 500-pound bale of lint cotton which is made from 1,400 pounds of seed cotton (the average proportion is 500 pounds of lint cotton to 900 pounds of seed). This season we know the cost of picking will be higher. Picking costs have opened in south Georgia at $3.50 per 100 pounds this season and will be $3.50 and $4 across the belt before the season is over. This means the farmer will have to pay $49 to $56 a bale to get his cotton picked.

The present supported price of cottonseed at $56 per ton at the gin means about $52 to the farmer, after allowing the cost of ginning, which means only about $23.40 a bale to be credited against the cost of picking. This is $4.50 less than it cost him to pick his cotton this past year and about $25 to $30 less than it will cost him to pick his cotton this coming season at $3.50 and $4 per 100 pounds. Those who have to pay more for picking will have to dig deeper into the proceeds from the sale of lint cotton. It is true now as much as ever before that the proceeds from the lint are barely sufficient to pay for the use of the land, interest, taxes and furnish provisions for the labor during the year because costs have gone up so greatly.

Wages for picking cotton last year according to USDA figures were 333 percent of the 1939 average and general wages for hired help in cotton States are shown in a May 1946 USDA report to be 300 percent of the 1939 base wage. Other costs the farmer has to pay have also gone up appreciably. In the latest available estimates for 1945 the over-all costs of things the farmer buys not including labor were about 150 percent of 1939 and are undoubtedly up considerably more today.

The return from the lint cotton has always been used to reimburse the farmer for the cost of making his crop including the furnish to the tenants and all the out-of-pocket costs for seed and fertilizer, insecticide, and the extra costs of cultivating, planting, chopping and poisoning, defoliating, etc., in addition to interest, taxes and return on the land and the risk which during recent bad weather years has meant serious losses.

To permit this price the byproducts of the seed must be allowed to sell in line with other products with which they compete. A ton of cottonseed contains 313 pounds of oil which at the last average price fixed by OPA of 12⅝ cents per pound is worth $39.51, 822 pounds of meal which at the last OPA price averaged $60 a ton is worth $24.66, 585 pounds of hulls worth $3.80 at the prevailing ceiling June 30, 1946 of $13 per ton and 180 pounds of linters worth about $8.12 assuming 35 percent are first cuts selling at the 7 cents ceiling and 65 percent are second cuts selling at the 3.80 cents per pound ceiling. The remainder is waste material with little or no market value. The total value of the products at former OPA prices was $76.09. The spread between the value of seed at the mill and the value of the products before the war was around $12 per ton, according to Commodity Credit Corporation, which was the amount to cover cost of processing and handling the seed.

In order to maintain the price of seed at $70 per ton at the mills and selling price of the oil and first cut linters have to be increased slightly.

Linters are now entirely out of line with other general prices having been rolled back below prices established in 1941. The world price of linters, some of which are said to have come into this country, is twice the domestic price. First cut linters should be several cents per pound more than they are today, at least what they were in 1941, which was from 9 to 11 cents per pound depending upon quality. An increase of 1 cent per pound of first quality linters in a mattress or upholstering for a chair or for wadding would hardly be noticeable. In an ordinary cotton mattress with a 50-pound filler the increase would be only 50 cents out of a cost of $12 to $15.

An increase of two-tenths of a cent per pound is needed in second-cut chemical linters to raise present ceiling from 3.80 cents to 4 cents per pound. Such a small increase would help to improve the value of cottonseed, but would not even be detectable in the price of a shirt or any article of clothing made from rayon produced from linters. Only about 1 pound of rayon goes into a shirt and the cotton linters is only a fraction of the cost of the rayon fiber—less than 20 percent.

No increase is warranted in cottonseed meal and hulls because of the feed situation and in view of the fact that an increase has recently been granted in meal prices.

Oil should be increased a few cents per pound from an average of 12⅝ cents to 15 cents per pound. In view of the fact that vegetable-oil products have not increased in price all during the war, some small increase would be in order and in line with increases in animal fats and dairy products. As the waste in producing shortening and other vegetable-oil table and kitchen products is only about 10 percent, the increase in prices of these products caused by an increase in cottonseed-oil prices would be very small. As a result, shortening and oleomargarine might be increased from abou' 25 and 26 cents to only 27½ or 28½ cents per pound.

With these recommended increases, the new values of the byproducts would be as follows:

Oil, 313 pounds at 15 cents	$46.90
Meal, 822 pounds at $60	24.66
Hulls, 585 pounds at $13	3.80
First-cut linters, 40 pounds at 10 cents	4.00
Second-cut linters, 140 pounds at 4 cents	5.60
Total	84.96

Mill-processing costs have increased about $3 per ton over margin of $12 allowed by CCC in 1942, according to survey of 72 percent of all cottonseed-oil mills just completed. Subtracting $14.96 for mill margins on the average gives $70 for the value of the seed at the oil mill. Freight from the gin usually averages $2 per ton, which means about $68 at the gins. Gin costs average about $3 per ton, which means that the farmer might expect to receive about $65 a ton for his seed.

An increase in the farm price of seed is necessary to protect him against the high cost of living and give him the decent income to which he is entitled.

For the past 5 years the gross income per person in the farm population in the 10 Southern States was only $370 a year, compared with $163 for the thirties.

Even during the war the cotton-farmer's income has been about three-fifths of the average farm income for the country and one-fourth of the average income from the nonfarm population.

BAE figures show that typical cotton farmers in the Piedmont put in 1.4 hours' work on their farms for every pound of cotton they produce. While some of this time is in caring for the stock, the corn, and other complementary crops, all the time is necessary for the production of his cotton. At this rate, at today's cotton prices, the farmer's return is less than 23 cents per hour. How can this compare with the hourly return of industrial workers, which is now about $1.04?

The average tenant makes only 3½ bales of cotton a year. If it costs $25 more to pick each bale than he gets from his seed, his net return would be seriously depleted.

APPOINTMENT AND EMPLOYMENT OF CERTAIN RETIRED OFFICERS—CONFERENCE REPORT

As in legislative session,

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5626) to authorize the Veterans' Administration to appoint and employ retired officers without affecting their retired status, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendment.

WALTER F. GEORGE,
DAVID I. WALSH,
EDWIN C. JOHNSON,
ROBERT M. LA FOLLETTE, JR.,
ROBERT A. TAFT,
Managers on the Part of the Senate.

CARL T. DURHAM,
ROBERT L. F. SIKES,
CHARLES R. CLASON,
LESLIE C. ARENDS,
Managers on the Part of the House.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the conference report.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Will not the Senator explain the changes that were made?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. The original bill was a measure to authorize and empower the Veterans' Bureau to employ retired Army officers without interfering with their retirement rights. It does not give the officers any more compensation, but it merely enables the Veterans' Bureau to employ them. It covers about 25 employees.

Mr. McFARLAND. Mr. President, as I understand, the conference report eliminates the amendment providing a $5 increase for the crippled and blind, and a $3 increase for dependent children, since that provision has been incorporated in the social-security bill which we have just passed.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Yes; House bill 7037.

In general, Mr. President, this bill relates to the employment of that group of officers who have been retired from active service in the armed forces because of age or length of service. At present, such officers entitled to yearly retired pay amounting to $2,500 or more may not be employed by the Veterans' Administration, no matter what their experience or ability.

H. R. 5626 is designed to enable the Veterans' Administration to secure the services of a number of such retired officers who served outstandingly as physicians, executives, and hospital managers. They have had highly specialized training and experience in the management of hospitals and offices. These men are urgently needed in the expanding program of the Veterans' Administration.

Under existing law, it is impossible to appoint these officers, when retired for age or length of service, to the positions which they are so well qualified to fill, because of their status as retired officers of the armed forces. The proposed legislation will remove the restriction on appointment, and any retired officer will be permitted to accept employment in the Veterans' Administration without affecting his status as a retired officer. Thus officers retired for age or length of service will be placed in the same position with respect to employment by the Veterans' Administration as officers retired for disability in line of duty.

The authority requested will be exercised only in a limited number of cases where there can be no question of the ability of the individual to perform the highly specialized duties involved.

H. R. 5626 does not in any way alter the limitations with respect to pay contained in section 212 of the Economy Act of 1932, as amended. Thus, generally speaking, officers retired for age, length of service, and disability not incurred in combat with the enemy, or resulting from an explosion of an instrumentality of war in line of duty, will not receive retired pay while employed by the Veterans' Administration if the annual rate of compensation from their civilian position with the Veterans' Administration is $3,000 or more. The enactment of H. R. 5626 will impose no expense on the Government.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the consideration of the conference report?

There being no objection, the report was considered and agreed to.

USE OF PAPER CUPS AND CONTAINERS AS DISEASE PREVENTIVE

As in legislative session,

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Mr. President, experience is a great teacher but too often the lessons learned are forgotten as time dims the memory of that experience.

Some of us remember that during World War I thousands of Americans—servicemen and civilians—died from one epidemic, namely, influenza. This Nation lost more lives through that one respiratory disease than it lost on all the fighting fronts.

As a result of our World War I experience with this major epidemic—influenza—the lesson was not forgotten when we were again called on to prepare for war. Men and materials were mobilized to wage war on disease as well as on the enemy. The medical services of the Army and Navy were ready with their plans for the protection of health. Health defense was an integral part of national defense.

The health sector of the battle line required many various kinds of supplies—some to cure, some to prevent disease. Since respiratory disease was the chief killer in World War I and it had been demonstrated by Lt. Col. James G. Cumming and his associate in research conducted in Army camps that when mess gear was properly washed in boiling water there was less influenza among the troops, it was imperative for the Army and Navy to make every effort to provide clean service for every man at every meal wherever men and women of the services were fed.

The small paper cup and container proved during the years of World War II to be a vital instrument of war. It is true the paper cup and container seems far removed from the larger implements of war like the gun, tank, ship, and plane. Yet paper cups and containers did "go to war" and, through a multiplicity of uses, were a contributing factor to the record production of armament in this country, and they also served as the spearhead of the sanitation phase of all battle fronts.

This was prophesied succinctly and well in an editorial that appeared in the Kingston Daily Freeman of October 31, 1942, under the heading "Paper Cups." It reads as follows:

Sanitation will probably have as much to do with winning this war as anything else. And the humble little paper cup will be doing its part. It's already "in there fighting" by millions, and the industry is running at capacity to fill the swelling demand.

It may seem the height of luxury to supply the Army and Navy with these handy little drinking cups. The fighting services are supposed to consist of he-men not paying much regard to dainty table manners. But it isn't a matter of daintiness. It's a matter of human life, of military safety, of winning the war. Some experts think that terrible influenza epidemic in the last war might have been prevented, or greatly lessened, if the fighting men had been supplied with individual drinking cups.

Millions of paper cups and containers were used by the Army and Navy. In addition to protecting health, they proved exceedingly valuable in the most efficient use of manpower, scarce metals, and needed space, as well as in the distribution and serving of nutritious and appetizing foods. For example, there was neither a dishwasher nor dishwashing equipment on an Army or Navy bomber. Yet the members of such a crew had to have hot, wholesome food at stated times in order that they might successfully carry out their missions. These men often were in the air for hours at a time. Through the use of paper cups and containers they were fed properly and on schedule. There was no need to take a man away from a bombsight or gun to wash and stack dishes, and the space that might have been reserved for dishes or dishwashing equipment was made available for additional bombs.

This is typical of the vital role played by these products in other military activities. They had numerous Army uses, from the millions used in maneuvers to the great number used in medical and dental service. Troop trains, for example, used paper cups for serving fruit juice and ice cream. Sometimes complete meals were served in paper in the coaches when dining-car facilities were limited. Red Cross workers and members of the AWVS who met trains in railroad stations served soups, milk, coffee, and other beverages in paper cups. Post exchanges, too, were big users. Some Army posts used millions of paper cups every year, particularly where dishwashing facilities were nonexistent or inadequate. In officers' clubs, USO canteens, in the field, in camp or on leave, wherever soldiers were fed, paper cups and containers were found to be filling an important role.

The Navy likewise used paper cups and containers on fleet units, at naval bases, and in civilian areas under naval jurisdiction. This policy helped protect the health of the men in uniform as well as the health of the public in those communities. It also enabled the Navy to save time and labor in the feeding of large numbers of men at transfer points. Almost all fleet units—from PT boats to battleships—carried paper cups and containers for feeding purposes. Large shipments of paper cups and containers were carried to our fighting forces overseas, including the jungle country in the South Pacific where all health measures were of especial importance. No hospital ship was without its supply.

Wherever the American fighter went, the paper cup and container went also, to help protect his health.

At the same time, a new problem arose on the home front. The demands for more and more weapons with which to fight the enemy led to the development of super plants and factories. This Nation became the arsenal of democracy. Employment of men and women soared to a new high. Most industries engaged in turning out the sinews of war were operating on a 24-hour-a-day basis. It was important to keep this army of home-front workers well fed and in good health. Out of this necessity developed the in-plant feeding system. This was the system whereby wholesome and appetizing food was served to the worker within the very shadow of his lathe, crane, or drawpress.

However, this number increased to more than 8,000,000 through the establishment of restaurants and cafeterias at accessible points in plants and shipyards and by mobile units that transported hot, nutritious food to designated stations throughout the working area. The establishment of such feeding operations meant the saving of millions of man-hours. It enabled workers in large and sprawling plants to be well fed during a shortened lunch hour. It also eliminated the inconvenience of waiting in line at outside restaurants for meals. The use of paper cups and containers made it possible also to serve between-meal snacks to workers on the job. Experience proved that these snacks relieved fatigue and by so doing reduced accidents and increased the production of the worker. There was no waste of time via dishwashing in those plants; nor broken china. Paper cups and containers were utilized to serve hot foods hot, cold foods cold, and with a minimum of time and confusion.

Such food kept the men and women workers healthy, reduced the time lost from their job via illness and accidents, and aided greatly in meeting the cry for "more guns, more planes, more tanks, more ships."

The widespread use of paper cups and containers by the military and by operators of in-plant feeding establishments served another vital purpose. It released the scarce metals which would have been needed for dishwashing equipment for the more important manufacture of ships, tanks, and planes. And manpower which would have been needed to operate dishwashing equipment was made available for the manufacturing of fighting tools.

The demand for sure health protection and the problem of dishwashing helped induce one hospital to make preliminary experiments with paper. Those experiments were so successful that the hospital switched to using 30,000 plates, bowls, and cups a day. This replaced the 10,000 pieces of china and glass formerly washed and sterilized twice daily and, of even more importance, released 70 employees for urgently needed duties.

Paper cups and containers also proved extremely valuable in emergency feedings. Millions of cups were sent to and used in feeding the bombed-out residents of England during the blitz; and even more millions were held in readiness for use had they been needed in our own country. Service organizations like the Red Cross, which must be prepared to feed large groups in emergencies, used paper cups and containers extensively. The Red Cross knew paper service helped in its speed of mobilization, serving meals under sanitary conditions, providing hot, nourishing food, and efficiency in cooking, transporting, and serving meals.

Restaurants and other public feeding establishments experienced a boom during the war that led them to feed more people than ever before in their history.

The abnormal increase in business made it difficult for many establishments to keep its eating utensils clean. A War Production Board order, for example, limited the use of iron and steel for dishwashing equipment except for Army, Navy, war plant, and hospital supplies. The War Manpower Commission listed dishwashers as nonessential to the war and dishwashing labor became increasingly scarce; particularly in the vicinity of war plants. The periods of wartime fuel shortages made it difficult for restaurant operators to meet the rigid restrictions of sanitation departments that required scalding water for the sanitizing of eating and drinking utensils. Through the use of paper cups and paper containers, public feeding establishments were able to overcome many of the problems arising from a shortage of equipment and manpower and thus continue their big job of providing sanitary service for millions of men and women engaged in the war effort.

Government agencies quickly realized the prominent part paper cups and containers were playing in the prosecution of the war. With the aid of the industry's advisory committee, the War Manpower Commission classified the paper cup and container industry as essential to the war effort. The War Production Board placed production under a priority system which assured the armed forces, workers in war plants, patients in hospitals, schools, the Red Cross, and certain transportation lines of needed supplies of paper cups and containers. This was accomplished by setting aside virtually the entire output of the industry for essential users.

Much has been said and written about the contributions of American industries to our war effort. Most of the tributes have been paid to the firms which directly, or indirectly, were engaged in the production of guns, ships, tanks, and planes. It is only fitting, however, that recognition also should be given to an industry like this which aided materially in the record production of armament and served as the spearhead of the sanitation phase on all battle fronts. There can be no denying of the fact that the paper cup and container industry rose to extraordinary heights to meet the unusual demand for its products in all segments of our war effort—on the battle fronts, on the supply routes, in the hospitals, in the war plants, and wherever an emergency feeding occurred.

I deem it an honor to extol the wartime record of this industry and to explain the many ways in which the paper cup and container went to war. But the greatest tribute that can be paid this outstanding industry is that together with the medical profession, health agencies, drug manufacturers, and others it was a contributing factor in the prevention of any major epidemic of respiratory disease during the biggest and most terrifying of all wars.

ACCEPTANCE OF COMPULSORY JURISDICTION OF INTERNATIONAL COURT OF JUSTICE

The Senate resumed consideration of the resolution (S. Res. 196) proposing acceptance by the United States Government of compulsory jurisdiction of the International Court of Justice.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, unless it be for a matter of a privileged nature, I prefer not to yield during the course of my remarks. I make that suggestion both in the interest of saving time and in the interest of preserving in the RECORD a continuity of my point of view.

I may say at the outset that I wish to discuss the amendment offered by the distinguished senior Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY], the chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee. As a political realist, I wish to say that I think it is perfectly clear that, from the support which the distinguished chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee is giving to the amendment, and the support it is receiving also from the distinguished international lawyer and Member of the Senate from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN], as well as from other leaders of the Senate, such as the distinguished Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE], it would seem to appear that in all probability the amendment proposed by the Senator from Texas will be adopted this afternoon. I shall regret it if that happens but I suspect that the Senator from Texas has enough votes in favor of the amendment to pass it. In this matter, as in almost all controversial matters, it is not a question of all the merits being on one side and all the demerits being on the other. I think this is a matter of mixed merits.

I think it is only fair to say, in regard to the amendment, that its adoption will not have the effect which some Members of the Senate seem to feel that it will have, namely, of crippling Senate Resolution 196. I believe that was brought out very clearly yesterday by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN] who pointed out, as I tried also to do in the remarks which I made near the close of yesterday's session, that, after all, the machinery and procedure which was set up under the United Nations depends, so far as its final sanctions are concerned, upon the good faith of the signatories of the San Francisco Charter.

As the Senator from Vermont explained yesterday, if the resolution as submitted by the junior Senator from Oregon is adopted by the Senate, without including the amendment proposed by the Senator from Texas, and the World Court should, in a given case, render a decision which involved not a question of international law but a domestic issue, the United States would have the right, under article 94 of the United Nations Charter to raise that point and refuse to abide by the decision of the World Court. The United States properly could take such a position until at least the Security Council passed judgment on the merits of its position as to whether or not the matter involved a domestic issue rather than one of international law. I think that viewpoint needs to be kept in mind as we weigh the pros and the cons of the discussion on the so-called Connally amendment. I am opposed to the amendment for the reasons which I shall presently set forth. I merely wish to say now, Mr. President, that should the amendment be agreed to by the Senate of the United States this afternoon, I think it would be most unfortunate if the impression went abroad throughout this land and the remainder of the world that the effect of the Connally amendment would be to destroy the effectiveness of Senate Resolution 196.

However, before this amendment comes to a vote, I should like to make another effort to make as clear as possible to the Senate the implications it involves. The report of the committee speaks of both immediate problems and long-range problems of the proposed resolution. The proponents of this amendment limit their discussion, as they must, to its effect on the immediate consequences involved in the resolution, that is to say, the right and duty of the United States to proceed or be proceeded against in the Court.

It must be kept in mind that the thing we are really aiming at is the long-range problem of bringing the entire world under the rule of law. It seems clear that if this rule is to be achieved, the participation of the United States is essential. We have no assurances as to what the consequences of this achievement might be but we entertain the hope, as the Under Secretary of State said during the committee hearing, that this may prove to be a long, and even a decisive step, toward crossing that line which separates world disorder from a world at peace. We are, therefore, attempting by this method to achieve a very high goal, and it is necessary to consider the aspects of the problem from this point of view. If the United States reserves to itself the power to decide an important jurisdictional question, we must act on the assumption that the other states in the world will do likewise.

I emphasize that while the question of domestic jurisdiction is a domestic question in one sense, it is also a question of international law affecting the fundamental jurisdiction of the court. That is true because domestic jurisdiction and international jurisdiction are mutually exclusive concepts. If it is decided that a question is domestic, it therefore means that it is not a question covered by international law. Therefore, if we reserve the right to decide the question, it means that we, and we must assume every other state, is reserving the right to decide an international legal question. This is the situation which has existed in the past and which it is the very purpose of the resolution to eliminate. As has been said many times during the progress of this resolution, the rule of law cannot be established if the various states reserve to themselves the right to decide what the law is. It is from this very broad point of view that it can be said that the alternatives involve the question of future world peace.

Looking to the more immediate problems of the resolution and the consequences of the proposed amendment, it appears quite difficult to deny that the amendment involves a condition of a serious character and that the other states of the world will recognize it as a reservation. It is, in effect, a political veto on questions of a judicial character, and it will be instantly recognized as such by all the other countries. It therefore involves the question of our moral leadership in the world, and it is to be feared that this action may impair the truly distinguished record of leadership which this country has made in recent years.

As the senior Senator from Vermont pointed out yesterday, the United States does have a final political control in this matter. If the court should commit the error of taking jurisdiction of a case plainly within the domestic jurisdiction of the United States, the United States could on this ground refuse to comply with the decision. Is it not far better to wait until such an error is committed rather than to jeopardize the whole principle we are seeking to achieve by assuming in advance that the court is going to commit such an error. After all, in our support of the United Nations, we are committing ourselves to a very large degree to the principle that it is better to entrust these international questions to responsible international institutions on the sound theory that such institutions are able to make better decisions than if they are left to the individual decisions of the States. This basic decision has been reached as a result of long and very hard experience. If history teaches us anything, it is that if States are left to decide these questions on the basis of immediate political expediency the result is power politics and ultimately war. The lesson is that a revolutionary change in international relations is necessary. I submitted Senate Resolution 196 in its present form because I believed it to be a constructive, statesmanlike step in the direction of promoting this change in international relations through law.

I have no disposition to try to deprecate the importance and seriousness of entrusting legal questions to the International Court of Justice. The Court has been constructed with all the wisdom and care world statesmanship can devise. It is inconceivable to me that any judge of the Court could fail to see and be profoundly impressed with the inexpressedly high and important functions with which he is charged. It is inconceivable that any judge could even consider violating his solemn oath to decide these cases impartially on the basis of law and justice and in accordance with established principles of international law.

The United Nations have done their very best to create a Court which can be trusted with responsibility, and I feel that we should place our faith in this institution rather than in the old method which has proved a complete failure of letting each country decide these questions for itself. I reiterate that in this resolution we are referring only to legal questions. As to such questions, let us put the decision where it belongs, namely, in the hands of a legal tribunal, created by the San Francisco Charter and ratified by the United States Senate more than a year ago. A tribunal which, I submit, Mr. President, on the basis of the record—because, after all, it is but a continuation of the old World Court—richly deserves the confidence which my resolution proposes to place in it.

For the reasons I have stated and for the reasons set forth in the hearings on the resolution, Mr. President, it is my view that the amendment submitted by the distinguished Senator from Texas should not be adopted.

In conclusion, Mr. President, I desire to refer to certain sections of the printed hearings on this resolution. First, I desire to refer to pages 71 and 72 of the hearings where there is set forth a resolution adopted by the American Bar Association, which approves Senate Resolution 196 with the provision as to the determination of jurisdiction over domestic issues being left to the Court. Without reading the resolution, I ask unanimous consent that it may be printed at this point in my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HOEY in the chair). Without objection, it is so ordered.

The resolution is as follows:

Resolved, That the American Bar Association is of the opinion that the course of events has shown an urgent need that an increased emphasis shall be placed, in international relationships, upon the authority of law and the role of the World Court, now constituted and ready to function, as one of the principal means of the peaceful settlement or avoidance of disputes between nations which otherwise might endanger international peace and cooperation.

Resolved further, That the American Bar Association expresses its deep regret that the Government of the United States has not yet, as evidence of its adherence to international law and to the full usefulness of the International Court of Justice, taken the appropriate steps to accept for itself, as a majority of the United Nations have determined to do, the compulsory jurisdiction of the Court as to the matters enumerated in paragraph 2 of article 36 of the Statute of the Court.

Resolved further, That the American Bar Association strongly urges that the President and the Congress of the United States should take appropriate action at the earliest practicable time to bring about the deposit, in behalf of the United States, with the Secretary-General of the United Nations, of a declaration pursuant to paragraph 2 of article 36 of the Statute of the International Court of Justice, recognizing as compulsory ipso facto as to the United States and without special agreement, in relation to any other state accepting the same obligation, the jurisdiction of the Court in all legal disputes hereafter arising of an international character, concerning the matters enumerated in article 36; such declaration to be valid for a period of 5 years and thereafter for a period of 6 months after like deposit of a notice of termination thereof; the obligation of such declaration to be without prejudice to the right of the parties to have timely recourse to other methods for the peaceful settlement of disputes.

Resolved further, That the American Bar Association renews its earnest recommendation that in negotiating treaties, conventions, and international agreements the United States should propose and urge the inclusion of clauses providing that all legal disputes arising thereunder between the parties shall be referred to the International Court of Justice.

Mr. MORSE. I also, Mr. President, desire to call attention to the remarks of Dr. Laurence Preuss, professor of political science of the University of Michigan, who specifically objected to any further restrictions on the jurisdiction of the Court as to domestic issues in this language:

Yesterday morning Senator AUSTIN made a suggestion, which I believe was tentatively accepted by Senator MORSE, to rephrase exception B to read something like this:

"Disputes which the United States considers to be within the domestic jurisdiction of the United States."

I respectfully submit that that would be an extremely retrogressive step and would be taking away with one hand what we purport to be giving with the other.

Article 36, which is repeated in the Morse resolution, says that the Court shall have jurisdiction concerning the interpretation of a treaty or any question of international law. Certainly some of the same important questions of international law concern the fixing of boundary lines between matters which are not in principle regulated by international law and those which are. Furthermore, the exception of domestic jurisdiction would ordinarily be raised in questions arising out of disputes concerning the Court's jurisdiction.

The last paragraph of article 36, paragraph 7, provides that if there is any dispute concerning the Court's jurisdiction the Court shall decide. Consequently, it is contemplated that if a state raises the exception of domestic jurisdiction, that is a jurisdictional issue which it is for the Court to decide and not for one of the parties to the statute of the Court to decide. It seems to me that the very heart of compulsory jurisdiction would be taken out by the acceptance of this suggestion that the United States itself should define this important legal question as to the extent of domestic jurisdiction, rather than to have the Court itself do so.

I digress for a moment to say that I do not fully agree with Professor Preuss on that point. I do not think that the heart would be taken out of the resolution, because I believe, as I said yesterday in my remarks, even if the Connally amendment should be adopted, the United States does under this resolution commit itself to submit to the obligatory jurisdiction of the Court all questions which arise under international law. I think it was intimated—yes, more than intimated—it was clearly stated by the distinguished Senator from Vermont that it is inconceivable that this country would even hide behind a subterfuge or alibi and claim an international law issue to be a domestic issue.

The United States will never take the position that an issue which clearly is not a domestic issue shall not be determined by the World Court once we accept the obligatory jurisdiction of the World Court over purely international law issues. If we should take such an unconscionable position, it is perfectly clear that the good faith of this country would be clearly challenged by the other nations of the world. Other nations would protest any such conduct on our part just as we would if any other nation should, by way of subterfuge, take advantage of such a reservation once it had committed itself to submit purely international law issues to the obligatory jurisdiction of the Court. In this new "one world" no nation can afford to refuse to permit an international law issue to come before the Court for final determination on the ground or excuse that it is a domestic issue.

As the Senator from Vermont pointed out, there is involved the question of good faith. The primary reason why I find myself opposed to the amendment is that, from the standpoint of psychology, I think it is an unwise amendment. I think it would be better for us to let all issues go to the court for its determination as to jurisdiction, and then, if the court should ever make a mistake or commit an error, the fear of which I think is inherent in the Connally amendment, then we ought to proceed under article 94, through the Security Council, for a determination as to whether the World Court in the given instance has gone beyond its jurisdiction in that it purports to determine an issue which is not an international law issue but is a domestic issue. Under the condition as to domestic issues already set out in Senate Resolution 196 beginning on page 2, line 12, what we agree to is to accept the obligatory jurisdiction of the World Court over international issues and not over domestic issues. Hence I consider the Connally amendment both unnecessary and unwise.

Returning to the testimony of Professor Preuss he says further:

In conclusion, therefore, it would be my suggestion that great improvement in the present resolution could be effected by restoring the wording of the resolution as originally presented to the Senate, and including the phrase which was found in other declarations, "questions which by international law fall exclusively—

Note the word "exclusively," Mr. President—within the domestic jurisdiction of the United States," and leave the Court to decide this matter rather than an interested party in a dispute.

There is one other point that I wish to make. If we include these wide reservations in an acceptance of compulsory jurisdiction, any other State with which we become involved in a dispute can take advantage of those same exceptions.

A number of years ago the United States was involved in a dispute with Mexico concerning oil expropriations and requested that Mexico submit the case to arbitration. Mexico refused on the ground that her expropriation policy fell within the realm of her sovereignty, her domestic jurisdiction, her exclusive competence. If we should sign the optional clause and if Mexico should do likewise, under this suggestion which was made to alter "b," then a respondent state would be able to escape the compulsory jurisdiction of the Court by declaring unilaterally that it considered this matter to be one of domestic jurisdiction.

I digress again to say, however, that should any state do that, under the United Nations Charter, it would certainly convict itself of bad faith, even if such state were our own country, and I think that such a course of action would mean that the United Nations itself would start to topple.

I return to the Preuss testimony:

It seems to me that we cannot get the right perspective on this matter if we assume that the United States is always going to be in the position of a defendant or respondent. As a matter of fact, the United States has brought many more claims against other states than other states have brought against the United States. The United States is a great claimant state, and it would be highly to our advantage if the number of states accepting the compulsory jurisdiction of the International Court of Justice should be extended; and since only one great power is now a declarant under article 36, I think this would be an appropriate time if the United States were to now make a declaration accepting the compulsory jurisdiction of the Court.

I also call attention, Mr. President, to page 101 of the hearings, where Mr. Finch, recognized authority in the field of international law, responded to the following question put to him by the chairman of the subcommittee, the distinguished Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS]:

Senator THOMAS of Utah. Just a minute, Mr. Finch. If we should accept the suggested amendments to "b", on page 2, which Senator AUSTIN mentioned yesterday, would we not introduce into our World Court a species of veto; that is, a veto not on a decision itself, but if, for example, we decided that we will only take those disputes in there, which we ourselves decide are essentially not of domestic jurisdiction, practically that is the way in which it would always come out, and if we state it that way, would we not actually introduce the equivalent of a veto to the compulsory jurisdiction? I realize that you are talking about a different kind of veto.

Mr. FINCH. Yes.

Senator THOMAS of Utah. But at the same time the practical effect of that judgment would make it possible for us, for instance, to talk for a very long time on the Senate floor and to reject a case.

Mr. FINCH. Mr. Chairman, I do not agree with the view expressed by some of the previous speakers on this subject. I think that your resolution as it is now drafted means that these matters shall be decided by each state. I think that the change, the omission of the phrase "matters which are according to international law within the domestic jurisdiction," which appeared in the Covenant of the League of Nations—I think that left it to be a matter of dispute and controversy between the two nations who had a question over which they were not in agreement. I think that when they left out the phrase "a matter which by international law" and left it barely as you have it here, "disputes with regard to matters which are essentially within the domestic jurisdiction of the United States," and which corresponds to the provision of the Charter, I think that it was done intentionally so as to leave no doubt that each nation itself could file an objection that this was within the domestic jurisdiction.

Now, I would like to qualify that with this—any matter upon which we have made a treaty is one I think which we cannot claim is a matter within our domestic jurisdiction.

Now, we brought up questions of immigration treaties. Certainly we are not obliged to. We have full power under international law now to say who can come into our country, and we can expel them for certain reasons and under certain procedures, and nobody has anything to say about it; no other nation has anything to say about that; but if we make an immigration treaty, then we have taken it, ourselves, out of our domestic jurisdiction, and insofar as that treaty is concerned we are bound to submit that to the Court under this resolution.

Senator THOMAS of Utah. Then constitutionally the minute you ratify your treaty it becomes the supreme law of the land?

Mr. FINCH. That is right; exactly.

I also call the attention of the Senate to the position taken by another authority on this subject, Dr. Reid, as it appears on page 125 of the hearings. She said:

I would not wish—and now I am speaking as an international lawyer rather than AAUW—I would not wish to agree with the implication that under any circumstances, in the phrasing of section (b), either in this form or in its original form, the decision rested with the United States. I think the clear intention of that phrase is that the Court shall decide, and I therefore would strongly oppose the suggestion, which I understand was made yesterday, to the effect that the United States should be the judge in that case. That would seem to me to completely vitiate the value—or perhaps I should qualify that—would modify considerably the value of acceptance of the compulsory jurisdiction.

I digress to say that I think her modification was most appropriate. I do not think the Connally amendment, undesirable as it is, would vitiate the resolution. I simply think it is confusing and unwise and from the standpoint of its psychological effect on the other countries of the world I am afraid that it might be misunderstood.

I return to Dr. Reid's testimony:

It seems to me that the decision as to whether a matter is or is not within the domestic jurisdiction is one which the Court should decide when a case arises.

The last reference to the hearings before the committee I desire to make is a short one. I refer to page 142 of the hearings, where is set forth the view of the State Department, as represented by Mr. Fahy in his testimony, when he said as follows:

The Court determines its own jurisdiction in any case which it has under consideration (art. 36, par. 6 of statute). If one party claims that the Court is not properly seized of the case or that it does not have jurisdiction of a certain aspect of the case, the Court will decide. This is true whether the case is brought before the Court under a special agreement, a treaty, or a general agreement such as the one here under consideration.

The United States and all other members of the United Nations are bound by the Charter (art. 94 (1)) to comply with decisions of the Court in cases to which they are parties. This obligation applies to all cases whether brought before the Court under a declaration of this kind or not. It does not apply to advisory opinions, since there are no parties in such cases.

Although parties to cases are obligated to comply with the decisions of the Court, which is a moral obligation based on the provisions of the Charter, there is no provision for the enforcement of such decisions unless the failure to comply constitutes a threat to the peace or breach of the peace under article 39 of the Charter. There is an article in the Charter (art. 94, par. 2) which provides that a party may resort to the Security Council if the other party fails to carry out the judgment and that the Security Council may, if it deems necessary, make recommendations or decide upon measures to be taken to give effect to the judgment. This Government takes the position that the Security Council's action under this article is limited by the scope of its powers as defined in article 39, that is, it must first be determined by the Security Council that the breach constitutes a threat to, or breach of, the peace or an act of aggression (hearings on the Charter, Senate Foreign Relations Committee, Pasvolsky testimony, pp. 285-287; Hackworth testimony, pp. 330-332).

I say that because of the course of debate in the Senate; and the record will refer to those parts of the hearings and debates.

During the life of the Permanent Court of International Justice, applicant states invoke declarations made under article 36, paragraph 2, in 11 cases. In 2 of these 11 cases, jurisdiction was exercised by the Court without objection. In 4 of the 11, the jurisdiction of the Court was challenged. The Court sustained the objections to its jurisdiction in two of these cases and in part in a third. In the fourth, the applicant state withdrew its reliance upon the declaration.

The two cases which resulted in substantive decisions were the Eastern Greenland cases between Denmark and Norway and the division of water from the Meuse River case between the Netherlands and Belgium. In the Eastern Greenland case, Denmark asked the Court to decide that a Norwegian decree of July 10, 1931, asserting sovereignty over a large area of Greenland, violated the prior claims of Denmark to sovereignty over this territory. The Court sustained Denmark's contention and Norway withdrew the decree. In the Meuse case, the Netherlands entered a claim because of diversion of water by Belgium. The case involved the interpretation of a treaty governing such diversions. Belgium raised no objection to the jurisdiction. The Court rejected both the Netherlands' claim and a counterclaim entered by Belgium.

The two cases in which the Permanent Court of International Justice ruled that it did not have jurisdiction under the "optional clause" were the phosphates in Morocco case between Italy and France and the Panevazys-Saldutiskis Railway case between Estonia and Lithuania. In the phosphates case, the French Government put forward various objections to the Court's jurisdiction, including the contention that the Italian application related to situations and facts which preceded the ratification of the French declaration accepting compulsory jurisdiction and which, therefore, did not fall within its terms. The Court upheld this contention and decided that it had no jurisdiction. In the Panevazys case, the Lithuanian Government contended, on grounds of general international law, that the private claim espoused by Estonia was not national in character and that local remedies had not been exhausted. The Court held that the latter objection was well-founded.

In the Electricity Co. of Sofia and Bulgaria case between Belgium and Bulgaria, the court ruled out one of Belgium's claims on the ground that it had not been a subject of dispute prior to the filing of the Belgium application under article 36, paragraph 2. The court, however, sustained its jurisdiction in another aspect of the case, involving the question whether the dispute had arisen prior or subsequent to the filing of declarations under article 36, paragraph 2.

In the Pajzs, Casky, Esterhazy case between Hungary and Yugoslavia, the Hungarian agent withdrew its application under article 36, paragraph 2, because Yugoslavia's declaration had expired and had not been renewed as expected.

In the remaining five cases, proceedings did not advance to the point where the court had to consider the question of its jurisdiction.

To sum up, the court delivered judgment in two cases brought under article 36, paragraph 2. Of the five other cases which were carried to the point where the Court had to consider its own jurisdiction, the Court ruled in two cases that it had jurisdiction, in two other cases that it did not, and in the fifth case that one of the objections to its jurisdiction was well-founded.

Mr. President, I close by asking unanimous consent to have published in the RECORD at this point in my remarks three editorials in support of my resolution, one appearing in the Washington Post for Sunday, July 28, 1946, one in the Washington Post for Thursday, August 1, 1946, and one appearing in the New York Times of this morning, August 2, entitled "The World Court."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the editorials were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Washington Post of July 28, 1946]

PEACE UNDER LAW

Peace, like liberty, rests upon the rule of law. We have subscribed to this doctrine in all our internal relationships, and it is but natural that we should apply it as well to our relations with other countries. This is what the Senate Foreign Relations Committee has now unanimously recommended that the Senate do in urging adoption of a resolution accepting on behalf of this country compulsory jurisdiction of the International Court of Justice created by the United Nations. This would mean simply that we would submit to the adjudication of the Court any legal dispute arising out of the interpretation of a treaty or out of any question of international law in relation to any other nation accepting the same obligation. The alternative would be to settle our disputes with other nations by force, and our very membership in the United Nations is a renunciation of such a course.

As signatories of the United Nations Charter, we are among the creators of the International Court of Justice as a successor to the earlier World Court which we never joined. The creation of the Court could not of itself assure that it would be used in case of international differences. Such assurance must come from the individual nations. The statute setting up the tribunal adopted at San Francisco gives it jurisdiction only over cases "which the parties refer to it and all matters specially provided for in the Charter of the United Nations or in treaties and conventions in force." Its jurisdiction may be made compulsory as to any nation only by action of that nation. Nineteen nations have now granted compulsory jurisdiction to the Court, but only one of the major powers, Great Britain, is among these. Adherence by the United States should prove a spur to others.

The resolution recommended by the Senate Foreign Relations Committee would deal with compulsory acceptance of the Court's jurisdiction as a treaty and would thus require ratification by two-thirds of the Senate. This is an entirely satisfactory method of recognizing the Court's authority. Equally satisfactory would have been the proposal advanced in the House by Representative HERTER to take the same action by majority vote of both Chambers. The State Department has declared either technique thoroughly valid. Since the matter is now before the Senate, we hope that Body will indorse it promptly and overwhelmingly. Among Americans there can be no reluctance to live under a rule of law.

[From the Washington Post of August 1, 1946]

WORLD COURT

There was justification, we think, for Senator MORSE's action yesterday in forcing consideration by the Senate of the resolution recommended by its Foreign Relations Committee accepting for the United States compulsory jurisdiction of the International Court of Justice. There has been a perplexing procrastination on this issue, and there was reason to fear that the Senate might adjourn without settling it. Acceptance of the Court's jurisdiction would mean simply that we would submit to it any legal dispute arising out of the interpretation of a treaty or out of any question of international law in relation to any other nation accepting the same obligation. It is difficult to see how any law-respecting nation, peaceful in its purposes and committed to the concept of international cooperation, could hesitate to put itself under the authority of a court such as this—especially one which it was instrumental in establishing.

We can see no occasion for delay or for reservations in this matter. Either, indeed, would be disruptive to the confidence which other nations have in the devotion of the United States to the maintenance of peace. This is not a matter which can safely or wisely be allowed to go over until a new Congress assembles next year. The World Court ought to be set in operation just as speedily as possible. The adherence of the United States is indispensable to making it effective, indispensable to adherence on the part of other great powers. We should have been the first to subscribe. Let us not invite suspicion and undermine the Court's prestige by being the last.

[From the New York Times of August 2, 1946]

THE WORLD COURT

One of the important matters debated yesterday in the Senate and scheduled for a vote today is ratification of an agreement which would grant Senate consent to the President's accepting for America the compulsory jurisdiction of the International Court of Justice. This acceptance would mean that in specified cases, touching the interpretation of treaties, international law, the breach of an international obligation, and the nature or extent of reparation to be made for such a breach, we would go to court rather than threaten the use of force. If the United Nations is to be a going concern, if we are sincere in our desire not only to avoid war but to avoid needless friction, this step is absolutely essential. We shall be compelled to do only what it is decent and wise to do.

If we do not ratify now we shall surely ratify later, but a failure to ratify now is bound to create doubt abroad as to our enthusiasm for United Nations ideals. The Senate owes it to our spokesmen in Paris and elsewhere to give the world, now, this assurance of our intentions and of our zeal for peace.

Mr. MORSE. Finally, Mr. President, I wish to state that I have sought to set forth my honest judgment as to why I think it would be better not to adopt the Connally amendment. I have tried to be exceedingly fair about it. I made a thorough and intensive study of it. When Senator AUSTIN, in the hearings first proposed the Connally amendment I was inclined to accept it but after study of it I decided against it. If there was any basis on which I could agree to it, I wanted to accept the amendment, because of the high regard and the great respect I have for the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY], the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE], and the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN]. However, I have decided that it is an unwise amendment.

I have tried to be fair by pointing out that if the amendment is adopted it does not follow that Resolution 196 is vitiated. If the resolution is adopted with the Connally amendment in it, we will have taken a great stride in the direction of developing a world order under law. We will have placed upon our Government, in my judgment, an even greater moral obligation to keep the faith, because if we should adopt the resolution with the Connally amendment in it, then clearly the eyes of the world will be turned upon us in any case in which any other country with which we find ourselves in dispute seeks to hale us before the World Court. Having asked the Court to take over jurisdiction in any such case, if then we should ever break faith, if we then should ever hide behind this amendment, if it is to be placed in the resolution, and claim that an issue which is clearly international is in fact domestic, we can be most certain that we will lose not only face but, in my judgment, the confidence of the peace-loving nations of the world.

Thus I would say—and Senators may call this an argument against interest if they care to, but at least it is an honest argument, made by one who desires to be absolutely fair in this matter—I would say to those who believe that under no circumstances should the Connally amendment be adopted, if we cannot adopt this resolution without that amendment in it then I think we should adopt it with the amendment in it. However, I shall vote against the amendment because I think it should be defeated. I want to say without hesitation that if we fail to pass this resolution even though it has the Connally amendment in it we will have taken a great step backward, so far as our participation is concerned, in the development of an international order through law.

I believe that the great moral obligation to act in good faith under the amendment which would be placed upon this country if we adopted the amendment would be so overpowering, when a specific case arose involving an issue of international law that we would not dare adopt a subterfuge, or an "out," by way of a false excuse that the question involved a domestic issue.

Thus, I say, Mr. President, that I hope we can adopt the resolution without the amendment, but I hope we will adopt the resolution even with the amendment, if we cannot defeat the amendment.

Mr. REVERCOMB. Mr. President, will the Senator from Oregon yield?

Mr. MORSE. I yield to the Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. REVERCOMB. I wish to say to the able Senator that I am absolutely in favor of an International Court to deal with strictly international questions, but there is one subject which has given me some concern, which perhaps the able Senator from Oregon, who is one of the authors of the pending resolution, may clear up.

The resolution provides that by this act of the Senate we are to grant to an International Court of Justice jurisdiction over, among other things—

a. The interpretation of a treaty.

The Constitution of the United States, article 3, section 1, expressly provides:

The judicial power of the United States, shall be vested in one Supreme Court, and in such inferior courts as the Congress may from time to time ordain and establish.

Section 2 of article 3 of the Constitution provides:

The judicial power shall extend to all cases, in law and equity, arising under this Constitution, the laws of the United States, and treaties made, or which shall be made, under their authority.

Then it proceeds to state various matters of which the Federal judiciary has jurisdiction.

The question arises in my mind, are we doing violence to that—the express provision of the Constitution—when in the face of that express provision, we grant authority to a World Court to deal with the interpretation of a treaty?

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, my answer is that I do not think we are doing any violence to it. I think that it properly falls within the treaty-making powers also granted in the Constitution. I think that the power is inherent under the Constitution for the United States to enter into a United Nations, the charter of which sets up a World Court, and under which it is proposed that we shall submit our disputes to that court for final determination, insofar as they involve the interpretation of a treaty, any question of international law, the existence of any fact which, if established, would constitute a breach of an international obligation, and the nature and extent of the reparation to be made for the breach of an international obligation. Certainly I do not think that the provision of the Constitution which the distinguished Senator from West Virginia has cited imposes a prohibition upon the right of the United States under the treaty provisions to accept the jurisdiction of such a World Court tribunal as has been set up under the United Nations.

Mr. REVERCOMB. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. MORSE. I yield.

Mr. REVERCOMB. I do not doubt for a minute that we can set up an international tribunal and enter into an agreement for the existence of such a tribunal. But when we undertake specifically to state what the jurisdiction of that tribunal shall be so far as we shall subscribe to it, and in detailing the ground of jurisdiction state in an act by the Senate that the interpretation of a treaty shall be one of the grounds of jurisdiction of that international tribunal, the question still arises in my mind, in the face of the explicit language of the Constitution, that "the judicial power shall extend to all cases in law and equity arising under treaties made or which shall be made under their authority." There is a vast difference between the treaty which we entered into in creating the Charter, saying that such an international tribunal shall be created, and then in another act, through resolution, saying what the jurisdiction shall be. Here we are dealing with the extent of jurisdiction of an international tribunal, and I am confronted with the question whether we have not put something into this resolution which contravenes the express language of the Constitution of the country.

Mr. MORSE. If I thought so I would not be for the resolution.

Mr. REVERCOMB. It is difficult for me to reconcile it. Now then, I come to this question. If the Connally amendment is adopted and added to subsection (b) of the proviso, so it would read:

Provided, That such declaration shall not apply to—(b) disputes with regard to matters which are essentially within the domestic jurisdiction of the United States as determined by the United States.

My question is whether that would not reserve to us the constitutional provision and protection with regard to this explicit language of the Constitution as to treaties. We have always recognized the power in the Federal judiciary to deal with the treaties made by this country, and that is derived from the express language of the Constitution which I have just read. I want an international court; I want it to settle international justiciable issues; but in doing that I do not want to contravene the basic law of this land, the Constitution.

Mr. MORSE. Nor do I.

Mr. REVERCOMB. It seems to me that it is coming close to it. There may be a saving force in the Connally amendment which says that this "declaration shall not apply to disputes with regard to matters which are essentially within the domestic jurisdiction of the United States as determined by the United States." Because the "domestic jurisdiction of the United States" would, I take it, be that jurisdiction which is under the Constitution.

Mr. MORSE. If the Senator holds to that view, then I think he should vote for the Connally amendment. As was pointed out by the Senator from Vermont yesterday, I think the ultimate right of this country to refuse to accept the decision of the World Court if in fact it involves a domestic issue rather than an international issue, is reserved to us under article 94 of the Charter.

Mr. REVERCOMB. Mr. President, will the Senator again yield?

Mr. MORSE. I yield.

Mr. REVERCOMB. I am quite sure that the Senator does not mean to say that this country can enter into a treaty in contravention of the Constitution of the United States?

Mr. MORSE. I do not think anything I said would so indicate. I certainly join with the Senator from West Virginia in the point of view that we have no such right. I disagree with him that the adoption of the resolution without the Connally amendment would have that effect.

Mr. REVERCOMB. I should like to ask a further question. The power to deal with treaties and the construction of treaties is vested in the Federal courts. We are here asked to subscribe to the creation of another court. The Constitution has created one Supreme Court, and that Supreme Court is the creature of the Constitution itself, and then we have the express language, "and such inferior courts as the Congress may from time to time ordain and establish." The Senator would not want the International Court to be put in the position of being an inferior court created by Congress through treaty?

Mr. MORSE. It seems to me that if the Senator's argument is sound, if he does not think that the treaty-making provisions of the Constitution are sufficiently broad to encompass the granting of such jurisdiction as this resolution calls for, then likewise we contravened the Constitution of the United States when we adopted the United Nations Charter itself, insofar as we gave to the various agencies of that organization considerable power over this country, so far as treaties are concerned. Because when we consider the Security Council itself and the final sanctions that it can exercise, I think the same argument the Senator is now making against this resolution could be made against the powers of the Security Council.

Mr. REVERCOMB. I will say to the able Senator that I am simply inquiring on this subject for clarification.

Mr. MORSE. I appreciate that.

Mr. REVERCOMB. I do not agree at all that entering into a treaty to create the United Nations Charter contravenes the Constitution.

Mr. MORSE. It depends on the power given to that organization.

Mr. REVERCOMB. Yes; that is true; it depends on the power that was given to it.

Mr. MORSE. And I call attention to the great powers we have given to the Security Council.

Mr. REVERCOMB. I know that some take the view that it contravenes the Constitution. I do not take the view that by adopting the Charter of the United Nations we contravened the Constitution. But it is a closer question when we undertake to write into law the power of this tribunal to interpret treaties, when the Constitution says that this power should be vested in the Federal courts of the country.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MORSE. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I am particularly tender on the subject just raised by the Senator from West Virginia that we should not contravene the obligation which we accepted when we certified our agreement to the Charter of the United Nations. But, surely, it is clear under the Charter of the United Nations that we are not obligated to accept compulsory jurisdiction of the Court at all except at our own option. Therefore, I am sure we do not contravene the Charter, which is the only point I am trying to make, if we exercise our own option in respect to the terms upon which we undertake to subscribe to the Court.

Mr. REVERCOMB. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. MORSE. I yield.

Mr. REVERCOMB. I am glad indeed that that point has been brought out, because it clarifies the very thing I have been trying to present first, that the Charter itself does not contravene the Constitution. But if the Senate adopts the resolution, which absolutely and without reservation places the power and the jurisdiction for the interpretation of treaties in the Court, then my question is: Does it not contravene article III, section 2, of the Constitution of the United States which I have read?

Mr. VANDENBERG. Perhaps it does. The only point on which I am commenting at the moment is that we are free agents so far as the Charter of the United Nations is concerned, when we take our action in respect to the option open to us to adhere to this Court.

Mr. MORSE. The Senator was very careful to see to it that that principle was maintained at San Francisco at the time the Charter was adopted and when it was brought back to the Senate.

Mr. VANDENBERG. We were very careful about it because we deliberately intended that that option should exist. Therefore, what I am saying is that I think we are free agents in respect to our action today. I would not want any remote suggestion to be maintained that we are contravening or violating in any way our obligations under the Charter if we act in respect to this resolution as our own judgment dictates.

Mr. MORSE. I quite agree; and I do not think there is anything in the RECORD that would raise such an implication. But the point I make, in response to the Senator from West Virginia, is that when we accepted the San Francisco Charter we accepted a Charter which placed great powers in the Security Council. In my judgment—and time alone will prove whether or not I am right—we placed in the Security Council the power to enforce a treaty, irrespective of what our courts might say about that treaty.

Mr. REVERCOMB. To enforce a treaty after we had agreed that it should be enforced.

Mr. MORSE. A treaty which the Security Council might find we were violating.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MORSE. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. In connection with the fear of the Senator from West Virginia that this action might interfere with the operation of our own courts, allow me to say to the Senator that our own courts cannot try cases between the United States and foreign nations.

Mr. REVERCOMB. That is true.

Mr. CONNALLY. So my amendment, by preserving domestic jurisdiction makes it clear that our courts will act upon all questions involving domestic jurisdiction. In the international field, in which our courts cannot operate by the terms of the Charter, the International Court would be operative.

Mr. REVERCOMB. Mr. President, will the Senator further yield?

Mr. MORSE. I yield.

Mr. REVERCOMB. I am heartily in accord with the statement that our courts cannot deal with strictly international questions between nations. So far as I know, there has been no court except the Court at The Hague to deal with international questions. But the point I am making is that so far as the interests of America are concerned, under our Constitution the jurisdiction to interpret treaties is in the courts of this country. In a case arising between citizens, or a case in which the Federal Government is interested, a question arising in connection with the interpretation of a treaty is exclusively before the courts of this country. What I am trying to get at is this: Will the amendment of the able Senator from Texas clarify the situation so that we can say, under our Constitution "This is a domestic matter."

Mr. CONNALLY. That is the very object of the amendment.

Mr. REVERCOMB. That is the object of the amendment.

Mr. CONNALLY. I think the language is as clear as it can be made, that when it comes to submitting a question to the International Court, if we say that it is a domestic question, the International Court cannot take jurisdiction of it.

Mr. REVERCOMB. That would be a saving clause with respect to the jurisdiction of our own courts under the Constitution of this country.

Mr. CONNALLY. Absolutely.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MORSE. I yield.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. The expression "interpretation of treaties" has been used rather loosely. The only thing that can come before the Court is a real cause, a case, a dispute, which hinges upon the interpretation of treaties. But it is the cause, the case, or the dispute which will be tried by the Court, and not the treaty.

Mr. REVERCOMB. The able Senator has stated the case. No decision can be reached, and the Court will not entertain the issue, unless there is a case before the Court.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. That is true.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MORSE. I yield.

Mr. MILLIKIN. The Senator from West Virginia has raised a question which has perplexed students of constitutional law for a long time, namely, in what respect can a treaty—considering what is before us as a treaty—modify the Constitution of the United States. I believe that the nearest the authorities have come to agreement on that subject is that a treaty probably could not change an express prohibition in the Constitution.

What I rose to say, however, was that I do not believe that the analogy suggested by the Senator from Oregon, as to what we did with reference to the Security Council, for example, holds good with relation to what we are proposing now to do. The ultimate force, namely, military application, which the Security Council has at its disposal, so far as our share therein is concerned rests on powers which the Constitution has expressly given to Congress to maintain our military forces.

Mr. MORSE. I think that is the ultimate power, but I do not believe the Senator should overlook the fact—as I read the treaty, at least—that there is the power in the Security Council to require or order two nations to go before the World Court and settle their disputes, even though one or both may not have accepted the compulsory jurisdiction of the Court.

Mr. MILLIKIN. If the Senator will permit another interruption, there is another very important distinction between the political commitments which we have made to the Organization and the judicial commitments which we may make here today. We have a veto power in relation to our political commitments, and we do not have a veto power on our judicial commitments.

Mr. MORSE. Under article 94, we would have the veto power when the case went before the Security Council if we took the position, without the Connally amendment, that the decision involved a domestic issue and not an issue of international law.

Mr. MILLIKIN. If that were not the case—and even if it were the case—we would then be stultifying all the proclamations we make, that in legal matters we wish to be ruled by law rather than by political decisions.

Mr. MORSE. I think we shall be stultified also if we ever make use of the condition of the Connally amendment in a case which, in fact, involves an international issue, but which we, for purposes of expediency or for political purposes, are inclined to claim to be a domestic issue.

Mr. MILLIKIN. I would not argue with the Senator that we should compound our stultifications. I am simply making the suggestion that if we ever take advantage of our political power to veto what the Court does, the Court will be finished.

Mr. MORSE. Not if in fact the final jurisdiction or decision over the question of jurisdiction under the Charter rests in the Security Council. I do not think the Court would be finished then. It would be merely reversed.

Mr. MILLIKIN. I suggest to the Senator that the function of the Security Council would be as an enforcing agent if enforcement were necessary in respect to the decisions of the Court.

Mr. MORSE. But in making its decision, as to whether or not to enforce a judgment of the World Court it must reach a judgment as to whether or not the Court was in error on the point of jurisdiction.

Mr. MILLIKIN. The Security Council is not an appeal court for the Organization to which we are adhering today.

Mr. MORSE. No, but——

Mr. MILLIKIN. Whenever there is a political reversal of a legal decision, obviously there is an abandonment of the legal foundation.

Mr. MORSE. I grant that that type of appeal is not the type of appeal which the Senator and I as lawyers usually think of; but if article 94 means what the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN] says it means—and I am inclined to believe that he is correct—if under that article there is guaranteed to the signatories to the Charter the right to say to the Security Council: "A decision has been rendered against us, but see how bad the decision is. It is over a clear domestic issue, and not an international issue"—in that sense it is a court of appeal.

Mr. MILLIKIN. I suggest to the Senator that there is nothing in the statute of the Court which contemplates a political reversal of its decisions. There is a review called for in the statute, by the same Court, but no appeal. The only way the Security Council could become involved in the matter, would be in the enforcement of the judgment; and then the Security Council would be at liberty to consider political aspects, legal aspects, and everything else. But I repeat that whenever the Security Council reverses, in effect, a decision of this Court, we shall have a political reversal of a judicial system, and then the Court will pass out of the picture.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Is not that exactly the reason why we should protect against such a possibility, when we adhere to the Court?

Mr. MILLIKIN. I am very much in favor of protecting against it. I am very much in favor of having a judicial system which will be complete in itself, not subject to political veto.

Mr. VANDENBERG. It seems to me that in the light of the statements which have been made by the able Senator from Vermont, it simply becomes a matter of plain, everyday honesty for us to make plain in advance what our attitude is calculated to be in respect to domestic questions.

If the Senator will permit me to interrupt further at this time——

Mr. MORSE. I shall be very happy to have the Senator do so.

Mr. VANDENBERG. The point on which I am most tender——

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, the Senator from Michigan has no reason to be tender on any point, I say to him.

Mr. VANDENBERG. It is our constant references to our obligations under the Security Council, and so forth. I would not desert by one-tenth of one comma any obligation we have underwritten to the United Nations. I would live up to those obligations without reservation in any aspect. But I insist that when it comes to our decision in respect to the acceptance of the compulsory jurisdiction of the Court itself, we are free agents.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MORSE. I yield.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Of course, we are free agents. No one has challenged that.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I wish to make that plain, because I do not think there is any remote implication of our desertion of any obligation we have under the United Nations when we act as free agents in respect to the terms under which we accept the compulsory jurisdiction of the Court.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Mr. President, it seems to me it is very clear, under the Charter, that our decision as to whether we shall make this adherence is entirely up to us.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Exactly.

Mr. MILLIKIN. And, of course, when we do make it we are acting as free agents. I have heard no challenge of that.

Mr. REVERCOMB. Mr. President, let me say that there was somewhat of a challenge, I believe, in the discussion I had a few minutes ago with the able Senator from Michigan. I am delighted to have the view expressed that the Charter imposes on us no obligation to write this particular portion into the resolution.

Mr. MORSE. I think that is clear, and I have not contended it. I simply have said that it would be preferable if we did not.

Mr. REVERCOMB. In taking action on this important matter, I am absolutely in favor of making it as clear as it can be made at the inception of this agreement and this treaty that this country does not intend to give up its own power to decide what is a domestic question; and when we provide that the Court shall have jurisdiction in regard to the interpretation of a treaty, I think we should likewise provide that such a declaration shall not apply even as to a treaty or a question relative to a treaty, if the question arising under the treaty is solely a domestic question.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MORSE. I yield.

Mr. DONNELL. There are one or two phases upon which I should like to have the judgment of the distinguished Senator from Oregon. The first of them is with respect to the Connally amendment. I wish to ask the Senator, if I may, a few questions along that line.

In the first place, is it not true that there is nothing which will confer compulsory jurisdiction upon the Court, other than that which is contained in the statute of the Court?

Mr. MORSE. That is true.

Mr. DONNELL. Is there any provision, other than article 36 of that statute, which provides for the recognition of compulsory jurisdiction?

Mr. MORSE. I know of none.

Mr. DONNELL. Is there anything in the statute of the Court which authorizes the inclusion in the declaration to be deposited by the United States of any provision which is not consistent with article 36 of the Statute?

Mr. MORSE. I know of none.

Mr. DONNELL. Now I wish to call the Senator's attention particularly to subsection or subdivision 6 of article 36, which was mentioned yesterday.

Mr. MORSE. Is the Senator referring to article 36 of the Charter or article 36 of the Court statutes?

Mr. DONNELL. I am referring to article 36 of the Court statute. I call the Senator's attention to the contents of subdivision 6 of article 36 of the statute, which reads as follows:

> In the event of a dispute as to whether the Court has jurisdiction, the matter shall be settled by the decision of the Court.

I desire to have the view of the Senator as to whether the Connally amendment, which gives the United States the right to determine whether a matter is or is not essentially within the domestic jurisdiction of the United States, would be in conflict with the provision of subdivision 6 which I have just read.

Mr. MORSE. In my judgment there would not be any conflict, because I think article 36 of the Court statute makes very clear that there is reserved to the individual signatories the right to file a so-called obligatory declaration or not to file it, according to their discretion, and that inherent and implied in that right is the right on the part of the signatories, when they do file a declaration accepting the obligatory jurisdiction of the Court, to place on the jurisdiction such conditions as they see fit to place.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Exactly.

Mr. MORSE. In other words, it can go all the way, or 75 percent of the way, or 50 percent of the way, or 15 percent of the way, or zero.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Exactly.

Mr. MORSE. I think article 36 of the Court statute gives to them the right, when they accept the Charter, to change their status, of being bound only as to optional jurisdiction, and to change that status in any degree insofar as compulsory jurisdiction is concerned by way of any conditions which they wish to impose in their declaration, according to their wishes.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Exactly.

Mr. DONNELL. I thank the Senator for that reply. I judge, then, that the Senator from Oregon does not deem the Connally amendment to be violative of subdivision 6 of article 36 of the Court statute.

Mr. MORSE. My answer is that I do not think it is in any way in violation of any section, paragraph, sentence, clause, word, comma, or period of the San Francisco Charter, but I still would prefer not to have it.

Mr. DONNELL. Yes; I understand the Senator's view.

Let me ask the Senator if he still has the same opinion, in light of the fact that subdivision 2 of article 36 is the only provision by which the states parties to the statute may declare that they recognize as compulsory the jurisdiction of the Court, and that subdivision 2 provides that the states parties to the present statute may at any time declare that they recognize as compulsory, ipso facto, and so forth, the jurisdiction of the Court in all legal disputes concerning a, b, c, and d? Does the Senator still deem his answer to be correct?

Mr. MORSE. My answer is still the same, and I wish to point out to my good friend, the Senator from Missouri, that article 36 of the statute of the new World Court is really a repetition of a similar article under the old World Court. When we look to the practices under the old World Court, what do we find? We find a long list of declarations which have been filed under the old World Court, many of which have been automatically continued under the new World Court, and they set forth a variety of conditions, somewhat different in some respects from the conditions set forth in Senate Resolution 196. In my judgment, we have that entire background of, shall I say, a common law of international law as precedents for the interpretation which I am making of section 2, article 36, of the Court statute.

Mr. DONNELL. I thank the Senator for his clear and illuminating discussion of the questions which I have submitted. If I may trespass further for a moment on his time, I assure him that my questions are designed for clarification.

Mr. MORSE. I appreciate the Senator's questions very much.

Mr. DONNELL. The declaration to be deposited by the President of the United States is, under the terms of Senate Resolution 196, one recognizing as compulsory—I will emphasize by my voice the next few words—in relation to any other state accepting the same obligation, the jurisdiction of the International Court of Justice in certain disputes, provided that the declaration shall not apply to three categories of disputes. Those are the categories set forth on page 2 of the resolution between lines 7 and 15, to which are to be added the words and figures adopted by the Senate yesterday.

Mr. MORSE. Plus the Vandenberg amendment of yesterday, being item (c) under the proviso clause following line 14.

Mr. DONNELL. That is the one to which I refer.

Mr. MORSE. Yes.

Mr. DONNELL. Item (c), the third one of the three disputes embodied in these categories.

My question is this: In view of the facts, first, that the recognition to be, by such declaration, made of compulsory jurisdiction is only in relation, to quote the resolution, "to any other State accepting the same obligation"; and, second, that it is to be provided in the declaration which is to be deposited by the President of the United States that the last-mentioned declaration shall not apply to the three categories of disputes which I have mentioned, is it the opinion of the Senator from Oregon that the only States with relation to which the declaration recognizes as compulsory the jurisdiction of the International Court of Justice, are those States which shall have, in their respective declarations, provisions making such respective declarations not applicable to those categories of disputes to which, under the resolution which we shall pass, the declaration of the United States shall not apply?

Mr. MORSE. My answer is "No." It is not so limited. Allow me to speak in hypothetical terms.

Mr. DONNELL. Yes.

Mr. MORSE. Let us assume that nation X has filed with the United Nations an acceptance of the compulsory jurisdiction of the Court subject to certain conditions. Let us assume that among those conditions are the first four as they appear on page 2 of Senate Resolution 196, but not included is the condition with reference to domestic issues as suggested by the Connally amendment. Assume that we get into a dispute with nation X over the interpretation of a treaty. Such a dispute clearly would involve an international law issue. I am sure the Senator from Missouri will agree that in such a dispute both the United States and nation X would be bound, because of their mutual declarations to adjudicate that dispute within the forum of the World Court. I say that because the declarations of both the United States and nation X would under my hypothetical case cover the same first four conditions as they appear on page 2 of Senate Resolution 196. However, nation X would have the right, in my judgment, if it wanted to do so, to raise a point of jurisdiction and say "But this is not an issue of international law, it is one of domestic law, and because you have reserved the right over domestic issues we can benefit by the same right you have reserved to yourself, although we did not in our declaration specifically make such reservation to ourselves."

I think that will be the effect and the danger of the adoption of Senate Resolution 196 with the Connally amendment in it. It will have the effect of giving the right to every other State, when a dispute with us, to raise a question as to whether or not the dispute involves a domestic issue.

Mr. DONNELL. And to decide the question for itself just as we can decide it for ourselves.

Mr. MORSE. Yes; now, let us hold to the hypothetical. Suppose the dispute, however, is not between the United States and nation X, but is between nation X and nation Y, and suppose that neither nation X nor nation Y included in their declaration the Connally condition that it shall not apply to so-called domestic issues. Under those circumstances they would be bound, in my judgment, to submit the question of jurisdiction itself to the World Court for determination, but neither one of them in a dispute with us would be so bound because they might take advantage of the condition which we reserved unto ourselves by the Connally amendment.

Mr. DONNELL. May I ask the Senator on what language of the Charter, or upon what precedent, if he has one in mind, of the Permanent International Court of Justice he bases the view that in the case of nation X and the United States, nation X might avail itself of a provision identical with that which we have inserted under the Connally amendment, even though nation X had not reserved it in its own acceptation of compulsory jurisdiction?

Mr. MORSE. First, I think it is involved in the optional clause of the United Nations Charter itself where there is reserved to a nation the right to file a declaration accepting the compulsory jurisdiction of the Court. That is article 36 of the World Court statute. As I have already said, I think a nation could accept the compulsory jurisdiction in toto, or in part, subject to such conditions as it might reserve, but when it does file its declaration I think it follows, by clear implication, that other nations in relation to the nation filing the declaration with such a condition in it will be bound only to the extent of the conditions set forth in the declaration of the filing nation in any case of a dispute with the so-called filing nation.

Further, I think that the Senator from Missouri will find that the section cited in the debate yesterday by the distinguished senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] will support my position. I refer to section 32, as follows:

The Court, whose function is to decide in accordance with international law such disputes as are submitted to it, shall apply—

a. international conventions, whether general or particular, establishing rules expressly recognized by the contesting states;

b. international custom, as evidence of a general practice accepted as law;

c. the general principles of law recognized by civilized nations;

d. subject to the provisions of article 59, judicial decisions and the teachings of the most highly qualified publicists of the various nations, as subsidiary means for the determination of rules of law.

That language, I am sure, will back up the interpretation which I have made. I think it will be found that, running through the scholarly writings covering this field the authors point out that the historical rule is that nations which filed declarations accepting the obligatory jurisdiction of the old World Court they were bound only to the extent of the terms and conditions of their declaration. I know these authors state the rule that under such circumstances all nations so filing have the right to take advantage of any condition contained in the declaration of any nation with which they find themselves in dispute. I think that interpretation could be read into the Charter, so to speak, under article 38. I know that the Senator from Missouri has discussed the matter with the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS] and I should like to ask the Senator from Utah, first, if he shares my interpretation and, second, if he can put his finger on any specific precedent bearing upon the point.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Mr. President, I share completely the interpretation of the Senator from Oregon, and I think it is strongly implied in paragraph 2 of article 36 of the Court statute. All parties to a dispute enter into it on exactly the same level. That is my understanding of reciprocity. The implication is very strong, from a mere reading of article 2, which states:

2. The states parties to the present statute may at any time declare that they recognize as compulsory ipso facto and without special agreement, in relation to any other state accepting the same obligation, the jurisdiction of the Court in all legal disputes concerning:

a. the interpretation of a treaty;

b. any question of international law;

c. the existence of any fact which, if established, would constitute a breach of an international obligation;

d. the nature or extent of the reparation to be made for the breach of an international obligation.

In respect to any of these various things, they accept the reciprocal situation in regard to all disputes which may arise.

The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. WILEY] yesterday read from my report, and I should like to refer to it now:

A second major limitation on the jurisdiction conferred arises from the condition of reciprocity. This is again specified in the resolution in the language of the statute, the pertinent phrase being as follows: "recognizing * * * in relation to any other state accepting the same obligation, the jurisdiction of the International Court of Justice. Jurisdiction is thus conferred only as among states filing declarations. In addition, the similar phrase in the statute of the Permanent Court of International Justice was interpreted by the Court as meaning that any limitation imposed by a state in its grant of jurisdiction thereby also became available to any other state with which it might become involved in proceedings, even though the second state had not specifically imposed the limitation.

I read that to show that the idea of reciprocity is complete, and I repeat what was said: the parties to the dispute enter into the Court on precisely the same level.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Florida.

Mr. DONNELL. Will the Senator pardon me just a moment?

Mr. PEPPER. I shall ask the Senator to be brief, lest I lose the floor.

Mr. DONNELL. The Senator from Oregon had the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thought the Senator from Oregon had finished, and recognized the Senator from Florida.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I ask the Senator from Florida, under those circumstances, if he will extend the courtesy to the Senator from Missouri to complete his questions. I think he has another question or two. He says he will be brief.

Mr. PEPPER. If my able friend will be brief, I gladly yield, otherwise I shall not be able to.

Mr. DONNELL. I do not desire to ask a favor of the Senator from Florida. If the Senator from Oregon does not have the floor, I shall not ask the question. I was engaged in a line of questioning. I do have one or two other questions which I should like to propound.

Mr. PEPPER. Will not the Senator do that later? I wish to make one or two observations, and if he desires later he can ask the questions.

Mr. DONNELL. I shall be very glad to yield the floor to the Senator from Florida.

Mr. PEPPER. I know the Senators have their problems, but I have a little personal problem of my own. I shall be very brief.

Mr. President, I ask that at this point in my remarks article 36 of the statute of the International Court respecting the jurisdiction of the World Court shall be inserted.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

1. The jurisdiction of the Court comprises all cases which the parties refer to it and all matters specially provided for in the Charter of the United Nations or in treaties or conventions in force.

2. The states parties to the present statute may at any time declare that they recognize as compulsory ipso facto and without special agreement, in relation to any other state accepting the same obligation, the jurisdiction of the Court in all legal disputes concerning:

(a) the interpretation of a treaty;

(b) any question of international law;

(c) the existence of any fact which, if established, would constitute a breach of an international obligation;

(d) the nature or extent of the reparation to be made for the breach of an international obligation.

3. The declarations referred to above may be made unconditionally or on condition of reciprocity on the part of several or certain states, or for certain time.

4. Such declarations shall be deposited with the Secretary-General of the United Nations, who shall transmit copies thereof to the parties to the statute and to the Registrar of the Court.

5. Declarations made under article 36 of the Statute of the Permanent Court of International Justice and which are still in force shall be deemed, as between the parties to the present statute, to be acceptances of the compulsory jurisdiction of the International Court of Justice for the period which they still have to run and in accordance with their terms.

6. In the event of a dispute as to whether the Court has jurisdiction, the matter shall be settled by the decision of the Court.

Mr. PEPPER. Thereafter, Mr. President, I ask that there be printed in the body of the RECORD at this point Senate Resolution 196.

There being no objection, the resolution was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Resolved (two-thirds of the Senators present concurring therein), That the Senate advise and consent to the deposit by the President of the United States with the Secretary General of the United Nations, whenever that official shall have been installed in office, of a declaration under paragraph 2 of article 36 of the Statute of the International Court of Justice recognizing as compulsory ipso facto and without special agreement, in relation to any other state accepting the same obligation, the jurisdiction of the International Court of Justice in all legal disputes hereafter arising concerning—

a. the interpretation of a treaty;

b. any question of international law;

c. the existence of any fact which, if established, would constitute a breach of an international obligation;

d. the nature or extent of the reparation to be made for the breach of an international obligation.

Provided, That such declaration shall not apply to—

a. disputes the solution of which the parties shall entrust to other tribunals by virtue of agreements already in existence or which may be concluded in the future; or

b. disputes with regard to matters which are essentially within the domestic jurisdiction of the United States.

Provided further, That such declaration shall remain in force for a period of 5 years and thereafter until the expiration of 6 months after notice may be given to terminate the declaration.

Mr. PEPPER. Immediately following the resolution, I ask that the proposed amendment of the able Senator from Texas be printed.

There being no objection, the amendment was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

On page 2, line 14, after the word "states", insert the following: "as determined by the United States."

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I do not believe that the amendment of the able Senator from Texas can be adopted without violating the express provisions of the United Nations Charter respecting the jurisdiction of the Court. I make that statement upon the basis of two facts, first, the grant of jurisdiction which is conferred upon the Court in article 36 of the statute of the International Court respecting the jurisdiction of the Court.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President——

Mr. PEPPER. Just a moment. Secondly, the express provision of subparagraph 6 of article 36, which provides:

In the event of a dispute as to whether the Court has jurisdiction, the matter shall be settled by the decision of the Court.

I now yield to the Senator from Texas.

Mr. CONNALLY. I thank the Senator, but he says he is in a hurry, and I shall not interrupt him.

Mr. PEPPER. I promised I would take only a brief time.

Mr. President, this matter was argued and debated at considerable length——

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PEPPER. If the Senator will pardon me, I promised to make my remarks brief, and I cannot possibly yield to all my friends.

Mr. FERGUSON. I merely wish to ask whether the Senator has read the sixth section of article 36.

Mr. PEPPER. I yield for a question, and I will also yield to the Senator from Oregon for a question.

Mr. FERGUSON. The language is:

In the event of a dispute as to whether the Court has jurisdiction, the matter shall be settled by the decision of the Court.

Mr. PEPPER. Yes.

Mr. FERGUSON. Of course, that relates only to what is indicated in the preceding language, stating over what the Court would have jurisdiction, that is, international matters, and not domestic matters.

Mr. PEPPER. It means anything the Court shall find to come within the grant of authority conferred upon the Court in subsection 2, paragraphs a, b, and c, namely, "the interpretation of a treaty," "any question of international law," "the existence of any fact which, if established, would constitute a breach of an international obligation."

Mr. FERGUSON. But that does not apply to any domestic question. It applies only as to whether or not the Court has jurisdiction of any of the matters mentioned.

Mr. PEPPER. I agree with the Senator in this respect, there was no need for the reservation which appears in Senate Resolution 196. If the Senator is referring to that, I am inclined to believe he is correct, because of course they are to deal with international disputes, not with domestic questions. But, Mr. President, that holding would also make unnecessary the following portion of Senate Resolution 196, namely:

Such declaration—

Meaning the compulsory jurisdiction of the International Court—shall not apply to • • • (b) disputes with regard to matters which are essentially within the domestic jurisdiction of the United States.

I do not think it was ever intended that the grant of authority should include matters that are essentially within the domestic jurisdiction of the United States. But, Mr. President, to add that reservation, and then to superimpose upon that reservation another one, that the United States Government is to be the sole judge of its own interest in the matter, it seems to me flies, first, into the very teeth of the purpose and concept of the Court, and in the second place, into violent conflict with subparagraph 6 of article 36, which reads:

In the event of a dispute as to whether the Court has jurisdiction, the matter shall be settled by the decision of the Court.

Mr. President, it did not say, "It shall be settled by the state which is a signatory power to the Charter and has given compulsory jurisdiction to the Court."

Not only that, but if there is anything fundamental in the law, it is that one cannot be the judge of his own case. Yet here we are laying down in one reservation that the World Court shall not have jurisdiction over domestic matters, and in the second place that we will decide whether or not a matter is domestic.

So, Mr. President, it seems to me that when we do that we of necessity fly squarely in the face of the provision of the Charter, which we cannot now, having ratified it, impair or impeach, that when there is a dispute as to the jurisdiction the dispute shall be settled, as of necessity it must be, if the Court is to mean anything, by the Court itself, and not by a party which may be affected.

If, therefore, Mr. President, we accept this amendment, in my opinion it will be a vain act, because we cannot impair the express provision of the Charter; in the second place, it will not only be a vain act, but it will be aimed at undermining the authority of the Court, and that authority must be enhanced, and not impaired, if the Court is to achieve the great function of keeping world peace, for which it was conceived and designed.

Mr. President, here it is. I lay one down, and the other beside it. It is possible for a state to make the declaration that Senate Resolution 196 purports to make, "unconditionally or on condition of reciprocity on the part of several or certain states, or for a certain time." That is in subparagraph 3 of article 36. But, Mr. President, I do not think that was intended to mean that a state may accept the compulsory jurisdiction of the Court and then impair the jurisdiction of the Court which is conferred in the previous subparagraph 2. In other words, we cannot ratify the Court's authority and say that it shall have compulsory jurisdiction in respect to the interpretation of a treaty or any question of international law, and then say, "It shall not have jurisdiction respecting the existence of a fact which, if established, would constitute a breach of an international obligation." We take the Court as one takes his spouse, for better or for worse. We cannot say, once we admit its jurisdiction, that it may exercise only a limited part of its authority by the statute, and exclude another part when we happen to be affected.

No more, Mr. President, can we do that than we could impair the validity of the second article, article 38. Article 38 lays down the principles the Court shall apply in the making of its decision, namely:

(a) international conventions, whether general or particular, establishing rules expressly recognized by the contesting states;

(b) international custom, as evidence of a general practice accepted as law;

(c) the general principles of law recognized by civilized nations;

(d) subject to the provisions of article 59, judicial decisions and the teachings of the most highly qualified publicists of the various nations, as subsidiary means for the determination of rules of law.

There is also this language:

2. This provision shall not prejudice the power of the Court to decide a case ex aequo, et bono, if the parties agree thereto.

Mr. President, we cannot impair those principles that the Court may apply. We cannot say that the Court cannot have recourse to the general principles of law recognized by civilized nations, or to international custom. We cannot cut out of article 38 a single paragraph, sentence, or clause that is in it. Our efforts to do that would be analogous to our adopting this amendment which attempts to limit to our own decision the jurisdiction of the Court over matters affecting the United States of America.

So, Mr. President, if we, the United States, shall be the ones first to stick a dagger in the integrity and authority of this Court, it will have infinite ill effects, because we will be the first Nation that will start our adherence to compulsory authority and jurisdiction with a question mark and a reservation.

Mr. President, all history condemns the reservation that the Senate put or tried to put into the League of Nations, and there are many of us who feel that history will level its accusing finger at those who were the authors of those reservations. I know that no one has been stronger than the able Senator from Texas in his effort to bring this magnificent edifice into reality, to give it great strength and power and authority to keep world peace. I feel, however, Mr. President, that the Senator from Texas is being required by some consideration of expediency to feel that he must mollify certain sentiments in the Senate in order to secure the ratification of this resolution which causes him to offer his amendment which he now proposes that we should consider. I am of course not questioning his right to do that or the fine interest, the patriotism and the wholesome support which the able Senator from Texas has unfailingly given to the United Nations Charter. But, no other State, according to my knowledge, has made any reservation when it has adhered to the compulsory jurisdiction of the Court. We would be the first, if we were to do it here today in the Senate.

Mr. President, I am aware of what the able Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] said. We, as a nation, do not have to yield ourselves to the compulsory jurisdiction of the Court unless we will it. We can only reserve its authority for special agreement, that we may enter into with other countries. But, Mr. President, once we give authority for compulsory jurisdiction to attach, then the law as embodied in article 36 of the Statute becomes effective, and we cannot by reservation in conflict with and in opposition to the Charter authority limit the jurisdiction of this Court. It is obvious that, if we are to give the state itself authority to say that the jurisdiction of this Court shall not attach to a matter which the state itself considers to be within its domestic authority, it gives any state the power to nullify the whole authority and jurisdiction of the Court, because it does not say that this reservation may not be effective if the authority is arbitrarily or capriciously employed by the state. If a dispute arising under a treaty is about to be decided by the Court, in our opinion, against us, we can cook up some kind of an excuse, if this reservation becomes effective, and say, "Why, that would affect the essential domestic jurisdiction of the United States, therefore the Court is without authority." And the Court would be utterly paralyzed.

Mr. President, it is fundamental in the law that no one can judge his own case, and here we are trying to judge our own case by reserving the right of a veto on the jurisdiction of the Court to act in respect to matters which we think might adversely affect us.

No, Mr. President; let us go into this Court and its jurisdiction wholeheartedly. Let us enter into it giving it full faith and credit and support, or let us not go into it at all. If we are going to make reservation, then let us stay out of the compulsory jurisdiction of this Court, and merely let it function when we specifically authorize it to function by a special agreement. But for the great United States of America, which has had such a large part in bringing the World Court and the Charter of the United Nations into existence, to be the first to limit its authority and to reserve the power to limit it at our own uncontrolled discretion, Mr. President, does far more damage to the prestige and the authority of the Court than it would sustain if we stayed out of its compulsory jurisdiction altogether.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MILLIKIN in the chair). Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, as I understand the argument of the able Senator from Florida, he indicates that none of the clauses of article 36, which gives jurisdiction to this Court—and I read the language—

The jurisdiction of the Court in all legal disputes concerning:

a. the interpretation of a treaty;

b. any question of international law;

c. the existence of any fact which, if established, would constitute a breach of an international obligation;

d. the nature or extent of the reparation to be made for the breach of an international obligation—

Includes what we are attempting to do except in the original language of the resolution on page 2 beginning in line 12, namely, "Disputes with regard to matters which are essentially within the domestic jurisdiction of the United States."

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator let me say this? If the grant of authority in subsection 2, of article 36, subparagraphs a, b, c, and d, covers matters essentially within the domestic jurisdiction of the United States, why is the reservation put into Senate Resolution 96, and why the Connally amendment?

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, if the able Senator is correct in his argument that we do not have to make the reservation as to disputes with regard to matters which are essentially within the domestic jurisdiction of the United States and that they are automatically excepted, because the very language of the Charter excludes them, then we are adding nothing except the precaution that the United States shall determine, in the language proposed by the able Senator from Texas, "as determined by the United States." If we make one exception, and we do not need it, we are adding nothing to the resolution by adding those words.

Mr. PEPPER. Oh, yes; Mr. President, I am aware of the principle of law: "Utile per inutile non vitiatur"—"What is useful is not vitiated by the useless." But, Mr. President, the essential vice of the Connally amendment is this: Under the treaty, and without the Connally amendment, the question whether the Court had authority or jurisdiction, would be determined by the Court, while under the Connally amendment the question of whether the Court had jurisdiction would be determined by the United States in respect to any matter the United States asserted to be essentially within our domestic jurisdiction. That is the difference, and that is the vice of the Connally amendment.

Mr. FERGUSON. But, Mr. President, paragraph 6 of article 36 provides:

In the event of a dispute as to whether the Court has jurisdiction, the matter shall be settled by the decision of the Court.

That relates to the four matters dealt with in subparagraphs (a), (b), (c), and (d).

Mr. PEPPER. That relates to every jurisdiction the Court has. How can the Senator say that subparagraph 6 is applicable to one part of the Court's jurisdiction and not applicable to the other? The provision that it is up to the Court to decide a dispute as to jurisdiction, applies to all the Court's authority. But the Connally amendment would say, "when the dispute is asserted to be domestic in character and outside the jurisdiction of the Court, the Court shall not decide it" as subparagraph 6 says it shall; but the Connally amendment would say "The United States shall decide its own case without appeal."

Mr. FERGUSON. But the United States would not decide that the Court did not have jurisdiction under article 36, subparagraphs (a), (b), (c), and (d).

Mr. PEPPER. That is the only jurisdiction the Court has, unless we confer, by special agreement, jurisdiction upon it. The Senator is evidently overlooking paragraph 2, which provides:

The States parties to the present statute may at any time declare that they recognize as compulsory ipso facto and without special agreement, in relation to any other State accepting the same obligation, the jurisdiction of the Court in all legal disputes concerning:

(a) the interpretation of a treaty;

(b) any question of international law;

(c) the existence of any fact which, if established, would constitute a breach of an international obligation.

Except for the question of the extent of reparations to be made in case of a breach, that is all the jurisdiction we are conferring upon the Court, and all we can confer upon it by a declaration submitting ourselves to its compulsory jurisdiction. Any other authority must be conferred upon it by a special agreement.

Mr. FERGUSON. I do not overlook that point. That is just what I have been arguing. The Court has jurisdiction only in legal disputes concerning certain questions. It has no jurisdiction over domestic issues.

Mr. PEPPER. The Senator is overlooking the fact that if a domestic issue is asserted in respect to the interpretation of a treaty, or any question of international law, or the existence of any fact which if established would constitute a breach of an international obligation, if the Court with that authority began to consider the case and the Connally amendment and Senate Resolution 196 were effective, all the United States would have to do to oust the Court of jurisdiction even in respect to authority over those matters would be to say, "That involves a matter within the domestic jurisdiction of the United States and outside the scope of the authority of the Court", and the Court would be powerless to act unless it refused to recognize the validity of such reservations, which I think it would and should do.

Mr. FERGUSON. None of the issues specified in article 36 as a matter of fact or as a matter of law include domestic issues. Therefore as I see it the argument of the able Senator from Florida does not apply, because we would not be making any reservation except with respect to domestic issues.

Mr. PEPPER. Without the Connally amendment, the question whether or not the issue is domestic in character would be determined by the Court. If the Connally amendment were effective the question would be determined by the United States, and not by the Court. That is the reason why the Connally amendment violates paragraph 6.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, will the Senator further yield?

Mr. PEPPER. I must conclude, in order to keep my word to those whom I assured that I would occupy only a brief time, but I yield.

Mr. FERGUSON. If we refer back to chapter 1, article 2, of the treaty itself, under the heading "Purposes and principles," we find this language in paragraph 7:

Nothing contained in the present charter shall authorize the United Nations to intervene in matters which are essentially within the domestic jurisdiction of any State or shall require the Members to submit such matters to settlement under the present charter; but this principle shall not prejudice the application of enforcement measures under chapter VII.

That is conclusive proof that we never intended that the United Nations—and the International Court is a part of the United Nations structure—should ever have jurisdiction of essentially domestic issues.

Mr. PEPPER. That is correct; but the Charter wisely provided that if there were a dispute about any phase of the jurisdiction of the Court the question should be decided by the Court. But the Connally amendment provides that if there is a dispute about the jurisdiction of the Court it will be decided by the United States Government if the United States Government is willing to claim that it is a matter essentially within the domestic jurisdiction of the United States.

In conclusion, Mr. President, let me say that we do not have to impair the treaty and the authority and prestige of the Court by this amendment in order effectively to protect the United States. We do not have to be the first nation giving the Court compulsory jurisdiction to make a reservation to save American interests effectively. As the Senator from Michigan has pointed out, the Court has no authority to enforce its own decisions. It is a judicial body. The power of effective enforcement lies only in the Security Council; and in the Security Council an effective decision cannot be made to take action against a nation unless there is unanimity of the Big Five. Therefore, so far as the United States is concerned, a power which of necessity will always be a party to the Security Council under the provisions which requires the Big Five to be permanent members of the Security Council, the United States will always have the power, through the exercise of the veto, to prevent effective enforcement of a judgment of the Court against the United States if the United States feels deeply enough about it to contend that the Court's judgment encroaches upon the domestic jurisdiction of our Government.

How much better it would be to rely upon the veto power which we have against the effective enforcement of the judgment of the Court than to try to write two reservations into our adherence to the Court's compulsory jurisdiction, one expressly saying that it has no jurisdiction over what is essentially within our domestic jurisdiction, and the other providing that we shall decide what is within our domestic jurisdiction. How do Senators suppose the countries which have already adhered to the compulsory jurisdiction of this Court without reservations will feel when they see that we have made this reservation? Will they not wish to modify their adherence, making it conditional instead of unconditional? They may wish to impose some other condition than the one we are attempting to impose.

America withheld its assent to the World Court a decade or more ago, and we have paid in blood and treasure for that mistake. The United States of America tried to place reservations in the League treaty, and we have paid in broad rivers of blood and uncountable treasures for those reservations. We have thus far gone forward so magnificently, and have entered so wonderfully into the spirit of this great new enterprise for peace that, in my judgment, we should give the world encouragement, confidence, and hope by extending full faith and credit to this great Court. We should not be the first nation to write the insidious question mark above its authority, and the first to violate the fundamental concept of any law, that no litigant shall decide his own case.

Therefore, I hope the Connally amendment will not be adopted.

Mr. CONNALLY obtained the floor.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GOSSETT in the chair). Sixty-four Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

The Senator from Texas has the floor.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, to the pending resolution I offer the amendment which I send to the desk and ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 2, in line 14, after the word "states", it is proposed to insert the following: "as determined by the United States."

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I have long favored the International Court of Justice; and when the issue was before this body, I voted for the resolution. I favor the resolution with the amendment which I have offered.

Mr. President, at San Francisco, when we adopted the Charter, our delegation opposed compulsory jurisdiction at that time, and favored the provisions which remitted the matter to the will of each nation, so that each nation could accept or could reject compulsory jurisdiction.

Under the present Charter, the United States has the option of accepting compulsory jurisdiction or the option of not accepting it and simply relying on special provisions regarding each case which might be accepted by the Court.

So within those extremes we have a perfect right to stipulate the extent of our agreement as to compulsory jurisdiction.

My amendment is tantamount to saying to the International Court and to the members of the United Nations that we will accept jurisdiction on all questions set forth in the Charter and in the treaty, except that we will not accept jurisdiction on questions which we deem to be purely domestic issues.

Mr. President, the Charter recognizes that that is a sound principle and is in conformity with our concepts of jurisdiction as between international affairs and national affairs. That is recognized by the United Nations, because in the Charter the following is set forth in article 2, section 7:

> Nothing contained in the present Charter shall authorize the United Nations to intervene in matters which are essentially within the domestic jurisdiction of any state—

Mr. President, that is an absolute prohibition against intervening or invading in the case of a domestic question. Yet, if the judges of the World Court were to decide that what really was a domestic question was not a domestic question, the Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER] would have the Court accept jurisdiction to decide the case.

The Charter goes further, for it then says:

> Or shall require—

In other words, nothing in the Charter shall require the United States—> the members to submit such matters to settlement under the present charter.

There is nothing in the Charter which requires us to submit a domestic question, and the effect of my amendment is to say that as to domestic questions we will not submit them, but we will submit other matters.

Mr. President, there is nothing violative of the concepts of the Charter or of international law in that course. We can abstain and can stand where we stand now, if we so desire. We are going a long way when we accept all character of jurisdiction except jurisdiction as to domestic questions.

Mr. President, some of us have been in contact in conferences which have been held with the representatives of many other nations. The United States is the object of envy of many nations of the world and many peoples. Our Treasury is most attractive to them. Immigration to our shores is something they dream of. I do not favor and I shall not vote to make it possible for the International Court of Justice to decide whether a question of immigration to our shores is a domestic question or an international question. It is a domestic question, of course; but the Court might contend it is international in character. The Court might say, "A man leaves one country and migrates to another, and therefore an international question is involved, and suit may be brought against the United States because it discriminates against the citizens of a certain country by not giving them a sufficiently large quota."

Mr. President, do we wish to submit to the International Court the question whether we have a right to levy tariffs and duties and to regulate matters of that kind? They are purely domestic questions, and I do not propose to have the International Court have jurisdiction over them.

Do we want the International Court of Justice to render judgment in a case involving the navigation of the Panama Canal? The Court might say, "It is an international stream, like the Dardanelles, and the commerce of the world passes through it, and problems relative to it are international problems," such problems are not international. In the case of the Panama Canal, our treasure bought it, our blood built it, and it is ours by right of construction. We do propose to submit to the jurisdiction of any tribunal at any time the right to say whether a question relative to it is a domestic question.

Mr. President, the Senator from Oregon made a very able and eloquent speech in favor of the resolution and against the amendment of the Senator from Texas. However, I am reminded that in the subcommittee the Senator from Oregon said he had no objection to an amendment such as mine. I quote now from the hearings before the subcommittee, at page 36:

> Senator AUSTIN—

And I am glad the Senator from Vermont is here now—

> Senator AUSTIN. How much of a restriction would you regard the insertion of certain words in that clause "b," relating to who decides that question of what is domestic jurisdiction—that is, would you regard it as nullifying your purpose, if you inserted into this phrase, "disputes with regard to matters which are essentially within the domestic jurisdiction of the United States," which would make it read: "disputes which are held by the United States to be with regard to matters which are essentially within the domestic jurisdiction of the United States?"
>
> Senator MORSE. I would accept the language.
>
> Senator AUSTIN. You would?
>
> Senator MORSE. I would accept the language.
>
> Senator AUSTIN. Otherwise, I foresee the conflict that naturally would arise over such questions as immigration, the interpretation of a treaty, for example, with respect to the immigration of orientals.
>
> Senator MORSE. I would accept the language as of now.
>
> Senator AUSTIN. Yes.

Mr. President, the Senator from Oregon has accepted it three times, and I hope he will accept it when the roll is called.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, what the Senator has read was the first impression of the Senator from Oregon when he listened to the proposal of the Senator from Vermont. He has already stated in his speeches on the floor of the Senate that that was his first reaction to the proposal, and that after making a thorough and complete study of the matter he reached an opposite conclusion.

Mr. CONNALLY. I am sorry the Senator grows more erroneous the longer he studies the matter. Mr. President, yesterday the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN] brought out quite accurately that if we do not adopt this amendment, some issue which would be domestic in its nature might arise before the International Court of Justice, but that the Court would hold it to be an international and not a domestic question. It was pointed out that we could protest and appeal to whatever we could appeal to if at all—perhaps to the Security Council—and that when the Court undertook to enforce its judgment by certifying the question to the Security Council, we could tell the Court and the Security Council to take a walk. Of course, that is true. There is no way to compel us to submit. But I do not want to put the United States in that position. I prefer at the very outset to say, "We want to cooperate with the World Court. We are willing to submit every other question on earth except domestic questions." The Charter says that the Court shall have no jurisdiction over domestic questions and we do not propose to have a Court of 15, 14 of whom will be alien judges—I do not reflect upon them—decide that a domestic question is an international question.

Several Senators have argued that by this amendment the United States would put itself in the position of corruptly and improperly claiming that a question is domestic in nature when it is not, thereby taking advantage of an international dispute and saying that since the question is domestic, we will not abide by the decision of the Court. Mr. President, I have more faith in my Government than that. I do not believe the United States would adopt a subterfuge, a pretext, or a pretense in order to block the judgment of the Court on any such grounds. I do not object to submitting to the Court; but before doing that I want to know what are the issues, and what is the jurisdiction of the Court. In international affairs the United States has never adopted a policy of pretext, pretense, subterfuge, or excuse. Our record shows that we are devoted to the welfare of the world. We spent more money in the recent war than was ever spent before in any war on this globe. We spent the lifeblood of hundreds of thousands of our men. We sent armies to Africa, to Russia, to Asia, and to other parts of the world. We dotted the globe with our navies, our submarines, and our aircraft. We did not do so because we wanted a foot of the land of any nation, but because we wanted peace.

Mr. President, our policy in connection with international affairs has not been a selfish one and has not been based on pretext and subterfuge.

As every Member of the Senate knows, the Senator from Vermont is a great lawyer and a great statesman. As I understand, he is unequivocally supporting my amendment. I ask the Senator from Vermont to verify or deny that statement.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I am supporting the amendment. I would rather see the resolution not contain it, but for many reasons I shall vote for the amendment.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, many of the outstanding members of the Committee on Foreign Relations are supporting it. The distinguished Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE] and the distinguished Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] are both supporting it. I do not wish to quote other Senators because the roll has not yet been called. A great many of the leading members of the Committee on Foreign Relations are in favor of the amendment.

Mr. President, I am in favor of the International Court of Justice. I am in favor of the United Nations, but I am also for the United States of America. I do not want to surrender the sovereignty or the prestige of the United States with respect to any question which may be merely domestic in character, and contained within the boundaries of this Republic. Our ancestors fought with fortitude and with sacrifice in order to establish our Government. We must preserve it because the best hope of the world lies in the survival of the United States with its concepts of democracy, liberty, freedom, and advancement under its institutions.

So, Mr. President, I hope the Senate will agree to the amendment, and then it will be in position to act affirmatively on the resolution.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Vote! Vote!

Mr. HUFFMAN. Mr. President, it is not my purpose to delay for long the vote on this important resolution, but I do wish to say a few words concerning the vital subject which the resolution involves.

The key to world tranquillity of the future undoubtedly lies in proper world cooperation. As the foremost Nation of the world today, it is incumbent upon America to do her part in bringing about a better understanding among all the nations of the world. The only hope for the prevention of future wars which would eventually destroy civilization lies in the cultivation of a better understanding between our Nation and all other nations of the globe.

In signing the United Nations Charter at San Francisco the 51 members, while accepting the World Court in substance, did not bind themselves to accept its jurisdiction unless they publicly declared themselves willing to do so. Obviously, some of the nations represented at the San Francisco Conference did not accept compulsory participation in the World Court for fear that it might limit their sovereignty, and it is not my conception that the United States, by accepting the jurisdiction of the World Court, need actually surrender any of its fundamental national sovereignty.

By becoming a member of the World Court the United States will be doing its part in establishing an effective international judiciary, and by such action our dreams of an international court to decide legal questions will be realized.

The United Nations cannot administer impartially justice to all the nations of the world unless its most important members subscribe to this policy. Nations which actually desire world cooperation can best express their desire by becoming members of the World Court. Mr. President, through this Body let us hope all nations may finally show their good faith and make it a practical association for international progress.

I am glad to have an opportunity to support Senate Resolution 196, and also the Connally amendment which, while I believe it to be unnecessary under the terms of the resolution as it is written, is an additional safeguard to show our intention in determining when a matter is domestic and when it is international in character. I shall vote for the resolution.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, I shall not take much of the Senate's time. I was one of the sponsors of the resolution and asked several questions during the course of the debate in order to make my position clear on the record.

The United States was founded upon the proposition that its citizen's should have equal justice under law. We have believe this should apply to States. Since its formation, the United States has led in promoting a reign of law and justice as between nations. In order to continue that leadership, we should now accept the jurisdiction of the International Court of Justice and establish this concept which is so fundamental to us. If the United States, which has the material power to impose its will widely in the world, now agrees to submit to the impartial adjudication of its legal controversies, it will inaugurate and will be carrying out what we have advocated, and the result will be a new and profoundly significant international advance. The failure to take that step would be interpreted as an election on our part to rely on power rather than reason under a judicial system.

The Statute of the Court of International Justice is a part of the Charter. Nowhere in the jurisdiction of the Court do we find essentially domestic matters covered. But since we have included in the resolution which is now before the Senate for ratification the language that "such declaration shall not apply to disputes with regard to matters which are essentially within the domestic jurisdiction of the United States," I see no reason why we should not add the words proposed by the able Senator from Texas, "as determined by the United States." Then we are saying clearly and without equivocation exactly what we are accepting, and as domestic matters are not covered by the jurisdiction of the Court we can leave no doubt that we are going wholeheartedly into the Court; that we are submitting all matters of international relations, as provided for in section 36 of the Statute establishing the Court; but that we have no intention of submitting, and it is not even the intention of the Court, to have us submit, purely domestic questions.

Therefore, Mr. President, I feel that I cannot only support the amendment of the able Senator from Texas, but that I can support the resolution with his amendment in it, because I do not feel that it constitutes a reservation. It should not be classed as a reservation because nowhere is it covered in the Statute of the International Court. But we have seen fit to incorporate this language in the resolution in order to make it as clear as possible exactly what we are doing in accepting the jurisdiction of the World Court.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Mr. President, before we vote I wish to say just one word. We have already debated this question, and I have already covered it. I shall not resist the amendment, although for reasons given yesterday I still think it is unnecessary and unwise.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Texas, which will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 2, line 14, after the word "states", it is proposed to insert "as determined by the United States."

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. WAGNER (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Kansas [Mr. REED]. Not knowing how he would vote, I transfer that pair to the Senator from Missouri [Mr. BRIGGS]. I am not advised how the Senator from Missouri would vote if present. Being at liberty to vote, I vote "nay."

Mr. HILL. I announce that the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY] is absent because of illness.

The Senator from Nevada [Mr. CARVILLE] is absent by leave of the Senate.

The Senator from Florida [Mr. ANDREWS], the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BURCH], and the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GERRY] are necessarily absent.

The Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD] is detained on official business.

The Senator from Missouri [Mr. BRIGGS], the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. EASTLAND], the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. KILGORE], the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS], the Senator from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN], and the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. MYERS] are detained on public business.

The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH] is absent on official business, having been appointed a member of the President's Evaluation Commission in connection with the test of atomic bombs on naval vessels at Bikini.

The Senator from Louisiana [Mr. ELLENDER], and the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] are absent on official business, having been appointed to the commission on the part of the Senate to participate in the Philippine independence ceremonies.

Mr. WHERRY. The Senator from Maine [Mr. BREWSTER], the Senator from Delaware [Mr. BUCK], the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. HAWKES], the Senator from Kansas [Mr. REED], the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. STANFILL], and the Senator from Indiana [Mr. WILLIS] are necessarily absent.

The Senator from Vermont [Mr. AIKEN], the Senator from Illinois [Mr. BROOKS], the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. BUSHFIELD], the Senator from Indiana [Mr. CAPEHART], the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. GURNEY], the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. ROBERTSON], the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY], and the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. YOUNG] are absent by leave of the Senate.

The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BUTLER] is absent on official business, being a member of the commission appointed to attend the Philippine independence ceremonies.

The Senator from Iowa [Mr. HICKENLOOPER] is absent by leave of the Senate on official business as a member of the Special Committee on Atomic Energy.

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. SALTONSTALL] is absent on official business, having been appointed a member of the President's Evaluation Commission in connection with the test of atomic bombs on naval vessels at Bikini.

The Senator from Iowa [Mr. WILSON] is absent on official business.

The result was announced—yeas 51, nays 12, as follows:

So Mr. CONNALLY'S amendment was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Maurer, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7037) to amend the Social Security Act and the Internal Revenue Code, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the House having proceeded to reconsider the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 225) entitled "Joint resolution to quiet the titles of the respective States, and others, to lands beneath tidewaters and lands beneath navigable waters within the boundaries of such States and to prevent further clouding of such titles," returned by the President of the United States with his objections, to the House of Representatives, in which it originated, it was—

Resolved, That the said joint resolution do not pass, two-thirds of the House of Representatives not agreeing to pass the same.

The message further announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the following enrolled bills, and they were signed by the President pro tempore:

S. 2100. An act to remove the limitations on the amount of death compensation or pension payable to widows and children of certain deceased veterans;

S. 2125. An act to amend the act entitled "An act to establish a Code of Law for the District of Columbia," approved March 3, 1901, and the acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto;

S. 2256. An act to amend the Servicemen's Readjustment Act of 1944;

S. 2286. An act to amend the act entitled "An act for the acquisition, establishment, and development of the George Washington Memorial Parkway along the Potomac from Mount Vernon and Fort Washington to the Great Falls, and to provide for the acquisition of lands in the District of Columbia and the States of Maryland and Virginia requisite to the comprehensive park, parkway, and playground system of the National Capital," approved May 29, 1930;

S. 2332. An act to provide that the unexpended proceeds from the sale of 50-cent pieces coined in commemoration of the two hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the founding of the city of Albany, N. Y., may be paid into the general fund of such city;

S. 2408. An act to amend the act of February 9, 1907, as amended, with respect to certain fees;

S. 2460. An act to provide additional inducements to citizens of the United States to make a career of the United States military or naval service, and for other purposes;

S. 2477. An act to authorize the Veterans' Administration to reimburse State and local agencies for expenses incurred in rendering services in connection with the administration of certain training programs for veterans, and for other purposes;

S. 2479. An act to amend the act entitled "An act to regulate within the District of Columbia the sale of milk, cream, and ice cream, and for other purposes," approved February 27, 1925;

S. 2480. An act authorizing the appointment of Robert Sprague Beightler as permanent brigadier general of the line of the Regular Army; and

S. 2498. An act to provide for fire protection of Government and private property in and contiguous to the waters of the District of Columbia.

INVESTIGATION OF ALL PHASES OF SOCIAL SECURITY

Mr. VANDENBERG. As in legislative session, I ask unanimous consent, out of order, to submit a Senate resolution on behalf of the chairman of the Finance Committee, the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE] and myself.

The Senate will remember that when it passed upon the social-security problem a few days ago it included in the legislation a requirement for an immediate and complete and adequate special investigation of all phases of social security, so that the Congress might have adequate preparation for actual and realistic action in the near future. Unfortunately, as was reported this afternoon by the Senator from Georgia, the House conferees declined to agree to the Senate amendment, and it was eliminated. The able Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] commenting upon the action of the House expressed his regret that we were not to have this immediate, concentrated, aggressive inquiry into this problem. It is because there has been no such inquiry, Mr. President, that we find ourselves year after year at the end of each session without any adequate action on the subject.

In the fact of that situation, Mr. President, the Senator from Georgia and I are submitting a resolution which will instruct the Senate Finance Committee on behalf of the Senate, to make precisely the same investigation which we were attempting to obtain by joint action of the House and Senate. The resolution would instruct the Senate committee to appoint an advisory council for the purpose of aiding it in its exploration of this subject.

Mr. President, both the Senator from Georgia and I, and I think I can speak for all the other members of the Finance Committee, are very anxious for action along this line before adjournment. Therefore, I ask unanimous consent to submit the resolution now for reference to the Finance Committee, after which it must be referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Michigan?

There being no objection, the resolution (S. Res. 320) authorizing and directing the Senate Committee on Finance to make a full and complete study and investigation of old-age and survivors insurance and all other aspects of social security, particularly in respect to coverage, benefits, and taxes related thereto, was received and referred to the Committee on Finance, as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate Committee on Finance is authorized and directed to make a full and complete study and investigation of old-age and survivors insurance and all other aspects of social security, particularly in respect to coverage, benefits, and taxes related thereto so that the Senate may be prepared to deal with such legislation on these subjects as may hereafter originate in the House of Representatives under the requirement of the Constitution.

The Senate committee is hereby authorized, in its discretion, to appoint an advisory council of individuals having special knowledge concerning matters involved in its study and investigation to assist, consult with, and advise the Senate committee with respect to such study and investigation. Members of the advisory council shall not receive any compensation for their services as such members, but shall be reimbursed for travel, subsistence, and other necessary expenses incurred by them in connection with the performance of the work of the advisory council.

For the purposes of this resolution the committee, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized to sit and act at such places and times including periods of Senate recess or adjournment, to require by subpena or otherwise the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such books, papers, and documents, to administer such oaths, to take such testimony, to procure such printing and binding, and to make such expenditures, as it deems advisable, the cost of stenographic services to report such hearings shall not be in excess of 25 cents per hundred words.

The committee shall have power to employ and fix the compensation of such officers, experts, and employees as it deems necessary in the performance of its duties under this title, but the compensation so fixed shall not exceed the compensation prescribed under the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, for comparable duties. The expenses of the committee under this resolution, which shall not exceed $10,000 shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers signed by the chairman.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I should like to add that in the absence of the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS], who is chairman of the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate—I believe the able Senator from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN] is the ranking member—I very respectfully and prayerfully commend and commit this resolution to his mercies.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I wish to join with the able Senator from Michigan in expressing the hope that the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate will report the resolution promptly so that we can obtain action upon it before the adjournment of the Congress, because I think it is absolutely essential that we do so if we are to be prepared to go into this very important question when the Congress meets next January.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MILLIKIN. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. I wish to associate myself with this request. I think that this is a transcendentally important problem which faces the Congress and will face the next Congress. The amount requested is a modest sum compared with the importance of the problem, and I hope the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate will report favorably before we recess or adjourn today.

Mr. GEORGE subsequently said: Mr. President, as in legislative session, from the Committee on Finance I report favorably Senate Resolution 320, authorizing and directing the Senate Committee on Finance to make a full and complete study and investigation of old-age and survivors' insurance and all other aspects of social security, particularly in respect to coverage, benefits, and taxes related thereto, which was submitted to the Senate earlier today by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG].

The resolution (S. Res. 320) was received and referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

Mr. HAYDEN subsequently said: Mr. President, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, I ask unanimous consent to report favorably without amendment Senate Resolution 320, submitted earlier today by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] for himself and Mr. GEORGE, and I request its immediate consideration.

There being no objection, the resolution was considered and agreed to.

ACCEPTANCE OF COMPULSORY JURISDICTION OF INTERNATIONAL COURT OF JUSTICE

The Senate resumed the consideration of the resolution (S. Res. 196) proposing acceptance by the United States Government of compulsory jurisdiction of the International Court of Justice.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GOSSETT in the chair). Senate Resolution 196 is before the Senate and open to further amendment.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Mr. President, I call up and ask to have read an amendment, which I have offered and sent to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. It is proposed to strike out the period in line 14, page 2, to substitute a semicolon, and add the word "or" and the following additional proviso:

(c) Disputes where the law necessary for decision is not found in existing treaties and conventions to which the United States is a party and where there has not been prior agreement by the United States as to the applicable principles of international law.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Mr. President, this amendment read in the context of the resolution and omitting parts which need not be read now, would read:

Provided, That such declaration—

That is to say, the declaration of adherence—shall not apply to disputes where the law necessary for decision is not found in existing treaties and conventions to which the United States is a party and where there has not been prior agreement by the United States as to the applicable principles of international law.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Mr. President, I am sure that the amendment offered by the Senator from Colorado in no way interferes with or is in disagreement with the basis of the Charter and with the statute. I see no reason why it cannot be accepted.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Then, Mr. President, unless there is objection, I shall submit the matter without further statement.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator state the substance of the amendment?

Mr. MILLIKIN. Yes. The amendment would provide that our declaration of adherence is qualified by the fact that we are not required to submit to the jurisdiction where the law necessary for decision is not found in existing treaties and conventions to which the United States is a party and where there has not been prior agreement by the United States as to the applicable principles of international law.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for another question?

Mr. MILLIKIN. Yes.

Mr. PEPPER. Would the amendment come under article 36 or article 38 of the Charter? Would it apply with reference to extending the jurisdiction of the Court in article 36, or to the law that may be applied by the Court, in article 38?

Mr. MILLIKIN. It would affect article 38, which defines by statute the sources from which the international law shall be derived. There seems to be much opinion that we would not know what the international law might be in any particular dispute affecting this country, which might affect this country vitally.

So this is a limitation intended to protect us where there is uncertainty with respect to or a lack of applicable international law.

Mr. PEPPER. Where would the qualification come; under paragraphs a, b, c, or d, or some other place in article 38?

Mr. MILLIKIN. Article 38 describes the sources from which the international law, as declared by the Court, shall be derived.

Mr. PEPPER. Yes, but where would the Senator's amendment come?

Mr. MILLIKIN. I am not, of course, attempting to amend article 38. I am qualifying our declaration of adherence by limiting the sources where the law may be found which shall bind us without our consent, and making a distinction between that area and the area where our advance consent must be had so far as the applicable principles of law are concerned.

Mr. PEPPER. Article 38 reads as follows:

1. The Court, whose function it is to decide in accordance with international law such disputes as are submitted to it, shall apply—

Here is the law that the Court may apply in the decision of disputes that come properly before the Court:

(a) international conventions, whether general or particular, establishing rules expressly recognized by the contesting states;

(b) international custom, as evidence of a general practice accepted as law;

(c) the general principles of law recognized by civilized nations;

(d) subject to the provisions of article 59, judicial decisions and the teachings of the most highly qualified publicists of the various nations, as subsidiary means for the determination of rules of law.

Mr. President, we have adhered, have we not, to the United Nations Charter, which says that that is the source of the law the Court may apply? Now, how can the able Senator from Colorado lay down a different rule of law that the Court may apply? How can he limit or add to the sources of authority laid down in the paragraph I have read? And how can we under the treaty qualify the materials that the Court may employ in the decision of cases?

Mr. MILLIKIN. Mr. President, I shall answer the question this way. That same point was made to the amendment we have just accepted, and so the Senate has decided that we may qualify our adherence in those ways.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, if the Senator will let me ask him a question, I have read the source of authority which I thought the Court might apply as set out specifically in article 38. Which one of those would the able Senator from Colorado qualify in his amendment?

Mr. MILLIKIN. I have said in the amendment that we shall look to the treaties and conventions to which we are parties for the international law, and if it is not to be found there, then we have the privilege of withholding our submission in a particular case until the controlling principles have been declared and have met with our agreement. That does not say that the Court may not consult men learned in the field, may not consult the textbooks, may not consult any of the sources which are listed, once we decide to submit. Nor does it say that in reaching our decision as to whether or not we shall submit we shall not be influenced by what they have to say.

Mr. PEPPER. Is it not true that if we adopt the Senator's amendment what we shall do will be first, to limit the jurisdiction of the Court, in spite of the jurisdiction being defined in the Charter; and secondly—and rather logically—is not the Senator from Colorado now limiting the law that the Court may apply and giving us, first, the veto power over the Court's jurisdiction, and secondly, the veto power over the law which the Court may apply?

Mr. MILLIKIN. The Senator from Colorado is saying in this amendment that the destiny and the fate of this Nation shall not be committed to unknown law to be invented by anyone.

Mr. PEPPER. Exactly. That is what the Senator intends; and that indicates the lack of faith with which he wishes this country to start.

Mr. MILLIKIN. That does not mean for one moment that we would not abide by the qualification in good faith. It does not mean for one moment that we would use it as a bad-faith device to avoid the jurisdiction of the Court.

Mr. PEPPER. The net effect of what the Senator is doing is to say that we can even limit the law which the Court may apply to law which we like.

Mr. MILLIKIN. The Senate has already said that.

Mr. PEPPER. I agree that the Senate has already erred in respect to jurisdiction. Now the Senator wishes to carry the error forward by limiting the law.

Mr. MILLIKIN. I started by trying to avoid needless argument, but I am perfectly willing to enter into a full exposition of the great area of uncertainty in the field of international law. From such discussion it would become quickly apparent that we dare not give an unqualified acceptance of jurisdiction when we do not know what the principles are that will rule the case. That is not rule by law. That is rule by uncertainty.

Mr. PEPPER. In other words, the Senator from Colorado would limit the right of the World Court to help build up international law. He would say, "You may build up a great body of international law the way the courts build up a great body of constitutional law, but not at the expense of the United States. You will have to build it up at the expense of the rest of the world."

Mr. MILLIKIN. We shall have a perfect right in every case which arises, when the law is not found in our treaties and conventions, to permit the law to be made in the way the Senator suggests.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MILLIKIN. I yield.

Mr. MORSE. I think there is all the difference in the world between the Connally amendment and the amendment proposed by the Senator from Colorado. The Connally amendment simply made clear that we were not granting to the World Court jurisdiction over domestic issues. I do not think it was necessary because the Charter itself makes clear that we did not grant to the World Court jurisdiction over domestic issues. But we have ratified a charter which contains article 38. That Charter sets up a World Court. Article 38 sets forth the functions of that Court. It reads in part as follows:

1. The Court, whose function is to decide in accordance with international law such disputes as are submitted to it, shall apply—

Then it sets forth what the Court may apply in determining cases which arise within its jurisdiction. If we are to accept the jurisdiction of the Court, then we ought to accept it in full under the terms and conditions of article 38. What the amendment proposed by the Senator from Colorado really does is to say that we will accept the jurisdiction of the Court only so long as it applies restricted segments of international law, but that we will not accept the jurisdiction of the Court if it applies all the principles which go to make up international law as authorized under article 38 which we have already ratified. In my judgment the amendment goes to the heart of the resolution, and I think it would be a sad mistake for the Senate of the United States to adopt the amendment proposed by the Senator from Colorado. I would rather not have any resolution at all than to have the resolution with the Millikin amendment in it.

Mr. MILLIKIN. The suggestion that our adherence should be qualified in the manner which I have proposed came from John Foster Dulles, and was presented to the Foreign Relations Committee. As a part of his comment he said:

If the applicable rule of international law is so uncertain that resort must be had to alleged custom, teachings, etc., then the Court can scarcely avoid indulging in a large amount of judicial legislation or political expediency. The United States can properly refrain from subjecting itself to that.

If a case falls under article 36 (2) (b), and if the applicable legal principles are not ascertainable from a treaty or convention to which the United States is a party, they could be stipulated before the obligation arises to submit to the jurisdiction of the Court. That was the procedure followed in the case of the Alabama arbitration. Then the applicable law was so vague and uncertain that Great Britain and the United States first negotiated the Treaty of Washington (1871) to establish the "rules to be taken as applicable to the case."

The suggested safeguard is the more appropriate because a majority of the judges of the Court are drawn from countries which are not "common law" countries, but which depend almost wholly on written laws and decrees. Therefore such judges can hardly be expected to be adept in the proper use of common-law methods.

Mr. President, I do not intend to elaborate on this point to a great extent. I simply wish to point out that when we joined this organization on the political side we committed ourselves to something that would reflect our great power in the world. I am referring to our position in the Security Council, which alone gives us a powerful leverage to influence the political policies of the Organization. Then, further to protect ourselves, we reserved the right of veto. I point out to Senators that 91 men in the Senate agreed to that disposition of the political side of this question. Is it not perfectly evident that this country can be destroyed by a bad political decision as well as by a bad legal decision? One can strike at our vitals just as effectively as the other. Yet when we enter into the proposed arrangement we do so without any right of veto, without any special position on the Court, and, as has been pointed out by Mr. Dulles, we go before judges who are not trained in looking at the law in the same way that we look at it.

So if our decision was proper and advisable that, despite the declaration of the Charter that the Court itself shall decide when questions of domestic jurisdiction are involved, we may qualify our adherence to protect ourselves in that respect, then certainly if we wish to rest our future on the rule of law, which I wish to do and am willing to do in international matters, it is equally proper and advisable, it is the first measure of prudence on our part, to assure that we shall have some idea of what the law is going to be. If I may use the figure, we should not commit the destiny of this country to a game in which the rules are made by the referee as he goes along.

Mr. MORSE and Mr. TAFT addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield, and if so, to whom?

Mr. MILLIKIN. Just a moment.

We are not required under this qualification to pass over the specific sources for international law mentioned in the Charter. We can accept them fully. But if we do not know what they are, if we do not know what rules will govern our destiny in a particular case, we have the right to say, "You may look for them in the conventions and treaties to which we are party but beyond that we must consent in advance."

Mr. AUSTIN, Mr. MORSE, and Mr. TAFT addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield, and if so, to whom?

Mr. MILLIKIN. I yield first to the distinguished Senator from Vermont, who must leave shortly.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I do not wish to mislead the distinguished Senator. My time has already passed. I am not leaving, I am sorry to say. I wish to thank Senators who have tried so hard to accommodate me in this regard.

I should like to ask the distinguished Senator a question. Assuming that every article contained in the statute of the Court is a part of the obligation entered into by the United States—because the statute is an integral part of the treaty—does not the Senator recognize the binding obligation on the United States of these words, reading from article 38, section 1?

The Court, whose function is to decide in accordance with international law such disputes as are submitted to it, shall apply—

Does not the Senator recognize that there is a mandate to the Court which the Senate cannot alone modify, and that if the Senate should adopt the amendment offered by the distinguished Senator from Colorado it would not have effect until after 50 other nations had accepted it according to their constitutional processes, as an amendment of the convention? That is my question.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Mr. President, I do not accept that conclusion, in view of the decision which the Senate has already made, namely, that we may put protective qualifications into our act of adherence.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HAYDEN in the chair). Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. MILLIKIN. I yield to the distinguished Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I should like to ask the Senator whether he sees any possibility of making a line of separation or distinction between a political court and a court of justice, in the documents establishing the Court, so as to keep it a court of justice, on the basis of law, and not a political court. That is what ruined the so-called Court of International Justice which was established under the League of Nations.

Mr. MILLIKIN. I say to the distinguished Senator that in my view of the matter, there is only one way by which we can submit to the rule of law under this Court, if that is what we wish to do, and that is to have a body of law, on which it operates, that is clear and definite, so that we know the rules which will decide our fate, and so that whenever that matter is in question we shall have the right to submit, if we wish, or to refuse to submit.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Does the Senator understand that the Court is to be a court of unlimited jurisdiction?

Mr. MILLIKIN. It is a court of unlimited jurisdiction in the fields which have been mentioned in the statute.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Let me call attention to the fact that the political decisions of the Court of International Justice established under the League of Nations were what ruined that court. That court was ruined by its own decisions, because it accepted jurisdiction of political issues.

Mr. MILLIKIN. I thank the Senator for his contribution.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. For instance, when the Court accepted jurisdiction of the tariff treaty between Austria and Germany, it accepted jurisdiction of a political matter.

Mr. MILLIKIN. That is correct.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. The Court made its decision. France and England were on two different sides of the question. They did not agree on the question of the tariff treaty. France won by one vote.

I have the highest authority, I think, that it is possible to have in respect to that situation. I refer to this matter because Judge Loder, who was the first president of that Court, and who wrote the constitution for the Court, resigned from the Court, and he told me why he resigned. He said:

> I tried to make it a court of justice, but it is nothing but a political court. It took jurisdiction in the Austrian-German Anschluss, and that is nothing but a political tariff matter.

Mr. President, in that case the Court had no business to take jurisdiction in a political matter of that kind, but it did; and after the decision was rendered, newspapers throughout the world called attention to the suspicion that bribery had been used to get that decision.

If a division or line of demarcation can be drawn so as to keep political matters out of the Court, and to have its decisions made on the basis of law, in order to establish justice, that is one thing; but if we are to have a court that will take jurisdiction of political questions, justice will not be done, because the power of sovereignty will interfere with the rendering of justice.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Mr. President, I think the Senator has made a very good point, and it emphasizes the fact that we here should do all we can do to see to it that we have a foundation of law under this Court, rather than invention by a group of judges.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. MILLIKIN. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. I wish to make sure that I correctly understand the exact effect of this proposal. By the Senator's amendment we would except from the jurisdiction of the Court disputes in which the law necessary for its decision is not found in existing treaties and conventions to which the United States is a party, and also where there had not been prior agreement by the United States as to the applicable principles of international law.

The question I wish to ask is this: Article 33, I take it, in the statute of the International Court of Justice, to which we now adhere, becomes an existing treaty and convention. Does the Senator from Colorado intend to say, therefore, that there is jurisdiction where international custom is evidence of a general practice, except that the decision must be based on law?

Mr. MILLIKIN. I do not intend to include the language of this act as a modification of what is said under subsection C.

Mr. TAFT. So the Senator says that we are not to be bound by any decision based on it; is that correct?

Mr. MILLIKIN. The decisions are to be based on laws that are found in treaties or conventions to which the United States is a party.

I should like to say that after the League of Nations was set up, a number of committees commenced work on the job of codifying international law. I hope this new organization will redouble the efforts in that respect.

The former committees had much difficulty in codifying international law because they could not get the nations to agree as to the principles which can be accepted as international law.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator further yield?

Mr. MILLIKIN. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. Let me say that if the amendment is adopted and if it is interpreted as the Senator from Colorado has just interpreted it, I think it would be far better to adopt no resolution at all. I think the amendment is absolutely destructive of the entire International Court set-up and of the entire idea that we are willing to submit disputes with other nations to the decision of an impartial tribunal. Rather than to say that we are not willing to do that, I think we should not adopt the resolution at all, until we can debate the question, because in my opinion this amendment entirely destroys the basis of decision. I do not think we shall have peace in the world until the nations submit their disputes to impartial tribunals for decisions by them. I do not care whether there is existing law or not, so far as I am concerned, for I am willing to let the Court decide the issues on the basis of justice. I would be willing to let the Court consider such matters without having any treaty as a basis for its decision; and until we do that, I say we cannot have peace, even though we set up all the force we want and all the tribunals we want. My criticism of the United Nations is that it is all based on force and expediencey, and there is no requirement that questions shall be submitted for the decision of an impartial tribunal.

The point of this resolution is to say that the United States will take the lead in submitting disputes to a tribunal which will hear the parties and then make a decision. I do not agree that the Court should take jurisdiction of domestic questions; but other than those, so far as I am concerned, I think the Court should take jurisdiction of all justiciable questions.

To say that if there is no written law, just as there was no written law for many years in respect to the common law of England, the Court shall not take jurisdiction, will mean, I think, that there will be no hope for peace in the world. So far as I am concerned, I am going to vote against the resolution, if it is framed so as to include such a provision.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Mr. President, the Senator from Ohio may, of course, feel at liberty to vote against the resolution if he wishes to do so. I hope he votes for it.

The question he has submitted is whether we can have peace by applying this resolution as it stands. The Senator from Ohio thinks we cannot. I suggest to the distinguished Senator that we never can have peace until, so far as justiciable matters are concerned, we rest them on the rule of law; and basic to that is that we know what the law is, or at least that we are willing to take the speculation.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MILLIKIN. I yield.

Mr. MORSE. First, I wish to say that I am in complete and 100 percent agreement with the statements which have been made on this matter by the Senator from Ohio on this matter. I think he is absolutely correct. We have to make up our minds now as to whether we are going to submit justiciable disputes to a World Court for determination by it, or whether we are going to reserve unto ourselves the right to determine how those disputes will be settled and, if necessesary, whether they will be settled by force exercised by this country.

I wish to call the attention of the Senate—I shall not take time to read the matter, but I plead with the Members of the Senate that they read it—to page 7 of the committee report. This is the section of the report in which the committee considered the principle of the amendment which the Senator from Colorado now submits to the Senate. The committee pointed out that such a principle should not be adopted, because in effect it would constitute a reservation on our part, under article 38 of the United Nations Charter. The answer to the proposal made by Mr. Dulles is also presented on page 7 of the report, as submitted to the committee by Mr. Fahy, of the State Department.

I think the Senator from Ohio has put the matter very well, Mr. President; namely, that the decision on this amendment calls upon us to decide whether we are going to submit international law issues to the World Court, for determination by it in accordance with the provisions of article 38, or whether we are here and now going to make a reservation—because the amendment is a reservation in the true sense and meaning of the term "reservation."

I agree with the Senator from Ohio that it would be better not to have any resolution, rather than to have a resolution whereby we would reserve unto ourselves the right to determine what international law and what convention would be applied to a dispute in which we might find ourselves with some other nation.

Mr. CORDON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. MILLIKIN. I yield.

Mr. CORDON. The Senator from Colorado has clearly set forth what he intends to accomplish by his amendment. I raise the question—and this is wholly beside the point of whether one favors the Senator's views or opposes them—the language which has been suggested in the amendment would, in fact and in law, accomplish the purpose which he has in mind. The proposed amendment provides that, by adding a new paragraph (c) to the resolution, the disputes to which this Government submits itself to the jurisdiction of the Court shall not include "Disputes where the law necessary for a decision is not found in existing treaties and conventions to which the United States is a party", and other language which is not pertinent to the observation which I desire to make.

The point I wish to make, Mr. President, is that the United States is a party to an existing treaty which sets forth what we find as international law in article 38 of the Court statute. In other words, when we adopted the Charter, among other things we agreed—reading from article 93, paragraph 1—to this language:

> All members of the United Nations are ipso facto parties to the Statute of the International Court of Justice.

In view of our having confirmed the treaty and having accepted this obligation as a party to the International Court of Justice, did not our action bring us without the language to which I have referred in the Senator's suggested amendment? In other words, have we not already become members of the Court insofar as the law as set forth in the statute is concerned, and, in the words of the Senator, are we not now parties to an existing treaty wherein that law is established? I should like to have the Senator's views.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Mr. President, I followed the language which Mr. Dulles used. I believe the discussion here illuminates our intent. I should be perfectly willing to include in the amendment some clarifying language. It must be perfectly clear that we would not be cutting out provisions from the effect of the statute if we intended to follow the full force of the statute. I would be willing to amend this language if there were any general sentiment that it should be amended.

Mr. President, if necessary, I was prepared to describe and support by authorities this great field of uncertainty with relation to international law. But I do not believe I will do that. I believe that Mr. Dulles has made it clear, and the testimony of Judge Hackworth, before the Foreign Relations Committee, made it clear. The congressional debates on marginal shore rights, on our rights in the Continental Shelf, on where they begin and leave off, as well as the conflicting views of various nations on that point, make the uncertainty abundantly clear. My central point is that we can be injured and we can be helped as much by a judicial decision as by a political decision. If we wish to commit this country to the rule of law, we should know the law which is to govern us. We should not commit our fortunes to legal speculation and invention.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I wish to make a statement regarding the attitude of Mr. Dulles.

Mr. Dulles submitted these various suggestions to the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, and of course, was very earnest about them. Subsequently, I specifically asked him whether he desired them to be put in the form of amendment, if necessary, and his reply was that he did not consider them of that importance, and that his interest was in having the resolution adopted substantially in its original form.

In fairness to Mr. Dulles I merely thought that I should make that statement.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Mr. President, I am glad the Senator from Michigan has made that statement.

In connection with the statement made by me before proceeding with the consideration of the amendment offered by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. MILLIKIN], I should like to say further, out of fairness to Mr. Dulles, that he sent the committee a thoughtful and well-reasoned statement. Among the points which he made was one which, in practice, could be agreed to. It holds particularly with relation to the matter we are now discussing.

But I think I should also say out of fairness to Mr. Dulles, the committee, and all others concerned, that other rather substantial international lawyers appeared before the committee and did not find the same things to be feared that Mr. Dulles found. It is strange that not one of those names has come into our discussion. Mr. Dulles found certain things which he feared, but our Assistant Secretary of State did not find them. The legal adviser of the State Department, Mr. Charles Fahy, did not find them; Mr. Finch, vice president of the American Society of International Law, one of the greatest writers on the subject of international law in the world today, did find them; Dr. Phillip C. Jerrup, professor of international law at Columbia University, who is a member of the same political party as Mr. Dulles and who is responsible for a book on the life of Elihu Root, and one of the most widely recognized international lawyers, did not agree with Mr. Dulles, and did not find the same things to be feared that Mr. Dulles found. Mr. Pitman B. Carter, Dr. Laurence Preuss of Michigan, Dr. Harlan Dwight Reid, the president of the American Bar Association—all of them spoke as though their opinions were unanimous with regard to the matter. We should take into consideration the fact that this resolution had the support of all those whom I have named, and that they were persons of high standing in the field of international law. They did not share the views which Mr. Dulles expressed.

Mr. President, I have been in hope that this amendment and other amendments would not be adopted. But I do not not fear the amendment to the extent that some Senators have expressed a fear of it. I do not think it is in actual contravention to article 38 to which we have agreed, and which lays down a type of law which can be argued and can be pleaded.

For example:

> The Court, whose function is to decide in accordance with international law such disputes as are submitted to it, shall apply—
> (a) international conventions, whether general or particular, establishing rules expressly recognized by the contesting states.

As I read the amendment of the Senator from Colorado, he merely wants a prior decision as to what international law shall apply, and if I understand his remarks, he has told us that when we move on to the time when a codification of international law has been practically universally accepted, he will not be averse in the least to accepting that which is written down and which has been accepted.

Mr. President, as I understand the Senator's amendment, it is a general statement that "international conventions, whether general or particular," can be argued in front of the Court as international law, and that is as it should be. But let us take a particular case, which I shall make as simple as I know how to make it. If there is a treaty between Belgium and France which lays down a legal principle, that does not make that principle international law applicable in all cases, at all times, and everywhere. The mere fact that there is a positive international law between two nations makes that positive international law hold good in disputes between those two nations. If a dispute should arise as to the interpretation of the particular treaty embodying that law, that treaty should be argued before the Court as international law and that treaty should be binding, but if the treaty contains a principle which is out of harmony with a treaty between the United States and China, for example, it would be the worst kind of argument not only from the standpoint of germaneness but from the standpoint of getting justice anywhere in the world if we tried to say that the principle laid down in a treaty between Belgium and France should be used in interpreting a treaty made between the United States and China.

Mr. President, Mr. Dulles felt that these terms were general, and they are general. I do not think there need be any fear, because we have much experience, and we have the treaty itself, we have the United Nations Charter, and we have these general fields. I am in complete disagreement with the Senator from Colorado and in complete disagreement with the Senator from Oregon, the author of the resolution, and my colleague on the committee, the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN], in assuming that such an amendment is a reservation and a modification of article 38. I think it would be wrong to accept that thesis.

Reciprocity has already been accepted. If we keep in mind the fact that we are discussing a court and the way in which a court proceeds, we will realize that which is germane to the argument of a case would be heard by the Court, of course.

In an international case a nation cannot be haled into court without preliminaries, without negotiations, without diplomatic writings back and forth, and without understandings. Everyone knows that. So this particular amendment would not interfere.

Mr. President, it does not say that a litigant, or a party to a case—we use that word "party" in international cases—shall not use any argument that the Court will listen to; but we can decide before we go into court; and Mr. Dulles merely wants us to be cautious. I do not think the amendment is necessary. I think we are cautious in every case, and that is demonstrated by the fact that in all cases so far decided by the International Court of Justice not a single nation has refused to abide by the decision.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. We know that in cases between States, even in our own procedure, undoubtedly the governing principles are laid down or there would not be a successful culmination.

The Senator from Colorado knows that I hope his amendment will not be accepted, because I think it is useless and unnecessary, and that all safeguards are present; but to assume that if it is adopted we are modifying article 38, I think is going too far, in the light of international practice.

Remember, a case is never gotten in front of an international court of justice, under the Charter, unless it is a real cause. It is never gotten there unless it is a cause between two particular states, and it is never gotten there unless there is reciprocity in regard to taking the case before the Court, so it can be seen that it would be extreme cases in which any injustice would ever be done any party.

I yield to the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. MORSE. I wish to summarize very quickly the difference in point of view between the Senator from Utah and myself. I think it is a very important difference. I think it is a difference in substance and is no mere matter of form. I think the amendment of the Senator from Colorado goes to the very heart of my resolution and tears it out.

I point out, in the first place, that what we did adopt this afternoon was an amendment submitted by the Senator from Texas which in no way affected or changed our rights under the United Nations Charter.

Under the Charter, as has been brought out over and over again in the debate, we were protected, under its terms and provisions, from any exercise of jurisdiction by the World Court over domestic issues. All that was accomplished by the Connally amendment, which was adopted by the Senate, and against which I voted, because I think it could be said that that amendment was unnecessary—all we did was make doubly sure that the Court would exercise no jurisdiction over domestic issues. But I cannot agree with the Senator from Utah when he says that the amendment now proposed by the Senator from Colorado does not in fact have the effect of modifying our position under article 38, because what the amendment makes very clear is that we shall not be subject to the jurisdiction of the World Court unless there is a prior agreement between us and the nation with whom we are in dispute over the particular law which may be involved in the dispute. We are then reserving unto ourselves, I submit, the power to determine for ourselves whether or not we are going to be bound by the international law which the Court might find, if we let the Court exercise jurisdiction, was binding upon us.

I say we have already ratified the San Francisco Charter with article 38 in it, and article 38 contains provisions far beyond the provisions set forth in the amendment submitted by the Senator from Colorado. His amendment, as I see it, is pretty much limited to section (a) of article 38:

> International conventions, whether general or particular, establishing rules expressly recognized by the contesting states.

He has been very careful to eliminate from the jurisdiction of the Court in any dispute which we might be involved in with another nation coming before the Court, under Senate Resolution 196, sections b, c, and d of article 38.

I think it is important that we read into the RECORD at this time the answer of Mr. Fahy to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Colorado as set forth in the printed hearings on the resolution. I assume that the Foreign Relations Committee members agree with Mr. Fahy because they quote him approvingly in the report of the committee. Mr. Fahy says, reading beginning with the fine print at the bottom of page 7 of the report:

> Mr. Dulles suggests there should be prior agreement—

I digress to say that "prior agreement," in my opinion, is the essence of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Colorado. I repeat:

> Mr. Dulles suggests there should be prior agreement as to what are the applicable principles of international law if the basic law of the case is not found in an existing treaty or convention. He feels that to permit jurisdiction of legal disputes concerning "any question of international law" is too vague at this time.
> It is most inadvisable to accept this view. It would seriously impede the progress of the Court in the accomplishment of its purpose. The procedure followed in the case of the Alabama arbitration, referred to as an instance where previous agreement on the applicable law was had, was long before the establishment of the Court. The Charter of the United Nations and the present statute of the Court are designed to enlist sufficient confidence in judicial determinations by the Court to enable it to become a useful organ in the settlement of legal disputes. To require now an agreement, in advance of submission to the Court, on the applicable principles of international law would take from the Court one of the principal purposes of its creation. The United States should not insist on such a requirement. Whatever risk to the United States is involved in entrusting cases to the Court for its determination of the applicable basis of decision under international law is outweighed by the tremendous advance which would be made by our acceptance of such risk in the development of judicial processes in the world order.

I want to add a comment of my own on that last sentence of that very notable statement by Mr. Fahy. Of course, Mr. President, if we are going to submit our cases to the World Court and give it jurisdiction to decide international issues, then we ought to be willing to run the risks of adjudication. That is inherent, it seems to me, in accepting the principle of establishing international justice through law. But to come now and to reserve unto ourselves the right to say what segment of international law the Court can apply in any case involving us in any dispute with another nation, seems to me to strike at the very heart of this whole conception of developing a World Court for the settlement of international disputes by way of judicial processes.

In conclusion may I just make these two points. I should like to call attention to a letter which that great President, Theodore Roosevelt, wrote in 1905 to Senator Lodge, because at that time there was a practice of entering into so-called arbitration treaties but making the reservation that in a given case before actual arbitration we would reserve unto ourselves the right to insist upon a prior agreement as to what law should apply. Theodore Roosevelt, when such a treaty was submitted to him in 1905, wrote a letter to Senator Lodge. This was with respect to the proposal that he should agree to the reservation of requiring a prior agreement in an arbitration treaty as a condition precedent to going forward with the arbitrating of a given case. President Roosevelt wrote:

> I think that this amendment makes the treaties shams, and my present impression is that we had better abandon the whole business rather than give the impression of trickiness and insincerity which would be produced by solemnly promulgating a sham. The amendment, in effect, is to make any one of these so-called arbitration treaties solemnly enact that there shall be another arbitration treaty whenever the two governments decide that there shall be one. Of course, it is mere nonsense to have a treaty which does nothing but say, what there is no power of enforcing, that whenever we choose there shall be another arbitration treaty. We could have these further special arbitration treaties in special cases wherever desired just exactly as well if there were no general arbitration treaty at all. Now, as far as I am concerned, I wish either to take part in something or else not to have any part in it at all.

That was the position taken by Theodore Roosevelt on what I consider to be an analogous principle insofar as the basic principle of the Millikin amendment is concerned.

I am going to make now my last comment on this amendment, and I am going to make it with an earnest and sincere plea, that it is to be hoped that the Senate of the United States this afternoon will not let the message go around this globe that we have reserved unto ourselves a restriction under article 38 of the United Nations Charter insofar as our presenting cases to the World Court is concerned. I want to say that I think the point of view inherent in the attempt to get us to accept the restriction of the Millikin amendment is a dead point of view as far as public opinion in America is concerned. The American people by an overwhelming majority want us to support and accept the obligatory jurisdiction of the World Court. I am convinced of that. I pray that we will not place the dead hand of a dead point of view upon the future generations of America and imperil here this afternoon the greatest opportunity I think this Congress will have to foster and advance the establishment of a world order by way of international justice through law.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, after the eloquent and powerful statement made by the Senator from Oregon I hesitate to rise, but, Mr. President, for many years this Nation has seen a progressive movement toward substitution, as against war, of peaceful decisions of international justiciable controversies.

Mr. President, I stand opposed to the amendment suggested by the able Senator from Colorado [Mr. MILLIKIN]. It seems to me it falls away from and fails to conceive the real underlying theory of the Court of International Justice. The analogy of courts as between private litigants still prevails with respect to courts as between nations. The theory, as I understand it, of the Court of International Justice is to apply between the nations of the world the same general idea of the settlement of disputes through peaceful judicial means that has worked so satisfactorily in private controversies between individuals. Mr. President, when we look at the Court of International Justice, founded upon the basis of a substitution of peaceful judicial processes for war, do we find in drawing an analogy between that Court and one in which private litigants appear that there is any such reservation in respect to our courts as that which is suggested by the distinguished Senator from Colorado?

Mr. President, certainly here in our own country, judicial decisions in the ordinary relationships of life are not conditioned upon a reservation that a litigant need not submit himself to judicial decision unless the litigant himself has already agreed as to what is the law applicable to his case. Cases are constantly arising in which the principles of law have not yet been declared in express decision and perhaps not in words at all. The common law, as has been mentioned by the distinguished Senator from Ohio, has been a gradual development over a period of centuries. It is likewise true that as between nations there is a progressive development of international law. Some of it is codified. Some of it is not codified.

Mr. President, it is impossible or may be impossible until after a full hearing has been had in a case between nations of the world to determine what is the applicable law, to determine whether it is codified in existing treaties and conventions to which the United States is a party. I undertake to say that ordinarily, unless there is some dispute or controversy either as to what are the facts or as to what is the law, there cannot be any litigation pending before a court either as between private litigants or as between nations.

So, Mr. President, here we stand this afternoon undertaking to say that our great Nation, which has been steadily progressing toward the idea of the substitution of judicial processes for the evils and horrors of war, will not submit itself to the jurisdiction of a court in the same way that litigants submit themselves in controversies as between themselves.

I submit that the very fact, as the distinguished Senator from Utah mentioned this afternoon, that not one nation—and I take it his statement of fact is accurate; I know it is intended to be such—has refused to accept a decision of the Permanent Court of International Justice, the distinguished predecessor of this Court, is strong argument that our Nation can afford to go into this great plan to make itself the recipient, if you please, of the decisions of a court, fully basing its conclusion on the theory that it will receive justice and will be dealt with fairly.

Mr. President, there are ample safeguards, it appears to me, to our Nation. I appreciate that in any great cooperative endeavor between nations of the world there is, of course, an element of confidence. I appreciate the fact that the United Nations can fail if the nations of the world shall fail to have the confidence or shall fail to deserve the confidence which their fellow nations reposed in them. But, Mr. President, our great Nation, by a vote here one sultry afternoon a year or so ago, by a vote of 89 to 2, determined to take that risk and to participate in a great cooperative effort between the nations of the world. We have sent our representatives to deliberations of that great body. There has been selected to an important position in the United Nations a distinguished gentleman who sits upon the floor this afternoon, the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN]. This great Court is set up as a component, integral part of the United Nations Organization which is to determine matters along the line of judicial processes, rather than by a test of strength, of power, of something akin to war or a contest of might as between the different nations.

Mr. President, I say that we do have adequate safeguards in this Court. I realize also that there is a risk. Of course, there is a risk. There is a risk in any human relationship. There is a risk in marriage; there is a risk in partnership; there is a risk in the relationships between nations; but, Mr. President, if we examine the provisions of the United Nations Charter I think we shall find that excellent precautions have been taken. I shall not trespass more than a moment further upon the time of the Senate. I call attention to the one significant fact of the type of men who are to sit upon this court. I also call attention to the fact that the Statute of the International Court of Justice provides:

> The Court shall be composed of a body of independent judges, elected regardless of their nationality from among persons of high moral character, who possess the qualifications required in their respective countries for appointment to the highest judicial offices, or are juris consults of recognized competence in international law.

Mr. President, although our own Nation did not adhere to the Permanent Court of International Justice, nevertheless there were elected a number of distinguished men from our own country, one after the other, to sit upon that court. My good friend, Judge Manley O. Hudson, who has been mentioned in this debate, is one of them. The very fact that men of such standing, character, ability, fairness, and integrity occupied exalted positions on the Permanent Court of International Justice to my mind is a striking illustration and indication of the fact that there is adequate protection against our Nation being ruined by an improvident or dishonest decision of the new World Court.

Mr. President, it is also true that in the very resolution which is now before the Senate there is a restriction of the time during which the declaration to be made by the President in behalf of our Nation shall continue in existence. It shall remain in force for a period of 5 years, and thereafter until the expiration of 6 months after notice may be given to terminate the declaration. I appreciate the fact that damage may be done in 5 years; I appreciate the fact that in the United Nations damage may be done in 30 minutes; yet, Mr. President, if we have confidence in the United Nations as an entirety why should we not have confidence in one of the component parts of that organization?

I conclude with this observation: In the United States of America over a period of years we have made progressive and successive steps toward the action which we are asked to take this afternoon. I am glad to see that by the terms of the Charter of the United Nations we are already ipso facto a member of this Court. We were not a member of the old Permanent Court of International Justice. Today we are a component part of the Court of International Justice under the United Nations Treaty. I for one am willing to have confidence in the American people, confidence in the people of the world, confidence in the wisdom of those who drafted this instrument, confidence in the provisions of the instrument undertaking to safeguard us. Instead of hamstringing and ruining the provisions of the judicial process by saying that it shall not be applied except when we know in advance and have agreed as to what are the applicable principles of law, I for one am willing to have confidence in this component part of the United Nations organization, and to stand here and declare myself as opposed to the amendment suggested by the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I shall detain the Senate for only a very few minutes upon this question.

I am one Member of this body who many long years ago voted for adherence to the International Court of Justice, and subsequently voted for it again, when certain reservations were not found to be acceptable to the other signatory powers.

I do not wish to enter into a discussion of this particular subject. I merely wish to say that I believe the distinguished Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS] is entirely correct. I do not think that anything we might write into the resolution, unless it were an express attempt to make a reservation to the United Nations Charter, would be a reservation with respect to that Charter. It could not be a reservation.

The Statute of the Court is provided in the United Nations Charter. We can accept the compulsory jurisdiction if we desire to do so; but we are not required to accept jurisdiction. If we can accept compulsory jurisdiction we can accept it on any terms we may wish to enumerate. That is perfectly sound. It is common sense; and it would not constitute any reservation or any attempt to write anything into the Charter.

As I see it, the only question is whether or not it is wise in this instance to undertake to deprive the Court of the sources of information and advice on which it would act in passing upon any question of international law. I know perfectly well, as a lawyer with some little experience, that the term "international law" and the whole concept of international law are very nebulous. International law is by no means strictly or closely defined. What is international law? is a question that comes before many courts. It comes before our own Supreme Court; and the Court looks to writings of men on international law; it looks to the decisions made by legislative bodies; it looks to the interpretations of other courts; and it looks to all sources from which it may gain some information in passing upon a question which is alleged to involve a principle of international law.

So it seems to me that the amendment offered by the distinguished Senator from Colorado is entirely in order; but the question arises as to whether it is an advisable amendment. On that issue alone I find myself unable to agree with the distinguished Senator. I realize the difficulty which may arise. I realize some possible embarrassments to ourselves as a Nation which may arise from time to time by virtue of the decisions of the Court. But, in my judgment, those are simply the incidental things which we much expect and the risks which we must assume—if they be risks—if we are to have any development in the field of international law.

International law will never be codified in the sense that we can codify law in a State or in the Nation, or in any single country. It is a process of evolution. It will grow by continuous precedents, by continuous application of the principles through some established tribunal which will commend itself to the judgment and confidence of mankind. I have great hope that through the development of international law—which I have long thought can come only through the evolutionary process—we may make a real and substantial advance in the field of settling by pacific means controversies which arise between nations. I think that is our chief function.

So, while I have no doubt that the amendment offered by the distinguished Senator from Colorado is not a reservation, and is a proper amendment if the Senate wishes to adopt it, it seems to me that it would be unwise to accept the compulsory jurisdiction of the Court, which we are proposing to accept, and at the same time to limit and restrict the Court in the particular field in which it probably has the widest opportunity for the development of international law and therefore for the service of the people of the world.

I have no doubt that this Nation could accept compulsory jurisdiction and limit the Court's jurisdiction merely to the interpretation of a treaty or treaties, if it desired to do so. On that question I have no hesitancy whatever in agreeing with the position taken by the distinguished Senator from Colorado. It is only concerning the advisability of limiting or restricting the opportunities of the Court to develop international law that I raise any question; and I do so with great diffidence and respect for the judgment of the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. President, I wished to make that statement before voting on this particular amendment.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Mr. President, I entirely agree with the distinguished Senator from Georgia that the Court itself will be a developing influence for international law. The organization of which it is an adjunct will go ahead with the work of codification, and as we codify the law we can accept it because it is certain.

This amendment does not in anyway prevent us from submitting ourselves to litigation if we decide that under the circumstances we are willing to do so in a court operating on principles which are either unknown or uncertain.

I remind my colleagues once more that on the political side we have taken pains to see that in the last analysis this country shall be protected. We occupy a position of exceptional power in the Security Council; and in the last analysis we have the right of veto. But here there is no limitation. Once we submit ourselves—and the issue on the judicial side might be just as serious as on the political side—we are bound by the result.

Under those circumstances the major part of my point is that we should have the right to know the rules of law which will be applied to the facts which come before the Court. Certainly this country deserves nothing less.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I greatly admire the ability, eloquence, and logic which the Senator from Colorado has employed in presenting his amendment; but, all things considered, I think it would be unwise for the Senate to adopt it. I think it would hamper very greatly the growth and development of the Court, as such, in the field which we are now entering.

Mr. REVERCOMB. Mr. President, in view of the statement which the able Senator from Texas has made, namely, that adoption of the amendment might very much limit the growth of the Court, let me say that I take it that he means that we would have to subscribe to jurisdiction of the Court without knowing what might lie ahead of us, and we would have to subscribe to the jurisdiction of a court which would have the power to lay down rules which might apply to future matters about which we now know nothing.

Mr. President, it seems to me that the situation is that before we subscribe to absolute and unlimited jurisdiction of the Court over the future of our Nation in international disputes, we should know what rules will be applied, what laws and agreements and treaties may be applicable to us. The reservation provided by the amendment is proposed in order that we may be certain that in the future we will not be subjected to court-made laws about which we know nothing at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. MILLIKIN. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. WAGNER. I have a general pair with the Senator from Kansas [Mr. REED]. Not knowing how he would vote, I transfer that pair to the Senator from Missouri [Mr. BRIGGS]. I am not advised how the Senator from Missouri would vote if present. Being at liberty to vote, I vote "nay."

Mr. HILL. I announce that the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY] is absent because of illness.

The Senator from Nevada [Mr. CARVILLE] is absent by leave of the Senate.

The Senator from Virginia [Mr. BURCH], the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. FULBRIGHT], and the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GERRY] are necessarily absent.

The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. BILBO], the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. HOEY], and the Senator from Washington [Mr. MITCHELL] are unavoidably detained.

The Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD] is absent on official business.

The Senator from Missouri [Mr. BRIGGS], the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. EASTLAND], the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. KILGORE], the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS], the Senator from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN], and the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. MYERS] are detained on public business.

The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH] is absent on official business, having been appointed a member of the President's Evaluation Commission in connection with the test of atomic bombs on naval vessels at Bikini.

The Senator from Louisiana [Mr. ELLENDER] and the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] are absent on official business, having been appointed to the commission on the part of the Senate to participate in the Philippine independence ceremonies.

Mr. WHERRY. The Senator from Maine [Mr. BREWSTER], the Senator from Delaware [Mr. BUCK], the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. HAWKES], the Senator from Kansas [Mr. REED], the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. STANFILL], and the Senator from Indiana [Mr. WILLIS] are necessarily absent.

The Senator from Vermont [Mr. AIKEN], the Senator from Illinois [Mr. BROOKS], the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. BUSHFIELD], the Senator from Indiana [Mr. CAPEHART], the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. GURNEY], the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. ROBERTSON], the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY], and the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. YOUNG] are absent by leave of the Senate.

The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BUTLER] is absent on official business, being a member of the commission appointed to attend the Philippine independence ceremonies.

The Senator from Iowa [Mr. HICKENLOOPER] is absent by leave of the Senate on official business as a member of the Special Committee on Atomic Energy.

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. SALTONSTALL] is absent on official business, having been appointed a member of the President's Evaluation Commission in connection with the test of atomic bombs on naval vessels at Bikini.

The Senator from Iowa [Mr. WILSON] is absent on official business.

The result was announced—yeas 11, nays 49, as follows:

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Two-thirds of the Senators present having voted in the affirmative, the resolution is agreed to.

(S. Res. 196, as agreed to, is as follows:)

Resolved (two-thirds of the Senators present concurring therein), That the Senate advise and consent to the deposit by the President of the United States with the Secretary General of the United Nations, of a declaration under paragraph 2 of article 36 of the Statute of the International Court of Justice recognizing as compulsory ipso facto and without special agreement, in relation to any other state accepting the same obligation, the jurisdiction of the International Court of Justice in all legal disputes hereafter arising concerning—

a. the interpretation of a treaty;

b. any question of international law;

c. the existence of any fact which, if established, would constitute a breach of an international obligation;

d. the nature or extent of the reparation to be made for the breach of an international obligation.

Provided, That such declaration shall not apply to—

a. disputes the solution of which the parties shall entrust to other tribunals by virtue of agreements already in existence or which may be concluded in the future; or

b. disputes with regard to matters which are essentially within the domestic jurisdiction of the United States as determined by the United States; or

c. Disputes arising under a multilateral treaty, unless (1) all parties to the treaty affected by the decision are also parties to the case before the Court, or (2) the United States specially agrees to jurisdiction.

Provided further, That such declaration shall remain in force for a period of 5 years and thereafter until the expiration of 6 months after notice may be given to terminate the declaration.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah subsequently said: Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that Senate Resolution 196 and the committee report dealing with it may be printed as a Senate document.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF A COMMITTEE

The following favorable report of a nomination was submitted:

By Mr. THOMAS of Utah, from the Committee on Military Affairs:

Commander John F. Robinson for appointment as State director of selective service for Connecticut under the provisions of section 10 (a) (3) of the Selective Training and Service Act of 1940, as amended.

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at this point the report of the Committee on Foreign Relations on Senate Resolution 196.

There being no objection, the report (No. 1835) was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

The Committee on Foreign Relations, to whom was referred the resolution (S. Res. 196) providing that the Senate advise and consent to the deposit by the President of the United States with the Secretary General of the United Nations of a declaration under paragraph 2 of article 36 of the Statute of the International Court of Justice recognizing as compulsory ipso facto and without special agreement, in relation to any other State accepting the same obligation, the jurisdiction of the International Court of Justice in certain categories of legal disputes hereafter arising, hereby report the same to the Senate, with an amendment, with the recommendation that the resolution do pass as amended.

A. TEXT OF RESOLUTION

Following is the text of the resolution, as amended by the committee:

"Resolved (two-thirds of the Senators present concurring therein), That the Senate advise and consent to the deposit by the President of the United States with the Secretary General of the United Nations of a declaration under paragraph 2 of article 36 of the Statute of the International Court of Justice recognizing as compulsory ipso facto and without special agreement, in relation to any other state accepting the same obligation, the jurisdiction of the International Court of Justice in all legal disputes hereafter arising concerning—

"a. the interpretation of a treaty;

"b. any question of international law;

"c. the existence of any fact which, if established, would constitute a breach of an international obligation;

"d. the nature or extent of the reparation to be made for the breach of an international obligation.

Provided, That such declaration should not apply to—

"a. disputes the solution of which the parties shall entrust to other tribunals by virtue of agreements already in existence or which may be concluded in the future; or

"b. disputes with regard to matters which are essentially within the domestic jurisdiction of the United States.

Provided further, That such declaration should remain in force for a period of 5 years and thereafter until the expiration of 6 months after notice may be given to terminate the declaration."

B. HEARINGS OF THE SUBCOMMITTEE

On November 28, 1945, Mr. MORSE submitted Senate Resolution 196 for himself, Mr. TAFT, Mr. GREEN, Mr. FULBRIGHT, Mr. SMITH, Mr. FERGUSON, Mr. AIKEN, Mr. BALL, Mr. CORDON, Mr. WILEY, Mr. TOBEY, Mr. MAGNUSON, Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina, Mr. MYERS, and Mr. MCMAHON. The resolution was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations. On June 12, 1946, Chairman CONNALLY appointed a subcommittee consisting of Senator THOMAS (Utah) as chairman, Senator HATCH and Senator AUSTIN to hear witnesses on the resolution and to recommend any amendments that might seem appropriate.

The subcommittee held hearings on July 11, 12, and 15, with Senator Morse, Dean Acheson (Acting Secretary of State), and Charles Fahy (legal adviser of the Department of State) appearing and a number of other witnesses testifying on behalf of important private organizations. Outstanding jurists and international lawyers also submitted statements for the record. Witnesses appeared or statements were submitted from the following organizations:

American Bar Association.
American Society of International Law.
American Association of University Women.
General Federation of Women's Clubs.
Young Women's Christian Association.
Americans United for World Government.
Friends Committee on National Legislation.
National League of Women Voters.
Federal Bar Association.
Women's Action Committee for Lasting Peace.
Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America.
Catholic Association for International Peace.
Pennsylvania Bar Association.
National Council of Jewish Women.
National Education Association.

C. OVERWHELMING PUBLIC SUPPORT

The subcommittee was impressed by the fact that all the witnesses who appeared were enthusiastically in favor of the acceptance on the part of the United States of the jurisdiction of the International Court of Justice with respect to legal disputes. The general feeling seemed to be that such a step taken now by the United States would be the natural and logical sequel to our entry into the United Nations. Twelve months' consideration since the signing of the Charter has strengthened the conviction that this action would immediately increase faith in the efficacy of the United Nations to promote order and peace.

This relative unanimity of American public opinion was demonstrated on December 18, 1945, when the house of delegates of the American Bar Association, without a dissenting vote, passed a resolution urging the President and the Senate to take appropriate action at the earliest practicable time to accept the compulsory jurisdiction of the court. The American Society of International Law, on April 27, 1946, likewise adopted a favorable resolution by a unanimous vote. Many other national organizations, with large memberships, including the American Association of University Women, the General Federation of Women's Clubs, the Federal Bar Association, the Inter-American Bar Association, the Federal Council of Churches, the National League of Women Voters, the American Veterans Committee, the National Education Association, the National Council of Catholic Women, and the American Association for the United Nations, have similarly endorsed the proposal.

D. FAVORABLE ACTION BY FOREIGN RELATIONS COMMITTEE

On July 17 and 24 the subcommittee reported its findings to the Senate Foreign Relations Committee. After a discussion of the legal and constitutional issues involved (see secs. G and J below) the committee reported the resolution to the Senate for favorable action. The vote, which was taken on July 24, was unanimous.

E. PURPOSE OF THE RESOLUTION

The immediate purpose of the resolution is to authorize the President to file with the Secretary General of the United Nations a declaration accepting the compulsory jurisdiction of the International Court of Justice over certain categories of legal disputes arising between the United States and any other nation which has accepted the same obligation. The United States would acquire the right and duty to sue or be sued in respect to such other States and would give the Court the power to decide whether the case properly falls within the terms of the agreement.

The ultimate purpose of the resolution is to lead to general world-wide acceptance of the jurisdiction of the International Court of Justice in legal cases. The accomplishment of this result would, in a substantial sense, place international relations on a legal basis, in contrast to the present situation, in which states may be their own judge of the law.

The United States has now become a member of the Court, but membership in itself means comparatively little. It is true that states can agree to submit specified cases to the Court, but they have always been able to settle their disputes by arbitration, assuming they could agree to do so. So long as individual members can refuse to be haled into the Court a regime of law in the international community will never be realized. The most important attribute of this or any other court is to hear and decide cases. For this function it must have jurisdiction of the parties and the subject matter.

F. OBLIGATIONS UNDER THE CHARTER OF THE UNITED NATIONS

The undertaking of this obligation by members of the United Nations is a logical fulfillment of obligations already expressed in the Charter. The preamble expresses the determination of the peoples of the United Nations—

"To establish conditions under which justice and respect for the obligations arising from treaties and other sources of international law can be maintained," and to this end "to insure, by the acceptance of principles and the institution of methods, that armed force shall not be used, save in the common interest."

Among the purposes of the United Nations set forth in article 1 is—

"To bring about by peaceful means, and in conformity with the principles of justice and international law, adjustment or settlement of international disputes or situations which might lead to a breach of the peace."

One of the principles of the Organization as set forth in article 2 is that—

"All members shall settle their international disputes by peaceful means in such a manner that international peace and security, and justice, are not endangered."

Article 36, paragraph 3, of the Charter provides that the Security Council should "take into consideration that legal disputes should as a general rule be referred by the parties to the International Court of Justice in accordance with the provisions of the statute of the Court."

In addition, by virtue of the general right of states to bring disputes before the Security Council, any state is liable to have its political disputes brought before the Council without its consent and to be subject to such moral obligation as attaches to a recommendation of the Council (arts. 36 and 37 of the Charter). It is incongruous that such rights and obligations should exist with respect to political disputes but that there should be no similar obligation for the members of the United Nations to submit their legal disputes to adjudication.

G. JURISDICTION CONFERRED, DEFINED, AND LIMITED

The scope of the jurisdiction to be conferred pursuant to this resolution is carefully defined and limited.

There is, in the first place, a general limitation of jurisdiction to legal disputes. The resolution, like article 36, paragraph 2, of the Court statute, states this limitation in general terms and proceeds to define the four categories of disputes thus included. These are:

a. the interpretation of a treaty;

b. any question of international law;

c. the existence of any fact which, if established, would constitute a breach of an international obligation;

d. the nature or extent of the reparation to be made for the breach of an international obligation.

A second major limitation on the jurisdiction conferred arises from the condition of reciprocity. This is again specified in the resolution in the language of the statute, the pertinent phrase being as follows: "recognizing * * * in relation to any other state accepting the same obligation, the jurisdiction of the International Court of Justice."

Jurisdiction is thus conferred only as among states filing declarations. In addition, the similar phrase in the Statute of the Permanent Court of International Justice was interpreted by the Court as meaning that any limitation imposed by a state in its grant of jurisdiction thereby also became available to any other state with which it might become involved in proceedings, even though the second state had not specifically imposed the limitation. Thus, for example, if the United States limited its grant of jurisdiction to cases "hereafter arising," this country would be unable to institute proceedings regarding earlier disputes, even though the defendant state might not have interposed this reservation.

A third limitation specified in the resolution is that the United States should bind itself only as to disputes arising in the future. The United States may not, therefore, be confronted with old controversies as a result of filing the proposed declaration.

A fourth limitation provides that the proposed action shall not impede the parties to a dispute from entrusting its solution to some other tribunal if they so agree. The same provision is found in the Charter of the United Nations, article 95.

The fifth limitation is that the proposed declaration shall not apply to matters which are essentially within the domestic jurisdiction of the United States. A provision similar in principle is found in article 2, paragraph 7, of the Charter, providing that nothing in the Charter shall authorize the organization to intervene in essentially domestic matters. The committee feels that the principle is also implicit in the nature of international law, which, under article 38, paragraph 1, of the statute, it is the duty of the Court to apply. International law is, by definition, the body of rights and duties governing states in their relations with each other and does not, therefore, concern itself with matters of domestic jurisdiction. The question of what is properly a matter of international law is, in case of dispute, appropriate for decision by the Court itself, since, if it were left to the decision of each individual state, it would be possible to withhold any case from adjudication on the plea that it is a matter of domestic jurisdiction. It is plainly the intention of the statute that such questions should be decided by the Court, since article 36, paragraph 6, provides:

"In the event of a dispute as to whether the Court has jurisdiction, the matter shall be settled by the decision of the Court."

It was also brought to the attention of the subcommittee that a number of states, in filing declarations under the statute of the Permanent Court of International Justice, interposed reservations similar to that of the resolution under consideration, but in no case did they reserve to themselves the right of decision. The committee therefore decided that a reservation of the right of decision as to what are matters essentially within domestic jurisdiction would tend to defeat the purposes which it is hoped to achieve by means of the proposed declaration as well as the purpose of article 36, paragraphs 2 and 6, of the statute of the Court.

The resolution provides that the declaration should remain in force for a period of 5 years and thereafter until 6 months following notice of termination. The declaration might, therefore, remain in force indefinitely. The provision for 6 months' notice of termination after the 5-year period has the effect of a renunciation of any intention to withdraw our obligation in the face of a threatened legal proceeding.

Hon. John Foster Dulles, adviser to the State Department in relation to the Dumbarton Oaks proposals and adviser to the United States delegation to the United Nations Conference on International Organization, which drafted the Charter and the statute of the Court, filed a memorandum with the subcommittee favoring agreement by the United States to submit to impartial adjudication its legal controversies. He pointed out that failure to take that step would be interpreted as an election on our part to rely on power rather than on reason.

Mr. Dulles advocated that the United States ought now to make the declaration submitting this country to the jurisdiction of the Court according to article 36 (2) of the Court statute. He suggested, however, clarification of certain matters in the declaration, to wit:

"1. Advisory opinions: The compulsory jurisdiction should presumably be limited to disputes which are actual cases between states as distinct from disputes in which advisory opinions may be sought."

On this point the committee view is that the jurisdiction to be accepted pursuant to Senate Resolution 196 is coextensive with the jurisdiction defined in article 36 (2) of the Statute of the Court, which is limited to legal disputes as distinct from the broader category of cases referred to elsewhere in the statute.

With respect to Mr. Dulles' suggestion, Hon. Charles Fahy, legal adviser of the State Department, made the following reply:

"The declaration under article 36 (2) would grant jurisdiction in 'all legal disputes,' as therein described. But the jurisdiction of the Court (art. 36 (1)) extends to 'cases which the parties refer to it' and 'all matters especially provided for in the Charter of the United Nations or the treaties and conventions in force.' Thus the Court's possible jurisdiction is broader than the jurisdiction conferred by a declaration under article 36 (2). The provisions of article 36 (2) are limited to 'legal disputes.' This compulsory jurisdiction clearly excludes cases which are not legal disputes, such as a case to be decided ex aequo et bono under article 38 (2) if the parties separately so agree. Such agreement, of course, would be over and above any jurisdiction accepted by the proposed declaration under article 36 (2). The only jurisdiction of the Court with respect to advisory opinions (art. 65) is as to a legal question on request of whatever body may be authorized to make such a request under the Charter. It is entirely apart from the compulsory jurisdiction which a state grants by its declaration under article 36 (2). No provision in the declaration would seem necessary to make it clear that the declaration under article 36 (2) is indeed limited to the jurisdiction covered by that article.

"2. Reciprocity: Jurisdiction should be compulsory only when all of the other parties to the dispute have previously accepted the compulsory jurisdiction of the Court."

The committee considered that article 59 of the Court statute removed all cause for doubt by providing:

"The decision of the Court has no binding force except between the parties and in respect of that particular case."

If the United States would prefer to deny jurisdiction without special agreement in disputes among several states, some of which have not declared to be bound, article 36 (3) permits it to make its declaration conditional as to the reciprocity of several or certain states.

Mr. Dulles' objection might possibly be provided for by another subsection in the first proviso of the resolution, on page 2, after line 14, reading:

"c. Disputes arising under a multilateral treaty, unless (1) all parties to the treaty affected by the decision are also parties to the case before the Court, or (2) the United States specially agrees to jurisdiction.

"3. International law: If the basic law of the case is not found in an existing treaty or convention, to which the United States is a party, there should be a prior agreement as to what are the applicable principles of international law.

The committee considered both the policy and the parliamentary problems this suggestion raises and decided to leave Senate Resolution 196 unchanged as to this point, for the following reasons:

Article 92 provides:

"The International Court of Justice shall be the principal judicial organ of the United Nations. It shall function in accordance with the annexed statute, which is based upon the Statute of the Permanent Court of International Justice and forms an integral part of the present Charter."

The Charter cannot be amended by a mere declaration of some of the states parties to the present statute. What a state may do is limited by article 36 (3):

"The declarations referred to above may be made unconditionally or on condition of reciprocity on the part of several or certain states, or for a certain time."

This does not permit a state to condition submission upon different principles of international law than those which article 38 commands to be used, thus:

"1. The Court, whose function is to decide in accordance with international law such disputes as are submitted to it, shall apply:

"a. international conventions, whether general or particular, establishing rules expressly recognized by the contesting states;

"b. international custom, as evidence of a general practice accepted as law;

"c. the general principles of law recognized by civilized nations;

"d. subject to the provisions of article 59, judicial decisions and the teachings of the most highly qualified publicists of the various nations, as subsidiary means for the determination of rules of law.

"2. This provision shall not prejudice the power of the Court to decide a case ex aequo et bono, if the parties agree thereto."

To accomplish substantial alteration of the applicable principles of international law would require consent of all the other parties to the Charter. The purpose of this declaration is to avoid the procedural necessity of "special agreement" and to recognize jurisdiction ipso facto over the specified subject matter and parties.

Hon. Charles Fahy, legal adviser of the State Department, in a memorandum prepared for the committee, replied to Mr. Dulles' suggestion as follows:

"3. Mr. Dulles suggests there should be prior agreement as to what are the applicable principles of international law if the basic law of the case is not found in an existing treaty or convention. He feels that to permit jurisdiction of legal disputes concerning 'any question of international law' is too vague at this time.

"It is most inadvisable to accept this view. It would seriously impede the progress of the Court in the accomplishment of its purpose. The procedure followed in the case of the Alabama arbitration, referred to as an instance where previous agreement on the applicable law was had, was long before the establishment of the Court. The Charter of the United Nations and the present statute of the Court are designed to enlist sufficient confidence in judicial determinations by the Court to enable it to become a useful organ in the settlement of legal disputes. To require now an agreement, in advance of submission to the Court, on the applicable principles of international law would take from the Court one of the principal purposes of its creation. The United States should not insist on such a requirement. Whatever risk to the United States is involved in entrusting cases to the Court for its determination of the applicable basis of decision under international law is outweighed by the tremendous advance which would be made by our acceptance of such risk in the development of judicial processes in the world order."

Other points referred to the committee by Mr. Dulles for clarification related to the problem of domestic jurisdiction, the possibility of resorting to other tribunals, and the desirability of establishing a time limit for any declaration the United States might make.

As has been indicated above, domestic jurisdiction is safeguarded by article 1 (1) of the Charter of the United Nations, limiting the purposes of the United Nations to international disputes or situations, by article 2 (7) excluding domestic jurisdiction. The committee accepted article 36 (6) of the statute as covering this point.

"In the event of a dispute as to whether the Court has jurisdiction, the matter shall be settled by the decision of the Court."

The right to submit disputes to other tribunals is reserved in Senate resolution 196, page 2, line 8. This reservation is permitted by article 95 of the Charter.

With respect to a possible time limitation, Senate resolution 196 provides for 5 years' duration, plus time of 6 months following notice of termination of the declaration. A further discussion of these points will be found in the first part of section (G) above.

H. COMPULSORY JURISDICTION PRIOR TO THE UNITED NATIONS

The first important step in the direction of compulsory jurisdiction was taken by the Advisory Committee of Jurists appointed by the League of Nations in 1920 to prepare the Statute of the Permanent Court of International Justice. This committee, which included among its members the Honorable Elihu Root, former member of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, Secretary of War, and Secretary of State, recommended a draft providing for general compulsory jurisdiction over specified categories of legal disputes. It was proposed that this should be binding upon all parties to the statute. This provision proved unacceptable to some of the larger powers when it was presented to the League Council and Assembly, and there was substituted for it a provision very similar to article 36, paragraph 2, of the present statute, enabling such states as desired to do so to agree among themselves to accept the jurisdiction of the Court as to the enumerated categories of legal disputes.

Under this provision some 44 states, including 3 of the 5 states now permanent members of the Security Council (Great Britain, France, and China), at one time or another deposited declarations accepting this jurisdiction.

Proceedings were invoked in 11 cases under these declarations two of which proceeded to final determination. One of these was the Eastern Greenland case, involving conflicting claims to territory by Norway and Denmark. Upon the rendering of the decision of the Court, Norway withdrew the decrees affecting the territory which had precipitated the dispute. The second case which went to decision involved a claim by the Netherlands against Belgium for alleged wrongful diversions of water from the Meuse River. The other nine cases were terminated on procedural points or were withdrawn.

I. COMPULSORY JURISDICTION UNDER THE UNITED NATIONS

The negotiations leading to the conclusion of the statute of the new International Court of Justice saw a renewal of the effort to obtain general compulsory jurisdiction. It is indicated in the Report of the 1945 Committee of Jurists, which met in Washington to formulate proposals relating to the judicial organ of the proposed world organization, that a majority of the Committee was in favor of compulsory jurisdiction. At San Francisco the discussion was renewed, and again a very substantial body of opinion was shown in favor of general compulsory jurisdiction. Due to the opposition of some states and the doubtful position of others, it was felt, however, that such a provision might endanger acceptance of the Charter, of which the statute was to be an integral part. This was the position of the United States delegation. It was, therefore, agreed to retain the optional provision in a form similar to that employed in the Statute of the Permanent Court of International Justice. This is the present article 36, paragraph 2 of the statute, pursuant to which the action envisioned by present resolution would be taken.

The San Francisco Conference added an additional paragraph to article 36 of the statute, according to which declarations accepting the jurisdiction of the old Court, and remaining in force, are deemed to remain in force as among the parties to the present statute for such period as they still have to run. Nineteen declarations are currently in force under this provision.

A further indication of the sentiment prevailing among United Nations delegations at San Francisco was the adoption by the Conference of a recommendation to the members of the Organization—"that as soon as possible they make declarations recognizing the obligatory jurisdiction of the International Court of Justice according to the provisions of article 36 of the statute."

J. THE CONSTITUTIONAL ISSUES INVOLVED

During the discussion which took place in the subcommittee three important constitutional issues were raised. These issues were: (1) Can the proposed action be taken by the treaty-making process or is a joint resolution of the two Houses preferable; (2) is it proper procedure to obtain the advice and consent of the Senate prior to the deposit of the declaration by the President; and (3) would the deposit of the declaration by the President establish treaty relations between the United States and the United Nations or between the United States and the various members of the United Nations who have deposited similar declarations.

With respect to the first issue, a declaration of this kind is no doubt unique so far are the United States is concerned. No one, however, can doubt the power of this Government to make such a declaration. The question is one of procedure. During the debates on the United Nations Charter the problem was discussed at some length on the floor of the Senate, and it was generally agreed that the President could not deposit the declaration without congressional action of some kind granting him the authority to do so. To clarify the issue Senator VANDENBERG requested an opinion of Mr. Green Hackworth, then legal adviser of the Department of State. The pertinent paragraph of this opinion, which Senator VANDENBERG read on the floor of the Senate on July 28, 1945, follows:

"If the Executive should initiate action to accept compulsory jurisdiction of the Court under the optional clause contained in article 36 of the statute, such procedure as might be authorized by the Congress would be followed, and if no specific procedure were prescribed by statute, the proposal would be submitted to the Senate with request for its advice and consent to the filing of the necessary declaration with the Secretary General of the United Nations."

Since that time both the President and the Secretary of State have indicated that, in their opinion, either the procedure outlined in Senate Resolution 196 (calling for a two-thirds vote of the Senate) or that outlined in House Joint Resolution 291 (calling for a simple majority vote of the two Houses) would furnish a satisfactory legal basis for acceptance by the United States of the compulsory jurisdiction clause.

Inasmuch as the declaration would involve important new obligations for the United States, the committee was of the opinion that it should be approved by the treaty process, with two-thirds of the Senators present concurring. The force and effect of the declaration is that of a treaty, binding the United States with respect to those States which have or which may in the future deposit similar declarations. Moreover, under our constitutional system the peaceful settlement of disputes through arbitration or judicial settlement has always been considered a proper subject for the use of the treaty procedure. While the declaration can hardly be considered a treaty in the strict sense of that term, the nature of the obligations assumed by the contracting parties are such that no action less solemn or less formal than that required for treaties should be contemplated.

With respect to the second issue the answer may be found in the Constitution itself. Article 2, section 2, provides that the President shall have "power, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to make treaties, provided two-thirds of the Senators present concur." It is evident that the advice and consent of the Senate is equally effective whether given before, during, or after the conclusion of the treaty. In fact, President Washington approached the Senate for its advice and consent prior to the negotiation of treaties, and this practice was followed on occasion by other Presidents. While the practice of prior consultations with the Senate fell into disuse after 1816, a recent precedent may be found in the convention of 1927, extending the General Claims Commission, United States and Mexico, of 1923. The treaty was signed on August 16, 1927, pursuant to a Senate resolution of February 17, 1927. A similar example is the convention of 1929, again extending the life of the Commission. The convention was signed on August 17, 1929, pursuant to the Senate resolution of May 25, 1929.

With regard to the third issue, the proposed declaration would not constitute, in any sense, an agreement between the United States and the United Nations. It is rather a unilateral declaration having the force and effect of a treaty as between the United States and each of the other states which accept the same obligations. It is merely an extension of the general principle that any two states may agree to submit cases to arbitration or judicial settlement. The so-called optional clause would permit a large number of states to take such action with respect to the four categories of legal cases enumerated.

As to whether the United States can enter into a treaty with the United Nations, the question is not here at issue. In any event, it is clear that the United States can conclude agreements with the United Nations, inasmuch as the United Nations Participation Act authorized the President to take such action in conformity with the pledge of the United States to make armed forces available to the Security Council under article 43 of the Charter. Moreover, there appears to be nothing in the Constitution which forbids the conclusion of a treaty between the United States and an international organization.

If it follows that the legal capacity of the United Nations is all that is required to enable the United States and the United Nations to enter into treaty relationships, article 104 of the Charter would seem to establish that authority. Article 104 reads:

"The Organization shall enjoy in the territory of each of its members such legal capacity as may be necessary for the exercise of its functions and the fulfillment of its purposes."

K. DESIRABILITY OF SPEEDY ACTION

Most of the witnesses appearing before the subcommittee expressed the hope that the Senate would act speedily in order to demonstrate once more the conviction of the people of the United States that peace will be possible only if law and justice are firmly embedded in the foundations of the United Nations. To be sure, the extension of the compulsory jurisdiction of the International Court of Justice will not usher the world automatically into an era of peace; it is only one important step in man's long and painful march toward a warless world. The acceptance by the United States of the compulsory jurisdiction clause, however, would constitute a step of great psychological and moral significance. It would help develop a spirit of trust and confidence, particularly on the part of the small states, toward the United States. And it would give impetus to the principle of the peaceful settlement of disputes as the judges of the new Court begin their work at the Peace Palace in The Hague.

On July 28, 1945, the Senate ratified the United Nations Charter by the overwhelming vote of 89 to 2. Since that time the people of the United States, the Senate, the House of Representatives, the President, and the Secretary of State have repeatedly asserted the conviction that the foreign policy of the United States must be centered about the activities and the organs of the United Nations. The International Court of Justice is one of the principal organs of the United Nations. It would seem entirely consistent with our often pronounced policy for the Senate to take speedy action in order to ensure our full cooperation with the work of the Court at the earliest practicable date.

The Senate Foreign Relations Committee, in its report to the Senate on the United Nations Charter, expressed the following view:

"Unless we are prepared to take all steps which are necessary to effectuate our membership in the United Nations, we would be merely deceiving the hopes of the United States and of humanity in ratifying the Charter."

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I ask the Senator from Kentucky whether it is his intention to have the concurrent resolution to adjourn sine die laid before the Senate today?

Mr. BARKLEY. As soon as the conference report on the first supplemental appropriation bill, 1947, is disposed of, I expect to have the resolution laid before the Senate.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to be excused from further attendance at the session of the Senate today.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, leave is granted.

LEGISLATIVE SESSION

Mr. BARKLEY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of legislative business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of legislative business.

PLIGHT OF DOMESTIC WOOL INDUSTRY

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, last Wednesday I addressed the Senate at some length upon the very important subject of legislation to deal with the wool-growing industry in the United States. I have no intention of making another speech on that subject. I feel that the Senate is in a temper to vote and not to listen to talk. I also feel that the Senate is pretty well convinced that the wool bill in some form should be passed.

As I pointed out on Wednesday, the Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry has filed a favorable report on a wool bill. The House Committee on Agriculture has likewise filed a similar report. If I could, with the agreement of the leadership, make a motion to proceed to the consideration of the wool bill now on the calendar, I would move to amend the bill so that it would be identical with the bill which has been recommended by the House Committee on Agriculture and which is also on the Senate Calendar. I desire to inquire of the present occupant of the chair whether I may not be permitted to make such a motion before he lays before the Senate the concurrent resolution providing for final adjournment.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I appreciate fully the situation to which the Senator from Wyoming has called attention, and I am sympathetic to his purpose. But the House passed the concurrent resolution for adjournment last Saturday. The House is now awaiting action by the Senate on the resolution. Of course, it merely means that when we conclude business today the two Houses will stand adjourned. It does not mean that we will adjourn immediately on the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I understand that.

Mr. BARKLEY. I feel that, in view of the fact that the House has waited so long for the Senate to take action, the concurrent resolution should be laid down as a courtesy to the House. If that is not done we may run the risk of being required to amend the resolution or let the matter go by the board. I feel that we can remain as late as the Senate is willing to remain today, but the resolution providing for adjournment of the two Houses of Congress today when each House concludes its business, should be laid down.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, recognizing as I do that the arduous labors which have been performed by both the Members of the Senate and the Members of the House deserve the reward of an adjournment of the Congress, I thought it would be neither charitable nor wise to attempt to prolong the session. Nevertheless, I feel that this issue is of such great importance, and is supported on both sides of the Chamber by so many Members of the Senate that I should be permitted, at least, to ask the Senate to vote upon the measure.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator realizes that the Senate may remain in session as long as it is willing to sit.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I realize that.

Mr. BARKLEY. The House is in the same situation. Under the concurrent resolution, when both Houses of Congress complete their work today the Congress will stand adjourned.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, it is customary, in the conduct of the affairs of the Senate, for Members of the body to reach understandings with the leadership. I should like very much to be able to reach an understanding with the leadership on both sides of the Chamber at this time that, after the concurrent resolution for adjournment has been laid down and disposed of, I may be recognized to move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the wool bill.

Mr. BARKLEY. I will state frankly to the Senator, Mr. President, that I would have no objection to his motion. However, I do not control the recognition of the Senator. That is within the province of the Chair. So far as I am concerned, I would have no objection to his motion.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, if unanimous consent is being asked for, I am constrained to object.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I have not asked for unanimous consent.

Mr. BARKLEY. No.

Mr. WHITE. Then, I cannot object.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. WHERRY. I should like to know what agreement or understanding has been reached, if any, relative to the request of the able Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. BARKLEY. No agreement has been reached.

Mr. WHERRY. Then the bill is still on the calendar just the same as are the other bills which are there.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator is correct.

Mr. McKELLAR obtained the floor.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. I will yield if it is only for a moment. I have a conference report which I wish to have considered. It is important and should be agreed to.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The Senator is correct. I merely wish to inquire of the Senator from Nebraska whether I understood correctly that he would be willing, so far as he is concerned, to have a vote on the proposed motion to consider the wool bill.

Mr. WHERRY. I have no objection whatever. I merely wanted to hear what was said. We could not hear on this side of the chamber.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I had understood that the Senator would not object.

Mr. O'MAHONEY subsequently said: Mr. President, it is not my intention, I may say to the Senate, to make a motion to have the Senate take up the wool bill, because since I spoke earlier in the afternoon I have made a survey of the conditions which exist, and I find there is no possibility of getting action on the bill in the House of Representatives, because of the situation. So I shall not attempt to make that motion now.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I wish the Senate to know and I wish to make the record clear that those of us from the wool-producing States, who are just as much concerned about the wool legislation as is the Senator from Wyoming, are interested in the question of whether consent was given by the majority leader for the consideration of the bill this afternoon, because we are indeed anxious that the wool legislation be considered.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I thank the Senator for his statement.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Maurer, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had passed, without amendment, the following bills and joint resolution of the Senate:

S. 1560. An act to amend the Service Extension Act of 1941, as amended, to extend reemployment benefits to former members of the Women's Army Auxiliary Corps who entered the Women's Army Corps;

S. 2306. An act to authorize the Secretary of War to grant Georgia Power Co. a 100-foot perpetual easement across certain land in the State of Alabama constituting a portion of the military reservation designated as Fort Benning, Ga.; and

S. J. Res. 186. Joint resolution to provide for the transfer of the painting First Fight of Ironclads, Monitor and Merrimac, now stored in the United States Capitol Building, to the custody of the United States Naval Academy.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 1751) to authorize the course of instruction at the United States Merchant Marine Academy to be given to not exceeding 20 persons at a time from the American Republics, other than the United States.

The message further announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee on conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 783) for the relief of Karl E. Bond.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5626) to authorize the Veterans' Administration to appoint and employ retired officers without affecting their retired status, and for other purposes.

The message further announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 390) making additional appropriations for the fiscal year 1947, and for other purposes; that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate Nos. 2, 3, 11, 16, 17, 28, and 29 to the joint resolution, and concur therein, and that the House receded from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate Nos. 1, 12, 13, 14, 15, 20, 22, and 24 to the joint resolution and concurred therein, severally with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ADDITIONAL APPROPRIATIONS, FISCAL YEAR 1947—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. McKELLAR submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 390) making additional appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1947, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 18 and 19.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 21, and 26, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 9: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 9, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"JOINT COMMITTEE ON PRINTING

"Biographical Congressional Directory: To enable the Secretary of the Senate to pay, upon vouchers approved by the chairman or vice chairman of the Joint Committee on Printing, for compiling and preparing a revised edition of the Biographical Directory of the American Congress (1774–1948) as provided for in House Concurrent Resolution Numbered 163, adopted July 26, 1946, not to exceed $35,000; and said sum or any part thereof, in the discretion of the chairman or vice chairman of the Joint Committee on Printing, may be paid as additional compensation (at not to exceed $1,800 per annum) to any employee of the United States, and shall continue to be available until expended."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 23: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 23, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"BUREAU OF COMMUNITY FACILITIES

"Emergency relief for the Territory of Hawaii: For carrying out the provisions of section 1 of the Act entitled 'An Act to provide emergency relief for the victims of the seismic waves which struck the Territory of Hawaii, and for other purposes', $1,300,000, to remain available until expended, of which amount not to exceed $65,000 shall be available for administrative expenses of the Bureau of Community Facilities, including travel, the purchase of two passenger motor vehicles, and personal services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 25: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 25, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Restore the matter stricken out by said amendment amended to read as follows:

"DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE

"BUREAU OF FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC COMMERCE

"Export control: For an additional amount, fiscal year 1947, for 'Export control', including the objects specified under this head in the Department of Commerce Appropriation Act, 1947, $400,000."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 27: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 27, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum named in said amendment insert "$100,000,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

The committee of conference report in disagreement amendments numbered 1, 2, 3, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 20, 22, 24, 28, and 29.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration and adoption of the conference report.

There being no objection, the report was considered and agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate a message from the House of Representatives announcing its action on certain amendments of the Senate to House Joint Resolution 390, which was read as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, U. S.,
August 2, 1946.

Resolved, That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 2, 3, 11, 16, 17, 28, and 29 to the Joint Resolution (H. J. Res. 390) making additional appropriations for the fiscal year 1947, and for other purposes, and concur therein;

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1, to said bill and concur therein with an amendment as follows: In line 6 of the matter inserted by said amendment, after the word "authorized", insert ", subject to the approval of the chairman of the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate (Committee on Rules and Administration, if and when elected)."

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 12, to said bill, and concur therein with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum named in said amendment, insert: "$6,885,000: Provided, That such additional amounts shall be allotted on a pro rata basis among the several States in proportion to the amounts to which the respective States are entitled for each fiscal year by reason of section 401 of the Social Security Act amendments of 1946."

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 13, to said bill, and concur therein with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum named in said amendment, insert: "$4,597,500: Provided, That such additional amounts shall be allotted on a pro rata basis among the several States in proportion to the amounts to which the respective States are entitled for each fiscal year by reason of section 401 of the Social Security Act Amendments of 1946."

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 14, to said bill, and concur therein with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum named in said amendment, insert: "$2,617,500: Provided, That such additional amounts shall be allotted on a pro rata basis among the several States in proportion to the amounts to which the respective States are entitled for each fiscal year by reason of section 401 of the Social Security Act Amendments of 1946."

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate No. 15 to said bill and concur therein with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum named in said amendment insert "$425,000."

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate No. 20 to said bill and concur therein with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert:

"Hospital and construction activities: For carrying out the provisions of title VI of the Public Health Service Act, as amended (S. 191), fiscal year 1947, including travel; printing and binding; the objects specified in the paragraph immediately following the caption 'Public Health Service' in the Federal Security Agency Appropriation Act, 1947; and the purchase of eight passenger automobiles; $2,350,000, of which not to exceed $126,000 may be transferred to the appropriation 'Pay, etc., commissioned officers, Public Health Service' for not to exceed 28 commissioned officers, and not to exceed $34,175 may be transferred to the appropriation 'Salaries, Office of the General Counsel,' Office of the Administrator, Federal Security Agency: Provided, That the availability of this appropriation is contingent upon the enactment into law of said S. 191."

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate No. 22 to said bill and concur therein with an amendment as follows: In line 5 of the matter inserted by said amendment, strike out the following: "(H. R. 6918, Seventy-ninth Congress)"; and in lines 15 and 16 of the matter inserted by said amendment, strike out the following: "and section 14 (a) of the Federal Employees Pay Act of 1946."

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate No. 24 to said bill, and concur therein with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment, insert the following:

"VETERANS' ADMINISTRATION

"Automobiles and other conveyances for disabled veterans: To enable the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs to provide an automobile or other conveyance, at a cost per vehicle or conveyance of not to exceed $1,600, including equipment with such special attachments and devices as the Administrator may deem necessary, for each veteran of World War II who is entitled to compensation for the loss, or loss of use, of one or both legs at or above the ankle under the laws administered by the Veterans' Administration, $30,000,000: Provided, That no part of the money appropriated by this paragraph shall be used for the repair, maintenance, or replacement of any such automobile or other conveyance and no veteran shall be given an automobile or other conveyance under the provisions of this paragraph until it is established to the satisfaction of the administrator that such veteran will be able to operate such automobile or other conveyance in a manner consistent with his own safety and the safety of others and will be licensed to operate such automobile or other conveyance by the State of his residence or other proper licensing authority: Provided further, That under such regulations as the Administrator may prescribe the furnishing of such automobile or other conveyance shall be accomplished by the Administrator paying the total purchase price to the seller from whom the veteran is purchasing under sales agreement between the seller and the veteran."

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I move that the Senate agree to the amendments of the House to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 12, 13, 14, 15, 22, and 24.

The motion was agreed to.

COMPARATIVE STATEMENT OF ESTIMATES SUBMITTED AND APPROPRIATIONS MADE, SECOND SESSION, SEVENTY-NINTH CONGRESS

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD, as a part of my remarks, to appear immediately after the final action on the deficiency appropriation bill, a comparative statement of estimates submitted at the second session of the Seventy-ninth Congress and of appropriations made during such session. I believe this will be of vast interest to every Senator. It shows that the appropriations were actually $1,591,607,697.61 less than the estimates.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

RIOT AT ATHENS, TENN.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I desire to be recognized for about 5 minutes in my own time.

I wish to call attention to an article in today's issue of the Washington Times-Herald, which I suppose every Senator present has read. The following appeared in large headlines:

FOUR TO SIX SLAIN, MANY HURT AS VETS BATTLE CRUMP MACHINE IN TENNESSEE VOTE RIOT

Troops called out as 1,000 storm jail to liberate ex-GI's.

Machine gun fire rakes city streets, deputy sheriffs killed, ballots seized.

I have taken the trouble today to telephone to Athens, Tenn. I talked with a city official. Several persons in that city have been hurt. An election of county officers had been held. It had nothing in the world to do with the State primary election. The article is an absolute falsehood from beginning to end. It seems to have been written by a special correspondent, and I suppose a correspondent sent from here, who probably reported from afar, and did not know the facts.

I wish to say that Athens is a little over half way between Washington and Memphis. The idea of the Crump machine being in Athens is absolutely ridiculous. The two have no more connection than the bachelor Senator from Tennessee has to do with the harem of the Sultan of Sulu, whom he has never seen, and none of the folks in his harem has he ever seen. [Laughter.]

The article is simply ridiculous and absurd. No one was killed. Several were hurt, in a purely local election. It had nothing in the world to do with the State primary. Yet we find these sensational headlines. And the article is just as lurid. I want to read just one thing that was printed:

Special to the Times-Herald. Greatest Tragedy in State's History. Knoxville, Tenn., August 1. At the outbreak of the riot in Athens tonight, a political observer here declared: "This is the most heated campaign we have had for some time." Later when reports of dead and wounded were received, the same observer remarked: "This is the greatest tragedy in the political history of the State of Tennessee."

All of that, Mr. President, is absolutely untrue. I doubt if Mr. Crump ever dreamed of the slightest connection between his organization in Memphis, 375 miles away, and the lovely little city of Athens, which seems to have gotten into some trouble over its local affairs.

The idea of it being a fight between GI's, soldiers, and the Crump machine, is just as ridiculous, because I imagine that the soldiers voted on both sides all over the State. There was certainly no fight on the soldiers of any kind. I am informed that there were as many soldiers in the little town of Athens on one side as on the other.

This illustrates the remarkable way some newspapers have of inventing sensational stories. The newspapermen went down there to find material for such a story, but they could not find it because the political situation was so calm, so unusually calm, if I may put it that way. I suppose it was the calmest election that has ever occurred in Tennessee. It was certainly calm so far as I was concerned, because I was a candidate, and did not even go to Tennessee. I took no part in it. My friend the Senator from Kentucky says that is why it was calm. [Laughter.] If so, I am happy that I took no part in it, because it should have been calm.

What I protest against is falsehood in this newspaper—in this or any other newspaper; I have not examined the others to see whether they have similar headlines, but if they have, they are equally false, and I greatly regret it.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, will my colleague yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield to my colleague for a moment, and then I shall yield the floor.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, I wish to endorse what my colleague, the senior Senator from Tennessee, has said in respect to the criticism in the late edition of the Times-Herald concerning the so-called riot at Athens, in McMinn County, Tenn.

I do not know the extent of the trouble that occurred. The senior Senator from Tennessee says he has talked over the telephone with persons who are there, but I have not. However, regardless of the extent of the so-called riot, I know, because I have talked with others on the telephone, and I know the situation, that this trouble did not occur in the primary election in which my colleague reached the hall of fame yesterday, having been nominated, which is the equivalent of election, for the sixth time, being one of about half a dozen men in the history of the United States who has ever been nominated to the United States Senate for a sixth term.

The difficulty, whatever it might have been, did not occur in the course of the primary election, as might be inferred from the headlines, which undertake to indicate that the Crump organization had something to do with the trouble. I am not informed as to the cause of the trouble, whatever it might have been, but it was due entirely to a local condition.

On the first Thursday in August every 2 years, under the Tennessee law, we have regular general county elections. Perhaps it is a constitutional provision, I am not sure about it from memory, but some 25 or 30 years ago, at least whenever the Tennessee State primary law was passed, it was decided to hold the primaries on the same day on which the county general elections were held, as a matter of convenience to the people.

The county election is held in one balloting area and the primary election is held in another balloting area. For instance, in the case of Athens, both elections were held, I think, in the courthouse, the general election in one portion of the courthouse and the primary election in another room in another portion of the same building. Each election was conducted by separate officials. They had utterly no connection one with the other.

The ballots were counted in the McMinn primaries all over the county, and likewise counted in Athens, and the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR] carried McMinn County by a good majority.

There was no question about the ballots in the primary, but the ballot box in the general election was, according to my information, carried to the jailhouse for some reason, because some rioting or disturbance was created concerning the methods used in counting the ballots in the general election box, or something of that sort. From that the trouble arose. It concerned the control of county politics.

Various county officers were candidates in the general county election, as elsewhere in Tennessee. The office of sheriff was to be filled, and there were several candidates for sheriff. There were other officers to be elected, the county court clerk, I believe, the circuit court clerk, the county trustee, and perhaps other officers such as road commissioners. The ballots for those offices were in an entirely separate box, so there was no connection between the primary election in which my colleague was nominated yesterday and the general county elections held all over the State, including McMinn County and all the other counties.

Mr. President, I wanted to make this statement in order to clarify the situation. I am advised by my colleague that no one has actually been killed, and whatever the extent of the rioting might have been, it had no connection with the State primary. It concerned only a local matter, and only local county officials.

The article refers to GI's. My opinion is that there were as many GI's on one side of the fence as on the other. It is unfortunate such stories are printed, and it is unfortunate that it is necessary to make explanations. Responsible newspapers should not carry such headlines.

Mr. President, I made a brief statement in the Senate a few days ago concerning another newspaper story. I said in that statement that I thought the person who wrote a story which was critical should at least go to sufficient trouble to enable him to learn the truth of the situation. In this case the truth is not portrayed by the story, and the headlines in the Times-Herald are not all justified.

I ask unanimous consent that the entire article from the Times-Herald be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

FOUR TO SIX SLAIN, MANY HURT, AS VETS BATTLE CRUMP MACHINE IN TENNESSEE VOTE RIOT—TROOPS CALLED OUT AS 1,000 STORM JAIL TO LIBERATE EX-GI'S—MACHINE-GUN FIRE RAKES CITY STREETS; DEPUTY SHERIFFS KILLED, BALLOTS SEIZED

(By Duke Merritt)

ATHENS, TENN., August 2.—Tennessee State Guardsmen were ordered into this city early today as more than 1,000 ex-GI's, backing an all-veteran ticket with blazing guns, fought members of Boss Crump's incumbent Democratic machine in a bloody election riot that left from 4 to 6 deputy sheriffs dead and at least 20 other combatants wounded.

The men were shot to death in and around the McMinn County jail here as the heavily armed veterans sought to storm the building to seize ballot boxes and release other ex-GI's they claimed were being held as hostages by the special deputies—all appointed by the incumbent Crump office holders.

At 2 a. m. (EST) four bodies were reported visible on the porch of the blacked out McMinn County jail. An ambulance, called to remove the dead, was ordered away because of the danger of gunfire.

COURTHOUSE ON FIRE

The McMinn County Courthouse, scene of an earlier pitched battle, was reported ablaze shortly after 2 a. m.

Justice of the Peace H. F. Moses, one of those barricaded inside the jail, said in a telephone conversation early today:

"We need help at once. There are two dead and eight wounded here inside the jail.

"I was wounded about 2 hours ago in the arm, and I'm talking to you while I'm lying on the floor. Please get us some help immediately."

EIGHTEEN REPORTED IN HOSPITAL

An Athens hospital reported that of 18 persons hospitalized there, 8 were seriously wounded from gunfire.

More than a score of automobiles had been lined up at the curb in front of the two-story red brick jail building and were being used as shields by the attacking veterans.

The election night scene in Athens was one of wild disorder, with gunfire echoing throughout the downtown section for many hours. At least four persons were shot in the first few minutes of the disturbance.

Col. Hilton Butler, adjutant general, ordered the Sixth Regiment of the Tennessee Guard, which is stationed in Chattanooga, to Athens after Sheriff Pat Mansfield, a candidate of the Crump machine, begged help, declaring "the situation is getting bloodier all the time."

JAIL BLACKED OUT

The jail, where ballot boxes from two voting places were taken this afternoon, was blacked out when the first volley was fired.

It was believed 200 special deputies, appointed by Sheriff Mansfield for election-day duty, were barricaded inside the jail.

The rioting broke out at 9:10 p. m. and was continuing early today. Scattered firing was heard from various sections of the city and the rapid barking of machine guns broke out frequently at the courthouse.

Simultaneously with the calling out of the State guard, hundreds of veterans from nearby Blount County left there by bus and auto to join the GI besiegers of the jail.

The veterans engaged in the fight reportedly were being directed by Jim Buttran from headquarters of the GI Nonpartisan League.

MONROE COUNTY DEATH

Gunfire also punctuated the elections in Monroe County, as GI supporters sought to overthrow a political organization that has held sway for 14 years.

Jake Tipton, about 60, was shot dead in front of a voting place in Vale, but one source said he was slain as the result of an "old grudge."

At Sweetwater, two persons were treated for knife wounds incurred during the elections.

Because all telephone lines into this city were burdened with official calls, complete details of the shootings could not be obtained immediately.

In the last telephone call to the jail the caller was told by Sheriff Mansfield:

"I can't talk any more—there's mob violence."

A short while earlier, Mansfield had asked for several hundred deputies.

Col. Butler said he talked with a State guard officer in the county jail a short while before ordering out the Sixth Regiment.

SHOT HEARD OVER PHONE

"He called my attention to shots which I could hear over the telephone," Butler said. "And then another shot apparently severed the connection. Right then I decided to quit investigating and start moving."

The attack on the jail was prompted, it was reported, by arrest of several members of the veterans' faction by Crump machine deputies and an alleged refusal to let members of the veterans' faction act as watchers at the ballot countings.

Throughout the afternoon fist fights and other disorders marked the election, and about 20 veterans were arrested.

OPPOSING FACTIONS

The riot had its beginning 2 months ago when about 500 veterans nominated a nonpartisan, all-vet ticket to oppose the powerful Burch-Biggs-Hall-Cantrell Democratic machine backed by Crump and headed by Paul Cantrell, State senator from McMinn County.

Since it was the first real opposition the Crump-Cantrell group had met in 14 years, Mansfield appointed extra deputies to watch polling places.

James Jarvis, managing editor of the Chattanooga Times, said shortly before the GI faction attacked the jail, two veterans broke out through the glass door of a nearby polling place where they had registered a complaint.

Jarvis said:

"The two men, James Ed Vestal and Charles Scott, fell to their knees as they hit the sidewalk. Squirming through the glass close behind came Deputy Sheriff Windy Wise. Wise emerged with a shiny revolver drawn, shouting something which we did not hear.

"Vestal, a first lieutenant in the Army engineers, who was wounded twice in the Pacific, and Scott scrambled up from their knees and walked slowly across the street to the cover of the crowd with their hands high in the air.

"DEPUTIES SEIZED

"Wise and another deputy leveled pistols at their backs. An angry roar came from the veterans."

Jarvis quoted the mob as saying:

"Let's go get 'em."

"No, we got no guns."

"Slowly Wise backed through the shattered opening," Jarvis said. "In a couple of minutes Chief Deputy Boe Dunn arrived in a sedan heavily loaded with deputies and arms. A double lane of men with drawn guns was formed and the ballot box was carried out to the sedan. The auto jerked up to the corner and down the remaining block to the jail.

"It was 5:05 then. At 6:35 a deputy with a shotgun led the way into the rear entrance to the second of Athens' three voting places. Others with guns in their hands bore the second ballot box into the jail."

A handful of veterans, led by a Republican county election commissioner, then grabbed, disarmed, beat, and hauled away in an automobile the seven deputies.

The 7 and about 100 others had been sworn in by Mansfield for election duty.

The fate of the seven who were taken away in the automobile still was a mystery early today.

Lowell F. Arterburn, publisher of the Athens Post-Athenian, said he could hear shots being fired from behind his newspaper plant and also two blocks away near the city jail.

"It looks like we are right in the middle," Arterburn said.

Arterburn said at least 1,000 persons were surrounding the two-story brick jail, where between 10 and 20 of the war veterans were being held.

"It is extremely tense and anything can happen," Arterburn said.

Arterburn said that shortly before 10 o'clock one of the GI's or a GI supporter, fired a rifle shot through the jail window and demanded that the veterans being held be released one at a time.

SHOTS FIRED INTO JAIL

The jailors refused and the crowd opened up.

At least 40 to 50 shots were fired into the jail.

"It sounded from the newspaper office as volley; as if the shots were fired at a command," Arterburn said.

"I don't know where they got the guns, but I know where they learned to use them," Arterburn said. He was referring to World War II battles.

Sheriff Mansfield, a candidate for the State senate on the regular ticket, said he had 300 armed special deputies on the scene.

Among those wounded was a 50-year-old Negro farmer, Thomas Gillespie, who was shot by one of the special deputies.

Gillespie was taken to Forie Hospital for treatment.

C. R. Hairrell, a GI poll watcher, at the twelfth precinct, suffered a possible skull fracture in another fight and also was treated at the hospital.

PHOTOGRAPHER ARRESTED

A Chattanooga photographer was arrested and jailed late today when he tried to take pictures.

A reporter, Walter Hurt, and a photographer, Bob Henderson, both of the Knoxville News-Sentinel, took refuge in an undisclosed place tonight, telling their newspaper not to reveal where they were hiding.

An Athens reporter who called a Knoxville newspaper discovered his line was tapped and cut off the conversation. He asked that his name not be disclosed.

The regular Democratic faction which has long been in control of county offices here is headed by Sheriff Mansfield and Cantrell.

In today's primary they sought to switch jobs. Mansfield was a candidate for the State senate and Cantrell for sheriff.

The GI veterans did not put up a candidate for the State senate but Knox Henry, a war veteran, was their candidate for sheriff. He had the backing of both nonregular Democrats and Republicans.

A few of Mansfield's deputies are local men. But most of them are strangers. There were more strange faces than familiar ones here this morning.

Early today it was rumored that another 400 war veterans were on their way from Maryville, Tenn., to reinforce Buttram's men. They promised several days ago to come over "if you need us."

BALLOT BOXES IN JAIL

Mansfield had been keeping many of his men grouped around the jail—at least a few score at the time. Car convoys of the deputies brought all the ballot boxes from the 12th and 11th precincts into the jail for counting. Those are the precincts where fights broke out earlier this evening.

"GREATEST TRAGEDY IN STATE'S HISTORY"

KNOXVILLE, TENN., August 1.—At the outbreak of the riot in Athens tonight, a political observer here declared: "This is the most heated campaign we have had for some time." Later when reports of dead and wounded were received, the same observer remarked: "This is the greatest tragedy in the political history of the State of Tennessee."

SENATOR MCKELLAR IS NOMINATED FOR SIXTH TERM

NASHVILLE, TENN., August 1.—KENNETH D. MCKELLAR, veteran of 29 years in the United States Senate, tonight apparently had won his bid for a sixth term over a CIO-PAC candidate.

The Nashville Tennesseean, which backed Edward W. Carmack against MCKELLAR, declared editorially Carmack had lost. The newspaper also conceded the defeat of former Governor Gordon Browning, who also had the paper's support in his race against incumbent Democratic Governor Jim Nance McCord.

M'KELLAR FAR IN LEAD

Unofficial returns from 1,759 out of approximately 2,300 precincts in Thursday's Tennessee Democratic primary gave for United States Senator: E. W. Carmack, 84,297; K. D. McKellar, 144,932; Byron Johnson, 1,640; John R. Neal, 1,704; Herman H. Ross, 1,823.

For governor: 1,760 precincts gave Gordon Browning 94,500; Jim McCord, 142,645; Mrs. Leah Richardson, 1,144.

In the State's seven contested congressional races, Democratic Representative KEFAUVER in the Third District overwhelmed his lone opponent and won renomination for a fourth term. In the First District Republican Attorney General Dayton Phillips was far in front of his nearest competitor in a field of five to fill the vacancy left by Representative B. Carroll Reece, Republican national chairman.

EARTHMAN BEHIND

Representative HAROLD H. (DOC) EARTHMAN, Fifth District Democrat, was more than 2,000 votes behind Joe L. Evins, a young attorney, who campaigned vigorously. In the Sixth District, Representative PERCY PRIEST, Democrat, was slightly ahead in a field of five, but only a few ballots had been counted.

Veteran Representative JERE COOPER, in the Democratic Ninth District, met stiff opposition from Judge Lyle Cherry but with half the votes in COOPER held a 2,000-vote lead.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I wish to say just one more word.

I think behind this article is an effort on the part of a newspaper here in Washington, with two newspapers in Tennessee—one especially—to smear Mr. Crump, who is one of the leading citizens of Memphis, one of the most honest and upright citizens of Tennessee, one of the most vigorous and enterprising and valuable men we have in our State. There are no better men anywhere than Ed Crump, and I say without hesitation that in my judgment he is infinitely more honest than those who are undertaking to criticize him in any manner, shape, or form. He has been mayor of our city, was a Representative in Congress for several years, and a fine one. He moves in the highest circles socially and financially, and as a citizen he has no superior anywhere.

PRINTING OF COMPILATION OF CONGRESSIONAL LEGISLATION, EXECUTIVE ORDERS, AND REGULATIONS

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, in October 1942, I asked to have printed as a public document a compilation of congressional legislation, Executive orders, and regulations, with associated data, relative to domestic stability, national defense, and war. On June 23, 1944, I requested unanimous consent that this document (S. Doc. No. 285, 77th Cong.) with revisions and additions bringing it up to date be reprinted. I now ask unanimous consent that Senate Document No. 224, Seventy-eighth Congress, relating to domestic stability, national defense, and the prosecution of World War II, as revised and brought up to date, through July 1946, be reprinted as a Senate document.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

SUMMARY OF IMPORTANT LEGISLATION, SEVENTY-NINTH CONGRESS, 1945–46

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, it is customary in the closing days of a Congress to insert in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD a brief summary of important legislation enacted during that Congress. I therefore ask unanimous consent that such a summary for the Seventy-ninth Congress, prepared under the direction of the Secretary of the Senate by the Senate Library, be inserted in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

[The summary appears in the Appendix.]

RESOLUTION FOR SINE DIE ADJOURNMENT

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I ask the Chair to lay down a privileged concurrent resolution from the House of Representatives.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate House Concurrent Resolution 165, as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the two Houses of Congress shall adjourn on Friday, August 2, 1946, and that when they adjourn on said day they stand adjourned sine die.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration and adoption of the concurrent resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Kentucky?

There being no objection, the concurrent resolution was considered and agreed to.

AUTHORIZATION FOR SIGNING OF ENROLLED BILLS, JOINT RESOLUTIONS, AND SO FORTH, FOLLOWING ADJOURNMENT

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I send to the desk a concurrent resolution, and ask for its present consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 76), as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That notwithstanding the adjournment of the second session of the Seventy-ninth Congress, the Speaker of the House of Representatives and the President pro tempore of the Senate be, and they are hereby, authorized to sign enrolled bills and joint resolutions duly passed by the two Houses which have been examined by the Committee on Enrolled Bills of the House of Representatives and the Secretary of the Senate and found truly enrolled.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the concurrent resolution.

The concurrent resolution was agreed to.

AUTHORIZATION TO MAKE APPOINTMENTS TO COMMISSIONS OR COMMITTEES DURING ADJOURNMENT

On Motion of Mr. BARKLEY, and by unanimous consent, it was Ordered, That notwithstanding the adjournment of the second session of the Seventy-ninth Congress, the President pro tempore of the Senate be, and he is hereby, authorized to make appointments to commissions or committees authorized by law, by order of the Senate, or by concurrent action of the two Houses.

Ordered further, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he is hereby, authorized to receive messages from the House of Representatives subsequent to the adjournment of the said session.

STATEMENT BY SENATOR BARKLEY ON THE WORK OF THE SEVENTY-NINTH CONGRESS

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, before I take my seat, I wish to say a word. The second session of the Seventy-ninth Congress is about to adjourn sine die. In my judgment, it has been one of the busiest Congresses that has been in session since I have been a Member of either the House or the Senate of the United States. It has been, on the whole, one of the hardest working and one of the hardest worked Congresses that has ever been in Washington. We have not accomplished all we desired to accomplish. We have not enacted every piece of legislation recommended by the President. But there is nothing unusual about that. We have on the whole, and I think the RECORD will justify the assertion, enacted a magnificent mass of legislation.

I regret, and I am sure the Senate regrets, that the minimum wage bill, passed by the Senate, and the national housing bill, passed by the Senate, have failed of enactment. There are other measures which might have been enacted if circumstances had been different. But I think when the record of this Congress has been assessed by the historian—and I say this without regard to politics, and I say it in full appreciation of the cooperation which has been accorded on both sides of the aisle—it will be found that few Congresses have enacted more wise, far-reaching, and fundamental and beneficial legislation involving all classes of our people, than has the Seventy-ninth Congress in the two sessions, the second of which is now drawing to a close.

I congratulate the Members of the Senate regardless of partisanship. We all realized that during the war we had but one objective, and that was to win it as certainly and as speedily as possible, and in that effort all of us were moving in the same direction. We all realized that when the fighting should cease and we came to the postwar period there would be differences and controversies, and there would be individual preferences, individual views with respect to legislation dealing with the postwar period and with the future of our country. In view of these controversies, in view of the individual opinions held by Members of the Congress from all parts of our country, representing geographical sections, representing various political philosophies, it seems to me that we have come to the end of this session under circumstances and with an accomplishment that need not make this Congress ashamed of its work as compared to any other Congress that has assembled in Washington within the recollection of any of us.

Mr. President, I wish for every Member of the Senate on both sides of the aisle—and in this wish there is no dividing aisle—I wish for all of you a well-deserved vacation. I wish for you that spiritual and mental and physical repose that is so essential after long and arduous tasks well performed, and I hope that we may reassemble here in January 1947—'47 that is [laughter]—renewed in spiritual and physical and mental vigor, prepared to undertake the tasks that lie before us in trying to guide this great Nation of ours.

DISSEMINATION BY STATE DEPARTMENT OF INFORMATION ABROAD ABOUT THE UNITED STATES

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I inquire of the Senator from Kentucky if the Senate shall continue to transact further business?

Mr. BARKLEY. Oh, yes; the Senate will be in session for a while.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I hold in my hand House bill 4982, which passed the House, which relates to the work of the State Department in foreign countries, informational service, addresses, and matters of that kind. Under the present law the State Department may perform these services in South and Central America because it has authorization to do so. The Congress has already appropriated money to carry on this work. But the State Department has no authorization to do so except in those areas. Therefore the State Department is very anxious that the bill be passed for that purpose. So I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of House bill 4982.

Mr. REVERCOMB. Reserving the right to object, may we have the calendar number of the bill?

Mr. CONNALLY. The calendar number is 1804.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I object.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 4982.

Mr. TAFT. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Andrews	Huffman	Pepper
Ball	Johnson, Colo.	Radcliffe
Barkley	Johnston, S. C.	Revercomb
Bilbo	Knowland	Russell
Bridges	Langer	Shipstead
Capper	McClellan	Smith
Chavez	McFarland	Stewart
Connally	McKellar	Swift
Cordon	McMahan	Taft
Donnell	Magnuson	Taylor
Downey	Maybank	Thomas, Okla.
Ferguson	Mead	Thomas, Utah
George	Millikin	Tunnell
Gossett	Mitchell	Vandenberg
Green	Moore	Wagner
Guffey	Morse	Walsh
Hart	Murray	Wherry
Hayden	O'Daniel	White
Hill	O'Mahoney	Wiley
Hoey	Overton

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Fifty-nine Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

RESIGNATION OF SENATOR AUSTIN

Mr. DOWNEY, Mr. O'MAHONEY, Mr. MEAD, and Mr. HILL addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Before any Senator is recognized the Chair must read a letter which he has just received. It is dated August 2, 1946, and is addressed to the present occupant of the Chair.

UNITED STATES SENATE,
August 2, 1946.

Hon. KENNETH MCKELLAR,
President pro tempore of the Senate of the United States,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I have this day transmitted to the Governor of Vermont my resignation as a Senator of the United States, to take effect at the close of the second session of the Seventy-ninth Congress.

Your obedient servant,

WARREN R. AUSTIN.

The present occupant of the chair knows that it is with a great sense of loss that every Member of the Senate realizes that the Senator from Vermont will not be with us longer than this session. He has been a wonderful Senator.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, as chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs I wish to express the deep and abiding regret which I feel at the departure of Senator AUSTIN from the United States Senate. He is a man of great legal ability and untiring energy. He has always been very prompt and diligent in the performance of his duties as a member of the Committee on Foreign Relations. He has a great enthusiasm for world peace and for all the things for which the United Nations Charter stands. I predict for him a very distinguished and useful career in the capacity which he is soon to assume as a member of the United Nations Council.

TWENTIETH ANNIVERSARY OF THE TALKING MOTION PICTURE

Mr. DOWNEY. Mr. President, this year marks the twentieth anniversary of the talking motion picture as we know it today. It was on August 6, 1926, that the Warner brothers—Harry M., Jack L., Albert W., and the late Sam Warner—utilizing a device perfected by the engineers of the Western Electric Co. and the Bell Telephone Laboratories, produced and presented to the public the first commercially successful program of motion pictures in which the characters talked and sang and which embodied all of the normal sounds accompanying the action.

Prior to that time, as many of us will recall, all motion pictures were silent except for the accompaniment of a theater orchestra or the well-remembered movie-house piano player.

The success of that initial talking picture program revolutionized the motion-picture industry and signalized the birth of a new and powerful medium for spreading enlightenment, culture, and entertainment among the peoples of the world.

Since that time the motion picture has recorded for posterity not alone the photographic record of the events of our times but also the sounds and the voices of our great men. Those of us in public life can attest to the value of the talking motion picture in enabling the country's leaders to appear before great numbers of people, a phenomenon which has unquestionably advanced the cause of free democratic government.

We know the contribution the talking picture has made to cultural development. The performances of world-famous musical artists previously heard only by a select circle of individuals in the large metropolitan centers have, through the medium of the talking picture, been brought to everyone within the range of the smallest motion-picture theater. The spoken drama has, too, been brought within the reach of all.

The role played by the talking picture during the war is too well known to require elaboration. It facilitated immeasurably the training of our Army, Navy, and Air Forces; it brought to those of us at home the full reality of the sights and sounds of combat; and on the fighting fronts it brought to our service men and women a relaxation and diversion which has been termed by military authorities as second only in importance to food as a builder of morale.

This summer many phases of the motion-picture, electrical, and communications industries will pay tribute to those who, 20 years ago, made the talking picture possible—to the Warner brothers and to the many scientists, engineers, and inventors who laid the groundwork of technical development.

This tribute is one in which we should all be proud to join, for I know of no medium in the history of the world which has offered such tremendous potentialities for bringing the hearts and minds of peoples into sympathetic understanding. We can be proud of the talking picture as a product of American invention and American development. We can be proud that as an American product it has been used for purposes which are of service to humanity.

American motion-picture producers have consistently maintained their unquestioned leadership in producing the finest motion pictures in the world. Throughout the world the town of Hollywood, Calif., has become a symbol of artistic and technical excellence unequaled anywhere.

No single mind or hand invented the talking picture. It grew out of the inventions of some of this country's most distinguished scientists—Thomas A. Edison, who invented both the phonograph and the motion picture and brought the two into synchronization; Alexander Graham Bell, who first showed the world how to transmit voice over a wire; Dr. Lee de Forest, whose audion tube made electrical amplification possible; Theodore Case and E. I. Sponable, who also pioneered in talking pictures; and the many anonymous heroes of the technical laboratory—these had been the earliest experimenters. Then in the middle 1920's, the engineers of the Western Electric Co. and the Bell Telephone Laboratories, bringing together all of the technical advances up to that time, perfected a satisfactory method of synchronizing pictures and sound. In this Western Electric device, the Warner brothers saw the vision of a motion picture with a voice. After 1½ years of intensive work in which showmanship was combined with technical and artistic genius, the Warners brought into being their first program of talking pictures which was presented in New York City on the evening of August 6, 1926.

It should be remembered that in 1926 the motion-picture industry was already a great and highly successful industry and that its product, the silent motion picture, was at the very peak of its development. Yet these four men, impelled by their faith in a new invention and relying only on their own imagination, enterprise, and willingness to work and sacrifice, were able to found a new industry in the midst of one already established.

This achievement should remind us of the boundless opportunity that lies ahead in the development of our industrial, scientific, and artistic frontiers.

The Nation will be pleased to honor the men who so ably brought honor to their country through the devlopment of the talking picture. It is in the finest tradition of our motion-picture industry that this anniversary has been dedicated not so much to honoring the past as to preparing for the future. Its purpose will be to further even higher standards of artistic and technical excellence in the production of motion pictures and to the motion picture of increasing service to society and civilization.

THE LATE SENATOR JOHN H. BANKHEAD, 2D

Mr. SWIFT. Mr. President, in view of the resolution which has just been agreed to, it will be only a matter of hours before the Members of this body will return to their States and their respective homes.

On June 12, 1946, the State of Alabama suffered a great loss in the untimely death of its then senior Senator, John H. Bankhead, 2d. He was elected to this body on November 4, 1930, reelected November 5, 1936, and again reelected on November 3, 1942. During his entire term as United States Senator he worked ceaselessly and tirelessly for the people of his State, our Nation, and the Democratic Party. His efforts, particularly in the line of agriculture, already have brought fruit, and his influence will be felt long into the future.

To one named temporarily to the vacancy caused by his death until his successor can be elected in the general election on November 5, the respect and esteem in which he was held by his colleagues in this body and the influence he wielded is recognized in its true perspective. In my wholly inadequate efforts to fill his place, the Members of this body have been exceedingly cordial, considerate, and helpful. I thank you, one and all, for myself, the Governor and people of Alabama. I go back to them knowing that each and every one of you wish me to convey to the people of my State your individual sense of the loss you sustained in the death of John H. Bankhead, a great Alabamian, a great American.

STATEMENT BY SENATOR MEAD IN EXPLANATION OF ALIEN PROPERTY RETURN BILL

Mr. MEAD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a statement which I have prepared explaining Senate bill 2039.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

EXPLANATION BY SENATOR MEAD OF THE ALIEN PROPERTY RETURN BILL, S. 2039

The Trading With the Enemy Act of 1917, as amended, and the vesting practices pursued under it as a part of our economic warfare during World War II, have been aimed at the financial strength of enemy nations and their supporters, not at their victims. In partial recognition of this fact, President Truman, on March 8 of this year, gave his signature to House bill 4571, enacting into law as Public Law 322, the policy of permitting restoration and restitution of property vested in the Alien Property Custodian to their former owners, except where these owners fall within enumerated categories. Such ineligible persons include nonenemy nationals who voluntarily resided in enemy territory after December 7, 1941, and enemy nationals who were present in enemy or enemy-occupied territory after such date. No exception is made in the enumeration of these ineligibles in favor of individuals who were the victims of racial or religious persecution at the hands of enemy nations in which they had the misfortune to reside or to be present during the war.

Certainly the reasons of justice and humanity which led to the enactment of Public Law 322 apply with even greater force to the members of persecuted religious and racial groups within enemy countries. By no stretch of the imagination can these poor unfortunates who today constitute the displaced persons of central Europe be deemed to have been hostile to the United States. These are, indeed, the ones who have suffered most as the result of Nazi tyranny and cruelty; they should be among the first to receive the sympathy and support of our Government and our people. It would be strange justice if the United States Government were to make adequate provision for those who were fortunate enough to escape with their bodies as well as their possessions, but not for those people who were perhaps the recipients of gifts or legacies or who were able to place some small part of their property beyond the reach of the enemy, but themselves were unable to escape. It would be equally unrealistic to indulge the belief that the residence of these people in enemy countries during the war was voluntary, for it is common knowledge that they were held as prisoners, a majority of them having spent a great number of years in concentration camps.

A few illustrations, called to my attention by Dr. Stephen S. Wise, president of the American Jewish Congress, will serve to point up the manifest injustice of retaining the property of these people. In one instance, L. K., a woman of advanced age, resided in a town in southern Germany. She was deported in 1942 to the concentration camp in Theresienstadt. She was evacuated to Switzerland early in 1945 and has since been supported by UNRRA. L. K. had an interest in an inter-vivos trust which was created for her benefit many years before the war by a relative in the United States. This interest has already been vested by the Alien Property Custodian, and under the provisions of Public Law 322 it would be impossible for L. K. to establish her right to the restitution of this property, she being in an enemy country after December 7, 1941.

Another incident relates that on January 3, 1946, a group of persons arrived in the United States from an UNRRA camp in Philipsville, North Africa. These persons, through the efforts of the War Refugee Board, had been released in early 1945 from the Bergen Belsen concentration camp and had been evacuated first to Switzerland and then to North Africa. Most of these persons were destitute upon their arrival in the United States, but some had small assets in this country, over which the Alien Property Custodian now has jurisdiction. Under Public Law 322, these people have no possibility of having their property restored to them.

A third instance focuses attention upon the problem of nonenemy nationals resident in enemy territory. H. R. escaped from Germany to Holland with his two infant children in 1938. Upon invasion of Holland by the Nazis, he was arrested, imprisoned, and finally deported to Auschwitz concentration camp where he was killed on March 3, 1943. His two children, citizens of Great Britain, were held by the Germans in an internment camp for British civilian internees and after VE-day, they returned to Amsterdam with the aid of the British Government. These children are the only individuals now entitled to certain securities and cash assets which their father held in a bank account in New York City. The evidence is not clear, but assuming that the father was not an enemy national the children would still have the difficult burden of proving that their father's residence in enemy territory was involuntary. Certainly, for the victims of racial and religious persecution or for their heirs, such a burden of proof should not be imposed.

With reference to the three situations cited and to the multitude of similar situations that exist, the point of view has been expressed that Public Law 322 includes by implication the victims of racial and religious persecution who were unable to leave enemy territory. In the case of the nonenemy national, it has been said that persecution or imprisonment would be evidence of "involuntary" residence in enemy territory. In the case of the enemy national, it is suggested that Nazi and Nazi-inspired denaturalization laws effectively canceled the enemy citizenship of the victims of racial and religious persecution. In answer to these technical and legal arguments, I can only say that if persecution or imprisonment is to be considered proof of "involuntary" residence, then it is Congress' function to say so, and thereby eliminate the possibility of confused interpretation. On the other hand, are we to expect administrative and judicial arms of this Government to accord substance to the outrageous legislation of the Nazi regime. Further, assuming that for the purposes of Public Law 322, those deprived of citizenship by Nazi legislation are to be considered stateless persons, are their rights to restitution any more clear-cut. They would have an even more difficult burden of proof than nonenemy nationals in attempting to assert "involuntary" residence. Clearly, express legislation on behalf of these people is necessary in order to insure the protection of their interests.

I pause briefly to mention that in connection with both Allied military government in Europe and with the armistices signed by this country with Italy, Rumania, Bulgaria and Hungary, the interests of the victims of religious and racial persecution are singled out for protection. Thus, for example, the vesting of all the foreign assets of German citizens residing outside of Germany (Allied Military Government Law No. 5, sec. 3, dated October 30, 1945) expressly excluded the property of victims of persecution and discriminatory legislation. If, through our military government abroad, we decline to add to the affliction of these persons by seizing their property in other countries, are we to permit of the possibility of retaining their property in this country? Certainly, this is not within the contemplation of the way this country does business.

As to the over-all effect of the proposed amendment on the total assets held by the Alien Property Custodian, there is reason to believe that only a small fraction of such vested property was owned by persons whom it is now desired to make eligible for its return. The assets involved consist mostly of small holdings, mainly modest legacies or distributive shares in estates of relatives who were residents of this country. Yet, most of the former owners, whose property in their countries of origin or residence has been the object of spoliation, look to these small holdings over here as the only financial resource left to them for the creation of a new life and livelihood. It is little enough for them to expect that this country will not stand in their way. They include those presented because of racial, religious, and political reasons.

SURPLUS PROPERTY FOR VETERANS

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I wish to make an announcement which I know will be of great interest to all Members of the Senate. It will be remembered that early this year the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. MAYBANK], the junior Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CHAVEZ] and I introduced a bill to facilitate the disposal of surplus property among veterans. We felt that a great improvement could be obtained in the method of distribution of surplus property if the law were amended so as to require a specific set-aside of such property to which the veterans should have an exclusive right, in order that they might purchase it for their personal use and for the establishment of businesses in which they wish to engage or are engaged. Of course, there has been a great deal of dissatisfaction because the Government has not had sufficient surplus property to satisfy all the needs.

I have had numerous occasions to discuss this matter with the War Assets Administration, and I am very happy to announce to the Senate now that I hold in my hand a letter from General Littlejohn, the present Administrator of War Assets, who notifies me that he is expanding the inventory of surplus property for exclusive disposal to veterans, in accordance with the provisions of the measure to which I refer. I ask unanimous consent that the letter from General Littlejohn, Administrator of War Assets, may be printed in the RECORD at this point, as a part of my remarks.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

WAR ASSETS ADMINISTRATION,
Washington, D. C.

Hon. JOSEPH C. O'MAHONEY,
Chairman, Surplus Property Subcommittee of the Senate Military Affairs Committee, United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR O'MAHONEY: In the interest of carrying out the provisions and intent of the O'Mahoney-Manasco amendment to the Surplus Property Act (Public Law 375), I am taking action to increase considerably the number of items which will be set aside for exclusive disposal to veterans in accordance with the provisions of section 16 (b) of that act.

The items which I am adding to the veterans "set-aside" at this time are listed below: Wheel type tractors (commonly called farm type tractors); motor graders; concrete mixers (10 sacks and under); fork lift trucks (industrial type) (percentage of present inventory); tool kits (carpenters and other building crafts); barbed wire (suitable for farm use); power saws; refrigerators (reach-in and walk-in type); refrigerator display cases; food preparation electrical appliances (common to commercial use like restaurants, small bake shops, etc.); photographic equipment (items to be selected through collaboration with the commodity division and veterans division); binoculars; musical instruments; life rafts; sleeping bags; surveying equipment (like transits, levels, drafting instruments, etc.); desks, office chairs, filing cabinets, office tables, dictating equipment; cash registers; duplicating machines; adding machines; comptometers; fractional horsepower motors; prefabricated buildings (suitable for housing that have not been taken by the national housing authorities).

There are, of course, other priority claimants, most notably the Federal agencies, who have an interest in certain types of property included in the above amendatory list. This matter will be discussed with interested agencies in making final determinations with respect to the quantities of the items on the list. The same action will be taken with respect to subsequent lists which I expect to make available from time to time in the future.

It is my objective to see that veterans are accorded the rights and prerogatives with respect to surplus property that were granted them under Public Law 375.

I appreciate very much your sincere interest in this matter and, in accordance with your invitation, will look forward with anticipation to conferring with you on this and other subjects allied to the problem of disposal to veterans at your earliest convenience.

Respectfully yours,
ROBERT M. LITTLEJOHN,
Administrator.

ABOLITION OF PARKER RIVER NATIONAL WILDLIFE REFUGE, MASSACHUSETTS

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I dislike very much to take even a moment at this hour, because the Senate has been most patient. But while the Senator from Maine and the Senator from West Virginia are in the Chamber, I desire to ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of House bill 4362, Calendar No. 177. The bill has been discussed on the floor of the Senate. It was objected to by the Senator from West Virginia on behalf of some Senators who then were absent, but who since have withdrawn their objections.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, consideration of the bill at this time can be had only by unanimous consent, because a motion to have the Senate consider another matter is now pending.

Mr. WALSH. I realize that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read by title, for the information of the Senate.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. A bill (H. R. 4362) to abolish the Parker River National Wildlife Refuge in Essex County, Mass., to authorize and direct the restoration to the former owners of the land comprising such refuge, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Massachusetts?

There being no objection, the bill (H. R. 4362) was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RURAL ELECTRIFICATION ADMINISTRATION

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the body of the RECORD at this point a statement from the hearings of the subcommittee conducting the investigation of the Rural Electrification Administration, part IV, pages 1065 and 1066.

There being no objection, the matter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Senator SHIPSTEAD. That is all, then. I just wanted to clear that up.

Mr. BEEDY. That is all straightened out, I take it. The evidence shows that complaint came here to Senator SHIPSTEAD long before this investigation was started, by men in REA who were much concerned by what was going in REA, and came together, a little group of them——

Senator SHIPSTEAD (interposing). People back home?

Mr. BEEDY. Yes. And some people back home, believing, knowing that Senator SHIPSTEAD, as a matter of fact, was the first man in the Senate to bring out this idea of rural electrification here in Washington.

Senator SHIPSTEAD. My first activity with the REA, or with the institution of REA, was in 1934, by suggestion of the President of the United States.

Mr. BEEDY. You called it to his attention?

Senator SHIPSTEAD. I called it to his attention out of the experience I had had in attempting to get electricity for my own State, and as a result of that outline there was a widespread knowledge—I did not intend to testify here, but as long as this has been brought up, I will state it.

Mr. BEEDY. You sat silently by on this matter, and to my knowledge these were the facts that you are about to relate, and since the statement has been made here that selfish persons instituted this investigation and that you, apparently, consulted with them and relied upon them in good faith, I think it is quite natural, that this discussion should grow out of that statement.

Senator SHIPSTEAD. I might as well say, in view of the fact that it has been brought out, that in the summer of 1934 the general opinion was that you could not have a rural electric project without a great power project, water. We did not have that in a great part of the country. We could not have water in my part of the country, so I went to the President and told him I thought we could have electricity without water power, with Diesel engines or buy it from existing agencies. And I told him I thought it could be done on a large scale; that the farmer could have electricity as well as he could have a cheap automobile, if it was done on a large scale, and called attention to the mass production of Henry Ford, and within 2 or 3 days he sent Mr. Cooke and Mr. Herring. Mr. Cooke was chief engineer of the planning commission, and Mr. Herring was assistant engineer. They came to my office and said the President had sent them, and wanted to know if I could give them an outline of a practical project that they could survey. I asked them what they wanted and they said, "We would like to know how much business you can get on the line."

There happened to be at that time a man in a neighboring county who was mayor of a city there that had a cooperative distribution plant, and I called him in and we spread out a map on the floor of my office, a map of Minnesota, showing the counties. These engineers wanted to know if we could have a project in view to test the practicability of the plan and see what we could do. That was in 1934, and in the winter of 1935 we got some money from the Emergency Relief to send an engineer up there, and that engineer got the assistance of a number of engineers, and that winter they drove and made a survey of four counties to see if they could get enough business to start a plant. They made a good job of it. There were four cooperatives or municipal plants which we thought we could get electricity from. That was in the winter of 1935, and I think it was in May 1935 that the President issued an Executive order establishing the agency with the view of—the first idea was that electricity could be bought from these municipal plants, and we thought that if we could not get any bids at a reasonable rate from any of those municipal plants we could establish an REA plant. It took a long time before we finally got it, but when this agency was established they put up a very fine project, very well executed, and it has rendered very fine service.

Mr. BEEDY. When you found that you were unable to get your power from the municipal plants, and that there were enough customers to support a project, rural-electrification project, the result was the first Executive order establishing REA. How did it come about that Senator Norris fathered the legislation?

Senator SHIPSTEAD. Well, I don't know. It became evident that there should be legislation other than the Executive order, and I was not very well at the time and did not pay very much attention to it, but I supported the establishment of that agency after it had been operating under Executive order for some time.

Mr. BEEDY. Mr. Cooke was a very close friend of Senator Norris, was he not?

Senator SHIPSTEAD. Oh, yes. I went to the President and asked him to appoint Mr. Cooke.

Mr. BEEDY. First Administrator.

Senator SHIPSTEAD. Yes. I want to apologize for bringing this up, but as long as it was brought up I thought I would make that statement.

Mr. BEEDY. I brought it up, Senator. I will take the responsibility for it.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, in connection with the printing of the matter to which I have just referred, I desire to say that, as the public records show, the Rural Electrification Administration was first born officially on May 11, 1935. It was operated under Executive order until May 20, 1936. During that year it had established itself as a practical plan for the electrification of the rural areas. As a result, it was established by Public Law 605 on May 20, 1936, the author being Senator Norris.

It was then operated as an independent agency until July 1, 1939, when it was transferred to the Department of Agriculture. Such has been the written history of the birth of the Rural Electrification Administration but its genesis occurred earlier, in the summer of 1934 and the winter of 1935.

In the summer of 1934, farmers in Douglas and Stearns Counties, Minn., had made surveys to establish the feasibility of rural electrification if electric energy could be acquired at a reasonable cost. The results of these surveys were reported to the President and his advisers, and as early as January 1935, arrangements had been made to employ engineers to extend the survey during the winter of 1935. Funds for the expense of the surveys in Minnesota were allocated in the amount of $15,000 from the Federal Emergency Relief Administration, and on January 19, 1935, Mr. Hibben of the Federal Emergency Relief Administration sent Donald McKay to head the efficient survey in Minnesota, under the acting head of the Federal Emergency Relief Administration, L. P. Zimmerman.

Other engineers making that survey under the direction of Mr. Zimmerman were: Victor Viebaum, W. L. Woehler, John Gundersaug, C. C. Cutliff, Earl Eubank, E. O. Elstad, R. H. Flintt, Walter Burley, J. O. Tews, and Harold Dahl, all citizens of Minnesota.

The result of that survey sustained the opinion of the preliminary survey that had been made by private citizens in 1934 in Minnesota. As a result of the findings of these surveys, other surveys were instituted in different parts of the country, and resulted in the issuance of the Executive order of May 11, 1935. That is the date of the first establishment of the Rural Electrification Administration as a definite Government-fostered cooperative project.

The Executive order of the President endowed it with an allocation of $100,000,000 in funds. The results of the surveys made in Minnesota in 1934 by private citizens were conveyed to Mr. Cooke and Mr. Herring, who had been and were acting as engineers for the Mississippi Valley Resources Board, and to the President, and as a result, I had the privilege of making an address over a Nation-wide radio hook-up over the National Broadcasting Co. on Monday, December 31, 1934, New Year's Eve, 4 months prior to the issuance of the Executive order the following May.

The Washington Star printed the complete address in pamphlet form for public distribution, and I ask unanimous consent to have printed at this point in the RECORD the part of the address which deals with the proposed program for rural electrification. Let me say that the program became official on May 11, 1935.

There being no objection, the matter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

In a country as large and rich in resources as ours the farmer who feeds the Nation has the right to enjoy the comforts and conveniences of modern invention, machinery and electricity that is enjoyed by his brother in the cities. With this in view, President Roosevelt, a year ago, appointed a commission to investigate the possibilities of bringing electric power and light for use by farmers and farmers' wives at a price they can afford to pay. He recognized that a method could be found to bring electricity to the farms, at prices farmers can afford to pay, for pumping water, sawing wood, grinding feed, operating washing machines and flatirons, with electric lights for the house and the barn, and even used for cooking. He said: "Electricity can relieve the drudgery of the housewife on the farm and lift a great burden off the shoulders of the hard-working farmer." Of the 6,000,000 farms in the United States 5,000,000 are entirely without electric service.

In the opinion of the President's commission, the number of these which now can be economically given service range from 1,000,000 to 3,000,000, and these can be given electricity at a price they can afford to pay only if electrification is undertaken on a wide scale. The commission says: "Unless the Federal Government assumes an active leadership, assisted in particular instances by State and local agencies, only a negligible part of this task can be accomplished within any reasonable time."

The big problem in rural electrification is not the cost of generating energy, but the cost of delivering it to the rural customer. In Canada, Great Britain, France and other countries this fact has been recognized.

"Several reasons might be advanced," says the commission, "to explain why only 10 percent of the Nation's farms (less than 6 percent in the Mississippi Valley) purchase electricity. These are the lack of interest by operating companies in rural electrification, high cost of line construction because of the unnecessarily expensive type of line used, onerous restrictions covering rural line extensions and high rates."

Having recognized the advantages of rural electric service and reached the conclusion that only under Government leadership and control is any considerable electrification of "dirt farms" possible, we face the obvious obligation of getting it done. An allotment of $100,000,000 actually to build independent, self-liquidating rural projects would in the opinion of the commission, exert a mighty influence in various directions.

The report then continues: "This plan calls for serving territory not now occupied and not likely to be occupied to any considerable extent by private interests. The proposal has become possible only recently through the marvelous development of the Diesel engine, which could be used for power in regions where high-line extensions are not feasible. Another source of power would be small hydro plants where suitable sites are available. In cases where it is practicable, public transmission lines utilizing either Government or private power sources could be erected. Rural distribution lines will cost from $500 to $800 per mile to construct, and to amortize this cost in 20 years involves a cost to each of three consumers on a mile of line of about $1 a month."

Planning on a wide scale, say of service to 500,000 farms in units of 1,500 farms, the total cost, if generating plants are included for each unit, would be $330 per farm; but if one-half of the units can be supplied from existing sources the total cost would be about $280 per farm. In both cases the outlay would be amortized through an appropriate element in the rate.

The commission further says: "If it be objected that it is not sound economics for the Government to build stations when the present generating capacity cannot or does not find a market, the answer is that this criticism places the cart before the horse and ignores the social purpose underlying the policy proposed."

It is estimated that if electrification of the farm is done under Government direction and on a large scale that the conveniences of electric light and power can be brought to the farm for one-half or less than one-half the price of a modern cheap automobile. And this cost, under the system of financing recommended, could be paid off at a small monthly charge added to the light and power bill over a period of 20 or 30 years. Under this plan the conveniences of the city can be brought to the farm at a price so low that the farmer and his wife could not only afford it under the income we expect them to receive, but he will demand it from the social order for which he supplies the foundation and nourishment.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at this point a copy of the Executive order of the President establishing the Rural Electrification Administration.

There being no objection, the Executive order was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

EXECUTIVE ORDER No. 7037

ESTABLISHMENT OF THE RURAL ELECTRIFICATION ADMINISTRATION

By virtue of and pursuant to the authority vested in me under the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1935, approved April 8, 1935 (Public Res. No. 11, 74th Cong.), I hereby establish an agency within the Government to be known as the Rural Electrification Administration, the head thereof to be known as the Administrator.

I hereby prescribe the following duties and functions of the said Rural Electrification Administration to be exercised and performed by the Administrator thereof to be hereafter appointed:

To initiate, formulate, administer, and supervise a program of approved projects with respect to the generation, transmission, and distribution of electric energy in rural areas.

In the performance of such duties and functions, expenditures are hereby authorized for necessary supplies and equipment; lawbooks and books of reference, directories, periodicals, newspapers and press clippings; travel expenses, including the expense of attendance at meetings when specifically authorized by the Administrator; rental at the seat of government and elsewhere, purchase, operation, and maintenance of passenger-carrying vehicles; printing and binding; and incidental expenses; and I hereby authorize the Administrator to accept and utilize such voluntary and uncompensated services and, with the consent of the State, such State and local officers and employees, and appoint, without regard to the provisions of the civil-service laws, such officers and employees, as may be necessary, prescribe their duties and responsibilities and, without regard to the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, fix their compensation: Provided, That insofar as practicable, the persons employed under the authority of this Executive order shall be selected from those receiving relief.

To the extent necessary to carry out the provisions of this Executive order the Administrator is authorized to acquire, by purchase or by the power of eminent domain, any real property or any interest therein and improve, develop, grant, sell, lease (with or without the privilege of purchasing), or otherwise dispose of any such property or interest therein.

For the administrative expenses of the Rural Electrification Administration there is hereby allocated to the Administration from the appropriation made by the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1935 the sum of $75,000. Allocations will be made hereafter for authorized projects.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, May 11, 1935.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, it has been said that the evil that men do lives after them, but the good they do often is interred with their bones; but so far as President Roosevelt is concerned, the good he did for the farmers of America, especially in connection with the Rural Electrification Administration, will stand as a monument to him.

Mr. President, before I take my seat, I wish to say that I would be lacking in gratitude and in courtesy if on this occasion I did not mention the gratitude I feel for the many courtesies I have received at the hands of every Member of this body. I have had the privilege of serving in the Senate for nearly a quarter of a century; my service here has been for a quarter of a century lacking 1 year. I have enjoyed the comradeship and the service I have had here, and I wish to thank every individual Senator for the many courtesies I have had at his hands. I should like to do so personally; but I know that many Senators are about to leave, so I take this opportunity to thank them, and particularly to thank the distinguished President pro tempore of the Senate, the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR].

CONTRACT SETTLEMENTS

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD two reports of the Comptroller General of the United States dealing with contract settlements. I do this because the reports show the wonderful operations which this agency of our Government has been conducting.

There being no objection, the reports were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

COMPTROLLER GENERAL OF THE UNITED STATES,
Washington, August 27, 1945.

The PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE.

SIR: Transmitted herewith is a report of the activities of the General Accounting Office under section 16 of the Contract Settlement Act of 1944.

Respectfully,

LINDSAY C. WARREN,
Comptroller General of the United States.

COMPTROLLER GENERAL OF THE UNITED STATES,
Washington, August 27, 1945.

The CONGRESS:

The first year of operations under the Contract Settlement Act of 1944, having ended it is deemed proper at this time to report to the Congress a summary of the activities of the General Accounting Office under the provisions of section 16 of the said act.

With the enactment of the Contract Settlement Act of 1944, there was for immediate consideration the devising of an orderly procedure for the proper discharge of the functions and duties prescribed by the act for performance by the General Accounting Office. The procedure developed and now in effect for such purpose, covered by office order No. 57, was designed with the view of assigning to each division of the General Accounting Office the task which, by reason of prior experience, it was best equipped to perform. Also, this order established a Committee on Termination Settlements to review reports emanating from the various divisions of the General Accounting Office relating to matters arising under section 16 of the act, and to advise me with regard thereto. Under the procedure so established the General Accounting Office has endeavored to perform to the fullest extent practicable its limited functions in respect of contract termination settlements. A copy of office order No. 57 is attached hereto.

Under subsection (a) of section 16 of the Contract Settlement Act, the function of the General Accounting Office with respect to any termination settlement of a war contract is confined to determining, after final settlement, (1) whether the settlement payments to the war contractor were made in accordance with the settlement, and (2) whether the records transmitted to it, or other information, warrant a reasonable belief that the settlement was induced by fraud. The first of these functions requires merely the simple operation of checking the voucher covering payment to the contractor with the related termination settlement to ascertain that the amounts shown thereon are in agreement. In the performance of the second function—that of determining whether the settlement was induced by fraud—since, only in rare instances, have the records transmitted to the General Accounting Office with respect to the termination settlements made by the contracting agencies included any papers other than a voucher, supported merely by a settlement agreement, which, obviously, is insufficient for the purpose of properly determining the existence of fraud, it has been necessary for the representatives of the General Accounting Office to examine the records of the contracting agencies and of the contractors relating to such termination settlements at the place or places where such records were kept. To the extent that an examination of these records has been made, the reports received thereon have not warranted a reasonable belief that any settlement was induced by fraud. However, it is to be recognized that, in the discharge of the duty of discovering fraud in the settlement of termination claims, the General Accounting Office has no authority to examine the records relating to such settlements until after final payment has been made thereunder. While cognizant of, and with no intent to minimize, the salutary effect of the examination of such records, in my judgment—no matter with what exacting care an examination may be made of the records relating to the final termination settlements—the difficulties attendant in any post audit of such settlements to ascertain whether or to what extent fraud is present, render it highly improbable that fraud will be disclosed in other than a negligible percentage of such cases. In an attempt—to the extent consistent with the provisions of the Contract Settlement Act—to overcome this handicap in the protection of the interests of the Government, there, recently, has been worked out and put into effect a cooperative arrangement whereby the field representatives of the General Accounting Office and the field representatives of the War Frauds Section of the Department of Justice will exchange any information obtained tending to indicate fraud in the settlement by prime and subcontractors of the termination claims of their subcontractors. In this connection, the third report, April 1945, by the Director of Contract Settlement to the Congress, relative to settlement procedures, contains a statement as follows:

"One method of streamlining settlement procedures, already in effect, is delegation of authority to prime and subcontractors to make final settlements of their own subcontracts. Blanket authority has been given to all contractors to settle all claims of less than $1,000, where the subcontractor retains or disposes of all inventory. In addition, specific authority is given to selected contractors to make final settlements of their subcontractors' claims of $10,000 or less. Such authority has been given to 2,340 contractors by one or more technical services of the War Department; to 130 contractors by one or more bureaus of the Navy Department; and to 9 contractors by the Maritime Commission. The system of delegations now in use could cover over 90 percent of all subcontractors' claims and does cover at least 60 percent of such claims."

A further considerable increase in the number of contractors to whom authority has been given to make final settlement of their subcontractors' termination claims of $10,000 or less is shown in the fourth report, July 1945, by the Director of Contract Settlement to the Congress. While this practice of delegating authority to war contractors to make final settlement of the termination claims of their subcontractors, generally without review by the contracting agencies, is expressly authorized under section 7 (a) of the Contract Settlement Act, it is my opinion—apparently shared by the Department of Justice—that it affords a most fertile field for the perpetration of fraud and thus properly requires special attention in the prevention and detection thereof. It is believed that operations under the cooperative arrangement referred to above will prove beneficial both to the Department of Justice and to the General Accounting Office in the performance of their respective functions under the act, and, further, that it is consistent with and sanctioned by the stated objective of the act as set forth in subsection (f) of section 1 thereof, "to use all practicable methods * * * to prevent improper payments and to detect and prosecute fraud."

In addition to the aforementioned examination being made of the termination settlements and the related records in the performance of the functions prescribed by section 16 (a) of the act, special investigations of such settlements are being conducted, as provided by section 16 (c) of the act, for the purpose of reporting to the Congress from time to time as to whether the settlement methods and procedures employed by the contracting agencies are of a kind and type designed to result in expeditious and fair settlements in accordance with and subject to the provisions of the act and the orders and regulations of the Director of Contract Settlement; whether such methods and procedures are followed by such agencies with care and efficiency; and whether such methods and procedures adequately protect the interest of the Government.

Based on the reports so far received on the results of such investigations, there is not perceived at this time any serious objection to the settlement methods and procedures employed by the contracting agencies. In this connection I have had occasion to meet several times with the Director of Contract Settlement and with representatives of the principal contracting agencies for the purpose of discussing with them problems arising in connection with the termination and settlement program and the administrative regulations dealing therewith, particularly insofar as they affect the duties of the General Accounting Office under the act. One of the matters considered in a series of discussions with the interested contracting agencies—primarily the War and Navy Departments—has been the establishment of a procedure which would permit the settlement of terminated cost-plus-a-fixed-fee contracts to be kept abreast of the settlement of fixed-price contracts and at the same time afford proper protection of the interests of the Government. The procedure worked out and put into effect is set forth in paragraphs 560 to 569.5, section V, part 6, Army-Navy Joint Termination Regulation.

Relative to the number of all types of contracts terminated, the speed with which settlement has been effected—both of fixed price and cost-plus-a-fixed-fee termination claims—and the time lag between the final settlement of termination claims and the date of the actual receipt by the prime contractors and subcontractors of the money owed to them, as disclosed in the several reports by the Director of Contract Settlement to the Congress, I have noted the indicated gradual and continuous reduction in the average time required for settlement of terminated contract claims. However, in the enactment of the Contract Settlement Act, a dual purpose is evident—to expedite the fair settlement of termination claims and to protect the interest of the Government. It is to be hoped that the achievement by the contracting agencies of the first of these objectives will not be at the expense of the latter. While no objection is perceived to the emphasis and stress which has continued to be placed on the devising of new procedures to speed the settlement of termination claims, a careful surveillance and check of settlement operations is being made and, in the event too great a price is found to have been paid for such speed, such matters will be brought immediately to the attention of the contracting agency, the Director of Contract Settlement, and to the Congress, as required by the act. Based on information received to the effect that relatively few war contractors have made application for interim financing—available to them under the act during the period between the termination of their war contracts and the receipt of payment of their termination claims—as confirmed by the reports of the Director of Contract Settlement that demand for interim financing has been very light, the conclusion appears warranted that, for the most part, war contractors have no pressing need for funds due them upon the termination of their contracts. There thus appears little or no occasion for any undue haste by the contracting agencies in the settlement of termination claims at the sacrifice of a careful and adequate examination and analysis of such claims.

While, as reported above, there has been found nothing in the methods and procedures prescribed by the contracting agencies for the guidance of their representatives in the settlement of termination claims to which objection or recommendation for improvement need be made at this time, the real test of the adequacy of such methods and procedures comes in the application thereof by such representatives in the performance of actual terminations and settlements. In this connection, the audit of the termination settlements made by the contracting agencies has disclosed an instance of an apparent attempt by the representatives of a contracting agency, under purported authority of the Contract Settlement Act, to reopen negotiations and to make a further payment under a contract which had been terminated and finally settled before the effective date of the act. Such action is prohibited specifically by the provisions of the act and will be the subject of appropriate corrective means when disclosed in the examination of termination settlements. Continued careful and close attention is being given to the reports received relative to operations under the methods and procedures prescribed by the contracting agencies and, in the event of any disclosure of matters indicating a failure on the part of the contracting agencies to follow the prescribed methods and procedures with care and efficiency or failure of such methods and procedures adequately to protect the interest of the Government, appropriate action with a view to the correction thereof will be taken promptly in accordance with the act.

LINDSAY C. WARREN,
Comptroller General of the United States.

COMPTROLLER GENERAL OF THE UNITED STATES,
Washington, July 26, 1946.

The PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE.

SIR: Transmitted herewith is a report of the activities of the General Accounting Office under section 16 of the Contract Settlement Act of 1944.

Respectfully,

LINDSAY C. WARREN,
Comptroller General of the United States.

COMPTROLLER GENERAL OF THE
UNITED STATES,
Washington, July 26, 1946.

The CONGRESS:

The second year of operations under the Contract Settlement Act of 1944 having ended, it is deemed proper at this time to supplement my previous report to the Congress of August 27, 1945, with a further review of the activities of the General Accounting Office under the provisions of section 16 of the said act.

The function of the General Accounting Office with respect to the settlement of termination claims of war contractors, as prescribed and limited by subsection (a) of section 16 of the Contract Settlement Act, is confined to that of determining, after final settlement of such claims by the contracting agency, (1) whether the settlement payments to the war contractor were made in accordance with the settlement, and (2) whether the records transmitted to it, or other information, warrant a reasonable belief that the settlement was induced by fraud; also, under subsection (c) of the same section of the act, this Office is authorized to investigate the settlements completed by the contracting agencies for the purpose of reporting to the Congress from time to time on (1) whether the settlement methods and procedures employed by the contracting agencies are of a kind and type designed to result in expeditious and fair settlements in accordance with and subject to the provisions of the act and the orders and regulations of the Director of Contract Settlement; (2) whether such methods and procedures are followed by such agencies with care and efficiency; and (3) whether such methods and procedures adequately protect the interest of the Government.

The procedures devised for the performance by the General Accounting Office of these restricted functions in respect of contract termination settlements were set forth in my previous report to the Congress and need not be repeated here. Such procedures have proven to be adequate for the proper discharge of these functions and no revision thereof has been required or made.

Based on the reports received relative to the contract termination settlements effected by the contracting agencies, no instance has been found in which the settlement payments to the war contractor were not in accordance with the settlement agreement. However, in the course of the performance of the function of determining whether any settlement agreement was induced by fraud, evidence has been found which appears to warrant a reasonable belief that at least four of such settlements were induced by fraud. If on the basis of the further examination and analysis presently being made of such cases, I am convinced that any of such settlements were induced by fraud appropriate action will be taken promptly in accordance with the act to report such cases to the Department of Justice, to the Director of Contract Settlement, and to the contracing agency concerned. In this connection, the attention of the Congress again is invited to the fact that, in the discharge of its duty, in the examination of the settlements of termination claims, the General Accounting Office has no authority to examine the records relating to such settlements until after final payment has been made thereunder. Nothing has changed my opinion, as heretofore repeatedly expressed, that—no matter with what exacting care an examination may be made of the records relating to the final termination settlements—the evident difficulties in any post audit of such settlements to ascertan whether or to what extent fraud is present renders it highly improbable that fraud perpetrated by war contractors in the settlement of their termination claims, which at best is difficult of proof, will ever be disclosed in other than a negligible percentage of such cases.

A careful analysis of the methods and procedures prescribed by the contracting agencies for the guidance of their representatives in the settlement of termination claims has not disclosed any basis for criticism thereof from the standpoint of being of a kind and type designed to result in expeditious and fair settlements in accordance with and subject to the provisions of the Contract Settlement Act of 1944 and the regulations of the Director of Contract Settlement. Also, the reports received on the results of the investigations of the termination settlements made by the representatives of the contracting agencies indicate that in the vast majority of cases the prescribed settlement methods and procedures have been followed with care and efficiency. However, a few instances have been found in which excessive allowances have been made to war contractors by reason of computation of costs on a basis other than that sanctioned by recognized commercial accounting practices; by reliance upon certificates of war contractors as to costs incurred without apparent corroboration of the correctness of the facts so certified; by failure properly to apply the prescribed settlement methods and procedures; or for other reasons. However, it is to be understood, of course, that the United States is precluded by the act from recovering any amounts found to have been improperly paid to contractors or subcontractors under such settlements, except where it can be established that such overpayments resulted from fraud. Accordingly, in an attempt to protect the interest of the Government—to the extent consistent with the provisions of the Contract Settlement Act—such matters have been and are being brought to the attention of the contracting agency concerned with the suggestion that in order that future overpayments of a like nature will not be made, the personnel engaged in termination settlement activities be informed thereof.

In the course of the performance of the function of investigating settlements completed by the contracting agencies for the purposes as outlined in section 16 (c) of the act, several cases have been found in which the contracting officers or contracting officers' representatives who, on behalf of the Government, have executed or assisted in executing termination settlements were later hired by the war contractors involved after leaving the Government service. In such cases, the settlements involved are being accorded special attention and investigation for any indication of improper payments thereunder.

With respect to whether the settlement methods and procedures prescribed by the contracting agencies adequately protect the interest of the Government, the reports received thereon have disclosed no proper basis for objection thereto on that account. That is to say, to the extent that instances have been disclosed of excessive, improper, or even apparently fraudulent payments upon termination claims the fault would seem to lie not with the administrative settlement methods and procedures but with the individuals charged with the execution thereof, and such instances may be regarded as a natural and expected result of the failure to provide in the act—as consistently urged by me prior to the enactment thereof—for an audit and review of the settlements of termination claims by an agency independent of the contracting agencies before such settlements became final and before final payments were made thereunder.

LINDSAY C. WARREN,
Comptroller General of the United States.

AUTHORIZATION FOR SPECIAL COMMITTEE INVESTIGATING NATIONAL DEFENSE PROGRAM TO FILE ADDITIONAL REPORTS

Mr. MEAD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to call up Senate Resolution 310.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be read, for the information of the Senate.

The resolution (S. Res. 310) submitted by Mr. MEAD on July 24, 1946, was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Special Committee Investigating the National Defense Program be authorized to file additional reports with the Secretary of the Senate following the sine die adjournment of the Senate and that they be printed as parts of Senate Report No. 110.

Mr. TAFT. Reserving the right to object, let me inquire whether the resolution, if adopted, would authorize the filing and printing of reports prepared by the Mead committee.

Mr. MEAD. Yes. This resolution was recommended by the unanimous vote of the committee. It provides for the filing of reports with the Secretary of the Senate, so that they will be available when the Senate meets in January. The resolution is similar to the ones which are customarily adopted preceding recesses or adjournments of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There being no objection, the resolution was considered and agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, for the benefit of the Senate I wish to say that following the address which the Senator from Alabama [Mr. HILL] desires to make, I shall ask unanimous consent for consideration of the House bills on two pages of the calendar which have been reported since the last call of the calendar. I may say that inasmuch as the House of Representatives has already adjourned sine die, it would be a futile gesture for the Senate to pass a House bill to which it added any amendment. But there are a few bills on the calendar which have come from the House of Representatives and have been reported without amendment, and I wish to ask that they be considered before the Senate finally adjourns.

Mr. REVERCOMB. Mr. President, I wish to ask the Senator from Kentucky a question. Does he refer to pages 9, 10, and 11 of the calendar?

Mr. BARKLEY. I refer to pages 9, 10, and only one bill on page 11.

REVIEW OF BOOK, THE REVOLT OF THE SOUTH AND WEST

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. President, the great problem which faces this body on the domestic scene is the development of the backward industrial areas of our South and our West.

Many students, scholars, and journalists have studied the obstacles which have kept our South and West in comparative poverty. Nearly all have come to the conclusion that the constricting hold of monopoly is at the root of the difficulties of the South and West.

Southern and western Senators particularly will be interested in a very recent study of this basic problem, a book entitled "The Revolt of the South and West," written by A. G. Mezerik, a well-known journalist and author. I recommend this book to all, whether they live in the South, the West, the North, or the East, for if Mr. Mezerik's program is adopted, the entire United States, and not just parts of it, will be prosperous.

Newspapers, governors, and leading industrialists have already commended the book, which has been well described in a review in the Chicago Law Bulletin.

I ask unanimous consent that a copy of this review be printed in the RECORD at this point in connection with my remarks.

There being no objection, the review was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

A REPORT ON THE ECONOMIC AWAKENING OF SOUTH AND WEST—THE REVOLT OF THE SOUTH AND WEST, BY A. G. MEZERIK; DUELL, SLOAN & PEARCE

As one reads Mr. Mezerik's latest book, one thinks immediately of that other great book on much the same subject and in much the same vein, Other People's Money. Written by the late Justice Louis D. Brandeis, it was a collection of articles he had published in Collier's in 1913. In them he covered the report of the famous Pujo committee and the ramifications which the techniques and power of certain financial leaders had upon the economic, political, and social life of the country. And Brandeis' book was a potent stimulant which activated public opinion.

Similarly, some of Mr. Mezerik's material has appeared in various periodicals, and similarly it has been collected into a book. Finally, it packs a ton of dynamite, which like its predecessor may serve to consolidate public opinion against the moribund influence of eastern financial power. (Odd, how many of the characters are even the same.)

It is Mr. Mezerik's thesis that eastern financial power, consciously as well as by a kind of inevitableness, has, by one means or another, suppressed the growth and development of industry in the South and West.

However, he believes that at least these regions (two-thirds of our geographical area, one-half of all the population) are awakening to their plight and becoming aware of the source of their poverty—and that the rebellion is on against the slow strangulation by the East. Indeed, it is vital that this revolution be successful. Our American future, prosperous and free from sectionalism, depends on the release of the South and West from their chains. And what we do at home will be reflected in what we do abroad.

Now do not get Mr. Mezerik wrong. When he speaks of revolution he does not mean armed bands roaming the streets, violently taking over various facilities, nor the advent of communism. That concept of revolution was shown to be erroneous by George Soulé back in 1933 when he wrote The Coming American Revolution. No, Mr. Mezerik wants to see changes occur within the framework of our present system, and he wants to infuse new meaning into free enterprise. It should stand for first-class economic citizenship in a prosperous land, and not just larger private government by default.

And do not think that Mr. Mezerik is a starry-eyed dreamer enmeshed in impractical meanderings. Like Justice Brandeis, he has taken bony statistics and clothed them with meaty significance.

After carefully presenting and analyzing many figures, he concludes that "The South [the Southern people are sick because they are poor—poorly fed, poorly clad, poorly housed], oldest of the subordinated regions, is altogether too good a barometer for the future of the West. As the West's raw resources are expended, it will face these very same problems. Unless it can break loose and build its future without benefit of eastern domination. That will not be easy."

He understands the meaning of the corporation as a modern key to power—he seems to agree with David Lasser's findings as expressed in Private Monopoly—and points up graphically the relatively small clique of individuals and families that control the industrial enterprise of the country.

He is sensitive to the enormous effect which interest rates (they are higher in the South and West than in the East), freight rates (which are responsible for the concentration of manufacturing in the East, to the exclusion of the South and West), the absence of western steel production and the presence of tariffs have on the pattern of American industrial development.

But he is not blind to the faults of the South and West for which they are in a great deal responsible—race prejudice, phony sectionalism, self-pity, and inertia. And he does not hesitate to ladle out the blame where it is due.

The growth of industry—and by this is meant manufacturing capacity—in the South and West cannot be achieved by sweet reasonableness. The stakes are too high. Action is required—and has been forthcoming. Georgia Governor Arnall's recent successful opening round in the Supreme Court to secure reconsideration of prejudicial freight rates, the FTC's success against the basing-point system, and a Presidential Cabinet of southerners and westerners, are a few of the signs which are legible. (Do not think, though, that the ghost has been given up. Compare the recently published report of Senator MURRAY's small business committee.)

"The South and West are on their way. They have tools—decentralization forced by the atomic bomb, TVA, war-built plants, new political power, new skills, and knowledge. They will use them. They have the leaders and they have the determination. They have strong allies in the East among those who want a free democratic Nation.

"The facts are all in. The story is not difficult to assimilate. The West and South will certainly give full cooperation to the East in a joint project to build for this country a better, a sounder economic pattern, where everyone shares in a great prosperity."

Amen.

PRESIDENTIAL VETO OF TIDELANDS BILL

Mr. MOORE. Mr. President, the tidelands bill, just vetoed by the President for political capital was, in effect, a congressional statement of national policy that integrity of States' rights to tidelands should not be disputed. The veto is a denial of congressional will on questions of national policy contrary to well established law.

The smear of the oil industry was used as a smoke screen to divert the public from the fact that control of their rivers and harbors, including all State and private installations, are now under cloud of title.

UNIFICATION OF WAR AND NAVY DEPARTMENTS

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, it is with great regret that I see this Congress coming to a close without an opportunity to lay before the Senate the case for Senate bill 2044, to unify the War and Navy Departments into a single Department of Common Defense. It is a serious setback to the best interests of the national defense at a very crucial time in the affairs of the world. There has been so much misinformation put out in public propaganda against this bill that it is most unfortunate that Senators will go home without an opportunity for hearing the full debate on the question. I am confident that if the Senate had heard this debate and heard the simple and logical truths in answer to this widespread propaganda the Senate would not have gone home without voting favorably on this important measure for the common defense.

Mr. President, since the bill is not now before us, I would not now arise, were it not for the speech attacking S. 2044, which the distinguished Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HART] delivered in the Senate last week.

In that speech the Senator ably summed up the Navy's case against the President's program for a single department of common defense. I might add that the Navy's case is the only case against it. The vast majority of the people are for it and the country needs it badly.

The Navy case is an understandable one—from the selfish viewpoint of the Navy only. It feels that it has emerged from the war with a splendid integrated air-ground-sea team that has proved itself nobly in the Pacific war. It has complete unity of command in this team and it has a single department. It has, in short, within itself, everything that is sought in S. 2044. Frankly, the Navy knows—as all military men know—that the war of the future is sure to require just such a closely knit team of air-sea-ground forces as the Navy now has. The Navy is now much better organized for the purpose than are the armed forces of the country as a whole. Without unification, the Army and Army Air Forces cannot possibly organize or prepare such a modern force. The Navy has a ground force larger than was the Army Ground Force before World War II. They have an Air Force larger than was the Army Air Forces before World War II, and they have all the sea power. From their own selfish interest, there is absolutely no reason why they should be united with a larger air force that would inevitably tend to absorb part of their competing air force and a larger ground force that would tend to absorb part of their large and competing ground force.

But how about the public interest? How about the common defense? How long can we afford the upkeep of two competing and duplicating ground and air forces?

If the Navy's ground-air-sea team forms the true pattern for the war of the future, how long can we afford to rest our common defense on an archaic pattern?

Mr. President, stripped of all extraneous issues, S. 2044—the single department bill—amounts merely to this:

You transfer the Army and Army Air Forces to the Navy Department and change the name of the Navy Department to the Department of Common Defense. And then you abolish the War Department.

Stripped of personalities, that is all there is to it. Now, how do personalities enter into this? Admiral Nimitz knows. Here is what he said about it:

I prefer that we have a single department, make it a straight chain of command from the President on down, one responsible man who is the boss * * *. I believe that if such an organization * * * is adopted it will be necessary to build on exactly what we have now * * *. I think this is going to be a question of gradual transition, rather than a question of presto chango, a new set-up. I don't think you can work it any other way, because you have a tremendous civilian staff that has to be gradually moved, and if you try to move them too fast, they are going to block you. They have a hell of a lot of influence.

There you are, Mr. President, Admiral Nimitz made that statement when he had unity of command in the Pacific—when he was out from under the influence of the Washington bureaus. He knew where the resistance would come from. And just as soon as he came home and had to report directly to them, he found out—in his own words that—"They have a hell of a lot of influence."

They do not want a single ground-air-sea team under any other single department than their own well-established bureau. If we add the Army and Air Forces to their set-up, which is what this bill does, they will have to share the prestige and patronage with others, and this they do not want. But the public wants it and the country must have it.

We can afford no other organization than the best. The Navy has proved that the integrated land-sea-air team is the best. We want that organization for the country. We want the best brains and the best men to run the team. I, for one, am not afraid of the Navy's chances in mixing its top brains and men with the Army's top brains and men in the overall leadership of the sea-air-ground team. In this respect I have more confidence in the Navy's present leadership than the Senator from Connecticut is willing to admit. He kept referring to a 2 to 1 ratio by which the Navy would be outnumbered or outvoted in the high command and single department of the armed forces. During World War II we had more two-star admirals and admirals of higher rank than we had two-star generals and generals of higher rank, although there were more than twice the number of soldiers than there were sailors.

After all, what is there to this two to one argument? May we not expect the Army and Navy to see eye to eye on just as many subjects vis-à-vis the Air Force as the air and Navy will agree on against the Army viewpoint? Why should the Navy assume that the top military and airmen of the country will always fail to agree with the battleship men on questions affecting the common defense? Admiral Nimitz stated his views on this question very clearly when he said, at Pearl Harbor, in 1944:

The conduct of war is the application of force, and I would expect the average officer who devotes himself with reasonable diligence to his profession, whether he grows up with the Army or the Navy or the Air Force, to have acquired a complete working knowledge of his own specialty, and that as he gets older and has studied what has gone before, to have a knowledge of how to use the power that is inherent in the others. For instance, I think that there are very few senior Army officers that haven't got a concept of how to use sea power, how to use air power. That same is true of the Navy. A lot of people know how to use the ground troops, what they are for, and know how to exploit air power; the same way with the air.

The Senator expressed fear that the Navy would be outnumbered politically. He forgets that this is not a political bill. It does nothing to the Navy that it does not do equally to the Ground and Air Forces. The present naval opponents of unification tend to forget that the question of how our common defense should be organized is not a question for the Secretary of the Navy to decide. It is a matter for the President, as Commander in Chief of the armed forces, and the Congress, under its constitutional duty to raise and support armies. It is a matter of the national interest, not of the political interest of any particular bureau or service.

If we were to follow the Navy's thinking in this matter we would come to the next war—if we are forced to come to another war—with an integrated ground-sea-and-air force under the Navy Department only. Then in order to get the maximum efficient use out of our other ground and air forces we would have to attach them to the Navy. This would be fine for the prestige of the Secretary of the Navy and the bureaus of the Navy Department, which would then become in effect the Department of Common Defense. Now, that is exactly what we want to do now in S. 2044. We want to do it in peacetime, while there is time to do it, in an orderly and efficient fashion; not by another makeshift like that Pearl Harbor forced us to in 1942.

The Senator would have us believe that this whole scheme of unification is a vast Army plot to sink the Navy, cooked up by ex-West Point cadet generals bearing an Army-Navy football game grudge, against ex-middy admirals. And that the plot was cooked up while the Navy was too busy fighting the war to guard its political fences.

Now, our subcommittee which drafted S. 2044, consisting of the distinguished senior Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS], the distinguished Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN], and myself, went pretty deep into the history of this merger proposal.

Mr. HART. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GOSSETT in the chair). Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. HILL. I yield.

Mr. HART. May I ask the Senator if he is cognizant of what has come to be known as the Collins plan?

Mr. HILL. Yes; I am cognizant of the Collins plan, and if the Senator will bear with me a moment and let me state a few facts, I think perhaps he will have his question answered. We found that unification has been a very live issue among the services for years, long, long before any Collins plan was ever heard of or dreamed of or ever submitted. The question reached a head just after the First World War when Gen. Billy Mitchell was so severely squelched by the Army brass hats much as the admirals who favored unification during World War II have now been squelched by the Navy brass hats.

The opening gun of the World War II merger issue was fired by the Navy in 1941. If you will turn your minds back to June 20 of that year you will remember the gloom that then surrounded the Allied cause. Western Europe was under the control of Hitler. There was serious question whether Britain could hold out against the heavy air attacks to which she had been continuously subjected for eight long months. The Germans had just overrun the Balkans and driven the British out of Greece. Crete had just capitulated to German airborne assault. These were darkest days. In this critical hour, the General Board of the Navy recommended the creation of a Joint United States General Staff to be headed by a single officer. This officer, with his staff, was to be directly responsible to the President. He was to be given authority to issue directives to the War and Navy Departments. The Navy, in fact, proposed an over-all military command with no over-all civilian secretary. The General Board of the Navy went on to say:

> The General Board is convinced that through the procedure outlined herein, preliminary broad planning can best be accomplished, employment of the best available means obtained, essential unity of command assured, and thorough indoctrination for the coordination of effort achieved.

This was the Navy plan in 1941.

Mr. HART. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. HILL. I yield.

Mr. HART. I ask the Senator if that plan is not in substance what was actually accomplished by the formation and use of the joint staff which functioned all through the war?

Mr. HILL. No, not exactly.

Mr. HART. It was pretty close to it.

Mr. HILL. The general staff during the war had to act by unanimous consent. There were four members on the staff, and all four had to be in agreement. In the 1941 plan of the Navy there was to be one officer, with authority over all the others, with power to issue directives, and that would mean that he would have the supreme command, and that it would not be necessary to obtain the unanimous agreement of four different men.

When Admiral Nimitz, Admiral Halsey, Admiral Sherman, and 20 other high-ranking naval commanders in 1944, then engaged in the actual prosecution of the war, appeared before a special committee of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, headed by an admiral, and urged the creation of a single department of national defense, they were not speaking for any Army plan. They were speaking in the national interest and for the common defense. These naval officers, since the conclusion of the war, and since their return to Washington, have apparently changed their views on this subject.

Mr. HART. Will the Senator yield again?

Mr. HILL. I yield.

Mr. HART. May I ask the Senator if that is what he meant by his reference a little time back to brass hats who favored unification having been squelched?

Mr. HILL. Some of them were certainly squelched.

Mr. HART. Did the Senator mean by that, the ones whom he has just named?

Mr. HILL. It may not have been all of them, but I am sure that most of them were squelched. Admiral Nimitz, himself, said, "They have a hell of a lot of influence. They are going to block you."

Mr. HART. Were they brass hats themselves?

Mr. HILL. At that time the Admiral was referring to the civilian staff.

If all 20 of these admirals testified, as they did, while they were at war and while they had first-hand knowledge and experience of what the best war organization for this country was; and if all 20 of them have changed their minds since they have returned to Washington and learned from the Navy Department what the best interests of the Navy are; I can only suggest that there would appear to be a wide discrepancy between the best interests of the Navy and the best interests of the country should we again enter a major war.

Now, Mr. President, the Navy now—in 1946—has taken the line that this unification plan is an extension of an Army-Navy game. Naval officers at the Army-Navy Club, here in Washington, are toasting the failure of this Congress to act on this bill exactly as they would toast a Navy football victory over the Army. The difference between the Navy's unselfish devotion to duty in the war and the present selfish attitude of those in high authority in the Navy toward the President and the best interests of the national defense is appalling.

Mr. President, the Senator from Connecticut found it necessary to remind us that the motto of the Navy was "service before self." Now, I bow to no man in my admiration of the achievements and traditions of the United States Navy. But I think its friends do it great disservice in attempting to set it up against the Army as having higher ideals of public service—especially in the matter of this unification question—where the Navy has frankly based its opposition on a fear of loss of prestige and political importance in a defense structure, in which it would be placed on terms of exact equality with the Army and Air Forces.

Mr. HART. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HILL. I yield.

Mr. HART. I am sure the Senator from Alabama does not wish to misquote me.

Mr. HILL. Oh, no.

Mr. HART. My words were:

> Despite their detachment, living apart from their fellow citizens, their loyalty to their country and their observation of the traditional words "Service before self" are not excelled by any other body of the Nation.

I claim no superiority.

Mr. HILL. I am glad to hear the Senator say that.

The Army and the Air Forces are loyally supporting the President's plan. They are supporting the plan as it is embodied in the Senate bill, S. 2044. They are willing and anxious to subordinate themselves to the President and the Congress to exactly the same position and in exactly the same degree, in the interest of the common defense of the Nation, as the Navy would be subordinated under the bill. It would appear that the Army's motto "Duty, honor, country" was being more loyally adhered to than the lip-service being given the Navy's "Service before self."

The Senator from Connecticut also reminded us that the Navy is called the silent service and states that "it is a matter of common knowledge that as far as so-called publicity is concerned the Navy is comparatively inept."

Now, I believe that all such comparisons are inclined to be invidious and the Senator leaves little doubt that "comparatively" means compared to the War Department. All I can say is this: If the Navy is more inept than the War Department in the conduct of its public relations I indeed tremble for the future of the Navy. But here again, I believe I have more confidence in the Navy than the modesty of the Senator from Connecticut may allow him to have.

The only organized group in this country which is opposing unification—except the normal lunatic fringe groups which oppose every measure which would strengthen our defenses—is the Navy Department with its Navy League.

Yet, on a public issue on which there was almost complete unanimity of opinion in the public press when originally launched—for it is obviously such a common-sense move to the man on the street—there is now a nationally organized opposition. From whence comes this opposition? From the Navy Department and the Navy League alone.

What is the Navy League? It is primarily a group of steel and munitions makers whose biggest customers are the Navy. Many of them are also members of the Army Ordnance Association. It is interesting to note that the Army Ordnance Association is not supporting unification either. Why? Because there is obviously more money in selling steel and munitions to two competing and duplicating military and naval procurement agencies than to only one.

Mr. HART. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HILL. I yield.

Mr. HART. In view of what the very able Senator from Alabama has said about the Navy League and who constitute it, I request unanimous consent to have printed at the end of his remarks, the names of the vice presidents, directors, and so forth, as taken from a letterhead of the Navy League.

Incidentally, I might say, Mr. President, that the Navy League goes far back, about 40 years, and the only activity that it appears to have engaged in in connection with this whole question lies in an open letter to Members of Congress which is dated the 4th of January last, and which in effect proposes that certain changes be made in the proposal then before the Committee on Military Affairs, which changes were for the most part made in the revised bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, I certainly have no objection to the names being printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks.

There being no objection, the names were ordered to be printed in the RECORD.

(See exhibit 1.)

Mr. HILL. I wonder if the Senator can give us the names of the contributors to the Navy League?

Mr. HART. So far as I know, there are practically none, because its activities are so very minor that it requires almost no money.

Mr. HILL. From the data I have seen sent out by the Navy League certainly somebody had to pay for it.

Mr. HART. I do not think they paid very much.

I might say in further answer to the Senator's remark that the Navy League was organized a little while after the Spanish-American War, with a view to educating the people to the value of our activities on the sea, not so much in a naval way as in a commercial way. It was considerably endowed in those days, and I think those funds are still available.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, I should like to have, and I hope the Navy League will make available, a list of all its contributors. I think it would be very enlightening to have that list. I should certainly like to have it, if it can be obtained.

Mr. HART. I suggest that it might be very well to do that, and also to secure a list of the contributors to the Air Power League at the same time.

Mr. HILL. I should like to have the contributors to both the Navy League and the Air Power League. I should like to have not only a list of the contributors but a financial statement of both of them, I will say to the distinguished Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. President, the Senator from Connecticut made much of "intangibles." It is about all he had to make much of. The tangibles are certainly against him. One of these intangibles was based on the "shot-gun wedding" theory. Frankly, this amounts to saying that the Navy would never play good ball for the home team, therefore, they better be left off the team. Now, here again I have a greater trust and admiration for the Navy than has the Senator. I am sure that a service whose motto is "Service before self" would not give a single Department for the Common Defense of the Nation any less loyal service than they now give to the Navy Department. After all, the civilian heads of the single department would have at least the same "hell of a lot of influence" as the civilian heads of the Navy's bureaus who gave Admiral Nimitz so much concern when he testified so strongly for unification before Admiral Richardson's committee at Pearl Harbor in December 1944.

The Senator from Connecticut also opposed the idea of an autonomous air force. His argument is interesting. He states that the War Department ought to keep the Air Force subordinated just as the Navy Department has kept its air arm and marines subordinated. He gives as his reasons for this view every argument for integrating the country's ground-air-sea team advanced by the President and urged in support of the bill, S. 2044. This is the nub of the whole matter. Every reason cited for the excellence of the Navy's integrated ground-air-sea team is an overwhelming proof of the crying need for a similar integration of the country's ground-air-sea team. We simply cannot afford to have a Navy team in addition to and separate from the country's team; particularly when the country's team, less the Navy, would lack the vital element of sea power, whereas the Navy's team has all three essential elements.

The proof of this paradox is shown by our current appropriations where we have actually given the Navy more money for more land-based aircraft than we have given the Air Forces. The Navy realizes that our air frontier has replaced our sea frontier as the first line of defense. If it is to continue to obtain priority of appropriations, they must seize control of long-range land-based aircraft. This they are doing right now and we gave them the money for it. This is the pay-off. This is really the sole issue here.

While I speak of the Air Forces, the distinguished Senator from Connecticut in his address last week said that the Army Air Forces pushed their way into the atom test at Bikini, and that they should never have been allowed to do that; that the atom bomb should never have been dropped from a B–29; that it should have been dropped from some kind of a suspended balloon, and that the Army Air Forces had done this in order that they might obtain publicity.

Mr. President, with reference to that statement by the Senator from Connecticut, yesterday the Washington Times-Herald carried a news story to this effect:

ADMIRAL DEFENDS ARMY AIR FORCES

Vice Admiral Blandy yesterday defended the role of the Army Air Forces in the Bikini atom-bomb tests.

Blandy's statement, made public by the Navy Department, was viewed as a reply to criticism of the AAF by Senator HART (Republican), of Connecticut, who in a Senate speech last week declared the Air Force had forced its way into the tests for publicity purposes.

HART also criticized the Army's bombing efficiency, pointing out that the bomb dropped June 30 fell wide of the target and asserting that it did not explode at the most effective altitude.

Blandy, commander of the joint Army-Navy atom test task force, asserted that no pressure was brought to bear by the Army toward use of B–29's in the experiment.

He declared that all possible methods of placing the atom bomb for air burst over target ships in the Bikini lagoon were studied, including suspension from balloons, the method recommended by HART.

Blandy said the balloon plan was discarded as highly impracticable because of the danger of loosing the A-bomb in the lagoon.

The admiral said all Army and Navy officers and civilian scientists concerned with the tests believed that dropping the bomb from a B–29 was the most satisfactory method, considering all factors.

Mr. HART. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for an observation?

Mr. HILL. I yield.

Mr. HART. It will be observed, in the first place, that a considerable part of that release does not accord with what I said on the subject. However, that is a small matter.

Mr. HILL. I do not wish to argue too much with the Senator, but I have read his remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. HART. I will pass over that question, because we are taking too much time unnecessarily. I find no fault in that respect, because I have something more important to say.

As a member of the special Senate Committee on Atomic Energy I naturally interested myself in the tests from the time they were planned. On one occision I was sitting in on a conversation with Navy officials, and the conversation ran in about this way:

This is an experiment in order to learn the unknown. It is a large equation with many unknown factors in it. By this method of dropping the bomb from a plane, where it is going is unknown, because that is never perfectly accurate.

Another factor which was introduced as unknown was the fuzing: It was not known exactly how high the plane would go. Therefore it was thought that the best way to conduct the test would be to suspend the bomb from a balloon, so that the exact height would be known, and it could be properly placed laterally. Also the timing difficulties would be eliminated.

After this exposition, which seemed perfectly good sense to everyone—and to me it still does—someone asked, "Why do we not do it that way?" I remember the answer. It was to the effect that, "There is a great deal of opposition to this test now on the part of certain societies," and concern was expressed lest the Army Air Corps proceed to "louse up" the test.

I have before me a copy of a letter from a scientist. I cannot name him, because it is a personal letter, and he is in such a position in connection with the Bikini test that his name will probably be on official reports. I shall have to ask that my word be taken that he is a man well known all over the Nation as one of the best authorities, and that during the Bikini experiments he was in the upper echelon. I quote one paragraph from his letter:

> I have a very good impression of the technical competence and sincerity of the Navy officers, Admiral Blandy and Admiral Parsons and think they are doing a good job. The amount of scientific information obtained from the first test is pretty small because of the upsets. One was that the bomb was badly misplaced—about 700 yards west southwest of the target. This had the effect of getting a lot of the measuring equipment out of proper range—either too close or too far—to function properly. I think it was a serious mistake to drop the bomb from a plane instead of suspending it in the proper location from moored balloons but apparently this was done because of Air Force insistence on having a role in the show.

It would be expected that when an admiral and a scientist disagreed on something I would be inclined to agree with the admiral. In this case I wholly agree with the scientist. It may well be that the Navy obtained all the data which it needed for its design purpose with the bomb exploding as it did explode. But that was only a part of the data to be obtained from the experiment; and I have read what one of the best of the scientists concerned thinks about it.

Mr. HILL. I do not know the scientist. I can understand why the Senator does not desire at this time to disclose his name. But I wish to read again the quotation from Admiral Blandy:

> The admiral said all Army and Navy officers and civilian scientists concerned with the tests believed that dropping the bomb from a B–29 was the most satisfactory method, considering all factors.

Admiral Blandy was in command of these tests. He was the over-all commander who had the responsibility. If things failed, it was his failure. If things went well it was his success. He was the man to whom the President of the United States, as the Commander in Chief, the Congress and the American people were looking for the success of the experiment. I have faith in Admiral Blandy. I believe that the Admiral carried out that experiment in the best possible way.

Mr. President, the Navy's goal and the goal of Senate bill 2044, the unification bill, are identical—a single department of common defense with unified command of all essential arms in modern warfare—land, sea, and air. The only difference is that the Navy's goal is to achieve this under the aegis of the single Navy Department. The goal of Senate bill 2044 is to achieve this under a single Department of Common Defense—where it belongs.

It may be a matter of great moment to present office-holders in the Navy's bureaus whether the top civilian and military executives came from the Navy Department pay roll or the War Department pay roll, but I submit that this is of no moment at all to the country or to the Congress. What we want is unified direction of our whole land-sea-air team by the best civilian and military brains available. These would be available to the Department of Common Defense, including all those now on the pay roll of the Navy Department as well as the War Department. They are not now available to the Navy Department alone.

Mr. President, I could recite instance after instance—both during and after the war and at the present time—in which simply inexcusable duplications exist among our armed services. However, the fact that we are now building up a completely separate and competing land-based air force under the Navy Department, and that we now have more of a mobile ground reserve of ground forces in the Navy than we have in the Army should be convincing enough to the Senators that something must be done before we make another huge duplicating appropriation for the common defense.

I am hopeful that many of us will be able to get to some of our bases in the Caribbean—at Bermuda, Puerto Rico, Panama, and elsewhere—and actually see the tremendous duplications and waste for which we are now spending money, merely to appease the bureaucratic pride of office among the competing services. I hope that many of us will see the huge hospitals standing side by side, the two ports, the two airfields jammed up against each other, but strictly reserved for the use of one service or another. The same is true of training facilities, intelligence facilities, research and development facilities, supply facilities, personnel—everything one can think of. The cost of this duplication and waste in World War II in men and time and lives staggers the imagination. Statisticians and historians can quarrel forever over estimates of just how much. There need be no quarrel over what is going on right now, however. We can read it in the current appropriation bills. We can see it with our own eyes at our Army-Navy air bases.

In the Pacific we do not find any true unity of command right now. The public thinks of General MacArthur as the supreme commander in the Pacific. But he is not. He does not command the Navy in the Pacific. We are right back where we started. Like the Bourbon Kings of France, we have learned nothing. At Pearl Harbor today will be found the same organization for defense that obtained on Sunday, December 7, 1941. General Hull commands the Hawaiian Department—the Army. He does not command the Navy. Admiral Hall commands the Fourteenth Naval District—the Navy. He does not command the Army. There is no unity of command at Pearl Harbor at this moment.

In that connection, Mr. President, there came over the wire service yesterday the following bulletin:

> PEARL HARBOR STILL VULNERABLE, SAYS HONOLULU ADVERTISER
> HONOLULU.—The Honolulu Advertiser charged today that Pearl Harbor is as vulnerable to attack now as it was December 7, 1941, because of an antiquated command system. The paper made its editorial charge on the basis of a special Washington dispatch which claimed that unity of Army-Navy command at Pearl Harbor was no nearer accomplishment than it was four and a half years ago.

Mr. President, a continuation of such a situation at Pearl Harbor and throughout the world, wherever our forces may be, is simply intolerable. In the face of the Pearl Harbor report, the Bikini experiments, the strategic-bombing survey, we sit here and allow history to repeat itself. Mr. President, I feel sincerely that this body is abdicating its sacred duty to provide for the common defense, in allowing the stubborn adherence of one Government bureau to the dictates of tradition and prestige not only to stand in the way of progress, but actually to turn back the clock to the good old days that cost us so much in blood and tears. Sure, the admirals and the generals will have more fun as big frogs in their own little puddles—just like they did before Pearl Harbor. But should the people—who have to jump in and fight the wars when they come—stand for it? Mr. President, I maintain that they should not be asked to stand for it and they will not long stand for it.

Mr. President, I look forward with great interest to the reports which Members of Congress bring back from their visits to our outlying installations. I hope there will be many such visits between now and the time when Congress reconvenes. I believe that the few of us who may now have doubts because of the smoke screen of specious argument which has been thrown around this relatively simple issue will have all their questions answered by these reports.

Another development holds out much hope that we shall reach a solution early in the next Congress. I refer to the Congressional Reorganization Act. We shall have a single Committee on Common Defense, in each House. For the first time, a committee of Congress will have an opportunity to look at all our defense requirements as a single picture.

Admiral Nimitz said, at Pearl Harbor, in December 1944:

> I would like to prevent having a very eloquent smooth talker for the Navy, for instance, go before a committee and persuade them they should vote more money for this agency or that agency—in other words, continue separatism.

Under unification, we would have a single defense budget presented to a single committee. For the first time it would be possible for the Congress to know exactly what it was doing in discharging its constitutional duty to raise and support armies. Under such a setup, the paradoxes of our current Army and Navy appropriations bills would be impossible.

Just as I think unification would have brought about the organization of single committees for common defense in the Congress so I am hopeful that the organization of a single committee in the Congress will bring about a single department of common defense as a logical development. It is the only solution to the obviously unsatisfactory situation which will be presented to such a committee by the ex parte and selfish presentations of the very smooth talkers Admiral Nimitz was so justly afraid of. The sooner we get rid of these smooth talkers and the faster we move the tremendous civilian staff that Admiral Nimitz so wisely foresaw was going to block you, the sooner we shall have the efficient, well-integrated land-sea-air team we must have in order to be adequately prepared, and the sooner the country will achieve the unity of command and singleness of purpose which the Navy so gallantly demonstrated in World War II. This will be the keystone of our success in any World War III into which we might be forced.

Mr. President, the duty of providing this team is the responsibility of the Congress. It is a responsibility that cannot be escaped, and for which we shall be held accountable by the country. It is hardly appropriate for the Navy Department or the War Department to dictate to the country or to Congress. It is not a function of generals and admirals to lay down the conditions under which the Navy and the Army will perform their duties. These duties are determined by law and by the appropriations which Congress votes and the money the taxpayer pays for the national security. It is outrageous that any department of the Federal Government or any of the military services should stand in the way of a program which clearly would result in substantial economies and increased efficiency of all of the services. In doing so those who speak for the Navy on this issue put their own interest and the interest of the Navy ahead of the national interest, especially when they charge that the Navy would not give loyal service under a single department. The President, as Commander in Chief of the armed forces, has repeatedly urged unification, and he has helped us arrive at a formula for accomplishing it. He announced that it was dropped from the "must" list in this Congress only when it developed that those in high authority in the Navy Department were either aggressively and openly opposing unification or were giving it lip service while actually knifing it behind the President's back.

I ask permission to insert in the RECORD at this point an editorial from Tuesday's New York Times on the subject of unification. It emphasizes again that the country expects us to act, and act intelligently, before we are again attacked by an enemy which knows our weaknesses better than we ourselves appear to admit them.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the New York Times of July 30, 1946]

UNFINISHED BUSINESS

As the Seventy-ninth Congress proceeds through what is apparently to be its final legislative week it has still on its calendar of unfinished business one of the most important legislative problems that faced it when it convened for its second session, on January 14. That is the problem of unification of the armed forces, in order to give us a modern military organization for our own national security and for our share of the task of keeping the peace of the world.

Although even the President, who has been one of the strongest proponents of merger, is said to be convinced that there is little or no possibility of passage now, there is no reason why the measure should not be taken up and passed promptly if Congress could be awakened to the necessity. The most extensive possible hearings have been held in both Houses. Studies going back many years have been made. The Thomas bill, embodying the main points of the President's twice-urged proposals, is on the Senate Calendar. Every survey of public opinion has shown a majority of the people to be for it. Lethargy appears to be the only barrier.

If unification is not voted in the Seventy-ninth Congress, it will mean that our military planners will have to muddle along for at least another 5 months without any blueprint to work from, since the Eightieth Congress will not convene until next January. This means that there will be continued duplication of facilities. It means that during critical months when we should be laying the firm foundation for our military future we would not even have a plan for the molds into which to pour it. Any plans made during the intervening months by the War Department or the Navy Department must necessarily be tentative, keyed only to the immediate future. Instead of such improvisation, what is needed is the master blueprint of unification that will allow Army, Navy, and Air Force to pool their brains and their energies to plan months and years into the future. Can there be any doubt at all between the relative worth of the two methods?

If there was ever a legislative task that should not be left undone, it is action on unification. That task should not be abandoned by the Seventy-ninth Congress, no matter how warm the Washington summer or how interesting the political situation back in the home districts. It is difficult to see how Senators and Representatives can justify themselves to their constituents if they go home without passing the Thomas bill. Now is the time to do it. Admiral Halsey predicted while the war was on that if unification was not achieved in the first 6 months after the end of the war it never would be achieved. When the Eightieth Congress convenes, the war will have been over almost 18 months. While the mistakes are fresh in mind, while the Pearl Harbor report and the strategic bombing survey reports are still on congressional desks, this is the time to make the decision.

Indecision and delay never won either a battle or a war. Neither will they win the peace. And peace in the immediate future may well depend as much upon the military strength of the democracies as upon their moral principles. Until unification is achieved that strength will remain hampered, confused, and divided.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, if we fail to live up to our responsibility for organizing the armed services in an efficient, modern manner, we shall have to answer to the more than 12,000,000 men who fought in uniform during the war—to the families of those who died, as well as to those who came back. They know that in any modern war the armed services must operate as a team. They are interested only in the national security and in making sure that we, as a people, do everything human wisdom can suggest to make another war unlikely. We shall invite and deserve the condemnation of these men so long as we allow these departmental quarrels to swerve us from our duty. It is time to put the interest of the country ahead of the selfish interest of the few mossback admirals who hate to see the battleship go the way of the mastodon. Hard-shell admirals, like horse generals, must understand that the make-up of the armed services and the conditions under which they must operate are determined by the President and by Congress, and not by the services themselves.

Let us have a clearer recognition on the part of everyone concerned that this is our responsibility, and then let us do our duty. I hope and trust that this will be the first order of business in the next Congress.

Mr. WALSH subsequently said: Mr. President, at this late hour I do not intend to make an extended reply to the able speech of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. HILL] in favor of a merger of the armed forces. I do not intend to set forth what the Navy believes is the proper way of bringing about an integration of Army and Navy efforts.

I wish to say, however, Mr. President, that I think it is most regrettable, at the end of a war in which glorious service was rendered by the Army, the Navy, the Air Corps, and the Marine Corps, that we should, within a few short months, find those services fighting against each other, and public sentiment divided, and everyone forgetting the heroic and successful achievement of those services during the war. It is with great regret that I have observed the development in this country of antagonism among those groups, and among the American people.

In my opinion, the way in which to treat this subject is, first of all, to recognize that for nearly 150 years the existing order has been satisfactory, beneficial, and has led to success in every war in which our country was engaged. That does not mean that it is impossible to perfect these organizations, and to improve them. It does not mean that by unifying certain activities the national defense cannot be improved. So far as I have been able to look into the questions involved, I feel certain that it is possible to make some improvements in the administration and in the coordination of all branches of the armed forces. But I wish to say emphatically that from my study of the question I have found no evidence of any neglect of duty, or of any betrayal of trust on the part of the Army, the Navy, or the Marine Corps during the war. They have cooperated splendidly in winning the war. If that is a sound premise, it should be easy for us to cooperate and work together to make whatever changes are necessary to perfect and to strengthen these organizations for our future security.

I may say to the able Senator from Alabama, whom I esteem greatly, and who has made a very extensive study of the subject, and whose research and study is deserving of weight and consideration, that I do not mean in any way to reflect upon his judgment and his opinion. But, my belief is, that in attempting to arrive at a solution of this problem we should recognize the excellent features of our present system and attempt to perfect them instead of making radical changes which has proven defective in every country which has tried a single department and a single commander over the armed forces.

The Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy have been Members of the Cabinet for nearly 150 years. They should not be relegated to the position of mere figureheads rather than men with great authority, unless there are very substantial reasons for making such a change.

The Army and Navy perform radically different duties; one operates on the sea and the other on land. An officer trained in the strategy of land warfare and who lacks training and insight in the special field of naval strategy and air war cannot command successfully a fleet. A naval commander, on the other hand, who has specialized in the field of naval strategy, cannot successfully direct a land campaign. Naval officers and army officers are educated and trained in a different manner and have different points of view. Both of these points of view are essential in modern warfare, and it is impossible for one man to become competent in each type of warfare. History has repeatedly demonstrated that full development and efficient utilization of each of the major military arms are fostered only when each branch of the service is administered and commanded by officers trained in that branch.

Mr. President, I wish to ask permission, if it be necessary, that I be permitted to make a reply in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD to some of the matters discussed by the able Senator from Alabama.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. WALSH. I repeat that I have profound respect for the Senator from Alabama and his views.

I feel, however, that this controversy over the merging of the armed services has done more harm than good, as it has created animosities, unfriendliness, and misunderstandings.

THE CALENDAR

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to consider the House measures on the calendar to which there is no objection, beginning with Calendar No. 1955, which is the point at which the last call of the calendar ended, except for two Senate bills; and of course, as I have stated, there is no point in having the Senate consider Senate bills at this time, inasmuch as the House of Representatives has already adjourned. I also ask that House bills to which amendments have been proposed by Senate committees be not called, for the same reason.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered; and the clerk will proceed to state the measures on the calendar under the agreement just entered.

STATISTICS OF THE GRADE AND STAPLE LENGTH OF COTTON

The bill (H. R. 4769) to amend section 5 of the act entitled "An act authorizing the Secretary of Agriculture to collect and publish statistics of the grade and staple length of cotton," was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CONTINUANCE OF FARM LABOR SUPPLY PROGRAM

The bill (H. R. 6828) to provide for continuance of the farm labor supply program up to and including June 30, 1947, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS PASSED OVER

The bill (H. R. 2347) to provide and insure a dependable supply of domestic natural rubber, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. TAFT. Let the bill be passed over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 3243) to amend the act entitled "An act to establish a National Archives of the United States Government, and for other purposes," was announced as next in order.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator from Oregon [Mr. CORDON] objected to that bill, and it would be necessary to amend it, in order to enact it now. Therefore, inasmuch as the House of Representatives has already adjourned, I ask that the bill be passed over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

CLAIMS OF PETROL CORP.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Mr. President, what action is to be taken on Calendar No. 1963, Senate bill 1327?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That bill will not be called, because it is a Senate bill, and also because it has amendments; and under the agreement such bills are not to be called at this time.

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes, Mr. President; it is a Senate bill, and there is no chance to have it passed by the House at this session, inasmuch as the House has already adjourned.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Mr. President, I have a resolution providing that the matter be referred to the Court of Claims, and I should like to offer the resolution and have it considered and agreed to at this time.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I have no objection to having that done.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Mr. President, I send the resolution to the desk and ask that it be stated. It will take the place of Senate bill 1327, Calendar No. 1963, which can be marked off, if the resolution is agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution (S. Res. 321), as follows:

Resolved, That the bill (H. R. 6112) entitled "A bill to confer jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to hear, determine, and render judgment upon the claims of Petrol Corp." now pending in the Senate, together with all the accompanying papers, is hereby referred to the Court of Claims pursuant to section 151 of the Judicial Code, as amended, and the said court shall proceed expeditiously with the same in accordance with the provisions of such section and report to the Senate, at the earliest practicable date, giving such findings of fact and conclusions thereon as shall be sufficient to inform Congress of the nature and character of the demand, as a claim, legal or equitable, against the United States, and the amount, if any, legally or equitably due from the United States to the claimant.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the resolution was considered and agreed to.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, let me inquire in reference to the resolution which was just read and agreed to. Does it confer authority to render judgment, or simply to report back?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. No; it only gives authority to report back to the next Congress.

Mr. FERGUSON. As the clerk read the resolution, I thought I understood it to provide for the rendering of judgment.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I will say that it only provides for reporting back to the Congress.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, with that explanation, I have no objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Clerk will state the next bill on the calendar, in accordance with the unanimous-consent agreement.

SALE OF SURPLUS VESSELS SUITABLE FOR FISHING

The bill (H. R. 5552) relating to the sale by the United States of surplus vessels suitable for fishing was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

USE OF LANDS IN CONNECTION WITH PENSACOLA RESERVOIR, OKLA.

The bill (H. R. 3058) to authorize the use of certain lands of the United States for flowage in connection with providing additional storage space in the Pensacola Reservoir of the Grand River Dam project in Oklahoma, and for other purposes, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PREPARATION OF MEMBERSHIP ROLL OF YAKIMA INDIANS

The bill (H. R. 6165) to provide for the preparation of a membership roll of the Indians of the Yakima Reservation, Wash., and for other purposes, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ENTRY UPON INDIAN LANDS TO ENFORCE SANITATION, COMPULSORY SCHOOL ATTENDANCE, ETC.

The bill (H. R. 2893) to amend the act of February 15, 1929, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AUTHORITY TO ACCEPT GIFTS AND BEQUESTS FOR LIBRARY OF THE POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

The bill (H. R. 6721) to authorize the Postmaster General to accept gifts and bequests for the benefit of the library of the Post Office Department was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (H. R. 6112) to confer jurisdiction on the Court of Claims to hear, determine, and render judgment upon the claims of Petrol Corp., was announced as next in order.

Mr. FERGUSON. Let the bill be passed over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

PLACING OF CHINESE WIVES OF AMERICAN CITIZENS ON A NONQUOTA BASIS

The bill (H. R. 4844) to place Chinese wives of American citizens on a nonquota basis was announced as next in order.

Mr. HART. Let the bill be passed over.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, I wonder whether the Senator will withhold his objection until I have an opportunity to make a brief explanation of the bill.

Mr. HART. I shall be glad to do so.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, the purpose of this bill is to permit the Chinese wives of American citizens, if otherwise eligible for admission into the United States, to come into the United States to join their citizen husbands as nonquota citizens, so as to have the same privilege which runs to other persons eligible for naturalization.

I may say, Mr. President, that this bill has the support of the Bureau of Immigration of the Department of Justice, and I have a letter from the State Department in which they point out the importance of the passage of the bill.

Coming from a State in which there are a considerable number of Chinese-American citizens, I wish to say that they have made good citizens. They were good soldiers in the Army during the war.

Mr. President, I hope that with the explanation I have given the objection will be withdrawn. During the period of time when the Chinese were permitted to bring their wives into this country, over a 10-year period—1931–42—there were only 767 who came into the country.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill (H. R. 4844) to place Chinese wives of American citizens on a nonquota basis was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DIMITRIOS KARAMOUZIS (KNOWN AS JAMES C. KARAMOUZIS OR JAMES C. KAR)

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to consider the House bill 5527 for the relief of Dimitrios Karamouzis.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be stated by title for the information of the Senate.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (H. R. 5527) for the relief of Dimitrios Karamouzis (known as James C. Karamouzis or James C. Kar).

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM S. MEANY

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. President, the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads has considered favorably a bill sponsored by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCMAHON]. I understood the Senator from Kentucky to state that Senate bills will not be considered. Am I correct?

Mr. BARKLEY. I said that inasmuch as the House had already adjourned, it would be futile to consider Senate bills.

Mr. CHAVEZ. This is a very meritorious bill, and the subcommittee, consisting of the Senator from New York [Mr. MEAD] and the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. STANFILL], approved the bill. It is very meritorious, and only for the purpose of protecting the RECORD, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be now considered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read by its title for the information of the Senate.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (S. 1225) for the relief of William S. Meany.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is heard.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. FERGUSON. The House has adjourned. Whatever action the Senate might take on the bill would not hasten the bill to its enactment into law, and therefore it would be useless for the Senate to pass the bill. Am I not correct?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill would not become law.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. President, I suggest to the Senator from Michigan that while I know the bill can not become law even though the Senate passes it, yet there is such a thing as a little equity to be exercised in connection with a reasonable bill. [Laughter.]

Mr. MCMAHON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CHAVEZ. I yield.

Mr. MCMAHON. I may say that there would be an advantage which would be gained if the Senate should show by passing the bill that it approved it. The claimant in this case is a postmaster at Greenwich, Conn. The assistant postmaster stole $68,000. about $50,000 of which was stolen before Meaney became postmaster. Some of the money has been recovered. That the money was stolen was no fault of Meaney's, and he should have been paid a reward for aiding in catching the thief which the post-office inspectors did not do during the 10 years following the theft of the money. The Post Office Department has made demands on Meaney for approximately $17,000. I do not know whether the Post Office will press its demand during the recess of the Congress. I trust that it will not. It might be that favorable action on the part of the Senate would serve as notice to the Post Office Department that it should wait, at least, in trying to collect the money until the new Congress convenes next year.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, I have no objection to the proposed idle ceremony.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I do not see why this bill should be given any different consideration than any other Senate bill on the calendar. I object to the Senate considering the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is heard.

Mr. MEAD subsequently said: Mr. President, I hope I have the attention of the Senator from Connecticut and the Senator from New Mexico when I say that I was not here when the discussion began with reference to the bill for the relief of Postmaster Meany.

Several months ago, probably in April, serving on a subcommittee with the junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. STANFILL] we heard testimony all one morning, and we reported favorably upon the bill. Why it was not placed on the calendar I do not know. It should have been on the calendar several months ago. It was not the fault of the able senior Senator from Connecticut that it was called up at this late hour. But in view of the fact that that is one bill to which the subcommittee gave several hours of time, hearing the witnesses who appeared from Connecticut, listening to the testimony presented by the Post Office Department, and then reporting the bill favorably, if nothing is done at this time with reference to the bill I want the RECORD to show the situation. As I have said, it is not the fault of the able senior Senator from Connecticut that it was not before us on an earlier occasion.

I do not know of a claims bill which received more attention than did this bill. I hope the record will be useful in the future. I wished to help make the record at this time, and I know that if the able junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. STANFILL] were present, who asked me several times why the bill was not on the calendar, he would want the RECORD to show that he heard the testimony and that he favored the bill and wanted it passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection being made, nothing further can be done with the bill at this time.

Mr. McMAHON. Mr. President, I wish to express my thanks to the Senator from New York, and to bear out what he has said about the junior Senator from Kentucky's position. He spoke to me on several occasions about the bill.

DISSEMINATION BY THE DEPARTMENT OF STATE OF INFORMATION ABROAD ABOUT THE UNITED STATES

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, earlier in the day I moved that the Senate proceed with the consideration of House bill 4982. However, when I made the motion opposition was voiced because of there being no quorum present. I understand that if I persist in the motion the point of no quorum will be made again, and even right now the number of Senators is dwindling and dwindling. In view of the fact that the matter can probably be cared for at the next session of Congress in January, inasmuch as it relates only to an authorization, in deference to the wishes and convenience of the Members of the Senate I shall not press further the motion to proceed to consider House bill 4982.

THE SITUATION IN PALESTINE

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I have several telegrams which I ask to have inserted in the RECORD as part of my remarks. These telegrams evidence the reaction of thousands of my constituents to the latest proposal for the settlement of the Palestine problem. That proposal, as officially announced by the British Government, calls for the division of Palestine into four provinces, one of which would be Zionist, and another Arab. The other two areas would be controlled by a central government, presumably British. Under this same central government would be the Zionist and the Arab provinces.

Concerning the legislative powers of the provincial governments, we have not been apprised of the details, although we have been given a general description of such legislative powers as would be delegated to the provinces proposed. But, regardless of the administrative and legislative details of the entire British proposal, the plan is contrary to the joint resolution concerning Palestine which Congress acted upon last December.

We have long urged the establishment of a democratic homeland and refuge for the displaced Jewish people of Europe. Our President has officially requested that 100,000 of these victims of persecution be admitted into Palestine. Yet, the latest proposal makes no clear-cut, unconditional provision for such admission.

On Tuesday of this week the senior Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT] and the senior Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER], with whom I was originally associated in introducing a resolution on Palestine, a modification of which was passed by the Senate, objected on the floor of the Senate against this British proposal for a divided Palestine which is contrary to historic title and just principles.

Unfortunately, at the time that their eloquent protests were voiced, I was absent from the Chamber on official business. Had I been present, I would have joined in their protests and would have associated myself with their remarks. The receipt of the telegrams which I have presented has prompted me to give voice today to the pleas of my constituents for a just and equitable settlement of the Palestine question based on a unified homeland for the displaced Jewish people.

According to recent newspaper accounts, it was brought out in the British House of Commons that the execution of the plan for a partitioned Palestine may well depend upon American acceptance. In connection with this report, we have also been informed that the President will confer with the members of his Cabinet committee who have been in London discussing the Palestine problem with representatives of the British Government. I sincerely hope and trust that our Government, as a result of this conference, will decide to reject this British proposal, which is so contrary to what the United States has been urging.

Mr. President, I have also a memorandum from the American Christian Palestine Committee of Boston, Mass. The memorandum concerns the report of the Anglo-American Committee of Inquiry on Palestine. Hence, it does not refer to the content of the latest proposal for the division of Palestine. However, I ask that this memorandum be printed in the RECORD as a part of my remarks since it so adequately summarizes the events preceding the announcement of the latest British plan.

In concluding my remarks, Mr. President, I quote the final paragraph of the memorandum.

> We shall continue unabated in our efforts until the aspirations of the Jewish people shall have been satisfied in the establishment of a democratic Jewish commonwealth in Palestine.

There being no objection, the memorandum and the telegrams were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

AMERICAN CHRISTIAN PALESTINE COMMITTEE,
Boston, Mass., May 3, 1946.

MEMORANDUM

From: The Reverend David R. Hunter.
To: All members.

Following is the statement of the New England Division of the American Christian Palestine Committee concerning the report of the Anglo-American Committee of Inquiry on Palestine:

"We endorse the position of the Jewish community in Palestine, in consonance with the opinion of world Jewry, that only the establishment of a Jewish Commonwealth in Palestine along the lines of the mandate guaranteeing the protection of the religious and civil rights of the Arabs will answer the crying need of Jewish homelessness.

"We are gratified that the request of President Truman for the immediate entry of 100,000 Jews into Palestine is unanimously recommended by the committee. We are glad to note that President Truman withholds judgment concerning the future of Palestine.

"The recommendation for the immediate entry of 100,000 Jews, further immigration into Palestine thereafter, and the rescission of the land transfer regulations which restricted Jewish purchase of land to only 7 percent of the area in Palestine, is recognition of the position taken by the Government of the United States, the World Zionist Organization, and the permanent Mandates Commission of the League of Nations that the White Paper of 1939 is an illegal document contrary to the provisions of the Mandate of the League of Nations and now incorporated in the United Nations Charter.

"We regret, however, that the committee considered it necessary to couple these gains with suggestions concerning the future status of the government of the land which denied the historic rights and aspirations of the Jewish people firmly established in international law by the Balfour Declaration, the mandate for Palestine, and the Anglo-American Covenant of 1924.

"We regret also the subordination in the committee report of the role to be played by the Jewish Agency for Palestine.

"Even after the 100,000 Jews of Europe will have been admitted to Palestine there will be left in Europe 1,250,000 destitute victims of Fascist persecution, 75 percent of whom cannot continue to live in Europe, whose fervent desire to emigrate to Palestine has been substantiated by every impartial government observer.

"We shall continue unabated in our efforts until the aspirations of the Jewish people shall have been satisfied in the establishment of a democratic Jewish commonwealth in Palestine."

GREENFIELD, MASS., July 31, 1946.

Senator DAVID I. WALSH,
Washington, D. C.:

Our Zionist district comprising 103 members respectfully urge you use influence to have Britain's proposal to limit Jewish Palestine to 15,000 square miles repudiated. We further urge our Government adhere to original recommendation that 100,000 destitute European Jews be immediately admitted to Palestine. Our grateful thanks.

GREENFIELD MONTAGUE ZIONIST DISTRICT.

BOSTON, MASS., August 1, 1946.

Hon. DAVID I. WALSH,
United States Senator,
Washington, D. C.:

Unanimity of opinion of leaders of the Jewish community of Boston deploring recent developments in Palestine and the stand taken by the Anglo-American Cabinet Committee as voiced at a conference held at the offices of the Jewish Community Council of Metropolitan Boston late yesterday. Following the meeting, Judge David A. Ross, president of the council, made up of 21 major organizations and a group of individuals chosen from the community at large issued this statement: "Britain's new proposed plan to divide Palestine into Jewish and Arab provinces with supreme control in the hands of the British is clearly an attempt to reduce Palestine to the status of a British colony. Moreover, by making the admittance of 100,000 Jews contingent upon acceptance of this new partition plan, it makes a mockery of Britain's word in international affairs by violating the recommendations of the Anglo-American Committee of Inquiry on Palestine which unanimously favored the immediate admittance of the 100,000 Jews into that country. Not only is this plan a violation of the commitments Britain has made for the establishment of a Jewish national home in Palestine but it is a repudiation of President Truman's stand on immediate immigration of 100,000 Jews into Palestine. Foreign Secretary Ernest Bevin has stated publicly that Britain would carry out the recommendations of the Anglo-American Committee of Inquiry if they were unanimous. They were unanimous. The new partition plan denies as a practical possibility large-scale Jewish immigration into Palestine and therefore is against every conception of humanity and justice. The British, who have found President Truman opposed to their policy of vacillation and broken promises, are now attempting to make him a party to this discredited partition plan. Despite the oppressive measures of the Attlee-Bevin government the Jewish people will continue to condemn violence and bloodshed with all their heart and soul. The Jewish people are inherently peace loving and condemn violence in any form. Liberty-loving fellow Americans will join us in supporting President Truman's original recommendations for the immediate admittance of 100,000 Jews into Palestine and will not accept any alternative which negates the legally assured rights of future Jewish immigration into Palestine. Upon the preservation of these rights depend the lives of thousands of homeless desperate Jews of Europe."

BOSTON, MASS., August 1, 1946.

Hon. DAVID I. WALSH,
United States Senator,
Washington, D. C.:

Proposed partition of Palestine is shocking answer to President Truman's request for immediate admittance of 100,000 Jews to Palestine and an unbearable condition to unanimous recommendation of Anglo-American Committee of Inquiry supporting that request. Please convey to the President, in person if possible, the horrified reaction of the Jewish citizens of New England calling for rejection of the proposal urging the immediate and unconditional entry into Palestine of the 100,000 Jews now held in European displaced-persons camps.

NEW ENGLAND ZIONIST EMERGENCY COUNCIL, MORRIS MICHELSON, President.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I heartily concur in what has been said here in the last few days by several Senators in condemnation of the policy of Great Britain relative to Palestine. What has been done and what has been proposed, the failure of Great Britain to discharge the British mandate over Palestine, and the crisis which exists today in that country, not only threaten the peace of the world, but in my opinion make it mandatory that Great Britain be called upon to relieve herself of that mandate, and allow the United Nations organization to attempt to discharge the responsibility which the world owes to Palestine. I hope that our executive department and the State Department will give furtherance to those views.

PROSECUTIONS UNDER THE CONSPIRACY STATUTE

Mr. President, while I am on my feet let me say that at the conclusion of the consideration by the Senate of the legislation relative to the drafting of labor, and in the concluding hours of the consideration of that subject by the Senate, some difference of opinion was expressed by certain Senators relative to the legal effect of a certain provision of the bill.

Upon that subject I have made inquiry of the legislative counsel's office, and I have a reply from the legislative counsel to me which I ask to have incorporated in the body of the RECORD immediately following my remarks.

There being no objection, the matter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MEMORANDUM FOR SENATOR PEPPER

This memorandum is in reply to your request for my opinion as to whether a prosecution under the conspiracy statute (sec. 37 of the Criminal Code) would lie with respect to a violation of section 4 (b) of H. R. 6578 (the President's temporary labor bill).

Section 4 (b) of H. R. 6578 reads as follows:

"(b) On and after the finally effective date of any such proclamation, continuation of a strike, lock-out, slow-down, or any other interruption at any such plant, mine, or facility shall be unlawful."

Section 37 of the Criminal Code (18 U. S. C. 88) provides:

"If two or more persons conspire either to commit any offense against the United States, or to defraud the United States in any manner or for any purpose, and one or more of such parties do any act to effect the object of the conspiracy, each of the parties to such conspiracy shall be fined not more than $10,000, or imprisoned not more than 2 years, or both."

At common law the crime of conspiracy was complete when one had agreed with others either to do an unlawful act, or to do a lawful act in an unlawful way, and to these requirements section 37 of the Criminal Code has added the requirement that some member of the conspiracy must do an overt act in furtherance of the venture. Deacon v. United States (C. C. A. Mass., 1941, 124 Fed. (2d) 352). Under the section a conspiracy is a combination of two or more persons by concerted action to accomplish a criminal or unlawful purpose, or some purpose not in itself criminal, by criminal or unlawful means. Duplex Printing Press Company v. Derring (254 U. S. 443 (1921)). Persons entering into agreement, tacit or otherwise, to commit an unlawful act are guilty of conspiracy if one of them does some act in pursuance thereof. Chaplin v. United States (28 F. (2d) 567 (1928)).

The annotations are replete with definitions of conspiracy under the above mentioned section of the Criminal Code but the ones outlined in the foregoing paragraph are fairly representative. It is not necessary for a statute to prescribe a penalty for an act declared unlawful before an indictment will lie for conspiracy to commit the forbidden act. In United States v. Niroku Komai, (286 F. 450 (1923)). District Judge Tribbet, in overruling a motion in arrest of judgment where the defendant had been convicted of a conspiracy to conceal and harbor a Japanese alien not duly admitted to the United States, said:

"It is plain that section 8 (of the immigration laws) provides no penalty for the misdemeanor defined therein of concealing or harboring an alien. The penalty only relates to bringing in or landing in the United States the alien. There is not even any ambiguity in the statute on this subject. In my opinion the fact that no penalty of any kind is prescribed by section 8 does not bar a prosecution for a conspiracy. Section 8 describes concealing and harboring an alien as an offense, to wit, a misdemeanor. One who conspires to commit a misdemeanor 'hath offended the law.'"

Applying the principle laid down in the Komai case to subsection 4 (b) it will be seen that an indictment for conspiracy will lie against any two or more persons who conspire to continue a strike, lock-out, slow-down or any other interruption at a plant, mine, or facility after the finally effective date of the President's proclamation because such action is declared to be unlawful.

The latest decision of the Supreme Court with respect to said section 37 was handed down on June 10, 1946, entitled "Pinkerton and Pinkerton v. the United States." This case dealt with two brothers who were convicted of a conspiracy along with other substantive offenses having to do with unlawful possession, transportation, and dealing in whisky, in fraud of the Federal revenues. One of the brothers, Daniel, was in jail for other crimes when some of the offenses making up the overt acts of the conspiracy were committed by his brother, Walter. The Court found that there was a continuous conspiracy and that there was evidence to show that the substantive offenses were in fact committed by Walter in furtherance of the unlawful agreement or conspiracy existing between the brothers. That there was no evidence of the affirmative action on the part of Daniel which is necessary to establish his withdrawal from the conspiracy. And that so long as the partnership in crime continues, the partners act for each other in carrying it forward. The Court said, "It is settled that 'an overt act of one partner may be the act of all without any new agreement specifically directed to that act.'" It thus seems clear that a labor leader in having the members of his union continue a strike, slow-down, etc., in violation of said section 4 (b) would constitute the overt act which is a necessary ingredient of a conspiracy indictment and he as well as all members of the union joining in such continuation would be subject to an indictment under said section 37 of the Criminal Code. See also U. S. v. Winner (28 F. (2d) 295 (1928)); and U. S. v. Hutto (256 U. S. 529 (1921)).

Ordinarily a strike by a labor organization is, of course, not illegal or a conspiracy of any sort. However, there are some State court cases where activities by labor unions have been held to be a conspiracy. In Moore v. Cooks, Waiters and Waitresses Union No. 402 (39 Cal. App. 538), picketing of plaintiff's restaurant by unions to induce plaintiff to unionize the restaurant, by compelling the women employees to pay their dues to defendant's union was held to be a conspiracy. In Heitkemper v. Central Labor Council of Portland and Vicinity (99 Or. 1) it was held that where a local union of jewelry workers, on failure of employers to reply to a circular relative to recognition of the union, met and caused a strike, notifying the central labor council, which placed the employers on the unfair list, and pickets were stationed about the places of business of two of the employers, there was a conspiracy, a combination of two or more persons by concerted action to do an unlawful thing or a lawful thing in an unlawful manner. To the same effect is State v. Murphy (1 A. (2d) 274), where a truck drivers' union conspired to compel truck owners, against their will, to employ only union drivers, and nonunion drivers against their will to join the union or abstain from driving trucks, and to accomplish such purpose committed specified acts such as forcibly stopping and detaining trucks, damaging them, threatening owners and drivers of trucks, and injuring drivers. See also Hopkins v. Oxley Stave Company (83 Fed. 912); Allis-Chalmers Co. v. Reliable Lodge (111 Fed. 264). A conspiracy by a trades union to boycott a newspaper for refusing to unionize its office has been held to be illegal. Casey v. Cincinnati Typographical Union No. 43 (45 Fed. 135). Other forms of boycotts held to be conspiracies by labor unions and illegal are found in Thomas v. Cincinnati N. O. T. P. Ry. Co. (63 Fed. 803); J. C. McFarland Co. v. O'Brien (6 F. (2d) 1016); Hitchman Coal and Coke Co. v. Mitchell (245 U. S. 229 (1917)).

In conclusion, it may be stated generally that the conspiracy statute (sec. 37 of the Criminal Code) covers to all intents and purposes the situation you had in mind when you stated that there was a general criminal statute to punish persons for continuing a strike made unlawful by section 4 (b). While the conspiracy statute applies only to two or more persons acting in concert, a continuation of a strike, slow-down, or other stoppage of work referred to in said section 4 (b) will of necessity be concerted action on the part of a labor union and its members and will subject its officers and members to a criminal prosecution for conspiracy. That Government prosecutors are all too prone to use the conspiracy statute when drawing indictments is clearly set forth in the Annual Report of the Attorney General for 1925, pages 5–6, reading as follows:

"The Conference of Senior Circuit Judges reported in 1925:

"'We note the prevalent use of conspiracy indictments for converting a joint misdemeanor into a felony, and we express our conviction that both for this purpose and for the purpose—or at least with the effect—of bringing in much improper evidence the conspiracy statute is being much abused.

"'Although in a particular case there may be no preconcert of plan, excepting that necessarily inherent in mere joint action, it is difficult to exclude that situation from the established definitions of conspiracy; yet the theory which permits us to call the aborted plan a greater offense than the completed crime supposes a serious and substantially continued group scheme for cooperative law breaking. We observe so many conspiracy prosecutions which do not have this substantial base that we fear the creation of a general impression, very harmful to law enforcement, that this method of prosecution is used arbitrarily and harshly. Further, the rules of evidence in conspiracy cases make them most difficult to try without prejudice to an innocent defendant.'"

Respectfully,

S. E. RICE,
Legislative Counsel.

JUNE 20, 1946.

TRIBUTES TO SENATOR ANDREWS

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, my colleague the senior Senator from Florida [Mr. ANDREWS] is voluntarily going out of the Senate at the conclusion of this session, and this will be the last session of the Senate which, so far as I know his present intentions, he will have the honor and distinction to attend.

I am sure that every Senator will miss the kindly, friendly, sincere, earnest, and patriotic senior Senator from Florida from this body. He is rounding out a distinguished career of public service which has carried him through the legislative, executive, and the judicial branches of the government of the State of Florida and of the Nation.

As I said, it was his own choice that he retire from the Senate, which he does for reasons of health which have plagued him for some time.

It has been a great privilege for me to share service in the Senate with the senior Senator from Florida. He will carry with him not only my affection and esteem, but I am sure the affection and esteem of every other Senator who has had the real pleasure and satisfaction of service with Senator ANDREWS in the Senate.

The State of Florida will be greatly the loser when his distinguished service is no longer being given to the State and to the Nation.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I wish to associate myself with the Senator from Florida in his expressions of esteem and good will toward the senior Senator from Florida [Mr. ANDREWS].

I have enjoyed not only the service of Senator ANDREWS here, but his personal friendship and his cooperation. I wish for him long life and health and happiness in whatever he undertakes. I hope that his departure from the Senate will not mean that we shall not, from time to time, allow our paths to merge so that we may see more of him in the future.

I thank the junior Senator from Florida for giving me this opportunity to express my high esteem and my personal affection for Senator ANDREWS.

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, I wish to associate myself with the ideas expressed by the two Senators on the other side of the aisle toward our good friend the "Judge," as we call him. It has been my privilege to visit with him in his home. I know his fine wife, and I agree with everything that has been said about him. I am sorry that ill health has made it necessary for him to leave the Senate. The people of Florida would have been happy to send him back.

When I was in Florida, everywhere I went, I found people of all parties and of all creeds who really loved him. He had served on the bench with distinction, and has found a place in the hearts of many of his colleagues in the Senate.

We join in the wish of the majority leader that he may regain his health and in his fine home in Florida, down there among the lakes, will be able to enjoy the grandchildren and his family for many years to come.

Mr. McFARLAND. Mr. President, I wish to join in what has been said about Senator ANDREWS. Since he has been in the Senate he has rendered great service to his State and to the Nation.

FAREWELL TO DEPARTING SENATORS

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, none of us knows whether circumstances might arise which would require the President to call Congress back into session before January. I sincerely trust that it will not be necessary for that to happen. If it should not happen, there are several of our colleagues who will not be back with us, including the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER], the Senator from Maryland [Mr. RADCLIFFE], the Senator from Idaho [Mr. GOSSETT], the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SHIPSTEAD], the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HART], the Senator from Kentucky, my colleague [Mr. STANFILL]. I wish to express to all of them my best personal regards and best wishes for their success and happiness in whatever field they may be called.

In the list I include the Senator from Alabama [Mr. SWIFT] and the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BURCH]. These gentlemen have served here with us and we have formed a personal attachment to them, and unless we are called back in extra session we will not have them with us again.

Mr. President, I wish for all these gentlemen long life and happiness and prosperity and success in whatever endeavors may call their ability forth, and they all have ability, they all have charming personality. I would not feel that I were performing my duty to myself and the Senate if I did not wish for all of them the best that life may hold for them in the years that are to come.

I include in the list the Senator from Indiana [Mr. WILLIS]. He has been here with us for 6 years. We have all been endeared to him. He has been a gentleman in every sense of the word. I express for him the same cordiality and good wishes that I have expressed for the other Senators.

Mr. President, there is another Senator who, if we do not come back in session before January, will not be with us, and that is the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GERRY]. If I am not mistaken, he became a Member of the House of Representatives at the same time I entered the House, in the beginning of the Wilson administration. I served with him in the House for a number of years. I have served with him in the Senate. I have for him the highest respect; though we have not always agreed, as I have not always agreed with anyone here. It would be a monotonous Senate if we always agreed with each other. I have not even agreed always with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. WHERRY].

Mr. WHERRY. That is indeed true.

Mr. BARKLEY. Even so, that makes no difference; we respect one another's views; we respect one another's independence; we respect one another's sincerity; we respect one another's character.

The Senator from Rhode Island, with whom I served in the House and in the Senate, is voluntarily retiring from the Senate. I am sure he takes with him the best wishes of the membership of the Senate without regard to party, and that we wish for him the health, the happiness and the long life which he so richly deserves.

Mr. President, another distinguished Member of the Senate, the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN] will not be with us when we reconvene in January. He has been appointed to be the United States delegate to the Security Council. I am sure we are all agreed that he is eminently fitted for this important post. I can think of no one the President could have chosen who could better perform the arduous as well as delicate task which must be confronted. We wish for him every success, and we know he will represent the United States with honor and ability.

Mr. RADCLIFFE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. RADCLIFFE. I appreciate very greatly the very generous reference the Senator from Kentucky has just made to myself and to others who will not continue in the Senate. It has been my privilege and, I count it, my good fortune to have been a Member of the Senate during 12 years which I imagine have been as strenuous and as momentous as any other 12-year period in the history of our country. During all those tragic and history-making days I have had the opportunity and pleasure to work in close contact with many Members of the Senate and I have formed many close friendships with them which I shall always cherish. I leave here with many delightful memories. These I am happy to know will remain always with me.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I wish to say to the Senator from Maryland that he has served for 12 years through a period that has never been exceeded in importance and in the succession of tragic events in the history of the United States. He has been a diligent, hard-working, sincere Member of this body, and we not only wish for him success and good health and happiness, but that, since he lives close by, he will come to see us frequently after he retires from the Senate.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, inasmuch as the distinguished majority leader stated that there were times when he was in total disagreement with me, I should like to say that I have always respected the ability and the leadership of the distinguished Senator from Kentucky, and as this Congress comes to an end and I leave for my home, I leave with the kindliest feelings toward him and toward all my colleagues.

We have had some pretty tough issues to fight out here, but I think it will be necessary for me to get back to Nebraska and eat a great deal of meat, because I can see some further disagreements coming up after Congress reconvenes in January 1947.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, in that connection I ask unanimous consent that the Senator from Nebraska be permitted to file in the final edition of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD his final market report on meat. [Laughter.]

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. WHERRY. I thank the Senator.

Mr. WHITE subsequently said: Mr. President, I regret that I was absent from the Chamber when the Senator from Kentucky spoke a few moments ago. Although I did not hear him, I think I can tell what he said, and I think I can equally well call to mind the things he did not say.

I am sure that he spoke well of all of us on this side of the Chamber. That is an evidence of his kindliness and the generosity of his nature. I am sure that he spoke in approving terms of the work of this Congress. Those words were fully justified by the record which has been made. This has been a Congress of labor and of great achievements. I believe that all of us who have been permitted to participate in any way in the work have reason to feel gratification for the results accomplished.

I am sure that the Senator from Kentucky did not say what all of us upon this side would wish to say of him. We have a keen appreciation of his amazing industry, his ability, his courtesy, his kindliness, and the profound knowledge which he has manifested of the involved problems of legislation which have come before the Congress during this session and the previous session.

I think I am justified in saying, after a service of approximately 30 years in the Congress, that there never has been a greater leader, either in the House or in the Senate, than our distinguished and much beloved friend ALBEN BARKLEY.

REPUBLICAN CONTRIBUTIONS TO SEVENTY-NINTH CONGRESS

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, I had intended to make at this time a few remarks relative to the Republican contributions to the Seventy-ninth Congress. Because of the lateness of the hour, I ask unanimous consent to have the remarks inserted in the body of the RECORD.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I have no objection to that. I ask unanimous consent that, after I read the Senator's contribution, if I wish to make reply I may do so.

There being no objection, Mr. BRIDGES' statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

REPUBLICAN CONTRIBUTIONS TO SEVENTY-NINTH CONGRESS

Mr. President, as this Seventy-ninth Congress is drawing to a close, I wish to take a few moments and comment briefly on the legislative contributions and achievements of the minority, as well as the honors accorded to individual Republican Senators.

Mr. President, the years 1945 and 1946—years of the Seventh-ninth Congress—stand out in history as years that may affect the course of events at home and abroad for generations to come.

During these 2 years, Mr. President, we witnessed the end of the most destructive of all wars, with the universal plea of all war-torn peoples for the birth of a new and more hopeful era.

The dramatic and sudden end of the war, however, caught the present administration wholly unprepared to fulfill its expected leadership either at home or in world affairs. Disclosure of secret treaty arrangements and the inability to cope with even the most fundamental and pressing reconversion problems during the transition period has led to widespread distrust of the administration's policies. Every poll of public opinion in recent months shows that the people are aware of the administration's failures, and are turning to the Republican Party for leadership and constructive measures.

The lack of leadership in the administration posed new problems for Congress that called for clear-cut legislation and the highest order of leadership from the representatives of the people in arriving at their solution.

How the Congress, in general, met these problems is now a matter of record, and that record is so well known to this audience, at least, that it does not warrant repetition at this time.

But, it might be well to review questions the American citizens were asking as the European and Pacific wars ended within a few months of each other just a year ago. Here are a few of these questions:

Will we have a speedy reconversion to full-time production?

Will the Government divest itself of extraordinary wartime powers and controls in order to restore to businessmen, farmers, workers, and the American people that freedom from regimentation which has made the American system unique among the governments of the world?

Will the Government cut down the size of the Federal bureaucracy where millions of Government officials have been supported at the expense of the American taxpayer?

Will there be eight to ten million unemployed as forecast by the administration's economists?

Will the administration be able to guide the reconversion of labor wisely from war to peace, insuring large peacetime production at stabilized wages and prices?

Will the administration be able to balance the budget, and reduce the Federal debt, or will it continue with its unsound deficit financing and the theory that we can spend our way to prosperity?

Will the United States enforce the making of just treaties of peace?

What will be done about the atomic bomb?

Will we have to finance the reconstruction of the devastated countries all over the world as we did following World War I? If so, will we be able to do it on better terms?

What will happen to all of our surplus property totaling billions of dollars? Will its sale be free of scandals?

Will there be plenty of food, clothing, housing for the returning 12,000,000 in the armed forces?

Will we get legislation designed to benefit all groups of our economy, or will we be besieged with legislation that favors some particular minority group?

What could President Truman do to meet these issues?

Mr. President, these and hundreds of similar questions were asked daily by the American people and the American press. These were some of the problems facing the Congress in the postwar world.

MEETING THE ISSUES

Mr. President, how did we meet these issues?

We all know that many of these issues before the Seventy-ninth Congress were so vital to the welfare of this and other nations that they transcended all political lines and called for larger loyalties and a deeper understanding of our own and our neighbor's problems.

Because of the very nature of some of these problems, the Senate of the United States, united in a common cause and passed such important legislation as the lend-lease extension bill; the enlargement of the Export-Import Bank; the extension of the Selective Service Act; and provided for adjusted taxes.

On many other measures of national and international importance, the majority of the Republican Senators united with the administration legislators to insure passage. These issues ran the gamut of legislation and included such measures as the International Monetary Fund and Bank bill; the ratification of the United Nations Charter and the participation of the United States in the United Nations; the reciprocal trade agreements extension bill; the United Nations relief and rehabilitation; the Federal employees pay increase bill; the Mexican-United States water treaty; the manpower bill; Federal aid to airports; the British loan; full employment; the Case labor bill, and many, many others.

STAND ON UNSOUND LEGISLATION

Republicans were active in all of these measures and succeeded in making constructive contributions to most of them. With regard to many other measures, the majority of Republican Senators refused to go along with what we believed was an attempt to fasten the strait-jacket of planned economy on a free people.

The majority has the power of the purse and patronage, together with the power of the Presidency, the power of the committee chairmen, the predominance of Democrats in congressional committees, and the control over departments and agencies of government. The Democratic majority has had an arsenal of weapons capable of bending the country to their will and withering all opposition.

Since the minority party does not have the power to block or to change the course of the New Deal government, they have to adopt such means available to them. The role of the Republican minority, especially in times when new courses are being set for the Nation, is to serve as a vigorous and constructive opposition to the administration. The minority party can discharge this responsibility in a number of effective ways.

First, they can analyze administration proposals and operations and hold them up to the clear light of reason and debate. I submit that the Republican representation in the House and Senate has discharged this duty with great distinction. But analysis is not enough. Republican obligation goes farther than this. Its second duty is to criticize, protest, and denounce all administration operations that are against the best interests of the country. This obligation, also, we have discharged with vigor and distinction even at the risk of incurring the displeasure of those who do not understand the functions of a minority in government and the limitations on minority operations. Third, the Republicans can use their places on committees and on the floor of Congress to reason out and correct the laws proposed by the administration. It is because we are performing this duty of making workable laws in the best way open to us that you hear so much of Republican amendments to administration bills.

The minority party can also use their votes to defeat measures which are wrong in principle. Lacking sufficient votes to control, we can only be successful in this when some Democrats break away from their own party controls and come to our support. Minority members can and do take an active part in congressional investigations to bring out the facts bearing upon national problems and in this way bring the real situation to the attention of the people.

The minority party will support sound legislation, but will have no part of unsound legislation. For instance, in the first session of the Seventy-ninth Congress, the President set forth a 21-point program, with most of the 21 points more or less favoring some small segment of our economy rather than the Nation as a whole. The President termed this as "must" legislation.

In retrospect, this "must" legislative program looks suspiciously like a political program designed to draw together the disintegrating Roosevelt strength and put it behind President Truman. It promised so much to so many different groups that Congress, as the representative of all the people could not bring itself to the point of cooperating for the passage of all the confused and conglomerate measures.

REPUBLICAN-SPONSORED LEGISLATION

Mr. President, while the Republican Senators are unable to carry through a legislative program of their own, they have the power to work against bad legislation and to amend other measures to make them better. Mr. President, for the record, I would like to comment briefly on Republican-sponsored legislation during the sessions of the Seventy-ninth Congress.

In the first session, Republicans sponsored a large number of amendments, resolutions, and substitutes to administration measures. Most of these were passed unanimously or by voice vote. Only a small number went to a record vote. Six out of the thirty Republican sponsored measures which went to record vote were adopted—the Bushfield amendment to the manpower bill, the Wherry amendment to the price control extension bill, the Brewster amendment to the Federal aid to airports, the Taft-Radcliffe amendment to the Full Employment Act, and the Donnell amendment to the reorganization of Government agencies.

Dozens of other Republican proposals to pending legislation were carried by voice vote and unanimous consent. In almost every case, these were constructive proposals to make legislation more equitable and more workable in the real interests of the American people.

In view of the administration's policy of irresponsible spending, it is interesting to note in passing that the Taft-Radcliffe amendment to the Full Employment Act of 1946, providing that "any program of Federal investment and expenditure for the fiscal year 1948, or in peacetime, should be accompanied by a taxation program designed to prevent any net increase in the national debt," passed the Senate by an unopposed 82 to 0 vote, the only unanimous recorded vote cast for a measure during the entire session.

Republicans proved to be even more effective in the second session of this Congress. Again we proposed a vast number of improvements in pending legislation and initiated many new measures of our own. A large number carried by voice vote and by unanimous consent. Even in those important measures that went to record vote, Republicans made an outstanding contribution.

Of the 34 amendments or substitutes offered to bills up to July 16, on which a record vote was taken, 16 were adopted, while 2 others, namely, the Smith amendment to the national science foundation bill and the Taft amendment to the OPA extension bill were only rejected on tie votes, the former on a 34–34 deadlock and the latter on a 40–40 vote.

Among the amendments offered and adopted during this present session were: the Capehart amendment to the Fair Labor Standards Act; the Taft-Ball "cooling off" amendment to the Case labor bill; the Taft fact-finding amendment to the same bill; the Taft-Ball amendment making unions liable for contract violations and elimination of secondary boycotts; the Gurney amendment to the selective service bill; the Taft-Wherry-Cordon, and the Taft-Butler amendments to the first OPA extension bill; the Hart amendment to the National Science Foundation; the Wherry amendments to decontrol meat, dairy products, milk, and poultry on OPA's second trip through Congress during this session; the Moore amendment to decontrol petroleum; the Knowland-Ferguson amendment exempting from OPA rent control those States that have their own rent control laws; and the Bridges amendment to decontrol feeding grains. Every one of these decontrol provisions to the OPA bill was an attempt to restore to the people their right to conduct their own affairs in a free economy.

Proof beyond dispute of the Republican Party's defense of the personal freedom of every individual American citizen is that not a single Republican Senator supported the Democratic administration's request for power to draft the workingmen of this country.

On May 29, 1946, when the motion was made to strike from H. R. 6578 a provision by which the President would have been given power to draft the wage earners of the country into the Army despite the basic right of personal liberty, every Republican vote was cast in favor of that motion and against forced labor.

All in all, nearly 50 percent of the amendments, substitutes, or resolutions offered by Republicans for a record vote on the floor of the Senate during the second session were adopted.

A far greater number proved to be such excellent improvements to pending measures that they passed by voice vote and unanimous consent. That record speaks more eloquently than I can do on the subject of constructive legislation offered by the minority party.

REPUBLICAN ATTENDANCE RECORD

Individually and collectively, the Republican Senators have a just right to be proud of the attendance record they have established in committee work and on the floor of the Senate during the sessions of the Seventy-ninth Congress.

Early in the first session the minority whip, the distinguished and energetic Senator from Nebraska, Senator WHERRY, spoke in defense of the Republican attendance record. The tribute he paid to his colleagues for their splendid attendance record is warranted on the basis of the record. Throughout both sessions of the Seventy-ninth Congress the Republican Senators have established an attendance record unequaled by their Democratic colleagues across the aisle.

That the Republicans were well represented from the very first roll call of the first session is evidenced by the fact that they led in percentage of party voting in 33 out of the first 43 measures to come before the Senate for a record vote. They have worked long, diligently, and faithfully on committees to which they have been assigned and have made many constructive suggestions which have been incorporated into the bills or adopted as amendments thereto.

REPUBLICAN ACHIEVEMENT

Mr. President, while time does not allow me the opportunity to chronicle all of the numerous honors and tributes which have been accorded to many of the Republican Senators during these sessions of the Seventy-ninth Congress, I am sure that it is not too much of an imposition on the time of the Members of this body merely to mention in passing that Republicans and Democrats, not only in this Chamber, but throughout the country as well, applauded the President's elevation of one of our number, the distinguished junior Senator from Ohio, the Honorable Harold H. Burton, to the post as Associate Justice of the United States Supreme Court, as well as the appointment of the Senator from Vermont, WARREN R. AUSTIN, as representative to the Security Council of the United Nations Organization, and the selection of the senior Senator from Michigan, ARTHUR H. VANDENBERG, as delegate to the San Francisco Conference and advisor to the Foreign Ministers Conference in London and Paris.

In this field of foreign policy, Mr. President, Republicans have performed signal service. In the war years we cast aside all partisan influences and stood solidly with all others as Americans united for victory. It is our policy also to serve in the interests of peace without partisanship. In all our work in the Seventy-ninth Congress, the record is clear that we favored every measure of foreign policy which consults intelligent, American self-interest, and which sustains the dignity, the honor, and the safety of the United States; which faithfully seeks international security and peace-with-justice through vigorous support of the United Nations; and which once more encourages closest cooperative unity with our pan-American neighbors, north and south.

It is our principle that our country work closely and wholeheartedly with all our allies for just peace treaties; to reestablish human rights and fundamental freedoms through a peoples' peace; and to terminate the need for American occupational troops abroad.

Republicans generally supported an extension of the reciprocal trade treaty program in general, but I think it is well established that a majority of us opposed giving the President power to further reduce rates by 50 percent. We are not against a reasonable reduction of tariff rates, but there is such a thing as going to extremes and this certainly does things to extreme. Our position on this point is very simple; we favored every measure for expanded foreign trade except those, which in our judgment, threatened to be at the expense of the American producer, the American worker, our standard of living, and the necessities of our national defense.

The Republican Party believed with the American people that the United States went to war to protect the principles which are dear to this great Nation of freemen. We believed when we went to war that we were helping to establish a reign of decency in the world. That is what American men and thrust upon the United States. That is what the Republican Party believed when war was thrust upon the United States. That is what the Republican Party believes now.

The world learned in a cruel, bloody way that appeasement of wrong leads only to war. The Republican Party believes that only a completely firm stand for American principles can lead to a real peace on earth.

The Republican Party believes that America should bear the torch of moral leadership high and not leave that task solely to the little nations of the world.

The Republican Party believes there is no proper place for the compromise of American principles of freedom, decency, justice, and honor. The Republican Party believes that as the American people instinctively hope and work for peace their hopes should not be dashed and their work should not be blocked by any effort of any other government to compromise the very principles which are the only certain guide posts to lasting peace.

We are proud of the contributions which Republican spokesmen have made to postwar foreign policy, and which demonstrate the dependability of Republican leadership in our foreign relations. But we believe in a united, unpartisan foreign policy so far as possible; and, whether in the minority or the majority, we shall welcome this result.

I could go on, Mr. President, with a roll of honors and tributes accorded the individual Republican Senators during the Seventy-ninth Congress, but to do so would be to take much more time than I have at my disposal, but I do want to say for this group and for the record, that rarely in my recollection, has more or greater honor come to Members on this side of the aisle, or to the Republican Party so long as it has been in the minority, as has come during these sessions of the Seventy-ninth Congress.

The role of the minority in Congress, Mr. President, is often a trying one. The part it must, of necessity, play as the opposition party, is far too often misinterpreted as the role of the reactionary and obstructionist. Individual Republican Senators and the party in general, Mr. President, have come in for unwarranted abuse by persons entirely unaware of the real facts. Even a cursory glance at legislation designed to speed our national recovery program, such as housing, lifting of Government controls, the stand on a balanced budget, return to the States of State's rights, and veterans' benefits, to mention just a few, will prove that the Republicans did not follow, but led in this type of legislation.

Mr. President, as I have mentioned previously, the minority party can, and will, support good, constructive legislation designed for all the people, but will unalterably oppose a legislative pattern which favors some particular group or some small segment of our economy. Such legislation, Mr. President, only extends the Government control over the economy.

Ever since the Republican Party was founded back in the days of Abraham Lincoln, Mr. President, it has been the party of the people, by the people, and for the people—all the people. Nowhere is this more evidenced than in the party's stand on so-called social legislation. Now, as then, the Republican Party gives full support to the basic principle of our republican form of government, namely, that it exists to protect and advance the welfare of all of our people and not just a privileged few. We insist that the liberties and civil rights of all the people must be of primary concern to our form of government. A review of all social legislation enacted during the Seventy-ninth Congress, such as public and veterans' housing, hospital and welfare care, food to the starving nations of the world through special legislation I sponsored and through the United Nations Relief and Rehabilitation organization, will reveal that human values and the dignity of the individual are still the primary concern of the Republican legislators.

Republican opposition to legislation is often a great service to the country. As an example, Mr. President, I cite the case of OPA legislation. During the war years, there was some excuse for the regimentation of price controls. But in peacetime a free democracy has no place for government price fixing. The stupid and often intolerable maladministration by the OPA has all but wrecked the economy. We saw so-called price control disintegrate into profit control when the Administration foolishly believed the starry-eyed economists in OPA and the Commerce Department who maintained that we could have higher wages for all without higher prices. We saw scarcity in the land of plenty.

Black markets sprung up in essential items of food, clothing, building materials, and staple commodities. Instead of meeting the situation in a realistic manner the OPA sent an army of supersnoopers and cheeky checkers throughout the land. It did no good. An ever-increasing number of items disappeared from the merchants' shelves until meat, for example, was 90 percent black market. Production increased in many lines, but the inept administration of price controls forced much of this material into black markets.

Republican amendments that would do away with the black markets and restore confidence and faith to the manufacturer and retailer were made the political basis for a Presidential veto.

Then, Mr. President, we saw a miracle happen in this country. In 24 days the back of the black market was broken. Meat came through legitimate channels in ever-increasing quantities at steadily lower prices. Mr. President, I believe that the Republican amendments to the OPA bill accomplished in 24 days what this administration has been unable to accomplish in 4 years—and that was the elimination of the black market.

It wasn't a CIO-inspired buyers strike as the radical press and CIO would have you believe. It wasn't the curtailment of Army orders for meat as the face-saving OPA would have you believe. It was neither of these, Mr. President. The fact is that it was the 40,000,000 housewives who were willing to give the Republican old-fashioned idea of the law of supply and demand a chance to work that broke the black market in meat, and will break the black market in any commodity if given a chance to work.

At the same time, Mr. President, Republicans have attacked this price problem from their more constructive angles. Everyone knows that Government spending—the monetization of public debt—has contributed enormously to the inflationary conditions we now face. Republicans have fought this irresponsible administration policy in season and out. We have demanded economy. We have insisted that the Government clean up its own financial household and balance its Budget. Had Mr. Truman's 21-point program been carried out, the enormous Government expenditures it contained would have tipped the scales toward wild inflation. Republicans resisted these measures, made many of them more modest, and blocked others that would have bankrupted the Federal Treasury. At the same time, Mr. President, Republicans have taken the lead in demanding relief for the people of this country from a Federal tax load that takes almost one-quarter of every person's income and retards incentive of producers to turn out the goods we sorely need. No one will work longer or harder merely to satisfy the tax gatherer. The administration has not yet learned that simple lesson, but it has long been a guiding principle for Republicans. Lift the heavy load of Government from the backs of the people and production and competition will take care of inflation.

When I say that Republicans have fought diligently for economy and a balanced budget, I know whereof I speak. A part of the battle fell upon minority members of the Appropriations Committee where Government expenditures have to be analyzed and approved. As ranking minority member of that committee I can tell you we faced a stupendous job. Countless hours have been put in by us to weigh and cut down Government expenditures. It was a labor few people outside of Congress realize and it does not have the glamour that makes newspaper headlines. But it is of great importance to the people of this country.

Republicans took the initiative in this and with the help of some Democrats who also believe in sound Government finance, billions of dollars have been saved for the people of this country.

Mr. President, the majority of the Republican Senators have supported veterans' legislation on a wholly impartial basis, as it naturally should be. They have been in the forefront in the campaign for adequate housing, complete medical care for the disabled, including automobiles for the amputees. They have endorsed the broadening of the benefits to the veterans under the GI bill of rights, including more substantial educational benefits and terminal pay for the enlisted men and women.

Another contribution of the Republican Senators for which all members of this group should be truly grateful was the exposure and ultimate curtailment of the huge Government propaganda machine that spends $74,000,000 a year and uses the services of 45,000 publicity agents to push Government-inspired legislation through the Congress, through any and all means at its disposal, including distortion of truth and unwarranted attacks on the Congress itself. It remained for Republican Senators to turn the blistering spotlight on the vicious methods used by the Government propaganda machine during the course of the debate on the Bretton Woods and OPA legislation. This very revealing exposure has led this body to take measures to curb such future bureaucratic attacks upon the Congress and the people of the country; and the policy started in curbing the use of propaganda by the OPA should be extended to all of the other Government agencies. This, Mr. President, was merely another of the unglamourous, though necessary, accomplishments of the Republican minority.

In the late war we have stamped out fascism and nazism by force of arms. But communism we have with us still today. They have not given up their ideal of world conquest by propaganda or by force. J. Edgar Hoover, Director of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, warned publicly that the danger of communism in this country today is greater than ever before. We cannot close our eyes to the fact that Communists have infiltrated the various agencies of our Government, the labor unions, the veterans' organizations, and community bodies. In their subversive way they plant the seed of distrust and suspicion, of prejudice and hatred, of bigotry and intolerance. They set class against class, creed against creed, and race against race.

Mr. President, the time has long since past to be on our guard against this menace to our national security and freedom. We must now take forceful steps to rid ourselves of this element in our Government agencies, especially our State Department. Republicans have been, and intend to be, eternally vigilant on all appointments to Government offices to be certain that only men who respect our American system are appointed to Government positions, and not men who will use their appointive offices to further their own political ambitions, or men who will fan the flames of communism by spreading discontent among our people and distrust of our institutions and our laws.

We are all very familiar with the very active part Republican Senators have taken in congressional investigations, such as the recent Pearl Harbor probe and the current investigation of war profiteers. It is only through such investigations, Mr. President, that we are able to bring the true situation to the attention of the public. The administration in control of the Government cannot be expected to investigate itself, except when it seeks scapegoats for political effects. Only the minority can be a natural instrument for such exposures.

Even through such means of exposure as the investigation committees, the minority party is handicapped. We all know that it is the democractic majority that sets the time of the hearings, fills the staff positions, determines in a large measure the kind of facts that will be presented by witnesses, and sets the tone of the report to be made.

In spite of all these handicaps, however, the minority party must, in the interest of good government, national security, and the safety and freedom of the people, bring such matters of maladministration and corruption to the attention of the people.

Also, Mr. President, in the case of Presidential appointments, it is the responsibility of the minority to protest any such appointments which would not be in the best interests of the country. That the minority can do a good job of bringing out all the facts is vividly evidenced by their action in the cases of the Edwin Pauley and the Aubrey Williams nominations.

Mr. President, the Republican Party still stands for a Government of the people, for the people, and by the people. It will offer itself to no special group. It believes in the maximum decentralization of Government services and the restoration to the States and to the people of those extra Federal activities appropriated as a wartime emergency. It believes in and can achieve a balanced budget, in practice and not on paper. It is of the firm conviction that the sooner we return to a balanced budget, the sooner we will have sanity, economy, and efficiency in our National Government.

Mr. President, in the short time at my disposal, I have merely highlighted, in a very general way, the contributions made by the Republicans in this great body, to legislation enacted during the two sessions of the Seventy-ninth Congress. I only wish, Mr. President, that I had the time to give a more detailed account of the many worth-while achievements of each and every Senator on this side of the aisle. The list of accomplishments is long and worthy of greater tribute than I have had time to accord to it. But, borrowing from the Navy parlance—to each of my colleagues, may I say "Well Done."

TRIBUTE TO SENATORS WHEELER AND SHIPSTEAD

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. President, I am one of those who believe that upon each State falls the responsibility for determining who shall be its representatives in the Congress and who shall be its legal officials. I feel it my duty at this time to say a word in respect to two Senators who will not be with us at the next Congress. I wish to say that I have known the senior Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] for many years. It is my sincere and honest opinion that the senior Senator from Montana has rendered valuable service to the welfare of his country throughout his service in the Senate. Of course, it is Montana's business as to who shall represent it in the Senate.

I may say also that my association with the senior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SHIPSTEAD] has always been most pleasant. Notwithstanding he is a Republican, I consider him to be a loyal, patriotic American, and that, as he understood his duty, he has rendered valuable service to his country.

Mr. McFARLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. McFARLAND. I should like to concur in what the Senator from New Mexico has said in respect to the Senator from Montana and the Senator from Minnesota and in what has been said in regard to other Senators who will not return. I know the hour is getting late and I do not want to detain the Senate. I, too, have served with the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER], who has spent 24 of the best years of his life in the service of his State and of his Nation. It has been my good fortune to have served under him as a member of the Committee on Interstate Commerce over which, as chairman, he has presided with great distinction. He is a great statesman. He has served his State and his Nation well. He has been willing to help his colleagues at every possible opportunity. I wish to join the Senator from New Mexico in his tribute to the Senator from Montana.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the nomination?

There being no objection, the nomination was considered and confirmed.

PROTOCOL TRANSFERRING TO THE FOOD AND AGRICULTURE ORGANIZATION OF THE UNITED NATIONS THE FUNCTIONS AND ASSETS OF THE INTERNATIONAL INSTITUTE OF AGRICULTURE

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider Executive H (79th Cong., 2d sess.), a protocol dated at Rome, March 30, 1946, terminating the Rome Convention of June 7, 1905, and transferring the functions and assets of the International Institute of Agriculture to the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, which was read the second time, as follows:

PROTOCOL TRANSFERRING TO THE FOOD AND AGRICULTURE ORGANIZATION OF THE UNITED NATIONS THE FUNCTIONS AND ASSETS OF THE INTERNATIONAL INSTITUTE OF AGRICULTURE

The Governments signatories to this Protocol,

Being parties to the Convention signed at Rome on June 7, 1905, creating the International Institute of Agriculture (hereinafter called the Institute),

Considering it desirable that the Institute (including the International Forestry Center, hereinafter called the Center) be dissolved and that the functions and assets thereof be transferred to the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (hereinafter called the Organization), and

Being cognizant of the resolution of the Permanent Committee of the Institute, have agreed as follows:

ARTICLE I

From the date to be announced by the Permanent Committee of the Institute in accordance with Article III of this Protocol, the Convention signed at Rome on June 7, 1905, by which the Institute was created, shall be no longer of any effect as between the parties to this Protocol, and the Institute (including the Center) thereupon shall be brought to an end.

ARTICLE II

The Permanent Committee of the Institute shall, in accordance with the directions of the General Assembly of the Institute, bring the affairs of the Institute (including the Center) to an end and for this purpose shall

(a) collect and bring together all assets of the Institute (including the Center) and take possession of the libraries, archives, records, and movable property thereof;

(b) pay and satisfy all outstanding debts and claims for which the Institute is liable;

(c) discharge the employees of the Institute and transfer all personnel files and records to the Organization;

(d) transfer to the Organization possession of and full title to the property in the libraries, archives, records, and all residual assets of the Institute (including the Center).

ARTICLE III

When the duties assigned to it by Article II of this Protocol have been completed, the Permanent Committee of the Institute shall forthwith, by circular letter, notify the Members of the Institute of the dissolution of the Institute (including the Center) and of the transfer of the functions and assets thereof to the Organization. The date of such notification shall be deemed to be the date of the termination of the Convention of June 7, 1905, and also the date of the dissolution of the Institute (including the Center).

ARTICLE IV

Upon bringing to an end the affairs of the Institute (including the Center) the powers, rights or duties attributed to it by the provisions of the International Conventions listed in the Annex of this Protocol, shall devolve upon the Organization; and the parties to this Protocol which are parties to the said conventions shall execute such provisions, insofar as they remain in force, in all respects as though they refer to the Organization in place of the Institute.

ARTICLE V

Any Member of the Institute which is not a signatory to this Protocol may at any time accede to this Protocol by sending a written notice of accession to the Director General of the Organization, who shall inform all signatory and acceding Governments of such accession.

ARTICLE VI

1. This Protocol shall not be subject to ratification in respect to any government unless a specific reservation to that effect is made at the time of signature.

2. This Protocol shall come into force upon its acceptance in respect to at least thirty-five Governments Members of the Institute. Such acceptance shall be effected by:

(a) signature without reservation in regard to ratification, or

(b) deposit of an instrument of ratification in the archives of the Organization by Governments on behalf of which this Protocol is signed with a reservation in regard to ratification, or

(c) notice of accession in accordance with Article V.

3. After coming into force in accordance with paragraph 2 of this Article, this Protocol shall come into force for any other Government a Member of the Institute,

(a) on the date of signature on its behalf, unless such signature is made with a reservation in regard to ratification, in which event it shall come into force for such Government on the date of deposit of its instrument of ratification, or

(b) on the date of the receipt of the notice of accession, in the case of any nonsignatory Government which accedes in accordance with Article V.

IN WITNESS WHEREOF the duly authorized representatives of their respective Governments have met this day and have signed the present protocol, which is drawn up in the French and English languages, both texts being equally authentic, in a single original which shall be deposited in the archives of the Organization. Authenticated copies shall be furnished by the Organization to each of the signatory and acceding Governments and to any other Governments which, at the time this Protocol is signed, is a Member of the Institute.

Charge d'Affaires ad interim

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, it will be remembered that under the League of Nations there was an organization known as the International Institute of Agriculture. The functions and assets of that organization are now being transferred to the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations. This is simply a protocol authorizing the delivery to the United Nations of the property, records, and so forth of this organization.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The protocol is open to amendment. If there be no amendment to be proposed, the protocol will be reported to the Senate.

The protocol was reported to the Senate without amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution of ratification will be read.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

Resolved (two-thirds of the Senators present concurring therein), That the Senate advise and consent to the ratification of Executive H (79th Cong., 2d sess.), a protocol dated at Rome March 30, 1946, terminating the Rome Convention of June 7, 1905, and transferring the functions and assets of the International Institute of Agriculture to the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution of ratification. [Putting the question.] Two-thirds of the Senators present concurring therein, the resolution of ratification is agreed to, and the protocol is ratified.

The Clerk will proceed to state the nominations on the Executive Calendar.

NATIONAL HOUSING AGENCY—NOMINATION PASSED OVER

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Dillon S. Myer to be Administrator of the United States Housing Authority in the National Housing Agency, which nomination had been previously passed over.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I am obliged to ask that this nomination be passed over.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I wish to express my regret that the Senator from Ohio feels that he must ask that this nomination be passed over, which, of course, means that under the circumstances it will not be acted upon at this session. I realize that under the law the President may make a recess appointment, and that the nomination can be sent to the Senate at the next session of Congress; but that does not minimize my regret that we cannot confirm the nomination at this time.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I also add my regret. Mr. Myer appeared before our committee and was unanimously recommended by the committee. I am very sorry that we are not able to confirm his nomination.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The nomination will be passed over.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE

The legislative clerk read the nomination of William L. Clayton to be Under Secretary of State for Economic Affairs.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

FOREIGN SERVICE

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations in the Foreign Service.

Mr. BARKLEY. I ask that the nominations in the Foreign Service be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nominations in the Foreign Service are confirmed en bloc.

DEPARTMENT OF LABOR

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Keen Johnson to be Under Secretary of Labor.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I wish to say just a word. I do not think there has been recently a more happy or appropriate appointment than the appointment of former Gov. Keen Johnson of my State as Under Secretary of Labor. Governor Johnson is a very excellent and able executive. He is a level-headed man. He enjoys the confidence of labor and business. He has had business experience as a successful newspaperman in Kentucky. He was a most excellent Governor of the State. Prior to that time he was Lieutenant Governor of Kentucky. I am very happy to recommend the confirmation of the nomination of former Gov. Keen Johnson to this position.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Will the Senate advise and consent to this nomination?

The nomination was confirmed.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Ewan Clague to be Commissioner of Labor Statistics.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

UNITED STATES PUBLIC HEALTH SERVICE

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations in the Public Health Service.

Mr. BARKLEY. I ask that the nominations in the United States Public Health Service be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nominations in the United States Public Health Service are confirmed en bloc.

POSTMASTERS

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations of postmasters.

Mr. BARKLEY. I ask that the nominations of postmasters be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nominations of postmasters are confirmed en bloc.

POSTMASTERS—NEW REPORTS

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. President, because of the lateness of the session of Congress many nominations of postmasters were referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads yesterday. The committee had to clear them today. Hence they are not on the calendar. However, they have been approved. Senators from the respective States have been consulted and have also approved the nominations. I ask unanimous consent to report them at this time and have them confirmed.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, are there any names on the list which have been previously before the committee?

Mr. CHAVEZ. The one which the Senator from New Hampshire has in mind has not been reported.

Mr. BRIDGES. I thank the Senator. I have no objection.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Nominations which have been objected to are not on the list.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the nominations? The Chair hears none. Without objection, the nominations are confirmed en bloc.

THE ARMY

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Robert Sprague Beightler to be a brigadier general in the Regular Army of the United States.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It gives the Chair great pleasure to announce that, without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

THE MARINE CORPS

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations in the Marine Corps.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nominations in the Marine Corps are confirmed en bloc.

That completes the Executive Calendar.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I ask that the President be immediately notified of all nominations confirmed this day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the President will be notified forthwith.

ADJOURNMENT SINE DIE

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, in accordance with the terms of House Concurrent Resolution 165, heretofore agreed to today, I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 7 o'clock and 27 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned sine die.

DISAPPROVAL OF SENATE BILLS AFTER SINE DIE ADJOURNMENT

The message also announced that the President had vetoed the following bills of the Senate on the dates indicated.

TRUST ASSOCIATION OF H. KEMPNER

S. 334. I am withholding my approval from the bill (S. 334) for the relief of the Trust Association of H. Kempner.

The bill confers jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to determine the losses sustained by the Trust Association of H. Kempner, of Galveston, Tex., as a result of the sale of cotton by that firm to certain mills in Germany during the years 1923 and 1924, and to determine the amount of funds "wrongfully" paid out of the trust account of Germann & Co. by the Alien Property Custodian following the seizure of that company by the Alien Property Custodian during World War I. The bill further directs the Alien Property Custodian to credit the Germann & Co. trust account with the amount found by the Court of Claims to have been "wrongfully" paid out of the trust, and to charge and collect that amount from either the German special deposit account in the Treasury, sometimes known as the Secretary's special deposit account No. 8, or from any funds or property of the Government of Germany "or of nationals of Germany," which are now or may hereafter come into the possession of or under the control of the United States Government. A further provision of the bill provides for the payment of the sum so credited to the trust account of Germann & Co. to the Trust Association of H. Kempner in the amount of the losses found by the Court of Claims to have been suffered by the last-mentioned company and for an assignment by the H. Kempner association of all claims against the German Government or German nationals arising out of its cotton sales during 1923 and 1924 to the account of Germann & Co.

There appears to be no connection between the claim of the H. Kempner association for losses sustained in its dealings with German cotton mills in 1923 and 1924 and the claim of Germann & Co. for damages allegedly suffered because of the acts of the Alien Property Custodian during World War I. Although the bill purports to enable the Germann & Co. trust account to recover the damages alleged to have been suffered, the amount so determined would be paid to the H. Kempner trust association. By this coupling of claims, the H. Kempner association would recoup losses suffered by it in 1923 and 1924 out of funds specially reserved for the payment of war damage claims.

The German special deposit account was created by section 4 of the Settlement of War Claims Act of March 10, 1928 (45 Stat. 254). This fund was created to settle all claims between Germany and the United States arising out of World War I. By it terms, various moneys are paid into it and disbursements are made according to a scale of 13 priorities. The principal items of disbursement from this fund are those to awardees of the Mixed Claims Commission. These persons were awarded damages for illegal acts committed by the German Government in the course of the First World War. The account is in the nature of a trust fund and was set up after much consideration. This bill makes the fund subject to a claim which apparently has no connection with World War I or property seized by the Alien Property Custodian. The amount which is alleged to have been illegally paid out of the Germann trust is over $971,000, without interest. This sum would be a charge against the German special deposit account and would be a most unfair and unjust diversion of funds allocated and earmarked for awardees by the Mixed Claims Commission. Under existing law, the Kempner trust association is ineligible as a claimant under the Trading With the Enemy Act, since its claim arose subsequent to October 6, 1917.

In view of all of the foregoing circumstances, I am constrained to withhold my approval from the bill.

THE WHITE HOUSE, August 10, 1946.

PROPERTY IN THE STATE OF MICHIGAN

S. 1198. I have withheld my approval from S. 1198, "To authorize the Secretary of Commerce to sell certain property in the State of Michigan now occupied by the Weather Bureau and to acquire land in the State of Michigan for the erection of a Weather Bureau station."

Section 1 of the bill authorizes the Secretary of Commerce to sell the Weather Bureau station located on the campus of the Michigan State College of Agriculture and Applied Science, and to convey such property to the said college by quitclaim deed, and to deposit the proceeds of such sales in the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts. Section 2 authorizes and directs the Secretary of Commerce to acquire a site and cause to be erected thereon a suitable and commodious building for the use and accommodation of the Weather Bureau at East Lansing, Mich., to replace the station authorized to be sold. Section 3 authorizes the appropriation, out of money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, of such sums as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of the bill.

The Weather Bureau building at East Lansing, Mich., which was erected on the campus of the college during the year 1927, is not surplus to the needs of the Government, as the Weather Bureau continues to render an important weather service there to the public. At the time the building was constructed it cost approximately $38,000, exclusive of the cost of land which was donated by the State College of Agriculture and Applied Science. To sell the building to the college, acquire a site and erect a new building at the present time of scarcity of building materials, would be inimical to the interests of the Government, since it would result in considerable additional cost and contribute to the general scarcity of materials for the construction of housing for veterans.

For these reasons, I feel obliged to withhold my approval of this measure.

HARRY S. TRUMAN.

THE WHITE HOUSE, August 7, 1946.

WILLIAM S. BROWN

S. 1277. I have withheld my approval from the bill (S. 1277) "Conferring jurisdiction upon the United States District Court of the Western District of South Carolina, to hear, determine, and render judgment upon the claim of William S. Brown."

The bill confers jurisdiction upon the United States District Court for the Western District of South Carolina, to hear, determine, and render judgment upon the claims of William S. Brown, of Greenville, S. C., for any losses sustained under certain specified contracts provided "that such action may be brought in the Court of Claims within 1 year of the date of the approval of this act, with right of appellate review as in other cases."

It appears that on September 7, 1942, Mr. Brown was awarded a contract for repairing shoes at the Greenville Army Air Base, Greenville, S. C., for a period from October 1 to December 31, 1942. The contract provided with respect to the number of shoes to be repaired as follows: "Quantity estimated—half soles, 3,000; heels, rubber, 3,000." The contract was completed and payment made and accepted therefor.

Thereafter Mr. Brown entered into several contracts with the Army Air Base at Greenville, S. C., to repair varying numbers of shoes. These contracts while specifying the number of shoes to be repaired, did not contain the word "estimated" as was contained in the original contract. They did contain a clause which provided that any variation in the quantities called for not exceeding 10 percent would be accepted as compliance with the contract.

The quantities of shoes called for in the contracts were not delivered for repair. At the completion of the contracts Mr. Brown was paid the sum of $9,215.32 for the actual work performed by him. If the full number of shoes specified in the contracts had been delivered, he would have been entitled to receive payment in the amount of $16,755.

Mr. Brown submitted a claim to the War Department for the sum of $5,864.18. This amount represented the total repair price of all of the shoes specified in the contracts ($16,755) less 10 percent for variations ($1,675.50), and less the amount received by him for the actual work performed ($9,215.32). The War Department denied the claim on the ground that the issues involved were triable by the United States Court of Claims (28 U. S. C. 250).

The United States has waived its immunity to suit on claims for damages arising out of contracts, express or implied, and the Court of Claims has been designated as the forum to hear, determine, and render judgment on such claims (28 U. S. C. 250). Further, the district courts have concurrent jurisdiction with the Court of Claims in such matters if the claim does not exceed $10,000 (28 U. S. C. 41 (20)). It appears, therefore, that claimant, under existing law, may have his claim adjudicated by the United States District Court for the Western District of South Carolina.

Since relief by private act of Congress should be granted only when no remedy is provided by law, and since existing law provides a remedy in this case, I am constrained to withhold my approval from the bill.

HARRY S. TRUMAN.

THE WHITE HOUSE, August 8, 1946.

LESTER A. DESSEZ

S. 1731. I have withheld my approval from S. 1731, Seventy-ninth Congress, entitled "An act for the relief of Lester A. Dessez."

This enactment would authorize and direct the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to Lester A. Dessez, colonel, United States Marine Corps, the sum of $808.95 in full settlement of all claims against the United States for emergency travel of dependents (less a payment of $47.03 already made) to which the said Lester A. Dessez would have been entitled, if he had had the necessary orders, for the period August 1, 1941, to September 15, 1941, for travel of dependents from Tutuila, American Samoa, to Washington, D. C.

When the travel of the dependents, which forms the basis for the relief proposed to be granted, was performed, no change of station orders had been issued to Colonel Dessez and therefore he was not entitled to reimbursement of the cost of their travel under the law authorizing transportation of dependents at Government expense when ordered to make a permanent change of station, nor was there any other authority of law for reimbursement of the amount in question. Moreover, under the circumstances, it appears that there was no sound basis upon which Colonel Dessez reasonably could have expected to be reimbursed for such travel of his dependents since a review of the facts would indicate that the travel in question was performed solely for personal reasons. Apparently the only basis on which the officer's claim to the amount in question is asserted is the probability that had the travel of his dependents been delayed several months, changed circumstances would have authorized such travel at Government expense. That, of course, may be true with respect to any travel that may be performed by an officer's dependents at any time.

It is understood that Colonel Dessez' situation with respect to the travel of his dependents under the circumstances here involved is not by any means an isolated case and in addition to the fact that there appears to be doubt as to whether he is equitably entitled to payment of the amount in question, I do not feel justified in approving the enrolled enactment since it would accord him preferential treatment over other officers and enlisted personnel who may be similarly situated, and thus would establish an undesirable precedent.

HARRY S. TRUMAN.

THE WHITE HOUSE, August 7, 1946.

THADDEUS C. KNIGHT

S. 528. I have withheld my approval of S. 528, an act "For the relief of Thaddeus C. Knight."

The proposed legislation recites that Thaddeus C. Knight, formerly a captain, Quartermaster Corps, United States Army, was convicted by general court martial on the basis of perjured testimony, and that such conviction was without foundation in law or in fact. It would authorize his reappointment as a captain, United States Army, and his immediate retirement in that grade, with the pay and allowances pertaining thereto. The proposed act would further confer upon Mr. Knight all rights and benefits accruing to persons who have served in the military service of the United States and have been honorably discharged therefrom.

The issues in this case have been reviewed and reconsidered on numerous occasions, and measures similar to S. 528 have twice been vetoed. Captain Knight was tried and convicted on 2 charges covering 10 specifications. One witness, whose testimony related at most to five of these, has since repudiated part, or all, of his original testimony. However, even disregarding the testimony of this witness, and giving Mr. Knight the benefit of every doubt with respect to these alleged offenses, the record clearly shows the commission of several other offenses, including the procurement of endorsements to two checks, for considerable amounts, known to be worthless, and the passing of such checks. These latter offenses alone would have amply justified Captain Knight's dismissal from the military service; and in view of such fact, I can see no adequate reason for his reappointment and retirement as a captain in the United States Army.

HARRY S. TRUMAN.

THE WHITE HOUSE, August 12, 1946.

RAILROAD REORGANIZATION

S. 1253. I am withholding my approval of S. 1253, entitled "An act to enable debtor railroad corporations, whose properties during a period of 7 years have provided sufficient earnings to pay fixed charges, to effect a readjustment of their financial structures; to alter or modify their financial obligations; and for other purposes."

Even though I am familiar with the deficiencies and inequities and the evils that exist under section 77 of the present Bankruptcy Act, I fear that this new bill would not accomplish the purpose for which it was intended.

The bill contains two sections, the first of which contemplates the prevention of bankruptcy proceedings where practicable; the second contemplates the reorganization of certain railroad carriers by the institution of proceedings under section 1 of the bill for readjustment of their financial affairs.

Objections which I have to the bill include the following:

The bill fails to direct specifically the immediate reduction of the grossly excessive interest rates now wasting the funds of the railroads in section 77 proceedings. Millions of dollars per year can be saved at once for each of the railroads in section 77 proceedings by reducing the interest rates on their bonds and other debt down to the level of the interest rates paid by railroads not in section 77 proceedings. I reiterate a statement which I made in my message to Congress on the state of the Union which is as follows, "low interest rates will be an important force in promoting the full production and full employment in the postwar period for which we are all striving."

The bill does not adequately cure the evil, present in reorganizations under section 77, of permitting improper control of railroads after their reorganization.

The bill fails to provide full protection against forfeiture of securities and investments.

The level of fees and expenses in reorganization cases under section 77 has been excessive. This is not corrected in this bill. Affirmative provisions to curb this evil and to bring it under strict control should be included in any bill which may be enacted.

The bill excludes from its benefits certain railroads which should be brought within its provisions if it is to become law. In this regard it appears that the $50,000,000-limitation in section 2 of the bill would exclude some railroads for whose exclusion there appears to be no logical justification.

This bill fails to correct a serious abuse which I condemned in the course of the Senate railroad investigation. I refer to the abuse of diverting, under cover of a reorganization plan, the funds of a railroad for the purchase of its own stocks in the market.

On the other hand, the bill does incorporate principles for which I was one of the sponsors in the Senate. I commend particularly the emphasis which the bill places on the principle that reorganizations must give primary consideration to the public interest, and to the best interests of the railroads which are being reorganized.

This requires among other things that reorganizations shall place control of railroads in persons primarily concerned with transportation for the communities served and for the Nation as a whole, without any strings direct or indirect, conditional or otherwise, to institutions or others in distant financial centers.

Such regard for the public interest will also help the stockholders, whether they be railroad employees who have invested in the stocks of the companies for which they work, or ordinary investors, desirous of safeguarding their investment, but not of helping any interest to capture control of their railroad. These stockholders, whom the bill justly seeks to protect against forfeiture, can and should get such protection, but without enabling any financial interest to use such legislation to acquire control.

By withholding my signature to this bill I do not intend to indicate that I favor the pending reorganization plans. I am in agreement with those objectives of the bill which prevent undesirable control of the railroads, either immediately or within a few years, and which prevent forfeitures of securities.

I believe that the next Congress can pass a bill which will meet the stated objections and which will be in the best interests of the public, the railroads, the bondholders and other creditors, and the stockholders.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

FRIDAY, AUGUST 2, 1946

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

Rev. Bernard Braskamp, D. D., pastor of the Gunton-Temple Memorial Presbyterian Church, offered the following prayer:

O Thou gracious benefactor, whose heart and hands always respond to our every need, we pray that this may be a day of unclouded vision and of joyous achievement as we seek to live and labor in faith, in faithfulness, and in the fear of the Lord.

Purge us from everything which dwarfs and deadens our capacities for noble service. May our minds and hearts be impervious to all thoughts of personal aggrandizement. Emancipate us from every selfish propensity. Rebuke and restrain us when some insurgent impulse tempts us to be recreant to the duties of our high vocation as servants of God and our beloved country.

Grant that the blessings of insight and understanding, of clear judgment and wise decision, of faith and courage may be given in an ever-increasing measure to our President, our Speaker, and all the Members of this legislative body as they sincerely seek to lift mankind to the high plateau of peace and prosperity, of brotherhood and good will.

Now may the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, the love of God, and the fellowship of the Holy Spirit be with us all.

To Thy name we ascribe all the praise. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Sundry messages in writing from the President of the United States were communicated to the House by Mr. Miller, one of his secretaries, who also informed the House that on the following dates the President approved and signed bills of the House of the following titles:

On August 1, 1946:

H. R. 2243. An act for the relief of Arthur Guarino.

On August 2, 1946:

H. R. 3420. An act to provide for refunds to railroad employees in certain cases, so as to place the various States on an equal basis, under the Railroad Unemployment Insurance Act, with respect to contributions of employees;

H. R. 3543. An act for the relief of Elmer D. Thompson and the legal guardian of James Thompson; and

H. R. 6533. An act to authorize certain administrative expenses in the Government service, and for other purposes.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Frazier, its legislative clerk, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment a bill of the House of the following title:

H. R. 5125. An act to establish the Castle Clinton National Monument, in the city of New York, and for other purposes.

TITLE TO LANDS BENEATH TIDAL AND NAVIGABLE WATERS

The SPEAKER. When the House adjourned yesterday the unfinished business was the President's veto message on the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 225) to quiet the titles of the respective States, and others, to lands beneath tidewaters and lands beneath navigable waters within the boundaries of such States and to prevent further clouding of such titles.

The question is, Will the House, on reconsideration, pass the bill, the objections of the President to the contrary notwithstanding?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, this matter has very recently been fully debated in the House, and I assume the Members of the House are as familiar with the question and the issues involved as they are with reference to any other matter that has come before the House in a long time.

Mr. Speaker, I have had no request from any Member for time to speak on this matter. I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to announce that the Chair has received veto messages on the bills H. R. 4660 and H. R. 6442. They will be laid before the House at the proper time.

The question is, Will the House, on reconsideration, pass the bill, the objections of the President to the contrary notwithstanding?

Under the Constitution, this vote must be determined by the yeas and nays.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 139, nays 95, not voting 196, as follows:

MRS. GEORGIA LANSER AND ENSIGN JOSEPH LANSER—VETO MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following veto message from the President of the United States:

To the House of Representatives:

I return herewith, without my approval, H. R. 4660, a bill for the relief of Mrs. Georgia Lanser and Ensign Joseph Lanser.

The bill would authorize the payment of $7,500 to Mrs. Georgia Lanser and $500 to Ensign Joseph Lanser, both of Elkhorn, Wis., in full settlement of all claims against the United States by reason of personal injuries, hospital and medical expenses, and loss of services sustained as the result of an accident involving a United States Navy bus, on August 26, 1944.

While there appears to be no question but what the Government should assume the responsibility for the accident, it is not believed that the proposed payment of $7,500 to Mrs. Georgia Lanser, is justified.

Mrs. Lanser's injuries, while apparently causing her great pain and suffering, resulted in only slight disability. The disability of her mouth is correctable by a partial denture. She sustained no loss of pay and was hospitalized in a naval hospital, incurring only a subsistence expense of $54.25. The partial denture which was obtained from a private dentist cost $250.

The bill is further objectionable in that it proposes to pay to Ensign Joseph Lanser, for personal injuries sustained by himself, the sum of $500. Ensign Lanser was on active duty with the Navy at the time of the accident. He was hospitalized in a naval hospital and is entitled to the same rights and benefits extended to all other members of the armed forces who sustained personal injuries while in an active-duty status. No reason is evident why special treatment should be accorded this officer.

For the reasons stated herein, I do not feel justified in giving this enactment my approval. I would be glad to approve a measure which would provide compensation to Mrs. Georgia Lanser in an amount commensurate with her injuries.

HARRY S. TRUMAN.

THE WHITE HOUSE, August 2, 1946.

The SPEAKER. The objections of the President will be spread at large upon the Journal.

Without objection, the message and the accompanying bill will be referred to the Committee on Claims and ordered to be printed.

There was no objection.

MRS. ELIZABETH J. PATTERSON, JOY PATTERSON, AND ROBERTA PATTERSON—VETO MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following veto message from the President of the United States:

To the House of Representatives:

I return herewith without my approval the bill (H. R. 6442) for the relief of Mrs. Elizabeth J. Patterson, Joy Patterson, and Roberta Patterson.

The bill provides for the payment of the sum of $20,963 to the claimants in full settlement of "all claims against the United States on account of the losses or reduction on salary and allowances sustained by the late Brig. Gen. Robert F. Patterson" during the time he was United States consul general at Calcutta, India. Mrs. Elizabeth J. Patterson is the daughter-in-law, and Joy and Roberta Patterson are the granddaughters of the late General Patterson.

It appears that on January 1, 1898, General Patterson assumed the office of consul general of the United States in Calcutta, India. At that time, it had been the practice of the consul general at Calcutta to collect the fees of the office in rupees from which he deducted his salary, clerk hire, rent, and other expenses. Rupees were accepted at the bullion value which had been fixed at approximately 20 cents per rupee without regard to commercial rates of exchange, and after the deductions were made, the balance was remitted to the Government of the United States at the commercial exchange value, which at the time was approximately 32 cents. This custom was pursued by General Patterson for the first few months of his term of office.

On March 8, 1898, the Comptroller of the Treasury issued a circular respecting exchange by consular officers of the United States, which required such officers to accept rupees at the commercial exchange value. Although this order was effective January 1, 1898, it was not received at the consulate in Calcutta until April 13, 1898. From that time on, General Patterson collected the consular fees upon the basis of the commercial value of the rupee at the time of the transaction (approximately 32 cents) and remitted the balance after deductions at the same rate to the United States Government. Since there was no United States or English money in circulation at the time, General Patterson, of necessity, accepted his salary in rupees. In his report each quarter, he claimed his salary and expenses in the bullion value of the rupee, and protested against their allowance at the commercial exchange rate. Of course, payment in rupees at the bullion value (20 cents) would have enhanced General Patterson's remuneration, as it would obviously have required more rupees at this value to make up his annual salary than at the higher (32 cents) value. When he returned to the United States in 1906, he undertook to have his salary adjusted on the basis of the bullion value of the rupee. The accounting officers of the Treasury Department, however, refused such settlement. The amount provided in the bill represents the difference between the bullion value and the commercial exchange value of the rupees he received as salary for his entire tenure of office.

Apparently the only occasion on which the Government required General Patterson actually to remit a cash deficiency out of his own pocket, was for the period between January 1, 1898, when the order of the Comptroller of the Treasury became effective, and April 13, 1898, when it was received and put into effect by the general, during which time the general had been conducting the affairs of his office, including the payment of himself, on the bullion (20 cents) value of the rupee whereas it should have been done, in accordance with the Comptroller's order, on the basis of the commercial (32 cents) value. Thereafter his salary was paid at the commercial exchange rate.

The bill provides for the payment of the difference in dollar value between the salary General Patterson received in rupees at their commercial rate during the period from January 1, 1898 to May 28, 1906, and what he would have received in rupees if he had been paid at their bullion value. It would seem therefore that the effect of the measure is not to satisfy a loss that General Patterson sustained but to allow him the same profit which his predecessor had been making at the expense of the Government as a result of the difference between the actual commercial value of the rupee and its bullion value.

I do not believe there is any legal or moral obligation on the part of the Government to do this and, accordingly, I am constrained to withhold my approval of the bill.

HARRY S. TRUMAN.

THE WHITE HOUSE, August 2, 1946.

The SPEAKER. The objections of the President will be spread at large upon the Journal.

Without objection, the message and the accompanying bill will be referred to the Committee on Claims and ordered to be printed.

There was no objection.

FURTHER MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A further message from the Senate, by Mr. Gatling, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate agrees to the amendment of the House to a bill of the Senate of the following title:

S. 334. An act for the relief of the Trust Association of H. Kempner.

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7037) entitled "An act to amend the Social Security Act and the Internal Revenue Code, and for other purposes."

PROCEEDING AGAINST RICHARD MORFORD

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Mississippi rise?

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I send to the Clerk's desk a privileged resolution and ask that it be read.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the resolution.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Speaker, has not the Speaker the power to determine the order of business by recognizing or not recognizing gentlemen requesting the consideration of various pieces of legislation? I make that parliamentary inquiry because there is very important business pending before the House—social security, appropriations for terminal-leave pay, and for automobiles for amputees—and I see no reason why this resolution should be given preference.

The SPEAKER. It would not be given preference if it were an ordinary resolution, but this is a resolution of high privilege.

CALL OF THE HOUSE

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Then, Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and seventy-five Members are present, not a quorum.

Without objection, a call of the House is ordered.

There was no objection.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

The SPEAKER. On this roll call 234 Members have answered to their names, a quorum.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I move that further proceedings under the call be dispensed with.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. MARCANTONIO) there were—ayes 152, noes 14.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, there is pending a bill providing appropriations for the GI terminal-leave pay and also a bill giving assistance to the old-aged people of this country. Is there any way by which we could get that legislation on the floor this afternoon?

The SPEAKER. If the Members would stay on the floor, the pending matter would be disposed of very quickly.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Can we not all make an effort on behalf of the GI's and the old-aged people to stay on the floor and pass that legislation?

Mr. RANKIN. I think we should.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that would be a good idea.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present, and make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and ninety-three Members are present, not a quorum.

The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 223, nays 9, not voting 198, as follows:

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The doors were opened.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I have here several privileged rules on important bills. I fully appreciate the fact that conference reports are in order, but also the rules I have are in order and I want to know whether I am going to be recognized to present these rules or not. They are important.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman mean to file them?

Mr. SABATH. No. They are filed already. I want to call them up.

The SPEAKER. The Chair cannot answer that question yet. The Chair does not know what the afternoon will bring forth.

Mr. SABATH. They are privileged resolutions.

The SPEAKER. There is a privileged matter up now and there are two conference reports to be considered that the Chair will recognize Members on next. Whether or not the Chair will recognize anyone to call up rules this afternoon remains to be seen.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I desire to file a privileged report.

The SPEAKER. The Chair cannot recognize the gentleman for that purpose at this time.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Speaker, it is obvious that we have reached an impasse and somebody has to surrender. The proponent of the resolution, the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN] refuses to hold it in abeyance so as to permit other legislation, vital legislation, to be enacted. Heretofore my points of no quorum did not hold up either social-security legislation nor amputees' automobile legislation nor terminal leave pay. Now I am confronted with a different condition. If I continue to raise points of order I will be endangering three very important pieces of legislation, appropriations for terminal leave pay, appropriations for automobiles for amputees, and social security. I want those three pieces of legislation passed before we adjourn. Inasmuch as the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN] will not yield to save these bills, and, much as I hate to do it, as I have never raised the white flag before, I will not insist on any further points of order. I take this position only in the interests of the veterans and the aged. I shall, however, vote against this un-American resolution, and I oppose it in the interests of American democracy.

PROCEEDINGS AGAINST RICHARD MORFORD

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 752

Resolved, That the Speaker of the House of Representatives certify the foregoing report of the House Committee on Un-American Activities as to the willful and deliberate refusal of the following person to produce before the said committee for its inspection certain books, papers, and records which had been duly subpenaed, and to testify under oath concerning all pertinent facts relating thereto; under seal of the House of Representatives to the United States attorney for the District of Columbia to the end that the said person named below may be proceeded against in the manner and form provided by law; Richard Morford, 114 East Thirty-second Street, New York, N. Y.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from New York [Mr. MARCANTONIO] said he was raising the white flag, surrendering and quitting his filibuster against this resolution. He may not know it, but he did not raise a white flag; he raised an American flag.

Richard Morford claims to be an executive director of the National Council of American-Soviet Friendship, Inc., with offices at 114 East Thirty-second Street, New York City. He appeared before the committee on March 6, 1946, and admitted that he had custody of all books, papers, and records of the organization and that in substance he is also in charge of the headquarters office in New York. He admitted his organization communicated with persons in Moscow and in other countries outside the United States and said further that the organization had a special committee engaged in coordinating information and publishing it in the shape of a bulletin which was sent abroad as well as being distributed in the United States. Morford further refused to answer questions by the committee chairman concerning the names of the people who constituted the special editing committee. Morford refused to produce the books, papers, and records of his organization for inspection by the committee and also refused to permit investigators to enter the office for the purpose of inspecting the records.

Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the resolution.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. MARCANTONIO) there were—ayes 166, noes 17.

So the resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

SOCIAL SECURITY ACT AMENDMENTS OF 1936

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (H. R. 7037) to amend the Social Security Act and the Internal Revenue Code, and for other purposes, and ask unanimous consent that the statement of the managers on the part of the House be read in lieu of the report.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the statement.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7037) to amend the Social Security Act and the Internal Revenue Code, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 42 and 52.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 2½, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 14, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 27, 28, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 37, 38, 39, 40, and 41, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 13: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 13, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 2, line 13, of the Senate engrossed amendments strike out "July 17" and insert "July 16"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 15: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 15, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 3, line 3, of the Senate engrossed amendments strike out "July 1, 1947" and insert "January 1, 1948"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 26: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 26, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment, insert the following:

"Notwithstanding any other provision of this title, no compensation shall be paid to any individual pursuant to this title with respect to unemployment occurring prior to the date when funds are made available for such payments."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 29: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 29, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: On page 5, line 6, of the Senate engrossed amendments strike out " '$15,000,000' " and insert in lieu thereof " '$11,000,000' ";

In line 10, strike out "$7,500,000" and insert "$5,500,000";

In line 11, strike out "$50,000" and insert "$35,000";

In line 12, strike out "$7,500,000" and insert "$5,500,000";

In line 17, strike out " '$7,500,000' " and insert " '$5,500,000' ";

In line 19, strike out " '$10,000,000' " and insert " '$7,500,000' ";

In line 23, strike out "$5,000,000" and insert "$3,750,000";

In line 24, strike out "$40,000" and insert "$30,000";

In line 25, strike out "$5,000,000" and insert "$3,750,000";

On page 6, line 6, strike out " '$5,000,000' " and insert " '$3,750,000' ";

In line 8, strike out " '$5,000,000' " and insert " '$3,500,000' ";

In line 10, strike out "'$30,000'" and insert "'$20,000'";

In line 14, strike out "$1,500,000" and insert "$1,000,000";

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 30: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 30 and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment, insert the following:

"(c) The amendments made by subsection (b) shall not require amended allotments for the fiscal year 1947 until sufficient appropriations have been made to carry out such amendments, and allotments from such appropriations shall be made in amounts not exceeding the amounts authorized by the amendments made by this section."

Amendments numbered 43, 44, 45, 46, 47, 48, 49, 50, and 51: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 43, 44, 45, 46, 47, 48, 49, 50, and 51, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be stricken out and in lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by such Senate amendments insert the following:

"SEC. 501. Old Age Assistance.

"(a) Section 3 (a) of the Social Security Act, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

"'SEC. 3. (a) From the sums appropriated therefor, the Secretary of the Treasury shall pay to each State which has an approved plan for old-age assistance, for each quarter, beginning with the quarter commencing October 1, 1946, (1) an amount, which shall be used exclusively as old-age assistance, equal to the sum of the following proportions of the total amounts expended during such quarter as old-age assistance under the State plan with respect to each needy individual who at the time of such expenditure is sixty-five years of age or older and is not an inmate of a public institution, not counting so much of such expenditure with respect to any such individual for any month as exceeds $45—

"'(A) Two-thirds of such expenditures, not counting so much of any expenditure with respect to any month as exceeds the product of $15 multiplied by the total number of such individuals who received old-age assistance for such month, plus

"'(B) One-half of the amount by which such expenditures exceed the maximum which may be counted under clause (A);

and (2) an amount equal to one-half of the total of the sums expended during such quarter as found necessary by the Administrator for the proper and efficient administration of the State plan, which amount shall be used for paying the costs of administering the State plan or for old-age assistance, or both, and for no other purpose.'

"(b) Section 3 (b) of such Act is amended (1) by striking out 'one-half', and inserting in lieu thereof 'the State's proportionate share'; (2) by striking out 'clause (1) of' wherever it appears in such subsection; (3) by striking out 'in accordance with the provisions of such clause' and inserting in lieu thereof 'in accordance with the provisions of such subsection'; and (4) by striking out ', increased by 5 per centum'.

"SEC. 502. Aid to Dependent Children.

"(a) Section 403 (a) of the Social Security Act, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

"'SEC. 403. (a) From the sums appropriated therefor, the Secretary of the Treasury shall pay to each State which has an approved plan for aid to dependent children, for each quarter, beginning with the quarter commencing October 1, 1946, (1) an amount, which shall be used exclusively as aid to dependent children, equal to the sum of the following proportions of the total amounts expended during such quarter as aid to dependent children under the State plan, not counting so much of such expenditure with respect to any dependent child for any month as exceeds $24, or if there is more than one dependent child in the same home, as exceeds $24 with respect to one such dependent child and $15 with respect to each of the other dependent children—

"'(A) Two-thirds of such expenditures, not counting so much of any expenditure with respect to any month as exceeds the product of $9 multiplied by the total number of dependent children with respect to whom aid to dependent children is paid for such month, plus

"'(B) One-half of the amount by which such expenditures exceed the maximum which may be counted under clause (A); and (2) an amount equal to one-half of the total of the sums expended during such quarter as found necessary by the Administrator for the proper and efficient administration of the State plan, which amount shall be used for paying the costs of administering the State plan or for aid to dependent children, or both, and for no other purpose.'

"(b) Section 403 (b) of such Act is amended by striking out 'one-half' and inserting in lieu thereof 'the State's proportionate share'.

"SEC. 503. Aid to the Blind.

"(a) Section 1003 (a) of the Social Security Act, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

"'SEC. 1003. (a) From the sums appropriated therefor, the Secretary of the Treasury shall pay to each State which has an approved plan for aid to the blind, for each quarter, beginning with the quarter commencing October 1, 1946, (1) an amount, which shall be used exclusively as aid to the blind, equal to the sum of the following proportions of the total amounts expended during such quarter as aid to the blind under the State plan with respect to each needy individual who is blind and is not an inmate of a public institution, not counting so much of such expenditure with respect to any such individual for any month as exceeds $45—

"'(A) Two-thirds of such expenditures, not counting so much of any expenditure with respect to any month as exceeds the product of $15 multiplied by the total number of such individuals who received aid to the blind for such month, plus

"'(B) One-half of the amount by which such expenditures exceed the maximum which may be counted under clause (A); and (2) an amount equal to one-half of the total of the sums expended during such quarter as found necessary by the Administrator for the proper and efficient administration of the State plan, which amount shall be used for paying the costs of administering the State plan or for aid to the blind, or both, and for no other purpose.'

"(b) Section 1003 (b) of such Act is amended by striking out 'one-half', and inserting in lieu thereof 'the State's proportionate share'.

"SEC. 504. Effective Period.

"Sections 501, 502, and 503 shall be effective with respect to the period commencing October 1, 1946 and ending on December 31, 1947."

Amendment numbered 53: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 53, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment, insert the following:

"TITLE VI—VETERANS' EMERGENCY HOUSING ACT OF 1946

"SEC. 601. Section 2 (a) of the Act of June 11, 1946 (Public Law 404, Seventy-ninth Congress) is amended by striking out the period at the end thereof and inserting a semicolon and the following: 'and the Veterans' Emergency Housing Act of 1946'."

And the Senate agree to the same.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7037) to amend the Social Security Act and the Internal Revenue Code, and for other purposes, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conferees and recommended in the accompanying conference report:

Amendment No. 1: This amendment eliminates section 103 of the House bill, which would have repealed the last sentence of section 201 (a) of the Social Security Act reading, "There is also authorized to be appropriated to the Trust Fund such additional sums as may be required to finance the benefits and payments provided under this title." Thus, the amendment leaves this sentence in the Social Security Act. The House recedes.

Amendments Nos. 2, 2½, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 13, 16, 22, 23, 24, 27, 33, 35, 36, and 37: These amendments, necessitated by Reorganization Plan No. 2 of 1946 which abolished the Social Security Board and transferred its functions to the Federal Security Administrator, delete (except as noted below) the references which the House bill made to the Social Security Board or to "the Board" and substitute references to the Federal Security Administrator or to "the Administrator", with corresponding changes in pronouns. Amendment No. 11 inserts a provision that when used in the Social Security Act the term "Administrator", unless the context otherwise requires, means the Federal Security Administrator. Amendment No. 10 retains a reference to the Board but enlarges the reference to include the Administrator. The House recedes.

Amendment No. 12: This amendment inserts the letter "(a)" after the section heading of section 301 of the bill. The House recedes.

Amendment No. 13: This amendment is also necessitated by Reorganization Plan No. 2 of 1946 and retains reference to the Board but enlarges the reference to include the Administrator. The House recedes with an amendment striking out the date "July 17" which was a clerical error in the Senate amendment and inserts in lieu thereof the date "July 16" which was the date on which Reorganization Plan No. 2 took effect.

Amendment No. 14: This amendment changes one of the conditions attached by the House bill to the congressional permission to the States to collect contributions under their unemployment compensation laws, based on maritime employment. The House bill made the permission subject to the conditions imposed by section 1606 (b) of the Internal Revenue Code on the collection of contributions from Federal instrumentalities and their employees. The amendment limits the condition to that contained in the second sentence (other than clause (2) thereof) of section 1606 (b); and eliminates the requirement that a State law provide for refunds in the event that such law is not certified for tax-credit purposes. The House recedes.

Amendment No. 15: This amendment provides that section 1606 (f) of the Internal Revenue Code, granting the limited permission above referred to shall not operate to invalidate, before July 1, 1947, any provision of a State unemployment compensation law in effect on the date of enactment of the bill. The House bill contained no corresponding provision. The House recedes with an amendment changing the date from "July 1, 1947," to "January 1, 1948."

Amendment No. 17: This amendment strikes out the definition contained in the House bill of "Federal maritime wages" and substitutes a new definition of the same term. The definition establishes the basis on which maritime wage credits will be determined for purposes of title XIII of the Social Security Act, which provides a temporary system of unemployment compensation for maritime workers. The definition in the House bill limits the term to "wages" as defined in section 209 of the Social Security Act, whereas the amendment does not contain this limitation. The House recedes.

Amendments Nos. 18 and 19: These amendments delete from title XIII of the Social Security Act definitions of the terms "State" and "United States" which appeared in the House bill. Identical definitions are contained in title XI of the Social Security Act, which apply generally to the whole act. The House recedes.

Amendment No. 20: This amendment inserts an authorization to the Federal Security Administrator, for purposes of title XIII of the Social Security Act, to determine in accordance with regulations issued by him the allocation of maritime services and wages among the several States. Such allocation will determine which State law will govern the benefit rights of Federal maritime workers. The House recedes.

Amendment No. 21: This amendment strikes out a limitation, contained in the House bill, upon the allocation of maritime wage credits among the States under title XIII of the Social Security Act. The House bill provided that a claimant who receives compensation pursuant to title XIII under the law of one State can thereafter receive further compensation pursuant to that title only under the law of the same State, except as the Administrator otherwise prescribes by regulations. The House recedes.

Amendments Nos. 25 and 26: These amendments provide that during the fiscal year 1947, funds appropriated for grants to the States pursuant to title III of the Social Security Act shall be available for carrying out the purposes of title XIII. No corresponding provision appeared in the House bill. The House recedes with an amendment which provides that no compensation will be paid to any individual pursuant to this title (XIII) with respect to unemployment occurring prior to the date when funds are made available for such payment. The purpose of the conference agreement is to prevent liability attaching for payment of compensation for unemployment occurring before funds have been appropriated and are available for making such payments.

Amendment No. 28 changes the caption of section 401 of the bill. The House recedes.

Amendment No. 29: This amendment strikes out from the House bill an authorization of increased appropriations necessary to extend to the Virgin Islands the grant-in-aid programs for maternal and child welfare and inserts provisions increasing the authorization of appropriations for all the States. The authorization for maternal and child health service grants is increased from $5,820,000 to $15,000,000 a year, with the matched grants to each State increased from $20,000 plus a share in $2,800,000 to $50,000 plus a share in the remainder of $7,500,000, and the unmatched grants increased from $1,980,000 to $7,500,000. The authorization for grants for services to crippled children is increased from $3,870,000 to $10,000,000 a year, with the matched grants to each State increased from $20,000 plus a share in $1,830,000 to $40,000 plus a share in the remainder of $5,000,000, and the unmatched grants increased from $1,000,000 to $5,000,000. The authorization for child welfare grants is increased from $1,510,000 to $5,000,000, with the allotment to each State increased from $10,000 plus a share in the remainder of the $1,510,000 to $30,000 plus a share in the remainder of $5,000,000. The authorization of appropriations for administration of these grants is fixed, for the fiscal year 1947, at $1,500,000. The House bill contained no provision corresponding to these increases for all of the States, and no authorization of appropriations for administrative expense. The House recedes with an amendment which reduces the increases contained in the Senate amendment by approximately one-half. The Senate amendment proposed an increase to $31,500,000 and the conference agreement reduces such figure to $23,000,000.

Amendment No. 30: This amendment provides that amended allotments under the maternal and child welfare programs shall not be required for the fiscal year 1947 until further appropriations have been made, and shall then be made in such manner as is provided in the appropriation act. The House bill contained no corresponding provision. The House recedes with an amendment limiting the allotments for the fiscal year 1947 to the sums authorized by the conference agreement.

Amendments Nos. 31 and 32: These amendments strike out an amendment, contained in the House bill, to section 202 (f) (1) of the Social Security Act, and substitute a different amendment of the same section. The Senate amendment would accomplish the purpose intended to be accomplished, but not clearly expressed, by the House bill. The House recedes.

Amendment No. 34: This amendment corrects an error in the House bill in a reference to a provision of existing law. The House recedes.

Amendments Nos. 38, 39, 40, and 41: These amendments make three changes in existing law, which would not have been made by the House bill, to permit the withdrawal from the Federal unemployment trust fund, for the payment by a State of disability compensation, of any payments which that State may have collected from employees under its unemployment compensation law and deposited in the trust fund, or which it may in the future collect and deposit. To accomplish this, identical provisos are added to sections 1603 (a) (4) and 1607 (f) of the Federal Unemployment Tax Act and section 303 (a) (5) of the Social Security Act. The present Federal definition of a State "unemployment fund" will not be affected by the Senate amendments except in the one particular noted. Withdrawals from the trust fund other than those specifically authorized by the amendments will still be permissible only for the same purposes as in the past. The House recedes.

Amendment No. 42: This amendment permits the Federal Security Administrator during the present fiscal year to expend existing appropriations for the administration of the Social Security Act, and for payments to the States pursuant to titles I, III, IV, V, X, and XIII of that act, at an accelerated rate (and thereby to incur deficiencies) to the extent, but only to the extent, that such acceleration of expenditures is necessary to meet additional costs resulting from the enactment of the bill. The House bill contained no corresponding provision. The Senate recedes since the Director of the Bureau of the Budget has authority under existing law to accomplish the same result.

Amendments Nos. 43, 44, 45, 46, 47, 48, 49, 50, and 51: The bill as it passed the House increased the existing ceilings on the Federal share of old-age assistance payments from $20 to $25, made the same change in the case of aid to the blind, and in the case of aid to dependent children increased the Federal share from $9 for the first child in the home and $6 for additional children to $13.50 and $9, respectively.

The Senate amendments, while retaining the above ceilings, also provide for variable matching ratios ranging from a 50–50 matching to a 66⅔–33⅓, depending on the per capita income of the State as compared with the per capita income of the United States.

The House recedes with an amendment which, while retaining the liberalized ceilings on the Federal share of assistance payments, substitutes for the variable matching formula a formula under which the Federal share would be two-thirds of the first $15 of monthly payments of old-age assistance or aid to the blind and one-half the remainder of the payment up to the over-all Federal maximum share of $25. Similarly in the case of aid to dependent children, the Federal share would be two-thirds of the first $9 of the payment and one-half of the balance up to the over-all Federal maximum share of $13.50 or $9.

The following tables illustrate the effect of the conference agreement with respect to the matching formula governing Federal contributions to State payments for the period October 1, 1946, to January 1, 1948, for public assistance, under titles I, IV, and X of the Social Security Act. Table No. 1 applies to aid to the aged and blind and table No. 2 applies to aid to dependent children. The new formula will apply uniformly in all States regardless of State per capita income or any other measure of relative economic resources among the States:

Amendment No. 52: This amendment added a new title, title VI. It authorized and directed the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation to make a full and complete study and investigation of all aspects of social security, particularly in respect to coverage, benefits, and taxes related thereto. The House bill contained no provisions corresponding to the title added by this amendment. The Senate recedes.

Amendment No. 53: This amendment, for which there appears no corresponding provision in the House bill, would amend section 22 (b) (2) (B) of the Internal Revenue Code, relating to the taxation of annuities purchased by employers for their employees. The present provisions of this section are to the effect that, in the case of such an annuity contract other than one purchased by an employer under a plan meeting certain requirements prescribed by section 165 and other than one purchased by an employer exempt from the income tax under section 101 (6), if the employee's rights under the contract are nonforfeitable except for the failure to pay premiums, the amount contributed by the employer for such annuity contract is required to be included in the income of the employee in the year in which the amount is contributed. The amendment contained in this section of the bill would add a proviso to the foregoing provision so that amounts contributed by an employer to a trust for the purchase of annuity contracts for the benefit of an employee shall not be included in the income of the employee in the year in which the contribution is made, if the contribution is made pursuant to a written agreement between the employer and the employee, or between the employer and the trustee, prior to October 21, 1942, and if the terms of such agreement entitle the employee to no rights, except with the consent of the trustee, under the annuity contracts other than the right to receive annuity payments. This amendment would become effective with respect to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1938.

The Senate amendment also contains a provision exempting the Veterans' Emergency Housing Act of 1946 from the provisions of the Administrative Procedure Act.

The House recedes with an amendment striking out the provision relating to employees' annuities and leaving in the provision exempting the Veterans' Emergency Housing Act of 1946 from the provisions of the Administrative Procedure Act.

Managers on the Part of the House.

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to report that the conferees on this bill H. R. 7037 reached a unanimous agreement, and the agreement was signed by all of the conferees. I do not know that I care to discuss the report of the conferees at any great length. After my brief statement, if anybody has any questions with respect to what the conferees agreed upon I shall be glad to try to answer them.

I shall not discuss the several Senate amendments stricken from the bill or the purely technical changes accepted by the House conferees.

You are already familiar with title I of the bill freezing the tax; title II, providing old-age and survivors' insurance benefits for survivors of World War veterans who die after discharge: title III, providing for State unemployment compensation coverage for maritime employees; and title IV, providing needed technical changes in old-age and survivors' insurance. There was no substantial differences between the House and Senate on these important provisions.

There is one important addition to title IV. The Senate amendments provided for raising the present Federal grants of $11,200,000 for maternal and child health, crippled children, and child welfare services to $30,000,000. Under the conference agreement the Senate figure was reduced by about one-third, or to about $23,000,000.

The conference also adopted an amendment facilitating the operation of the veterans' housing program by eliminating it from the operation of the administrative law bill. This merely remedies an oversight in that bill which exempts the other temporary programs from its operations.

The principal amendment which was agreed to was a substitute for both the Senate and House versions of title V, relating to old age assistance, aid to the blind, and aid to dependent children. The House provisions increasing from $20 to $25 the maximum Federal participation for the period ending December 31, 1947, was retained as was the increased ceilings for aid to dependent children. The variable grant dependent on per capita State income, which the Senate had added to the bill was eliminated. A liberalization in the present matching formula, which would be applicable to all States, was adopted.

Under this formula, for the period beginning October 1 of this year and ending December 31 of next year, two-thirds of the first $15 of the old-age or blind-assistance payment would be from Federal funds, and the remainder of the payment would be on a 50–50 basis, up to the over-all $25 limitation on the Federal share. A similar provision is contained in the provisions of aid to dependent children, except that the Federal share would be two-thirds of the first $9 paid a child.

The general effect of these provisions is to increase the Federal grant by an amount equal to $5 for each blind or aged recipient who is given a benefit of $15 or more per month.

States now paying $10, $5 from Federal funds, can thus increase their payment from $10 to $15, the extra $5 coming from Federal funds.

States now paying $15 or more can also increase their payment by $5 from the additional Federal funds they will receive.

In the case of dependent children the increase would be $3 instead of $5, but a larger part of substantial sized payments can also receive even matching as the Federal maximum matching has been increased from $9 for the first child to $13.50 and from $6 for other children to $9. This extra money of course may also be used to pay the same proportion of benefit costs to new people added to the rolls.

The conference report contains tables showing how this will affect the Federal participation in various size benefit payments.

This provision seemed to the conferees to have all the advantages of the McFarland $5 and $3 amendment, but to contain safeguards that amendment lacked. It also preserves the requirement that a percentage of each benefit payment must be at State expense and that the State rather than Congress shall fix the size of the benefit.

Unless there are questions, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KNUTSON].

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, title I of the bill freezes the present 1 percent pay-roll tax for the old-age and survivors' insurance program at 1 percent on the employee and 1 percent on the employer. This was the original House provision.

Title II provides social-security benefits to survivors and dependents of certain World War II veterans who die within 3 years after their discharge under the old-age and survivors' insurance program. For the purpose of determining the amount of benefits to be paid, the bill authorizes the deceased veteran to be treated as having been fully insured at an average wage rate of $160 per month from 1939 to the date of his death. The benefits would not be paid if the surviving widow and dependents are eligible for benefits under any existing veterans' benefit law. The House merely agreed to certain clerical amendments made to this title by the Senate.

Title III: Under this title, maritime workers employed on ships operated by the Government under the War Shipping Administration during the war are authorized to be covered under State unemployment compensation laws. The House agreed to certain clerical or administrative amendments made by the Senate of a technical nature designed to clarify certain provisions of the title. Under the bill, unemployment benefits could not be paid until funds are appropriated and become available for such payment. The benefits conferred are not of a permanent character which would cover maritime workers of Government-owned ships indefinitely in the future.

Title IV: The most important amendment agreed to under this title, which makes certain miscellaneous technical amendments to the Social Security Act, was the Senate provision authorizing an increase in appropriations to be available for the payment of benefits under title V of the Social Security Act (maternal and child welfare, crippled children and similar benefits). The conference committee reduced the increased authorizations by about one-third. The effect is to make very substantial increases in the amount of money available for these programs under the amount now available under existing laws. These increases will be available in all States under the existing method of distribution.

Title V: This title was amended in conference very substantially by providing that grants to the States by the Federal Government for benefit payments to the aged, blind, and dependent children are to be increased. The controversial variable grant provision of the Senate amendments to the House bill is completely eliminated. In its place the conference agreed upon a formula that recognizes the existing 50–50 matching system but permits all States to increase their benefits, if they choose to do so, by $5 per month to each recipient, in the case of the aged and blind, and approximately $3 in the case of dependent children.

The conference formula does not proceed upon the theory that some States are poor and lacking in resources while some States are rich. It does not set off one group against another. It simply provides that in any State where the payments to old-age and blind recipients are $15 per month or less, the Federal Government will put up $2 for $1 of the cost of such benefits; and that where the benefits are in excess of $15, the existing 50–50 formula will be applied. Under this arrangement, a given State is not required, in effect, to file a pauper's oath before obtaining additional assistance from the Federal Government in making payments under these programs. In the case of dependent children, the ceiling on Federal contributions is raised by approximately 50 percent to $13.50 per month in the case of the first child, and $9 per month in the case of the second and each additional child in a needy family. In addition, the 2-for-1 rule will apply for benefits of $9 per month or less. Above $9, the existing 50–50 matching formula will prevail up to the maximum of $13.50 and $9, respectively.

Title VI: This title was added by the Senate to the House bill and provided for a study by the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation of all aspects of social security. The Senate receded on this amendment after it had been pointed out that such a provision was unnecessary.

Title VII: This title was also added to the House bill by the Senate. It provided certain favorable tax treatment in the case of contributions by employers to annuity pension funds created for the benefit of employees. The Treasury Department objected to this amendment, and after it was pointed out that further study was required in order to perfect any correcting statute dealing with this subject, the Senate receded.

One section of this title was retained in the bill, however, which merely authorized that the Veterans' Emergency Housing Act, recently passed by the Congress, should not be affected by the new Administrative Procedure Act because the Housing Act was of a temporary nature and it was not desired to have such temporary administrative machinery affected by the permanent administrative establishments.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KNUTSON. I yield to my good friend.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Do I understand that before a recipient of old-age assistance can secure this extra Federal contribution, the State must match the amount?

Mr. KNUTSON. No. Let me explain briefly to the gentleman, if I may. Under the agreement reached by the conferees, we depart from the 50–50 basis on the first $15. I am speaking now of the aged. Of that $15, the Federal Government will contribute $10 and the State $5. Beyond $15, the present 50–50 basis applies. The bill simply permits a State to pay higher benefits if it chooses to do so and we are saying that if higher benefits are paid the Federal Government will contribute its share according to this new plan.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Then if there is to be an increase in the old-age assistance, the State will have to put up an equal amount of, let us say $2.50, before they get the extra $2.50?

Mr. KNUTSON. No. Under the present law, the State now pays $7.50 on a $15 benefit. Under the new formula, if a State elects to continue paying $7.50, the United States will increase its present contribution by $5 or $12.50 total, making it possible to increase the $15 benefit to $20.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Then is the Federal contribution automatic?

Mr. KNUTSON. It is not automatic. Anyone now receiving $15 or less will get an additional $5 only if the State which pays him feels that by virtue of the increased Federal funds which this bill authorizes, the State can afford to increase that person's benefit by $5.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Suppose they are receiving $40, will there be any increase in the amount?

Mr. KNUTSON. Not unless the State takes appropriate action to increase existing benefits by whatever amount the State feels it can afford to pay in the light of the new scale of contributions set up in this bill. There was a strong demand in conference for the so-called variable grant, but we could not see our way clear to give in on that, so we decided to make this increase applicable to all States and Territories, wherever social security is in effect, hence there is no discrimination between the so-called rich States and the poorer States.

Mr. COLE of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KNUTSON. I yield.

Mr. COLE of Missouri. As I understand the gentleman, each old-age pensioner, under this conference agreement, will be eligible to receive an additional $5, regardless of the amount he is now receiving?

Mr. KNUTSON. Beginning October 1, yes, if the State acts to increase benefits by that amount.

Mr. COLE of Missouri. And that $5 comes from the Federal Government and does not have to be matched by the States?

Mr. KNUTSON. That comes from the Federal Government but matches State funds on a 2-to-1 ratio for the first $15. I hope that is clear. That is an outright increase over the present formula. Of course, the States may, of their own volition, determine the total public assistance expenditure within the State. The ultimate Federal grant depends upon the total expenditure and the number of recipients.

Mr. COLE of Missouri. How long will this $5 increase continue?

Mr. KNUTSON. I am glad the gentleman called my attention to that. It becomes available October 1 of this year and expires on the 31st of December 1947. There were several reasons why we voted to authorize this $5 increase, the principal reason being the constantly increasing cost of living. By extending it to December 31, 1947, it would give the Ways and Means Committee ample opportunity to explore the whole subject further when the new Congress convenes.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired.

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. EBERHARTER].

Mr. EBERHARTER. Mr. Speaker, I am not anxious to delay a vote on this conference report. I am as anxious to have a vote on it as anybody else.

In the first instance, may I say I am in favor of the adoption of the conference report. In view of the fact that when the matter was before the House previously, I strongly opposed some of the provisions of the measure as then written, I think it incumbent upon me to express the reasons why I now favor this conference report.

Under this report, if adopted, it is true that every individual in the United States now receiving old-age assistance can possibly receive an increase of $5 monthly, which will be contributed by the Federal Government. And, in my opinion, the conference report recognizes the validity of the variable grant principle, because, under the formula adopted, two-thirds of the first $15 paid to old-age assistance recipients will be contributed by the Federal Government. In my opinion, that is a recognition of the principle for which I and many other Members of the House were fighting. It applies to every State in the Union. It follows naturally that those States which are paying low amounts for old-age assistance will get a larger proportion of the payment from the Federal Government than those States that are paying high amounts. In other words, if a State pays $15 for old-age assistance, the Federal Government contributes two-thirds or 66⅔ percent, whereas if a State is paying $40 the Federal Government only contributes two-thirds of the first $15, and one-half of the amount over the first $15.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman two additional minutes.

Mr. EBERHARTER. Mr. Speaker, another reason why this conference report should be adopted, of course, is that the allowances to take care of dependent children have also been increased approximately 50 percent, and we are all happy about that.

Mr. POAGE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EBERHARTER. I yield.

Mr. POAGE. I wish the gentleman would explain why this does not destroy itself in those States that have a provision that is based on need? For instance, in the State of Texas, if they find that the budget need of the beneficiary is $15 per month they will give them $15 per month. The Federal Government is paying half of that. Now, if the Federal Government pays two-thirds of it they will still find the budget need is $15 per month. All it means is that the Federal Government will simply pay their percentage.

Mr. EBERHARTER. As I understand, no State will be permitted to reduce the payments now being made to any extent whatsoever.

Mr. POAGE. That is what I wanted to be sure, that they would not be allowed to reduce present payments.

Mr. EBERHARTER. They will not be allowed to reduce present payments.

Mr. LYNCH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EBERHARTER. I yield.

Mr. LYNCH. While the States may not reduce payments, nevertheless, this does not necessarily mean that every person is going to get an increase of $5 from the State. For instance, today if a State gives $15, $7.50, or 50 percent, of it is contributed by the Federal Government. If the payment by the State is more than $15, the contribution of the Federal Government is 50–50 up to $20 maximum Federal contribution. Hereafter the Federal Government will contribute to that State $10 of the first $15 and 50 percent of the balance up to the Federal maximum of $25. Thus the State need not necessarily increase the benefits to the recipient.

Mr. EBERHARTER. Under the conference report, of course, States can to some extent use the money to increase the number of persons on the assistance rolls.

Mr. Speaker, in the remaining short time allotted to me I want to express my appreciation for the help and cooperation given to me, as a member of the Ways and Means Committee, by many Members in striving to have incorporated in the measure we are now considering the principle of variable grants to States, and particularly, Mr. Speaker, I want to mention the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. COLMER], who has consistently and effectively cooperated to bring about the measure of success which is being achieved today toward accomplishing our objective.

His efforts as an influential member of the Rules Committee, both in the committee and by his valiant work on the floor, helped tremendously. I venture the opinion that without him our task would have been well-nigh impossible.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has again expired.

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have five legislative days in which to extend their remarks at this point on the conference report.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Speaker, the correct interpretation, carefully prepared, of the action and intent of the conferees in connection with H. R. 7037 is contained in the report. I want to reiterate, as a conferee on the part of the House, that the effect of our joint action was to provide a total of $25 from the Federal Treasury to match State contributions on a basis which, according to my mind, establishes a variable of a sort never before embodied in the Social Security Act. The $25 of the Federal contribution will be matched as follows: For the first $5 contributed by the State the Federal Government contributes $10, the remainder of the maximum Federal matching, or $15, will be used to meet State contributions on a dollar-for-dollar basis. In other words, to illustrate further, the first $5 of the State is matched on a 2-for-1 basis, giving the pensioner $15. Beyond that, the 50–50 matching will add an additional $15 each from State and Federal sources, or $30. Fifteen dollars, plus $30, will make a total over-all of $45 per month. Of course, the State may go as high as it wishes beyond this amount without further Federal contribution. Simply, the Federal Government will contribute at the outset the amount of $5 to every pensioner under the act, then match the next $20 on an equal basis. I trust I have made myself clear on this one point in the report.

Now let me add that our job is not finished with this report, and the House will understand that in the field of old-age and survivors' insurance many interrelated matters must be considered and settled. I hope this will be done early next year. There are the complex and important questions of liberalizing the benefit formula and the eligibility requirements, extending benefits to disability cases and extending coverage to presently excluded employments and to self-employment. I am proud that we have laid the groundwork for this task by our studies and hearings which we recently completed.

Mr. GRANT of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, I regret that the conferees on H. R. 7037 did not agree to an amendment to the Social Security Act which recognizes the inequitable allotment of Federal funds. The records show that the Federal Government is now paying more than three times as much to aged people in some States than in others. I have long felt that this is an inequitable distribution of such funds.

Take, for instance, my own State: Alabama would, under the bill as originally passed in the House, only receive about $4,000 increase over the 1943–44 payments. This increase would run from a low of $2,000 in Maryland to over $13,000,000 in the State of California. There would be merit in such distribution of funds if the affected lower-income-group States did not attempt to meet the Federal grant. Under the present system, we grant most assistance to the States which need it least and grant least assistance to the States which need it most. The present law does not recognize differences in the ability of the respective States to finance public assistance, such as aiding the needy aged, dependent children, and blind persons.

I believe that a careful check will show that my own State, and many of the other States which have a low per capita income, do make greater appropriations than many of the wealthier States, when the ability to pay and the percentage of the tax dollar is taken into consideration.

In other words, many of our States are, at the present time, making a greater tax effort to match these Federal funds than some of the States with much greater resources.

The conferees have agreed and so recommend to the House that we accept a new formula which still recognizes a 50–50 matching, but departs from it in that a person receiving up to $15 per month will have two-thirds of this amount, or $10, contributed by the Federal Government and $5 contributed by the State. On all amounts over $15, the present formula of 50–50 remains. This applies to contributions made to the aged, blind, and dependent children and runs from October 1, 1946, to December 31, 1947.

In other words, the Federal Government will, up until that time, contribute two-thirds of the first $15. This will be an aid to Alabama and to all of the States, however, this amendment ignores the variable matching formula and does not recognize the rank discrimination against the low-income States.

We, in the State of Alabama, are justly proud of the department of public welfare, which administers this fund, under the direction of Miss Loula Dunn, commissioner. The available funds have been sympathetically and wisely administered. Miss Dunn's services have not only been recognized in Alabama, but also by the American Public Welfare Association, which has honored her with its presidency. Her contribution to this work is deeply appreciated by the people of Alabama and the entire Nation.

I trust that at the next session of Congress, the Ways and Means Committee will make a more detailed study of this question and provide additional Federal funds to States with low per capita incomes. This is fair and equitable. I assure you that the State of Alabama will do everything possible insofar as our resources permit to take care of the needy. The principle of allotting additional Federal funds to States with low per capita incomes is a sound principle of social justice.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Speaker, in adopting the conference report on H. R. 7037, the Congress has enacted a law which greatly liberalized the provisions for Federal grants to States for old-age assistance, aid to dependent children and aid to the blind.

The bill agreed on in conference, while retaining the liberalized ceilings on the Federal share of assistance payments, substitutes for the present 50–50 matching a formula under which the Federal share would be two-thirds of the first $15 of monthly payments of old-age assistance or aid to the blind and one-half the remainder of the payment up to the over-all Federal maximum share of $25. Similarly in the case of aid to dependent children, the Federal share would be two-thirds of the first $6 of the payment and one-half of the balance up to the over-all Federal maximum share of $13.50 or $9.

This liberalization may be illustrated by what can happen in my own State, Arkansas, assuming that the State continues to expend its present amounts of State funds.

April of this year, Arkansas had 26,578 on the old age assistance rolls and expended $224,193 of State funds and $224,193 of Federal funds for assistance which averaged $16.87 per case. Under the change, Arkansas would have received an extra $5 multiplied by the number of recipients, assuming that this extra money, and the State and Federal funds above mentioned could have all been used to pay public assistance. Thus, if all these funds could have been used to pay increased benefits to the 26,578 on the rolls, the average paid per recipient would have been $21.87 per recipient instead of $16.87, which was actually paid.

Arkansas probably would have added recipients to the rolls had these additional Federal funds been available. For example, the 26,578 on the rolls might have been increased to 30,000. Assuming State funds to have remained $224,193, total funds would have been:

State funds	$224,193
50-percent Federal matching	224,193
$5 x 30,000	150,000
Total	598,386

Thus, average payments would have been increased from $16.87 to $19.94 and 3,422 added to the rolls without increasing State appropriations.

The illustrations I have given would in general be applicable to the blind, who were receiving an average of $18.77 in Arkansas last April. Assuming the same expenditure per recipient from State funds, their benefits could have been increased to an average of $23.77.

In the case of dependent children, the Federal grants would also be considerably increased. The present Federal ceilings limit Federal matching to $9 for the first child and $6 for each additional child in a family. These ceilings are raised to $13.50 and $9 respectively. This means more of the benefits most States pay can be matched. Also, $3 multiplied by the number of dependent children receiving assistance is paid the State in addition to the increase in the 50–50 matching.

While the principle of variable grants, as contained in the original House bill, H. R. 6911, and adopted by the Senate as an amendment to H. R. 7037, is a more scientific approach to the problem and one which will be carefully studied by the committee as it approaches a permanent solution, the temporary provisions I have described appear to be practicable and are certainly very helpful, particularly to low-income States.

The approach, contained in the conference report, is not a new idea, but one which has had consideration over a long period and which has been sponsored by many prominent Members of the Congress, including the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. COLMER], who rendered valuable assistance in making possible the final approval by Congress of amendments to the Social Security Act as contained in this conference report. It is fitting that the States represented by the gentleman from Mississippi and others of us who have fought so long for a more equitable method of determining the amount of Federal grants should now receive Federal grants in much more equitable amounts and be enabled to provide on a more generous basis for the recipients of public assistance.

It is hoped that adoption of the conference report will prove a stepping stone toward legislation which will permanently and equitably solve the problem of the aged, the blind, and dependent children in all of the States. I feel certain the Ways and Means Committee will endeavor to work toward this end when the new Congress convenes.

Mrs. DOUGLAS of California. Mr. Speaker, I am one of the many millions in this country who dream of the day when social security will be a reality for all our people. I want a program which wipes out once and for all crushing poverty in a land of plenty and the fear of hunger in a land which produces abundance. I want people—all people—not just those in a few favored occupations, to face the future secure in the knowledge that they are protected against the time when they can no longer earn their living either because of age, disability, or lack of suitable job opportunities and that their dependents will have some security in case of their premature death. I want for them, as for myself, the freedom from fear and the sense of personal dignity that springs from assurance that a decent minimum level of existence is theirs as a matter of legal, moral, and social right even when circumstances outside their control make it no longer possible to earn a living in the labor market.

I think social insurance offers the best hope for achieving real social security, not only because millions of working people have already built up a tremendous equity, through their own contributions, in such an insurance program but also because the equity principle offers the best protection in the long run against the hazards of shifting political tides. No political body, whatever its complexion, is ever going to cut back benefits which are based on the life-long contributions of the beneficiaries. Nobody is going to insist that benefits based on contributions should be tied to a means test that harks back to the poor-laws days of the sixteenth century when people believed that you could prevent dependency by making public aid as humiliating and niggardly as possible. People who have insurance have the kind of security that comes with money in the bank and they know that this money is theirs regardless of their politics, regardless of their way of life, and regardless of whether they happen to have a kitchen garden in their back yards. That is the kind of security I want for myself and for my constituents and for all the people in this country regardless of where they happen to live.

I know that we do not have that kind of social security now and we are not going to get that kind of social security this session. But I am supporting the conference report on H. R. 7037 because I feel that these amendments to the Social Security Act are a badly needed step in the right direction. Much as I feel the need to extend and liberalize the insurance program I recognize that the people now struggling to maintain some semblance of a life on present miserably low assistance payments need relief here and now. I know that the extra $5 in Federal funds for each aged and blind person is inadequate, but at least it is better than the former limit of $20. How this Congress has expected any mother to raise a dependent child in health and happiness on $18 a month I cannot imagine and I therefore welcome the additional $3 in Federal funds for each child, though I would like to know how she is to manage with present rising prices. I am particularly glad that the conferees agreed to a compromise provision, however inadequate, so that the benefits of this bill can go to all the people and not just to those of a handful of the richer States.

Poverty cannot be isolated and misery cannot be quarantined. We in California cannot raise our standard of living, whether for our people in general or our needy aged, if we take positions which tend to further freeze the impoverished condition of people in other parts of the country. It costs 1 percent more to live in Los Angeles than in Atlanta, Ga., but the old-age grants in Los Angeles are 199 percent higher. This just does not make sense for anyone. We have got to see that assistance really does what it is supposed to do, that it really guarantees against poverty wherever it may be.

I hope that next year we will have no more lengthy surveys, no more months of hearings, no more inadequate amendments brought in at the last minute as a stopgap answer to the most pressing emergencies.

We know what the problem is and we have this information and the collective national wisdom to solve it. What I want to see next session is a real social-security bill to give adequate insurance protection as a matter of right to everyone, including those who have already retired from the labor market. If all our people get adequate insurance benefit payments when they are entitled to them, public assistance can fall into its intended role as a residual supplementary program to take care of the unusual situation and we can move forward toward our goal of freedom from want on a road that we know leads toward peace of mind and individual dignity.

Mr. CHENOWETH. Mr. Speaker, I am in favor of this conference report and will support the same. I wish to make a few observations on the section dealing with old-age assistance.

I feel that the confusion that exists among even members of the conference committee bringing in this report is unfortunate, and I believe is a strong argument for a Federal old-age pension which will be administered uniformly in the different States. In my opinion, the trend in this country is definitely toward the Federal pensions, without the heavy overhead expense involved in administering the present law.

There seems to be a difference of opinion as to the effect of the amendment adopted by the conference committee. What the committee says is simply this: That the Federal Government will contribute $10 of the first $15 paid to every person in the United States receiving old-age assistance under existing law. Of course, the question is immediately raised if this will provide an increase of $5 per month in the pension received by each person. It appears that this extra $5 will be paid to the various States, and the department of public welfare in each State will determine how it is applied. Personally, I feel very strongly that each State should give each pensioner an increase of $5, as this seems to be the intent of the amendment.

Undoubtedly the next Congress will give attention to this important matter of old-age assistance, and I hope some satisfactory solutions can be worked out. There is a definite responsibility to take care of these aged persons who have made their contributions to our development and progress over the years.

THE LAME, THE HALT, THE BLIND ARE STILL OUR BROTHERS AND SISTERS

Mr. DOYLE. Mr. Speaker, this conference report does not provide the security for the aged or the blind which I hoped it would. Nor in my opinion has this Congress taken steps forward enough in the field of adequate social security all along the line.

The elderly citizens of our Nation have already made their economic investment and contribution to our national wealth and should not live the later years of their lives in fear of no roof, no food, no clothing, no pleasures. A happy old age for our elder population would greatly strengthen our domestic fabric.

When there is lack of fear of need in the lives of the "grandpas" and "grandmas" of our Nation, there is removed a cause of great concern right down into the intimate family circle of our land.

And, as the family life of our Nation is, so is our national strength or weakness.

People, folks, humankind—these are the real worth of our Nation. Material wealth and physical properties are only of dollar value to the extent to which they are created to make people, folks, happier or healthier. The aim of our civilization is low indeed if we magnify aggrandizement of material wealth to such extremes that we exclude our attention and duty to our elders, and the lame, the halt, the blind.

While this Congress has done some splendid things for the essentials of living such as education, health, housing, social security and similar fields of human experience, the next Congress must needs make greater steps along these lines.

The reconversion of human values is not less important than is the reconversion of material properties such as factories, shops, and ships.

We can be penny wise in this important matter of human reconversion. We have not yet reached high enough in my judgment.

Our Nation will only be one of enduring values in proportion as we place emphasis upon the values which endure and which are not washed away when the storms assail.

These values, Mr. Speaker, are founded in recognition that material gain is made for the use and progress of man and not man made for application or speculation for material gain.

As we today adjourn and go home to our respective congressional districts all over our beloved Nation, let us as the representatives of our districts, so speak and act that the people of America will be enriched by our leadership into paths of domestic tranquillity and enduring world peace.

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GORE].

Mr. GORE. Mr. Speaker, as I understand the conference report, it provides that out of the first $15—it does not have to be a total of $15, but out of the first $15—the Federal Government will contribute two-thirds. If a total payment of $12 is made to an aged or blind beneficiary the Federal Government will contribute $8; if it is $15 the Federal Government will contribute $10. Above a total of $15 it remains on the 50–50 matching formula. Is that not right?

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. That is correct. The ceiling on the total Federal contribution is $25.

Mr. GORE. One additional change, as the gentleman points out, is that the ceiling, the maximum amount which the Federal Government will match, is raised to $25 per month. For dependent children this provides that the Federal Government will pay two-thirds of the first $9.

I want to read from this conference report the following significant sentence:

The new formula will apply uniformly in all States.

That is a new principle of social security, and one reason I asked for time to speak at this time was to impress upon you the fact that by this you are adopting a new principle. I am not opposed to this principle, but I think the variable-grant formula contained in the Senate bill is preferable. As we come into this late date the House has not yet had a chance to vote upon the variable-grant formula which I fully believe represents the majority sentiment of the Congress. Because of the closed-rule procedure we have not had a chance to pass upon that or any other specific item. It has been a take-it-or-leave-it proposition each time. No Member has even had an opportunity to offer an amendment. We have not had a chance to vote upon such simple questions as the security tax rate for 1947. We have waited for months to consider amendments to the Social Security Act. A stall was staged, and now we come to this pass, inadequate consideration, and inadequate action on the very day of sine die adjournment. I hope the Ways and Means Committee will act early in the next Congress and that Congress will give this vital problem the consideration it deserves.

Mr. FORAND. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GORE. I yield.

Mr. FORAND. The gentleman knows I am very much interested in the variable grant formula, so much so that I introduced a bill to that effect, H. R. 5686. We almost got it to the floor—at least parts of it. When the next Congress convenes I shall follow the matter up and the committee has promised me that it will receive consideration.

Mr. GORE. I hope the committee will consider it and that the Congress will have an opportunity to consider it, too. Now, why do I say this is a new principle? For the reason that the report states—it applies "uniformly" not to all States but "in all States." There the committee is recognizing that we are dealing not with the cold abstractions of 48 States but with human beings; therefore this applies uniformly in all States to the individuals. I agree with this principle of equality of treatment of citizens insofar as it goes. Where, then, is the error? The inequity, the injustice, the unfairness and discrimination resulting from the present program remains the law of the land.

Mr. MONRONEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GORE. I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. MONRONEY. I want to compliment the gentleman from Tennessee on the hard fight he has made for the variable grant principle. I want to join with him and say that the Congress is playing a tragic joke on itself and on the country by freezing the tax rate, not allowing it to go up one-half of 1 percent. We are depreciating this fund and we will have to take it out of the general tax revenues.

Mr. GORE. I agree with the gentleman. I have studied the tables and I may say that in 5 to 7 years the liability of the Government under this old age insurance retirement system is going to pyramid and pyramid very rapidly. This social security rate should be allowed to increase in an orderly manner. I do not think we should allow it to jump from 2 to 5 percent; that would be too great a shock, but it should be allowed to increase orderly. As I understand it, the gentleman from North Carolina advocated that, but he has not had his way.

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GORE. I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. This only applies for 1 year. We have a reserve fund of more than $7,000,000,000 which will accumulate and increase next year, so I do not think we are in any danger. Our staff made a careful study of this and stated that an increase of one-half percent would make it sound for 10 years. If that would make it sound for 10 years, we are not in any immediate danger.

Mr. GORE. I think we would do well to give more consideration to the recommendations of the committee's technical staff of experts and to the actuarial staff of the Social Security Board. I understand that only a few days ago the gentleman's committee itself by a vote of 18 to 7 recommended that the tax be increased one-half percent on both employer and employee. That was, in my opinion, a wise recommendation. But the gentleman's committee changed its mind and then urged the House to foreclose itself from the opportunity of even considering the question. I, for one, refuse to assert my own capacity or the capacity of the House to consider amendments to the Social Security Act.

I welcome the increased benefits for the needy in this bill, but deplore our inaction toward broadening the coverage of the act and our failure to ameliorate the inequities of the present system. We shall try again.

Mr. PRIEST. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield.

Mr. GORE. I yield to my able colleague from Tennessee who on yesterday won overwhelmingly endorsement by the people he represents so capably and conscientiously.

Mr. PRIEST. I want to express my appreciation for the fight my colleague has waged for the principle of variable grants. I sincerely hope that when this matter again comes before the House we may be able to amend the social-security law to provide for this formula of payments to the States. While this compromise agreement does not contain the variable grant feature, it represents a decided increase in financial assistance to the needy aged, blind, and dependent children. And, besides, the legislation approved by the adoption of this conference report should prove very helpful to millions of war veterans who may receive credit on social security for all the time spent in the armed services. I join my colleague in urging its adoption.

Mr. GORE. I thank the gentleman.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. REED].

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, I know that the Members of the House are very impatient and wish to vote, but we have worked for months on this social-security problem and we would like to have a minute or two in which to discuss this important measure.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REED of New York. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. KNUTSON. In view of what the preceding speaker said it might be well to have the RECORD show at this point something about this $7,000,000,000.

Mr. REED of New York. I will go into that. I heard the gentleman say that the country has been more or less defrauded. I just want to say that what he says is true but not as he intended it.

What has happened is that a spendthrift Government has taken what should have been the social-security fund and, figuratively speaking, poured it into political rat-holes and it is gone. That is what has happened to the $7,000,000,000 reserve fund. We know that the social-security system is actuarially unsound at the present time. If we raise this tax to 1½ percent, jump it up by that amount, all we will do is simply to supply more funds, create greater deficits so far as the pensioners reserve fund under OASI is concerned.

Mr. Speaker, there is nothing more beautiful to me than to see an old couple under their own roof, living in peace and happiness and security. That is a beautiful picture. I know of nothing more tragic than an old couple who have reared a family, who have furnished sons for war, who have been good citizens, but through some misfortune, perhaps from buying foreign bonds, being sent to the poorhouse; or to see other old persons who do not have food, clothes, or shelter all in face of the fact that the Congress of a great nation is neglecting its old people and instead giving away $3,750,000,000 to a foreign government. This Congress has sent food and clothes abroad and it has furnished shelter to the people of foreign countries while overlooking the needs of its elderly people here at home.

Mr. Speaker, this is not a munificent sum we are supposedly giving the old people. The amount the old people will receive under this bill would not buy two meals for the average Member of Congress at a restaurant downtown. Prices of necessities are skyrocketing under a spendthrift Government. What is this Congress doing? Practically nothing, except to spend, spend, and tax and tax.

Congress, after lending to foreign governments billions of dollars, boondoggling billions of dollars, now says to the old folks, "We in our generosity are going to put you in a state of affluence by adding $5 provided your State acts so you can benefit by this act." We know there are a lot of States that will not act.

Some States can run horse races and spend millions of dollars in gate receipts in many of the so-called poor States, but they cannot do anything for their old people. Why? Because they fear that some old-colored grandmother might get a little extra old-age pension and then have the whole group around her move in, in order to live on the pension. That is the truth behind this legislation and it is about time the scheme should be exposed.

Mr. STEFAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REED of New York. I yield to the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. STEFAN. What became of the $7,000,000,000, and what do we get for these I O U's?

Mr. REED of New York. We do not get a thing except to tax people in the future, the GI's among the rest. It is a fraud from top to bottom when considered as a long-range program.

I now turn to an analysis of the bill as it now appears after the conference.

The change just made in the Federal grant provisions for State old-age assistance is very simple. The law is effective from October 1, 1946, to December 31, 1947. The liberalized grant is to the State and not to the individual. The effect of the liberalized grant is to provide the State more Federal funds for any given expenditure by the State for old-age assistance.

Under existing law a State gets one-half of its expenditures for old-age assistance, excluding part of assistance in excess of a $40 monthly benefit. Thus, the Federal limit is $20 per individual.

Under the change just made by Congress, the Federal share will be two-thirds of the first $15 of the benefit, plus one-half of the balance of the benefit, but with a $25 limit to the Federal share, case per case.

The way it will work in each State can be illustrated by taking New York as an example. In April 1946, New York had 103,868 old-age recipients on the rolls, and the average payment was $38.24, and total assistance paid was $3,972,291. The Federal share was somewhat less than half this figure as some payments exceeded $40, and the Federal limit per individual was $20.

Under the change—the new Federal ceiling raised to $25, and two-thirds of the first $15 of assistance and one-half of assistance above $15 payable—the State would receive an additional Federal fund of $5 times 104,000 recipients or $520,000 per month, assuming it continued expending the same amount of State funds for assistance. This extra amount would provide funds for an average increase of $5 per case if the number of recipients remained the same. The State, however, would determine what recipients would get the increase, and how much each would get.

Some of the funds might be used to add persons to the rolls. The increase would, of course, be more than $520,000 if more persons were added to the rolls.

Two things should be kept clear:

First, that the change merely provides a more liberal matching arrangement for old-age-assistance payments and does not affect the present Federal-State arrangements in any other manner.

Second, that the change does not of itself give $5 or any other amount to any recipient of public assistance, but leaves the determination of his assistance to the State authorities.

Thus the new change provides more Federal funds for any given expenditure of State funds for public assistance, and thus encourages more generous treatment by the State of its aged, but does not interfere with the right of the State to determine what the assistance shall be.

To be specific grants must be made on a two-thirds basis of two-thirds of the first $15 of any benefit; that above $15, the 50–50 matching under existing law be retained with a limit on the Federal contribution of $25 takes care of blind and dependent children.

SOCIAL SECURITY ACT AMENDMENTS, 1946

EFFECT OF CONFERENCE REVISED MATCHING FORMULA, H. R. 7037

(August 2, 1946)

The following tables illustrate the effect of the revised matching formula governing Federal contributions to State payments for the period October 1, 1946, to January 1, 1948, for public assistance, under titles I, IV, and X of the Social Security Act, as agreed upon in conference on H. R. 7037. Table No. 1 applies to aid to the aged and blind. Table No. 2 applies to aid to dependent children. The new formula will apply uniformly in all States regardless of State per capita income or any other measures of relative economic resources among the States:

TABLE No. 1.—Aid to aged and the blind

Average State payment	Federal contributions
	Existing law (in all States)	Conference report (in all States)
Under $15	[1] 50	[1] [2] 66⅔
$16	$8.00	$10.50
$20	$10.00	$12.50
$25	$12.50	$15.00
$30	$15.00	$17.50
$40	[3] $20.00	$22.50
$45 and over	[3] $20.00	[2] $25.00

[1] Percent.
[2] On a benefit of $12, for example, the Federal contribution under existing law amounts to $6. Under the conference formula the Federal contribution would be 66⅔ percent, or $8.

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JENKINS].

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate that the Membership is anxious to get away and I shall not take much time, I hope. The House bill, which passed the House by a big majority, provided a straight $5 increase for every recipient of an old-age pension and every blind individual in the country who has been receiving benefits. I voted for that bill and gave it my active support in committee and on the floor. Now, then, I do not want anybody to go away from here or go back home with the wrong impression. The House bill would have paid every individual $5. It was my understanding that the House conferees were going to stand by the House action. This bill does not do that. This bill pays every State $5. Let us have an understanding, and if I am wrong, I want this corrected. There seems to be no agreement among those who were conferees. Take, for instance, a man drawing $15 a month in State A, we will say. Very well. The Government is going to pay $10 of that and the State will put up $5. Very well. There it is. The Government hands out $5 to that State. But, when that State gets that money the State administrator, the proper official, will say to the individual, "Yes, you are getting $15 a month, but that is all you are entitled to and you cannot get any more. You cannot get this $5 that has come from the Government, because we say you are not entitled to any more. Consequently you will not get any more." Now that is what you ought to understand. You cannot go home and tell all these old folks and blind persons that we voted them $5. We voted the State $5.

Mr. JUDD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENKINS. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. JUDD. What does the gentleman think the State will do with that additional $5?

Mr. JENKINS. That is something I cannot answer for the laws of the several States are different. It is presumed that the State will say, "All right, we will canvass the situation, and if you are entitled to more we will give you more." I hope that the States will be liberal.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENKINS. I yield to the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. MILLS. It appears that there could only be two things that the State could do with the additional $5, in answer to the gentleman from Minnesota. One would be to increase the payments made to old-age recipients by $5 per month, or else use this $5, plus the other $5 coming in from the Federal Treasury, to put more people on the old-age rolls.

Mr. JENKINS. That partially answers the question. Just as I stated in reference to the man who was getting $15, it might work out that he would not get an extra dollar.

Mr. JUDD. But another man might get $5.

Mr. MILLS. The handling of the problem is entirely within the control of the director of the public welfare program in the States.

Mr. JUDD. But the money would have to go for the care of some old people.

Mr. MILLS. That is right. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. BREHM. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENKINS. Yes, I am glad to yield to my distinguished colleague from Ohio.

Mr. BREHM. This is all set up on a basis of need. Now, if the investigator finds that the recipient's needs do not show that he is entitled to more, then he will not get any more, regardless of whether or not this bill becomes law. This comes very close to being a deception on the old folks and the handicapped. The only way wherein they may receive additional benefits under this bill is if and when the State of Ohio amends the present law. Simply because the Federal Government agrees to pay two-thirds up to the first $15 does not guarantee the recipient 1 cent more money, unless the State amends or repeals certain provisions of the State law.

Mr. GORE. If the gentleman will yield, I believe there is a little misunderstanding. According to the report, no $5 will be paid to a State unless the State pays that amount or some lesser amount or some amount to the recipient of benefits. It is not paid to the State except as that State makes expenditures to the recipients of benefits under its social-security program.

Mr. JENKINS. I am not so sure that the gentleman is right, but I am quite sure that the Congress has provided standards in previous laws to which the States must adhere and by which they are bound. I am sure the money will not be used for any other purposes, but I still insist that you cannot go home and say to every old-age pensioner you meet, "You are going to get $5 more," because that is not true. Many of them may not get $5 more, and they may not get $1 more.

Mr. Speaker, this matter that we have been discussing will, I am afraid, raise some serious misunderstandings. For instance let me use an illustration with reference to the Ohio law. Under the Ohio law the State can pay up to $20 a month. That with the $20 a month which the Federal Government would pay would entitle an applicant to receive the maximum of $40. If the conferees had approved the bill which the House has heretofore passed that individual would receive $5 additional from the Government if the State of Ohio would match it with $5. Under the present law of Ohio, the State could not do that because $20 is the limit. But I am sure that if the conferees had approved the bill which the House has already passed that the State of Ohio would convene its legislature immediately and would provide for an additional $5 with a result that the maximum from both the State and Federal contributions would be $50.

Under the recommendations of this conference report the situation would be somewhat different in Ohio. In the instance to which I have referred where a pensioner would be drawing a total of $40 the computation would be made difficult. The first $15 which that individual is now drawing would be paid with $5 from the State and $10 from the Federal Government. That would leave the State to pay an additional $15 if it wants to pay the same amount that it was now paying. If it did pay that additional $15 that would be a total of $20 for the State to pay. Then the Federal Government having already paid $10 would match the $15 which the State would pay with a $15 payment with the result that the Federal Government would be paying $25. The pensioner would thereby be drawing $20 from the State and $25 from the Federal Government or a total of $45. In this case it would appear to me that it would not be necessary to amend the Ohio law in order for this pensioner to draw $45.

On the other hand, if the State of Ohio would not be willing to pay a total of $20 in cooperation with the Federal law as it will be written when this conference report is accepted by the House and the Senate and the President, then it is perfectly possible that the person in Ohio who is drawing a $40 pension might not get any increase. I have no doubt but that the State of Ohio will do its part in this matter and that as a final result of the passage of this legislation those receiving old-age pensions and blind pensions may receive an increase in their pensions, and the dependent children will likewise receive a corresponding increase. If the State authorities will not meet this offer which the Federal Government is making through the passage of this legislation, then I shall be disappointed.

While pensions to the aged and the blind and payments to the dependent children are always very important and while these provisions are probably the most important in this bill that we are considering, yet I must say that there are other very important matters included in this legislation. I shall not take time to discuss all of them. I shall discuss at least one of them.

In this respect I refer to that provision of the Social Security Act known as Title II—Old-Age and Survivors Insurance. This is commonly known as social security. In this connection I might digress long enough to say that the social-security legislation is probably the most far-reaching and comprehensive piece of legislation ever passed by Congress. It comprises 10 separate titles. Title I deals with old-age pensions. Title II deals with old-age and survivors pensions, commonly known as social security. Title III provides for assistance for dependent children. And title X provides for assistance to the blind, commonly known as blind pensions. I take considerable pride in the fact that I am generally considered as having been the author of the blind-pension law.

At the present time the employers of the country pay into a fund 1 percent of the pay roll of their employees and the employees likewise pay into this fund 1 percent of the wages which they receive. This fund now has a surplus of more than $7,000,000,000. The original law passed several years ago provided that these payments should be increased at certain stated periods. For the past 3 or 4 years Congress has amended this law so as to freeze the rate at 1 percent. Last year when Congress passed this freezing law, it further provided that after 1 year, the 1st of January 1947, the rate should jump to 2½ percent from the employer and 2½ percent from the employee. The bill which we are now considering under this conference report freezes these payments again for another year at 1 percent. This is done because employment in the country is at a high rate and the demands for benefits under the law are not unusually heavy and it is considered by both employer and employee that it would be advisable to continue the present rate. Without the passage of this freezing legislation, the rates of each group would jump to 2½ percent.

I am, therefore, very glad that this bill contains this freezing provision.

Mr. Speaker, other provisions of this proposed legislation are worthy but I felt, however, that when we included the maritime workers under the coverage of the social-security laws that we might well have included other groups comprising a large number of our citizens. I refer to the nurses and the social workers and the local employees. Likewise, there are many workers classified as agricultural employees that might well have been brought within the coverage of this law. I refer to those who work in canneries and packing sheds.

By way of justification for including the maritime workers, their employment differs somewhat from employment of other groups that I have mentioned in that they are employed by the Government, and the Government assumes the responsibility of paying the benefits to be derived under such coverage.

Mr. Speaker, I am glad that we have been able to defeat the variable grants provision of the bill passed by the Senate. I was very much disappointed that the Senate added these amendments to the House bill in view of the fact that it was well known that the Ways and Means Committee of the House has worked for months in preparing and drawing this legislation and it was also well known that the House had passed its legislation after a most intelligent and searching debate.

My opposition to the variable grants is based on the fact that when the original social-security bill was being prepared in 1935, it was prepared on the basis that all Federal payments should be made only on a matching basis. I was a member of the Ways and Means Committee and participated actively in the preparation of the first social-security bill. The philosophy of title I of the bill is that the Federal Government in a desire to encourage the States to make adequate provision for the aged would offer to pay every deserving aged person in the country $15 a month only if and when the State in which he lived would pay the same amount and would agree to abide by certain stipulated regulations. The original bill would not have been passed except on that well-grounded basis of 50–50 matching. Later in 1939 when the original bill was amended no effort was made to change the matching formula.

Under the variable-grants plan, many of the States would pay into the fund at the rate of $2 while they would only take out of the fund $1. On the other hand, many States would only pay in $1 and would take out $2. The variable-grants system is not right morally or fiscally. It is not right and fair for a State where the average wages are high to be compelled to pay old-age pensions to persons in States that are sufficiently able to pay their own pensions The fact that their average wages may be low is no reason. If they are satisfied to have their people live on low wages, then it is only natural that the amount that they would be willing to pay their old folks would be small.

Another very important factor in this matching program is that the local authorities are best able to know and judge who are entitled to old-age assistance and how much assistance they should have. If the people of the Southern States are satisfied to pay small pensions, why should Congress be worried about it? I know that that was one of the basic factors that we considered when we drew up the original social-security law.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, while I am not entirely satisfied with this legislation, I am glad that we have increased the contribution for the aged and the blind and the dependent children, and I am also glad that we have frozen the contribution provision under title II, and I am also glad that we have maintained the principle of matching dollar for dollar as we originally intended to do. I am especially glad that the Congress has stood firm against the threat of variable grants. I hope that those States whose representatives have been so insistent upon variable grants will bestir themselves and increase these payments to these deserving groups that live in their States, just as the other States of the Union have done. We should not wreck social security on the treacherous rocks of variable grants.

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

FIRST SUPPLEMENTAL APPROPRIATION BILL, 1947—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 390) making additional appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1947, and for other purposes, and ask unanimous consent that the statement of the managers on the part of the House be read in lieu of the report.

The Clerk read the title of the joint resolution.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the statement.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 390) making additional appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1947, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 18 and 19.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 21, and 26 and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 9: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 9, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"JOINT COMMITTEE ON PRINTING

"Biographical Congressional Directory: To enable the Secretary of the Senate to pay, upon vouchers approved by the chairman or vice chairman of the Joint Committee on Printing, for compiling and preparing a revised edition of the Biographical Directory of the American Congress (1774–1948) as provided for in House Concurrent Resolution Numbered 163, adopted July 26, 1946, not to exceed $35,000; and said sum or any part thereof, in the discretion of the chairman or vice chairman of the Joint Committee on Printing, may be paid as additional compensation (at not to exceed $1,800 per annum) to any employee of the United States, and shall continue to be available until expended."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 23: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 23, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"BUREAU OF COMMUNITY FACILITIES

"Emergency relief for the Territory of Hawaii: For carrying out the provisions of section 1 of the Act entitled 'An Act to provide emergency relief for the victims of the seismic waves which struck the Territory of Hawaii, and for other purposes,' $1,300,000, to remain available until expended, of which amount not to exceed $65,000 shall be available for administrative expenses of the Bureau of Community Facilities, including travel, the purchase of two passenger motor vehicles, and personal services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 25: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 25, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Restore the matter stricken out by said amendment amended to read as follows:

"DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE

"BUREAU OF FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC COMMERCE

"Export control: For an additional amount, fiscal year 1947, for 'Export control,' including the objects specified under this head in the Department of Commerce Appropriation Act, 1947, $400,000."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 27: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 27, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum named in said amendment insert "$100,000,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

The committee of conference report in disagreement amendments numbered 1, 2, 3, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 20, 22, 24, 28, and 29.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 390) making additional appropriations for the fiscal year 1947, and for other purposes, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon and recommended in the accompanying conference report as to each of such amendments, namely:

Amendments Nos. 4 to 7, inclusive, relating to the Senate: Appropriates $163,000 for contingent expenses, and $540 for salaries, Office of the Sergeant at Arms and Doorkeeper, as proposed by the Senate.

Amendment No. 8: Appropriates $15,000 additional for contingent expenses, folding documents, House of Representatives, fiscal year 1947, as proposed by the Senate.

Amendment No. 9: Appropriates $35,000, instead of $50,000, as proposed by the Senate, for a revised edition of the Biographical Congressional Directory, and further amends to limit the rate of additional compensation to employees engaged in the work to $1,800 per annum.

Amendment No. 10: Appropriates $25,000, instead of $50,000, as proposed by the Senate, for salaries and expenses of the Joint Committee on the Economic Report.

Amendments Nos. 18 and 19, relating to the Public Health Service. Strikes out the appropriation of $4,358,000 proposed by the Senate for mental health activities, and strikes out the appropriation of $850,000 proposed by the Senate on account of the National Institute of Mental Health.

Amendment No. 21: Changes a title, as proposed by the Senate.

Amendment No. 23: Appropriates $1,300,000 for emergency relief, Territory of Hawaii, as proposed by the Senate, amended by omitting the waiver of section 14 (a) of the Federal Employees Pay Act of 1946.

Amendment No. 25: Appropriates $400,000 additional for export control, Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, fiscal year 1947, instead of $600,000, as proposed by the House, and no appropriation, as proposed by the Senate.

Amendment No. 26: Appropriates $25,000 additional for salaries and expenses, Bureau of Labor Statistics, fiscal year 1947, as proposed by the Senate.

Amendment No. 27: Appropriates $100,000,000 for strategic and critical materials (act of July 23, 1946), instead of $250,000,000, as proposed by the Senate.

Disagreements pursuant to clause 2, rule XX

Amendments Nos. 1 to 3, inclusive, relating to the Senate. It will be moved to recede and concur in such amendments, with a textual amendment to amendment No. 1.

Amendments Nos. 11 to 14, inclusive, providing for additional grants for the Children's Bureau of the Social Security Administration. It will be moved to recede and concur in such amendments, reducing the amounts to agree with the Budget estimates and changing the texts to conform with the texts of such estimates.

Amendment No. 15, relating to salaries and expenses, maternal and child welfare. It will be moved to recede and concur with an amendment reducing the amount of the appropriation proposed by the Senate from $925,500 to $425,000.

Amendment No. 16, governing the availability of certain appropriations. It will be moved to recede and concur in such amendment.

Amendments Nos. 17 and 20, relating to hospital and construction activities, Public Health Service. It will be moved to recede and concur in such amendments with amendments reducing the amount of the appropriation proposed by the Senate from $2,425,000 to $2,350,000, and adjusting amount limitations proportionately, and eliminating waiver of section 14 (a) of the Federal Employees Pay Act of 1946.

Amendment No. 22, relating to war and emergency damage, Territory of Hawaii. It will be moved to recede and concur in such amendment with an amendment eliminating the waiver of section 14 (a) of the Federal Employees Pay Act of 1946.

Amendment No. 24, relating to the provision of automobiles and other conveyances for disabled veterans. It will be moved to recede and concur in such amendment with certain textual changes.

Amendment No. 28, waiving the application of a provision of the Administrative Procedures Act to the Veterans' Emergency Housing Act of 1946. It will be moved to recede and concur in such amendment.

Amendment No. 29, changing a section number. It will be moved to recede and concur in such amendment.

EVERETT M. DIRKSEN,
Managers on the Part of the House.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, several times we have been under the impression that we were submitting the last appropriation bill only to later be disillusioned. We are certain, however, this time that this is the last appropriation bill to be offered in the Seventy-ninth Congress.

We present this complete conference report, and with it 15 amendments which must be considered separately, not because there was any disagreement on the part of the conferees, but because the rules require separate consideration in the House.

The joint resolution, when it passed the House, carried appropriations totaling $2,479,663,210.45. As it passed the Senate, it carried $2,796,612,917.45. As we present it to you, including the recommendations that will be made respecting amendments brought back in technical disagreement, the measure would appropriate a total of $2,636,489,417.45, and that amount is $384,385,093 under the Budget estimates.

The major item in the bill, as you know, is the one providing for terminal leave pay for members and former members of the armed services below commissioned status. The amount in the bill for that purpose is $2,431,708,000.

The Senate placed a number of amendments on the bill, some generously providing for the Senate, one restoring and amount eliminated by the House for the procurement of strategic and critical materials, and the remainder providing appropriation implementation for recently enacted legislation or legislation in course of enactment for various and sundry purposes. The impression seems to prevail that whenever a bill is passed authorizing the appropriation of funds, that the funds should be appropriated forthwith, instead of waiting until the next Budget, which practice was quite generally followed in the days when we were disposed to weigh the drafts we voted upon the Treasury.

This measure unquestionably contains appropriations for some projects which should have awaited the consideration of the next Congress; which should have been held in abeyance until there would be time to consider the estimates and to give consideration to their relative importance in arriving at an appropriation and expenditure ceiling looking beyond the close of the present calendar year, when we begin predetermining appropriation and expenditure ceilings.

The President yesterday issued an order to all governmental agencies calling for reduced expenditures. It is a splendid statement embodying a great program by a great President.

Such a course is essential to the achievement of a balanced budget, and a lower tax burden. I often wonder if we fully realize our responsibility in the ordering of the Nation's economy. We authorize and we appropriate and lately we have not been overlooking ourselves. The need for economy exists here as well as in other branches of the Government, and I should say more so, because here is the fountainhead of all Federal spending.

I trust that in the next Congress we will have been sufficiently in touch with the people to realize that it is their wish and thought that we should follow his program in the reduction of expenditures.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. I would like to know why the people of this country should have any reason to believe that the statement which the President made is going to eventuate in the saving of a single dime as far as the Federal Treasury is concerned.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. That is easily answered. If you will simply watch developments from now on you will have your answer—and a very convincing one—in actually reduced expenditures.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. From now on?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. It is just a question of demonstration. It will reduce expenditures.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. When?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Beginning immediately.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Well, we cannot do very much about it now. Congress is not going to be in session.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Congress is not involved in the President's program. Possibly he will be able to do better with Congress away. The President's direction will result in a tightening in every departmental agency, a reduction of personnel and economy of operation that will save a material sum between now and the meeting of the next session of Congress.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Would the gentleman care to name any figure, name any amount that is going to be saved?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. The gentleman, himself, must know it is impossible to say, but it will be a substantial amount. The Congress itself has saved a very large amount by reducing appropriations and through the rescission of appropriations has saved over $64,000,000,000. We have made a record without parallel in the fiscal history of the country. But I want to say that the President has cooperated with us in doing that. He assisted us in a very material way. The minute the war ended the Committee on Appropriations hurried back here to start an economy program. Before we could get back the President had frozen every dollar thereby holding funds which were subject to expenditure until the Congress could take action, and until the Committee on Appropriations could hold hearings and get a bill in. He has cooperated spontaneously and wholeheartedly, and we could not have saved this vast sum of $64,000,000,000 without his active cooperation. He has saved more money since the close of the war than any one President that ever served in the White House from Washington down to the present time.

Mr. Speaker, when I presented the conference report on the third Deficiency Appropriation Bill, 1946, on July 19, 1946, it then appeared that apart from a measure that would need later to be presented to effectuate terminal leave pay legislation for noncommissioned members and former members of the armed services, our appropriation work was done.

Consequently, I included as a part of my remarks that day a summation of appropriations for the session, contrasting them with Budget estimates, and submitted some pertinent remarks on the Federal fiscal situation generally.

The general remarks I then made I see no occasion to change. The table I then presented, of course, needs to be modified, and I submit, therefore, a recast thereof at this time:

Comparative statement of estimates of appropriations submitted during the second session of the 79th Cong. and of appropriations made during such session

Grand total	37,395,277,279	[2] 35,803,669,580	−1,591,607,699

[1] Includes $135,000,000 for UNRRA provided for in Second Supplemental Surplus Appropriation Rescission Act, 1946.
[2] Excludes amounts in private and public laws for the payment of claims, which may aggregate $2,000,000 more or less.

The revision makes the total of the estimates $37,395,277,279, the total of the appropriations $35,803,669,580, and the total of the difference between the estimates and the appropriations $1,591,607,699. The last amount represents the reduction this session of the Congress has effected, which excludes the rescissions previously made of obligational availability in the amount of $64,328,230,565. I submit that as an incomparable retrenchment, an all-time record for retrenchment and economy in the history of this or any other nation.

As I pointed out in my remarks of July 19, the large increase in the estimates and in the appropriations over the Budget projected totals last January is responsive to demands way and beyond the conception of anyone for appropriately looking after our veterans. The total appropriation for that purpose for the session, including the amount in this bill, is $10,154,401,415, and that amount excludes appropriations of various agencies in connection with job training and placement of veterans and various other expenses on their account which demobilization has occasioned.

The original budget for the current fiscal year included estimates of appropriations for the Veterans' Administration in the total amount of $4,934,623,500. It also contemplated supplemental appropriations for all Federal purposes of $875,000,000, which would include supplemental appropriations on account of veterans.

Assuming that half of the latter amount represented a contingent supplemental need for veterans, that would make the originally projected total for veterans $5,372,123,500. Instead, as I have indicated, the total of the estimates turned out to be $10,401,667,500, or an excess of $5,029,544,000.

The total of the estimates for all purposes projected back in January was $30,668,151,830. As earlier indicated, they have turned out to aggregate $37,395,277,279. Omitting the increase for veterans, the excess becomes $1,697,581,449.

The record speaks for the administration, and, as I said in my remarks of July 19, 1946, evidences a determined effort to maintain the fiscal program mapped out and publicized last January.

Mr. STEFAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield at that point?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I yield to the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. STEFAN. That is not really the total appropriation for the fiscal year, is it?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Practically so; for veterans, yes.

The original budget for the current fiscal year included estimates of appropriation from the Veterans' Administration in the total amount of $4,934,623,500. It also contemplated supplemental appropriations for all Federal purposes of $875,000,000, which would include supplemental appropriations on account of the veterans. Assuming that half of the latter amount represented a contingent supplemental need for veterans, it would make the originally projected total for veterans $5,372,123,500. I wish you would remember that amount. That was the amount that fairly may be said as having originally been projected for that purpose, for our veterans, a little over $5,000,000,000. Instead of that, as we have shown here, the total of the estimates turned out to be not $5,000,000,000 but $10,401,667,500, an excess of $5,029,544,000.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. What part of that amount, $10,400,000,000 for veterans, was intended to provide housing for veterans? Can the gentleman give us any information on that?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Something over $250,000,000 at this session.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. There was something like $250,000,000 for housing.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I should like to again call to your attention a table I used at the time the Third Deficiency Appropriation bill was under consideration—adapted to the final figures as included in this bill, and I wish I could have the careful attention of the House on this one item because it is highly significant. This list includes what we might call untouchable items, that is, items of appropriation by the Federal Government from the Federal Treasury which cannot be reduced. They are the irreducible minimum for the purposes contemplated. The first item is interest on the public debt, $5,000,000,000. That must be paid, it cannot be reduced; you have no latitude nor any option about it. Five billion dollars must be provided for the payment of interest on the public debt.

Statutory debt retirement, $592,000,000, required by law.

Internal revenue and customs refunds, from which there is no escape, $1,585,000,000.

For the Army and the Navy, even reducing as we have to the lowest possible amount to maintain the Army and the Navy, we must have at the very lowest estimate $11,000,000,000.

Let me summarize the amounts:

Interest on the public debt	$5,000,000,000
Statutory debt retirement	592,000,000
Internal revenue and customs refunds	1,585,000,000
Army and Navy	11,000,000,000
Veterans	10,154,401,415
A total of	28,331,401,415

Those are "must" items. The difference between such total and the total of appropriations for the session for all other purposes of government is $7,472,268,165. By far the greater portion of the reduction of $1,591,607,699 we have effected applies to the "other purposes." It would have been considerably more had the recommendations of the Committee on Appropriations prevailed.

But what I wish to impress upon you is the limited field for wielding the pruning knife. Do not look at totals for agencies. Examine their component parts and you will better understand the problem.

For the veterans, as I have indicated here, $10,154,401,415. In other words, Mr. Speaker, before we can spend a dollar, we must provide enough to take care of these items over which we have no control—a total of $28,331,401,415. These are "must" items. The difference between such total and the total of appropriations for this session for other purposes of government is $7,472,268,165. In other words, we have reduced in this session of the Congress the appropriations for all other purposes, and that includes additional provision for increased pay of personnel, which is an astounding sum in response to legislation of the Congress, to a little over $7,000,000,000.

Mr. Speaker, that is another record. With all of the problems of reconversion, getting out of the war, liquidation of wartime agencies and activities, we have reduced the expenditures outside of the untouchables to $7,000,000,000. That is an achievement in retrenchment and economy without precedent in committee annals.

Mr. Speaker, we hear some wild statements that tremendous savings are practical. I was amazed a few days ago to read in one of the local newspapers an article. I will read it to you:

KNUTSON SAYS GOP HOUSE WOULD CUT INCOME TAX

Representative KNUTSON, of Minnesota, top minority member of the tax-framing House Ways and Means Committee, said today that election of a Republican House next November will mean a 20-percent cut in personal income taxes for 1947.

In a letter to Leland W. Scott, Minneapolis attorney, Mr. KNUTSON also said such an election outcome would mean a reduction in "Federal consumer taxes."

Mr. KNUTSON said this would be made possible by a 50-percent cut in Federal expenses. Copies of the letter were given reporters.

That is just plain unadulterated buncombe. Utterances of that kind from responsible sources and voiced by men in high position in this body on either side of the aisle reflect no credit upon those who make them and are a distinct hurt to the general welfare. This is no time to be misleading the people or to be building up false hopes.

In contradistinction to the AP item I have just read, I should like to read an excerpt from Mr. Ernest Lindley's column in the Washington Post of July 30, 1946. Said Mr. Lindley:

Apart from the armed forces, there are no big economies which can be made in the cost of the Federal Government in the visible future. Small cuts can be made here and there—and in many cases should be in the interest of efficient operation. The Federal public works program ought to be held to a minimum for the present, until other demands for labor and materials have slackened. Some expenditures in this category can be postponed.

The big problem in putting the Federal budget in the black and producing a surplus is not, however, on the side of expenditures. It is on the side of income.

The answer lies in the readiness of the administration to recommend and of Congress to maintain sufficiently high taxation. This means taxation at least as high, on the average, as we have now—perhaps higher. Talk of important tax reduction is demagoguery if the American people want to put the budget in the black and whittle down the national debt and unless they are willing to gamble with their lives and civilization by scuttling the armed forces, as they did after the First World War.

That expresses the views of a long-time student of our Federal fiscal problems, one who has no interest beyond service to the public. I will go along with Mr. Lindley with this reservation: Expenditures flow from appropriations, and appropriations flow from legislative authorizations. If there were more resistance here to legislation, legislation mandating the Committee on Appropriations to report appropriations, the demand for income and upon income would be that much lessened.

One worth-while provision which the streamlining bill might have included was one requiring reports on legislative bills to show conspicuously the estimated cost and the expenditure demands by fiscal years, and what the impact of the bill would be upon the projected and legislatively approved appropriation ceiling. Among other advantages which might result would be less talking one way and voting another.

Mr. KNUTSON. I thought I heard the gentleman mention me. If by any great misfortune to the country we should have a Republican House, it is going to cut income taxes 50 percent.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Minnesota is going to cut Federal expenses by 50 percent. How? What do you have here? You have here $28,000,000,000 that cannot be touched—interest on the public debt, statutory debt retirement, revenue and custom refunds, Army and Navy, and veterans. There are $28,000,000,000 for those purposes of which you cannot cut 1 penny, cannot cut them 1 penny, including the gentleman from Minnesota and his Republican brethren. In addition to those demands, there are only $7,000,000,000. If the gentleman from Minnesota were to wipe out every dollar, if he refused to appropriate a single dollar except that which was required for the public debt, interest, and so forth, he could only operate on $7,000,000,000. Why, upon the very face of it the newspaper release attributed to him is inaccurate to the point of absurdity. Of course, I am charitable; I realize it is necessary for the gentleman to promulgate partisan utterances, and I have no objection to that. But nobody should take him seriously, and I am certain nobody will take him seriously.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. KNUTSON. Of course, when I made that statement I was going on the assumption that the Republicans were going to control the next Congress, and they would cut out all this waste.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. That is no answer. You cannot do the impossible. Regardless of who controls the House, they will be confronted with $28,000,000,000 of untouchable obligations.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. The gentleman has referred to the appropriation carried in this bill of $2,431,708 to provide terminal leave pay for the enlisted men. That is somewhat of a fiction. As a matter of fact, that money is to be available not to the enlisted men, but to the Treasury of the United States to provide, under the terms of this bill and the authorization that we passed the other day, for the issuance of bonds. Personally, I think it is most unfortunate that these enlisted men have to get bonds, and that this language really ought to be explained in connection with this bill, because it does not provide money for these enlisted men but merely for the issuance of bonds and the payment of this amount to the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. That was debated here when this resolution was before the House originally, and the House provided the money. When we consider the legislative bill dealing with the matter, we thought that the boys ought to have the cash, but when the bill went to conference with the other body, we could not get a bill at all unless we agreed to resort to bonds, but whether the terminal-leave pay is paid in cash or bonds, the technical requirements are such that we have to appropriate the money, and we are appropriating the money.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I think it is in order for the gentleman to say that this is a technical requirement so that the boys of the country will not be misled.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. There is nothing misleading about it; so far as I know, the money is being made available to pay cash or for bonds as and when issued. Some of these bonds mature immediately, I would say to the gentleman. The authorization act is retroactive to 1939, and it is impossible to know how much will be needed and when it will be needed to pay those of immediate maturity. There is no alternative but to appropriate the entire amount that will be needed for expenditure in the present fiscal year.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I yield to the gentleman from West Virginia.

Mr. BAILEY. I would like to ask the distinguished gentleman from Minnesota this question. I am sure he knows that I was one of nine Members of the House who voted against the tax reduction of 1945. I would like to ask the gentleman from Minnesota whether he thinks he would not have rendered a better service to the country to have limited the carry-back clause on excess-profits taxes?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I hear no answer.

Mr. Speaker, may I also call attention to the disparity between the total of the appropriations for the session I have given, namely, $35,803,669,580, and the total for the session given by the ranking minority member of the committee, the gentleman from New York, Hon. JOHN TABER. Mr. TABER'S statement appears in the RECORD of July 24. The total he gives is $39,504,734,744. Were he here, he would need to add to that sum the amount carried by this joint resolution, which would increase his total to $42,141,224,161. That amount exceeds the total I have given by $6,337,554,581, which is a very appreciable discrepancy. The difference results first from the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] adding in self-liquidating trust accounts; a matter of $4,662,090,704. They are estimates—not appropriations—of amounts the Treasury will pay out of trust funds on deposit, and are not classed as appropriations. Again, the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] adds in reappropriations, which heretofore have been charged as appropriations. They are in the deferred expenditure category, and charged again as appropriations, would be apt to mislead in any comparison of appropriations by sessions or fiscal years. The gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] also includes the diversion of previously appropriated continuing funds, heretofore charged as appropriations, and, also, the doubtful employment of naval stock account capital, which exists in consequence of appropriations heretofore made and charged. Again, the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] includes $921,000,000 plus for which an appropriation was requested and refused for canceling Commodity Credit Corporation notes held by the Treasury Department. Instead of appropriating the money out of one pocket to be placed in another, the Congress has approved the committee's recommendation to cancel the notes, and, therefore, effected a reduction of the amount indicated in the amount appropriated. To treat the matter otherwise would be mixing expenditure transactions with appropriations, and not in any sense a current expenditure transaction. Lastly, the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] includes loan authorizations by the RFC under the Department of Agriculture. They have no place in an appropriation statement.

That, I should say, about accounts for the difference. The figures I have given are figures which have a proper place in an appropriation statement, and exclude amounts which do not fairly or appropriately belong therein.

Mr. Speaker, in closing I wish to congratulate the Committee on Appropriations on the exceptional record it has made. It has contributed its part to making this one of the outstanding Congresses in the history of the Nation.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WIGGLESWORTH].

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I do not propose at this time to enter into a diagnosis of the frightful financial conditions into which the present administration has led the Nation during the last 13 years.

I may point out in passing, however, that this appropriaion bill is the last of a series of appropriation bills in this session of the Congress for the fiscal year 1947, in respect to which the Budget estimates of the President amounted to almost $40,000,000,000.

That is $40,000,000,000 in a peacetime year. That is four times our prewar Budget. That comes on top of a national debt which, if contingent liabilities are included, amounted on December 29, 1945, according to the Bureau of the Budget to $663,753,721,386.75.

Mr. Speaker, as far as this report is concerned, I may say that, when the bill left the House it carried $2,479,000,000 or thereabouts. In the other body, about $316,000,000 was added. In conference, about $160,000,000 of that increase was eliminated. So that the bill before you today carries $2,636,000,000 or thereabouts, $156,000,000 more than it carried when it left the House but still $384,000,000 below the Budget figures.

I believe that certain items in this bill could have waited and that certain other items could have been further reduced.

But the bill carries funds for terminal leave and it carries funds for amputee legislation. The report is a unanimous report by the conferees and I trust it will be speedily adopted.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may require to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CROSSER].

Mr. CROSSER. Mr. Speaker, the promotion of justice—which means the establishment of right—is the professed purpose of all governments. Throughout the ages there has been a continuous development of the knowledge and wisdom essential to the establishment of justice. With this growth of man's understanding it has become more evident also that rights are innate and inherent in man's very being. They are not and cannot be created by any human means. Right cannot be constituted by human governments.

With the evolution of man's understanding of justice, it became necessary to provide improved governmental mechanism which would operate more readily and equitably to effectuate the principles of justice.

Careful thought inevitably convinces us that enlightenment results from willing and unwavering obedience to what Channing refers as the "promptings of our own soul!" Others urge prompt compliance with our highest intuitions. Certainly the most important requisite to the progress of civilization is freedom of thought on the part of the individual. To make possible the most rapid extension of the mental horizon of mankind in general, the individual must not only be permitted to think and speak freely, but indeed must be encouraged as much as possible to the constant exercise of such freedom of thought and expression. Such unfettered and spontaneous thinking by the individual assures the quickest possible general unfoldment of truth.

Naturally, development according to the principle just explained, is contrary to the desires and to the whole program of governments which are administered according to the personal whim and discretion of the persons exercising absolute power. Inevitably those subject to the absolute authority of government by personal discretion, in other words, to autocratic government, are denied the right to give expression to their own understanding of truth. As should have been expected, therefore, there developed an irrepressible movement for the establishment of the kind of government which would recognize the rights and dignity of man and his right to have his views as to law and government valued and given effect in accordance with the standards applied for like purpose to the views of all his fellow men.

Men's opinions as to right and wrong vary and are, of course, relative in their nature. They fall far short of expressing perfection. Inevitably, therefore, there was presented the problem as to the method or plan best calculated to provide all men opportunity equal to that enjoyed by each other, in order to assure, for such views, their proper effect and influence in the determination of policies and rules for the guidance and control of all people.

In order, as fully as possible, to assure men of the enjoyment of their rights and to provide opportunity for all persons to exercise their judgment as to policies to be adopted for the regulation of the affairs of society, advanced thinkers urged with a measure of success, the establishment of a governmental system which would enable the people, by a majority vote, to determine what policies should be adopted as law and also in such manner to name the persons to administer the laws.

Provision for men's general participation in the process of deciding as to the rules to govern society, has rightly been regarded as the greatest of all improvements in governmental mechanism. In fact it was but the recognition of the inborn, inherent right of men to decide as to the right course of action for themselves consistently with the like right of other men to do likewise.

From the standpoint of logic and morals the individual's right to participate on equal terms with others in the determination of public policy, cannot be disputed. Experience has made it evident also that the composite judgment of society is generally a better means of assuring justice than is the judgment of particular individuals.

Rule by the greater weight of public opinion, however, is possible only through a truly democratic governmental mechanism. The word "democracy" is derived from the two Greek words "demos" meaning the people and "kratein" meaning to rule. The word "democracy" then, means the rule of the people. The rule or control, however, must be by the people only who are especially affected by the problems to which governmental action is directed.

Divisions of government are therefore necessary to the truly democratic rule of the world. Action as to problems which concern only the people of a certain locality, for example, should be taken by governments having jurisdiction throughout that locality. Only those who are subject to the difficulties involved in any problem have sufficient concern and understanding of the same to be able to make a practical disposition of the difficulty. Hence in the United States the municipal government properly disposes of subjects affecting especially the people of the municipality. The State governments properly determine policies which especially affect the people of the States, and finally our National Government determines the policies in regard to subjects affecting similarly the people of all of the States. Always, however, the true unit of democracy—that is, the individual—whether exercising his right to participate with others in determining the policies of the most limited area of government called the municipality, or exercising such right in the State or in the Nation, must in justice enjoy opportunity equal with all others to determine the policies of each of the divisions of government of which he is a resident.

Human beings are denizens, yes, properly speaking, citizens of the world, as well as being citizens of their own particular and limited communities or other divisions of government. The problems which affect mankind generally should, therefore, be treated in accordance with the judgment of men throughout the world, wherever domiciled. In other words, every reason which can be advanced for the operation of local governments in accordance with the formal judgment of the majority of those especially affected by government in either municipality, state, or nation, likewise justifies and absolute justice requires that all of the people of the world participate in the determination of policies disposing of problems of common concern to all the people of the world and the decision of the majority of the people of the world should control.

The principles of democracy logically apply to all government, regardless of the extent of their jurisdiction. In the light of what has been said, therefore, it is clear that there can be no logical denial of the justice of the proposal that there should be a thoroughly democratic form of government to determine the policies for the solution of problems affecting alike all persons on the earth.

For the regulation of international relations, I contend, therefore, that there should be established a formal government consisting of representatives from all of the nations of the world, in number proportionate to the ratios of the nations' populations to the population of the whole world. The authority of such government should be strictly limited, by its constitution, to the one purpose of maintaining the peace of the world. Such restriction upon its authority is desirable, in order to preclude the offering of excuses about the possibility of such government's interfering in the domestic affairs of a nation.

Such central government should have the undisputed authority to provide that no nation will be allowed to violate the territory of any other nation. Certainly no person in any country, if he is truly desirous of world peace, could object to granting absolute authority to a world government to use its power for the prevention of forcible attack by any nation against any other nation.

The law of the proposed international government should declare positively that no nation will be allowed to violate the territory of any other nation. The world government should require the surrender of all weapons and equipment acquired for the waging of war. Such government should also prohibit every nation from enacting laws for the conscription of their people for war.

The international government should be provided with a military force wholly under its control and of sufficient magnitude to compel prompt obedience by any nation or nations to the constitutional decrees of the world power.

The military power of the world authority should consist of any and all means necessary, suitable and effective and great enough to compel the obedience of any nation or nations to its constitutional decrees.

The manpower for the international government should be composed of volunteers from every country in the world in numbers bearing the same proportion to the total number of persons in the whole international force, as the population of such country bears to the number of people in the entire world. The persons constituting such world force, as already stated, should be volunteers and they should receive ample compensation in order to make their positions attractive, and also to develop true dignity in those serving in such force.

From what has been said, the conclusion is unavoidable that we cannot assure permanent peace, by having one or a number of nations announce to the rest of the world that it is the duty of the other part of the world to disarm, while the nation making such announcement keeps in its possession a force of such magnitude as will enable it to overawe other nations. If we are really sincere in urging the rule of reason and the sacred rights of individuals everywhere, then we should be willing and ready to join all other nations in providing for the settlement of disputes between nations in accordance with the reason and judgment of the majority of all mankind.

In reference to the control of the atomic bomb, let me first say that it should be absolutely outlawed by the people of the world. There is, however, no basis in principle for advocating the prohibition of the use of the atomic bomb, and at the same time claiming that one or all nations should have military power of a certain magnitude consisting of armies, navies, air force, or other means for making war. The reason for prohibiting nations from using the atomic bomb or other kinds of military force against other nations, in accordance with the judgment of the majority of mankind, denies with equal force the right of any nation to use any and all means for waging war. To wholly embrace and uphold the principles of democracy we must be willing and ready to say to all the world that we are prepared to give up all means for carrying on war if the other nations will do likewise.

The governmental spokesmen of no nation on earth would dare to tell their people, or let their people know that they, as such spokesmen, had refused to assure the peace of the world by agreeing to discontinue the use of all means of waging war. Certainly if such proposal were to be announced by the greatest nation in the world it could not possibly be refused. Persons selected, from each of the nations, for the military or police force of the world authority, should be subject to the approval of the Government under which they hold citizenship. After having become members of the international force, however, such persons should be absolutely subject to the directions of the world government.

It may be said that this plan is too idealistic. That is the usual answer to the proposal of any fundamental remedy for the betterment of the lot of mankind. It is also said that those in authority in the governments of the world could not be induced to adopt such a policy. My answer to that statement is that if the proposal is made in direct, unequivocal, simple and clear terms, I care not what government it may be, it dare not say to its people that it has refused to join with other nations in an effective arrangement which would for all time prevent wars and the brutality and terrible loss of life which has invariably been the lot of the plain people of a nation when they have blindly followed their vainglorious so-called leaders into a conflict with another nation and which leads but to mutual slaughter.

In order to make absolutely certain that the law and decrees of the world government will be respected, provision would be made for the appointment by the world government of inspectors with authority to go anywhere in the nation to which they may be assigned and to enter any buildings and upon any property for the purpose of making the inspection necessary to assure obedience to the law and decrees of the world government.

Inspectors employed by the world government and assigned to duty within the boundaries of any nation, would be residents and citizens of nations other than the nation in which such inspectors would be assigned to the duty of inspection.

Not only would the inspectors be authorized and required to make the most thorough and rigid investigation to prevent the wrongful and unlawful making of atomic bombs but would also make inspections in order to prevent the production of any other means of waging war.

If violations of the law or decrees of the world government were discovered then the full force of the world government would be directed against the offending nation and its illegal action would be stopped.

Sooner or later the world must make a definite choice between government by law and rule by force and destruction.

There is little hope of government by the Parliament of Man of which Tennyson wrote if nations in discussing the possibility of a world government by law, insist always in advance that they must be allowed to keep certain means for making war. If, however, the great nations of the world will say to the whole world in language that cannot be misunderstood: "We are willing and eager to have a parliament of all mankind, selected in a democratic way and which will act in accordance with the principles of democracy to prevent any nation from attacking, with force, another nation regardless of what the attacker may claim to be a "justification," then we could hope for and expect the establishment of an effective world government. Just as no person in our country, regardless of his provocation, is allowed to strike another person, so no nation, regardless of the excuse it might offer, would be allowed to attack another nation.

Let us then, Mr. Speaker, do all in our power to prevent a repetition of the terrible wars which have brought untold suffering and misery to millions of people.

Let us bring about a realization of the ideal of Tennyson when he used these words:

Till the war-drum throbb'd no longer,
And the battle-flags were furl'd
In the Parliament of man,
The Federation of the world.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the first amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate amendment No. 1: Page 1, line 9, insert the following:

"SENATE

"To enable the Secretary of the Senate to make the additional disbursements and to perform the additional duties and functions required of his office by reason of the enactment of the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946, fiscal year 1947, $173,667; and he is hereby authorized to allocate necessary portions of the said sum to the various Senate appropriations and to make transfers between same, including those contained in the Legislative Branch Appropriation Act for the fiscal year 1947 and those provided for in the said Reorganization Act: Provided, however, That the positions and funds now allocated to any Senator or to any standing committee chairman shall be continued until March 31, 1947, unless otherwise directed by the Senator or the chairman."

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment with an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. CANNON of Missouri moves that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1 and concur in the same with an amendment, as follows:

In line 6 of the matter inserted by said amendment, after the word "authorized", insert ", subject to the approval of the chairman of the Committee To Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate (Committee on Rules and Administration, if and when elected)."

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate amendment No. 2: Page 2, line 12, insert the following:

"ADMINISTRATIVE ASSISTANTS TO SENATORS

"For compensation of an administrative assistant to each Senator, to be appointed by him, at a base salary of not to exceed $8,000 per year, to assist him in carrying out his departmental business and other duties, fiscal year 1947, $384,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be available at the beginning of the Eightieth Congress."

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate amendment No. 3: Page 2, line 19, insert the following:

"SENATE POLICY COMMITTEE

"For maintenance of a staff for a majority policy committee and a minority policy committee in the Senate, consisting of seven members each, for the formulation of overall legislative policy of the respective parties, the members of such staffs to assist in study, analysis, and research on problem involved in policy determinations, and to be appointed, and their compensation fixed, by the policy committee concerned, at rates not to exceed $8,000 per annum in any case, $15,000 for each such committee, in all, fiscal year 1947, $30,000, to be available at the beginning of the Eightieth Congress."

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement:

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate amendment No. 11: Page 8, line 5, insert the following:

"FEDERAL SECURITY AGENCY"

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate amendment No. 12: On page 8, line 6, insert the following:

"Grants to States for maternal and child-health services: For an additional amount, fiscal year 1947, for grants to States for maternal and child-health services, including Department of Labor Appropriation Acts, 1947, $9,180,000."

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I move to recede and concur with an amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. CANNON of Missouri moves to recede and concur with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum named in said amendment, insert "$6,885,000: Provided, That such additional amounts shall be allotted on a pro rata basis among the several States in proportion to the amounts to which the respective States are entitled for each fiscal year by reason of section 401 of the Social Security Act amendments of 1946."

Mr. JUDD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I yield.

Mr. JUDD. May I ask the chairman of the committee, the additional funds granted in these amendments 12, 13, and 14 do not contemplate the Children's Bureau entering into any new program, is that right?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. The only change we propose is to conform with Budget Bureau recommendations.

Mr. JUDD. It merely gives them more money for the same kind of program? It does not extend the kind of work they can do?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. The changes are in response to the provisions of the new Social Security Act amendments of 1946.

Mr. JUDD. The one we just passed a few minutes ago?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Yes.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON].

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 13: Page 8, line 11, insert:

"Grants to States for services for crippled children: For an additional amount, fiscal year 1947, for grants to States for services for crippled children, including the objects specified under this head in the Department of Labor Appropriation Act, 1947, $6,130,000."

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I move to recede and concur with an amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. CANNON of Missouri moves to recede and concur with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum named in said amendment, insert "$4,597,500: Provided, That such additional amounts shall be allotted on a pro rata basis among the several States in proportion to the amounts to which the respective States are entitled for each fiscal year by reason of section 401 of the Social Security Act amendments of 1946."

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 14: Page 8, line 16, insert:

"Grants to States for child-welfare services: For an additional amount, fiscal year 1947, for grants to States for child-welfare services, including the objects specified under this head in the Department of Labor Appropriation Act, 1947, $3,490,000."

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I move to recede and concur with an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. CANNON of Missouri moves to recede and concur in the Senate amendment No. 14 with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum named in said amendment, insert: "$2,617,500: Provided, That such additional amounts shall be allotted on a pro rata basis among the several States in proportion to the amounts to which the respective States are entitled for each fiscal year by reason of section 401 of the Social Security Act amendments of 1946."

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 15: Page 8, line 21, insert:

"Salaries and expenses, maternal and child welfare: For an additional amount, fiscal year 1947, for salaries and expenses, maternal and child welfare, including the objects specified under this head in the Department of Labor Appropriation Act, 1947, and including also travel, printing and binding, penalty mail, contingent and other expenses, $925,500."

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I move to recede and concur with an amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. CANNON of Missouri moves to recede and concur in the Senate amendment No. 15 with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum named in said amendment, insert "$425,000."

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 16: Page 9, line 3, insert:

"The appropriations contained in the four preceding paragraphs shall not be available for obligation until the enactment into law of H. R. 7037, Seventy-ninth Congress."

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I move to recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 17: page 9, line 6, insert:

"PUBLIC HEALTH SERVICE"

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I move to recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate amendment No. 20. Page 10, line 14, insert:

"Hospital and construction activities: For carrying out the provisions of title VI of the Public Health Service Act as amended (S. 191), fiscal year 1947, including travel; printing and binding; the objects specified in the paragraph immediately following the caption 'Public Health Service' in the Federal Security Agency Appropriation Act, 1947; and the purchase of eight passenger automobiles; $2,425,000, of which not to exceed $147,147 may be transferred to the appropriation 'Pay, and so forth, commissioned officers, Public Health Service,' for not to exceed 28 commissioned officers, and not to exceed $41,680 may be transferred to the appropriation 'Salaries, Office of the General Counsel,' Office of the Administrator, Federal Security Agency: Provided, That this appropriation shall be available for personal services without regard to section 14 (a) of the Federal Employees Pay Act of 1946: Provided further, That the availability of this appropriation is contingent upon the enactment into law of said S. 191."

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 20 and concur in the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment, insert:

"Hospital and construction activities: For carrying out the provisions of title VI of the Public Health Service Act as amended (S. 191), fiscal year 1947, including travel; printing, and binding; the objects specified in the paragraph immediately following the caption 'Public Health Service' in the Federal Security Agency Appropriation Act, 1947; and the purchase of eight passenger automobiles; $2,350,000, of which not to exceed $120,600 may be transferred to the appropriation 'Pay, etc., commissioned officers, Public Health Service' for not to exceed 28 commissioned officers, and not to exceed $34,175

may be transferred to the appropriation 'Salaries, Office of the General Counsel,' Office of the Administrator, Federal Security Agency: Provided, That the availability of this appropriation is contingent upon the enactment into law of said S. 191."

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate amendment No. 24. Page 13, line 22, insert:

"VETERANS' ADMINISTRATION

"Automobiles and other conveyances for disabled veterans: To enable the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs to provide an automobile or other conveyance, equipped with such special attachments and devices as the Administrator may deem necessary, for each veteran of World War II, whether or not discharged from service, who (1) is entitled to disability compensation or pension under the laws administered by the Veterans' Administration, and (2) is unable, because of the loss, or loss of use, of one or both lower limbs, to use normal means of locomotion or ambulation: Provided, That no part of the money appropriated by this paragraph shall be used for the repair, maintenance, or replacement of any such automobile or other conveyance and no veteran shall be given an automobile or other conveyance under the provisions of this paragraph until it is established to the satisfaction of the Administrator that such veteran will be able to operate such automobile or other conveyance in a manner consistent with his own safety and the safety of others, and will be licensed to operate such automobile or other conveyance by the State of his residence, $30,000,000, to remain available until expended."

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment with an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. CANNON of Missouri moves that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate No. 24, and concur in the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment, insert the following:

"VETERANS' ADMINISTRATION

"Automobiles and other conveyances for disabled veterans: To enable the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs to provide an automobile or other conveyance, at a cost per vehicle or conveyance of not to exceed $1,600, including equipment with such special attachments and devices as the Administrator may deem necessary, for each veteran of World War II who is entitled to compensation for the loss, or loss of use, of one or both legs at or above the ankle under the laws administered by the Veterans' Administration, $30,000,000: Provided, That no part of the money appropriated by this paragraph shall be used for the repair, maintenance, or replacement of any such automobile or other conveyance and no veteran shall be given an automobile or other conveyance under the provisions of this paragraph until it is established to the satisfaction of the Administrator that such veteran will be able to operate such automobile or other conveyance in a manner consistent with his own safety and the safety of others and will be licensed to operate such automobile or other conveyance by the State of his residence or other proper licensing authority: Provided further, That under such regulations as the Administrator may prescribe the furnishing of such automobile or other conveyance shall be accomplished by the Administrator paying the total purchase price to the seller from whom the veteran is purchasing under sales agreement between the seller and the veteran."

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, this amendment, which has probably attracted as much attention as any single provision in the bill, has been very carefully worked out with General Bradley and his assistants.

The only difference in this amendment and the original Senate version is that we restrict it to service-connected disabilities.

Additional differences are:

A cost limitation on the vehicle or conveyance to be supplied.

Limitation to actual compensation cases, which would mean men out of the armed services.

Clarity as to the incapacity to conform with present Veterans' Administration interpretations of existing law. Without the amendment, the loss of a limb would be interpreted a loss from the torso down. The amendment makes it definitely a loss of any part of the leg from the ankle up, and General Bradley said in interpreting the language of the amendment, if a foot were virtually useless, the sufferer would be qualified.

Provision pertains to procurement procedure, which obviously is essential.

Mr. Speaker, I now yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTINGTON].

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Speaker, I believe that those who were wounded in the service of their country, and the widows and dependents of those who sacrificed their all for their country, are entitled to the Nation's bounty. When a similar bill, the so-called amputees' bill, H. R. 7171, was before the House on Tuesday, July 30, 1946, under unanimous consent request for its immediate consideration without debate, and without amendment, I objected, and insisted there should be opportunity for careful debate and amendment.

It was my view then and it is my view now that the subject matter of this legislation should be further and more carefully considered by the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation, and by Congress. I was of the opinion that the legislation discriminated against men who had lost their lower limbs, one or both legs below the knee, and I insisted that while it provided for additional benefits for those who had lost one or both of their legs at or above the knee, no benefits were provided for the sightless, for those who had lost their eyes, and none for the armless, those who had lost their arms, none for those from whose backs vertabrae had been taken, none for those who had been burned and otherwise sorely disabled.

Mr. Speaker, the veterans believe in justice; they oppose discrimination among veterans whether intended or not, and it was and is my view that if the Congress legislates to provide additional benefits and additional compensation for the heroes who lost their legs, we should at the same time provide for others who suffered similar disabilities, with similar degrees and percentages of disabilities that entitled them to compensation. I am now confirmed in that belief. The amendment adopted by the Senate differs from the bill that was proposed to be passed in the House by unanimous consent, and the substitute now proposed differs from either the House bill or the amendment adopted by the Senate. In my judgment, sympathizing as I do profoundly with all, having insisted through the years that the wounded, the disabled, and their dependents, are entitled to first consideration, we should provide for all without discrimination and that in a generous effort to provide for some, we will not even satisfy all of the men who lost one or both of their limbs. We will satisfy a comparatively few of those who are mangled and wounded, but there are many others who will be dissatisfied by the passage of this bill. There will be a far greater number of those who lost their eyes, their arms or who were otherwise disabled and mangled, who will be dissatisfied.

For these reasons I insisted that the bill be given further consideration by the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation. The chairman of the Committee on Appropriations has just stated that this Congress during the session since January 1946 has appropriated a total of approximately $10,400,000,000 for the Veterans' Administration and the veterans of our wars. If we have not made adequate and generous provisions for them all, for all who suffered similar disabilities, we ought to consider all, as we considered all, when we passed the GI bill.

We ought not to take it up piecemeal and provide for some, because in providing for some we will disappoint many. It is my thought that the United States of America, having made the most generous provision for her veterans ever made by any nation in all history, should do its dead level best to provide for all, giving all, without discrimination, whether intended or not, the same consideration, no matter how badly wounded or disabled the veteran might be.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman two additional minutes.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Speaker, while the proposed substitute is not adequate and while all disabled should be considered the substitute proposal is an improvement on the House bill and on the amendment adopted by the Senate. It limits the appropriation to those who were disabled in line of duty. It differs therein from the Senate amendment. It limits it to those who are able to obtain licenses for the operation of the cars. It restricts the kinds of cars that may be purchased, differing therein from both the House bill and the Senate amendment, and limits it to cars with appliances that can only be used by the amputees if and when the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs decides that they are qualified and capable of operating them.

My sympathies go out to the men who are disabled and wounded. I always thought that this bill ought to be carefully considered. We might as well be frank. There is resentment by many patriotic citizens at Congress because there is sentiment in the country that we have not been as careful in the consideration of veterans' legislation as we should have been. There is a fault, and it is either in the legislation or the administration of it, because many good patriotic citizens have complained to me, as I have understood they have to other Members of Congress, that the provisions that we made in veterans' legislation for unemployment compensation are being abused, and that the provisions that Congress has made for training and for rehabilitating have been abused. I thought and still think that we should give more careful consideration to all the legislation that we have provided for veterans giving to the disabled men hospitalization, providing for their rehabilitation, giving them means of locomotion, if the Administrator who is in charge of the Veterans' Administration says and reports to Congress that they need it after careful study, and that we should do justice by all, whether they have lost their legs, their arms, or their eyes.

I extend to say it is a mistake to pass the pending appropriation at the present time without providing comparable benefits for all veterans who have lost one or both or any part of their legs and for all veterans with similar loss of organs whether they be legs, arms, or eyes, or whether the disabilities are such that the veterans are even more disabled.

Veterans who have lost both legs in many cases draw $200 a month. Congress has recently increased the compensation 20 percent. They are also provided with rehabilitation and training so as to give them an opportunity to follow a business, trade, or profession in keeping with their disabilities. They are allowed hospitalization. If any additional reasonable provisions can be made for them, whether it be to assist them with conveyances, and if similar provision can be made for other veterans with similar percentages of disability and the interests of all will be promoted thereby, I will give careful consideration in the future as in the past to any additional needed benefits not only to amputees but to other veterans with similar percentages and degrees of disability.

It is my view that the pending bill with provision for one class of our disabled veterans will cause dissension among the veterans themselves. I put it mildly when I say that, in my judgment, the passage of even the substitute proposed by the pending motion, although a vast improvement on the said H. R. 7171, and the amendment inserted as a rider in the Senate in the pending deficiency appropriation bill, will not be satisfactory to disabled veterans. Nevertheless, in pleasing a few of the amputees, other amputees will be disappointed, other veterans will be dissatisfied. The provisions of this substitute will be a headache to the disabled and wounded veterans as well as to Congress. The whole matter of benefits to the disabled and wounded should be restudied when Congress reassembles so that justice may be done to all veterans who have been mangled and wounded with a loss of organs, whether eyes or arms or legs, and with other bodily wounds and similar disabilities. I am interested in promoting the welfare of all disabled and all wounded veterans. I think it unwise to accord special treatment to one class and refuse or delay similar treatment to others suffering with comparable disabilities and with similar percentages of disability.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I yield 7 minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN].

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, in reply to our distinguished colleague from Mississippi, let me say that the veterans' laws are not the only ones that have not been properly administered. I asked for a rule day before yesterday in order that this bill might be brought to the floor of the House for amendments. In my honest opinion it is unfortunate that the word "automobile" was ever used in connection with this legislation. I said before the Committee on Rules, and I say now, that I would much rather vote for a readjustment rehabilitation allowance of $1,500 for every veteran who lost a hand or a foot or an eye or who became paralyzed as a result of injuries received in the war. There are about 20,000 of them. The cost at the outside would not be more than $30,000,000.

I am not unmindful of the fact that we are pouring money by the billions into the sink holes of Europe. I voted against the British loan, or the British gift, because I saw them repudiate their debts to the United States after the last war.

These men are not gold brickers. They are not men who clamored for war and then dodged the draft. I wonder how many millionaires in this country we will uncover yet who clamored for war and then dodged the draft, or sought a storm cellar where they could make money out of the conflict.

These are front-line men. They are men for whom the war will never end. They are men who will carry the scars of battle to their graves.

I, for one, would much rather give them a readjustment allowance of $1,500 apiece than vote $400,000,000 for the prefabricated housing racketeers who are getting rich now at the expense of the servicemen, unloading prefabricated houses on them at three or four times what they are worth.

I would much rather give this $30,000,000 to the men who lost legs or the men who lost hands or the men who lost their eyes, or the men who became paralyzed as the result of war injuries, or the men who are now forced to lie motionless, using iron lungs in order to breathe—I would much rather give them $30,000,000 and say to them, "Take this and do as you please with it."

I am going to support this amendment, but my honest opinion is that when you bring this in with an automobile provision in this way you probably do a great psychological injustice to these men. You are going to force them to prove they need an automobile before they can get this compensation.

I have been chairman of the Veterans' Committee now since 1931. Someone has said that you never get any praise for what you do for veterans, but you get cussed for what you do not do. That is not altogether true. I have passed more veterans' legislation under my name than any other man who has ever served in Congress. Several years ago you remember I led the fight here to raise the base pay of the men in the armed forces to $50 a month. I said we were not paying the men in the rank and file adequately. I have never known anything to contribute so much to increasing or building up the morale of the men in the armed forces as the passage of that measure to raise the base pay to $50 a month.

This $30,000,000 is a mere bagatelle compared to what we are spending for other things. As I said, I will support the amendment, but I would much prefer to have had this bill come in under a rule and let us provide this amount for every man who lost a leg, an eye, or an arm, or who had become paralyzed, or disabled for 1 year, as a result of his service in the war.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

Mr. HAND. Mr. Speaker, I am glad to note that Congress is about to pass legislation to provide automobiles for veterans who, by reason of their war injuries, require such a special aid in order to restore them to useful civilian life. I call attention, with some pride, to the fact that the original bill on this subject, H. R. 6089, was introduced by me on April 12, 1946. That bill provides:

> That the Veterans' Administration shall cause to be furnished to all honorably discharged veterans of World War II who are certified by the Administration to be true paraplegic cases, specially designed automobiles to enable such veterans to engage in useful occupations: Provided, That no such automobile shall be furnished to a paraplegic veteran until it is established to the satisfaction of the Veterans' Administration that (a) such veteran is physically able to safely operate such automobile; and (b) will be licensed to do so by the State of his domicile.
> SEC. 2. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated to the Veterans' Administration a sum not exceeding $2,000,000 for this purpose.

Later additional legislation was introduced by Congresswoman ROGERS of Massachusetts and others to include amputees. While this later legislation has been criticized in some quarters as being ultra-generous, it nevertheless is consistent with the policy of Congress to do what is necessary to restore to useful civilian life our veterans who have sacrificed their bodies for the common welfare.

I think, Mr. Speaker, I may be permitted to express some satisfaction in the part that I played in this legislation.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report Senate amendment No. 22, which was inadvertently passed over.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate amendment No. 22: On page 11, line 21, insert the following:

"War and emergency damage, Territory of Hawaii: For carrying out the provisions of section 2 of the act entitled 'An act to provide emergency relief for the victims of the seismic waves which struck the Territory of Hawaii, and for other purposes' (H. R. 6918, 79th Cong.), to be expended by the Commissioner of Public Roads in accordance with provisions applicable to its customary operations in the construction, rehabilitation, and repair of roads, highways, and bridges, by contract or otherwise, and necessary expenses incident thereto without regard, outside continental United States, to section 3709 of the Revised Statutes, including personal services in the District of Columbia or elsewhere and employment of personnel outside the continental United States without regard to civil-service and classification laws and section 14 (a) of the Federal Employees Pay Act of 1946, and the purchase of passenger motor vehicles, $8,000,000, to remain available until expended."

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment with an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. CANNON of Missouri moves that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 22 and concur in the same with an amendment, as follows: In line 5 of the matter inserted by said amendment, strike out the following: "(H. R. 6918, 79th Cong.)"; and in lines 15 and 16 of the matter inserted by said amendment, strike out the following: "and section 14 (a) of the Federal Employees Pay Act of 1946."

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate amendment No. 28: On page 22, line 9, insert the following:

"SEC. 302. Section 2 (a) of the act of June 11, 1946 (Public Law 404, 79th Cong.), is amended by striking out the period at the end thereof and inserting a semicolon and the following: 'and the Veterans' Emergency Housing Act of 1946.'"

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate amendment No. 29: On page 22, line 14, strike out "302" and insert "303."

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider the votes by which action was taken on the several motions was laid on the table.

GENERAL LEAVE TO EXTEND REMARKS

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all who have spoken on the conference report may have 5 days in which to extend their remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. McCORMACK (at the request of Mr. BULWINKLE) was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD with respect to the legislative achievements of the Seventy-ninth Congress.

STILL FURTHER MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A still further message from the Senate, by Mr. Koerber, its assistant enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5626) entitled "An act to authorize the Veterans' Administration to appoint and employ retired officers without affecting their retired status," and for other purposes.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT

A message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House by Mr. Miller, one of his secretaries.

DECLARATION OF RECESS

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that it may be in order for the Speaker to declare a recess of the House at any time today.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

Mr. HENDRICKS. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the chairman of the Committee on Rules if he is going to call up some rules because I am interested in one particular rule.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH] is going to file a rule as soon as he can get recognition.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I have been trying to file it earlier during the day and I have it in my hand now.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

APPOINTMENT OF COMMISSIONS AND COMMITTEES

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that, notwithstanding the sine die adjournment of the House, the Speaker be authorized to appoint commissions and committees authorized by law or by the House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

GENERAL LEAVE TO EXTEND REMARKS UNTIL LAST EDITION OF RECORD

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members of the House shall have the privilege until the last edition authorized by the Joint Committee on Printing is published to extend and revise their own remarks in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, on more than one subject, if they so desire, and also to include therein such short quotations as may be necessary to explain or complete such extension of remarks; but this order shall not apply to any subject matter which may have occurred or to any speech delivered subsequent to the adjournment of Congress.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

AUTHORIZING CLERK OF HOUSE TO RECEIVE SENATE MESSAGES

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that, notwithstanding the sine die adjournment of the House, the Clerk be authorized to receive messages from the Senate.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

AUTHORIZING CLERK OF THE HOUSE TO DESIGNATE A SUBORDINATE

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the immediate consideration of a resolution (H. Res. 753) which I send to the Clerk's desk:

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That in order that the duties of his office may be discharged in case of his absence or disability or in case his office should become vacant, the Clerk of the House of Representatives on or before August 2, 1946, shall designate a subordinate in his office to perform the duties thereof in any of such contingencies until there shall have been an election of officers of the House at the commencement of the Eightieth Congress. Such designee, when acting under this authorization, shall subscribe himself as Acting Clerk of the House of Representatives, and shall be paid in addition to his present compensation, from the contingent fund of the House, an additional amount at the rate of $200 per month, dating from the date of his designation until the commencement of the Eightieth Congress.

The Clerk of the House shall promptly communicate to the Speaker the name of the employee designated hereunder for the information of the House.

The resolution was agreed to.

COMMITTEE ON POSTWAR ECONOMIC POLICY AND PLANNING

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of a resolution (H. Res. 754), which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the Special Committee on Postwar Economic Policy and Planning be authorized to continue its investigations authorized under House Resolution 408 of the Seventy-eighth Congress as continued by House Resolution 60 of the Seventy-ninth Congress notwithstanding the adjournment of the House. The Committee on Postwar Economic Policy and Planning shall make reports to the House of the results of its studies and investigations provided for in said resolutions, House Resolution 408 of the Seventy-eighth Congress as continued by House Resolution 60 of the Seventy-ninth Congress, during recesses and adjournments and that such reports shall be filed with the Clerk of the House for printing.

The resolution was agreed to.

MEDITERRANEAN FRUITFLY ERADICATION

Mr. SABATH, from the Committee on Rules, submitted the following privileged resolution (H. Res. 757) for printing in the RECORD:

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 3760) for the relief of certain claimants who suffered losses and sustained damages as the result of the campaign carried out by the Federal Government for the eradication of the Mediterranean fruitfly in the State of Florida; that after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and continue not to exceed 1 hour, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and the ranking minority member of the Committee on Claims, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule; that at the conclusion of the consideration of the bill for amendment the Committee shall rise and report the same to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion, except one motion to recommit; that after the passage of the bill (H. R. 3760) it shall be in order to move to discharge the Committee on Claims from the further consideration of the bill S. 1250 and the House shall proceed to consider the same.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and insert therein a résumé and analysis of the important recent measures and a digest of committee action with reference to veterans' legislation in the Seventy-ninth Congress, together with an index. I have an estimate from the Government Printing Office that this will cost $240. Notwithstanding the extra cost, I ask unanimous consent that the extension may be made.

The SPEAKER. Notwithstanding and without objection, the extension may be made.

There was no objection.

CONGRESSIONAL RECORD

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Speaker, several Members have requested information as to when the last issue of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD would be printed. It will be 10 days after the date of adjournment, so that anything that is to be inserted in the RECORD must be presented before that time.

UNITED STATES MERCHANT MARINE ACADEMY

Mr. PETERSON of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's desk the bill (H. R. 1751) to authorize the course of instruction at the United States Merchant Marine Academy to be given to not exceeding 20 persons at a time from the American Republics, other than the United States, with Senate amendments thereto, and concur in the Senate amendments.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendments, as follows:

Page 1, line 5, strike out "twenty" and insert "twelve."

Page 2, line 1, strike out "three" and insert "two."

Page 2, strike out lines 15 to 20, inclusive.

Amend the title so as to read: "And act to authorize the course of instruction at the United States Merchant Marine Academy to be given to not exceeding 12 persons at a time from the American Republics, other than the United States."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I understand the Senate amendments merely cut down the amount authorized by the House.

Mr. PETERSON of Florida. That is right, and also strikes out the War Shipping Administration.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendments were concurred in.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

CHICAGO SUN

Mr. KELLY of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. KELLY of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, on Monday last, the Chicago Sun, a daily newspaper, carried an editorial regarding my votes on certain legislative matters, with which they, or anyone else, have a right to disagree.

However, in view of what is now happening in Europe—as I read in the morning paper, at least—they may agree with the demand that Soviet Foreign Minister V. M. Molotov is now seeking in his demand for peace by crushing out of existence the form of government of another country whose people are satisfied with its regime.

The majority leader, the gentleman from Massachusetts, the Honorable JOHN MCCORMACK, struck the nail on the head Saturday last in an eloquent address before this Chamber as to what is happening under the spread of communism in Europe. While the Sun and I may disagree, I am not ready to give America away.

The Smith amendment to the emergency housing bill that I voted for, I would gladly support again.

I was one who spoke and voted to repeal the eighteenth amendment to the Constitution, because of the everlasting encroachment practiced by Government agencies into the lives and homes of American citizens.

I well remember the Jones 5-and-10 law.

I certainly would never allow that to happen again in America.

The Democratic Party came into power in 1930 fighting the very issue that you now condemn me for not supporting in section 703 of the National Housing Act, which was equivalent to the Jones 5-and-10 law.

If section 703 remained in the bill, it would practically make Wilson Wyatt, or whoever would be the Administrator, a building czar.

It would give him the right to go into the books and files of all persons, firms, and corporations, or persons having anything to do with distribution, sale, or handling in any manner of materials that go into the construction of homes, including the sale of vacant property.

If this amendment were not defeated, it would show absolute lack of faith in the honesty and integrity of the American people.

It would make it criminal in cases where persons were selling real estate if they could not produce canceled mortgages and tax receipts, even though they were not in default, but if these were asked for and were not forthcoming, the building czar could, under this section, question the honesty of the seller.

The Smith amendment, which I supported, strikes out the language that would give the housing czar the power of subpena and the unconscionable penalties—$5,000 fine or a year of imprisonment, or both, for violation.

This section would, if it remained in the bill, strike at the heart of the little fellow who is more or less careless in keeping documents and receipts, and if he sold his home and could not produce same, he would be classified as a criminal under this section.

With regard to my vote for the appropriation of $75,000 to the Un-American Activities Committee, this is a standing committee of the House, which I opposed in its creation, but as long as it is a standing committee of the House it is entitled to receive from Congress funds appropriated for its functions.

This, of course, has been opposed by organized groups, who have taken part in opposing all apppropriations for its functions—groups who demand legislators to do their bidding and to think the way they think, who constantly disagree with the American ideals of life.

No citizen who believes in our American form of government need have any fear of this committee.

But the groups who do fear this committee and are opposed to it are groups that want to spread the principles of Stalin, nazism, and fascism as was practiced under Mussolini.

Is it a sin to protect America?

And if I am classified as an ambidextrous person for that by your newspaper, I welcome such criticism.

My opposition to the McMahon bill for civilian control of atomic energy is simple.

I have never seen where the President of the United States has ever declared officially that the war has ended.

We who practically perfected the atomic bomb under military supervision have during the fighting kept this secret from other nations.

In reference to section II, which refers to patents, I cannot agree with anybody who wishes to give to a civilian commission during the duration of war the secret of the atomic bomb.

I have met some of the groups who demanded civilian control and some of the scientists who clamored for it, and after my observations and talks with them, I, like many other Members of Congress, feel that this legislation is a bit premature and we are likely to take steps that will menace our security if we pass legislation of this kind in advance of the agreement with reference to peace treaties and the establishment of peace in the world.

The rejection of the Lanham amendment in conference was a mistake, at least in the opinion of many Members, including myself.

From the very beginning, the cards were stacked against the Lanham amendment by well-organized propaganda.

Yet all the authorities on patents in the United States tell us that the Lanham features, the section put in the House bill, would not only protect the Atomic Energy Commission and protect the United States when it came to the question of atomic energy and the making of the bomb, but would protect the industry of the United States, as well.

I further believe that the secrets involved in the formula of the atomic bomb should not be divulged to any nation; that no financial aid and no supplies or equipment which can be converted to or utilized for military purpose shall be granted any country, until a concrete plan for world peace and nonaggression is both proposed and practiced by all nations.

That all nations be frank and honest concerning their plans for the occupation of other nations, and today I only have to cite the condition of the Balkan States, that are practically under supervision of the Soviet Union, without the freedom they enjoyed as free and independent states before the war, with a vague promise that that freedom would be restored upon the ending of the war; yet a year has passed since the shooting has ceased and these nations are still under the Russian domination.

In a recent secret session of the Military Affairs Committee, when this bill was being considered, Mr. Conder C. Henry appeared as an expert witness against the bill.

Mr. Henry was for 17 years the chief examiner of patent applications in the United States Patent Office and for 5 years was Assistant United States Patent Commissioner.

As a witness, he represented both the American Bar Association and the House Committee on Patents, being a member of the committee's national advisory council.

And this man, a loyal American and qualified to speak intelligently upon the merits of this legislation, said, and I quote:

By removing the incentive provided by our patent laws the bill is a radical departure from anything known in our history.

The only parallel I can find to it is a Soviet patent law.

Knowing many angles involved in the greatest discovery yet, I, as an American, am not going to give it up until a just peace has been established, so it will not be used against our Nation.

My vote against the British loan, I explained to many groups before it ever came before Congress.

I served in World War I and remember the vast amount of obligations that this country had to absorb, both in England and France, while actually fighting that war as an ally of England.

In this connection, there are many things too involved to discuss here, but, to cite one example, there was not an American soldier who went to Europe and rode in an English boat going and coming, whose expenses this Government did not have to defray to the English Government.

A few months ago, on a Sunday evening, I met, in the Mayflower Hotel, three very prominent Englishmen—businessmen.

One had been in and out of America since before the First World War.

The other two had just arrived a fortnight ago.

These gentlemen had all seen service in the First World War and one had seen service in the Second World War.

In discussing the situation prevailing in England, much to my surprise, these businessmen of England, here on business, boldly told me and others in the group that the majority of English people were opposed to this loan, stating they did not want to be obligated with this burdensome debt and stating further that they wanted to be left alone, that they were capable of working out their own salvation—that all they needed was food, and nothing else.

They elaborated most extensively on this, saying it was being forced upon them by the party in control of the English Government and made many predictions about its future.

If I were sure that this loan would be applied for the purpose of enabling Britain to choose a better course than economic war and will pledge her to do so, and if Britain agrees to stop restricting United States trade with the sterling countries, to begin negotiations of the debt to India and other nations, and to remove or reduce barriers to trade, such as tariffs, quotas, and cartels, and participate in the International Stabilization Fund and World Bank designed at Bretton Woods, I would not hesitate to vote its approval.

But the very thing I feared is now developing.

Britain has suggested any number of methods in dealing with the Near Eastern difficulties, but they are now almost advocating bribery and with our money to the amount of $300,000,000, for the improvement of the Arabs.

The proposal of the $300,000,000 is designed to soften the Arabs up to the federalization which is used by the British in their search for words to take the curse off partition, which the Arabs are strongly opposed to.

If our money is to be used for the development of projects in Palestine, for the modernization of the Arabs, we can use it right here in America, by a large-scale development, at least, for those who sacrificed their all, that America may live.

I say and will say if our own economy were more stable and our future more secure, perhaps we could afford to be liberal.

There is one thing I respect about the British Government, so ably told by the distinguished gentleman from New York, the Honorable DAN REED, when he states that an English statesman is first, last and all the time for his own nation.

Let us be a little more thoughtful of ours, especially when we are giving away the taxpayers' money.

When you take the time to ridicule a person, you at least ought to be fair.

During the war, I supported and fought for price control, to prevent inflation.

I supported it again when I came back to Congress in 1945.

However, while I was out of Congress, I had the opportunity to see and find out for myself the many inequities that were prevailing under people who administered this act and were not doing it according to the intent of Congress.

They made up their own laws and regulations and exercised them with authority upon the ignorant, unfortunate people.

Congress never gave any OPA board or any person in the Office of Price Administration the right to write people letters or, by threat, to close down their business, without a hearing.

Many hearings were held by incompetent people—and their word was law.

Oh! What I encountered in the way of stupidity!

One could write a book.

And, of course, the shake-down wizard was always on hand.

If I am to be criticized for rectifying these inequities, I can take it.

I am at least trying to put some common sense into the heads of the people who are running this agency, that they may know that all people in business are not scoundrels.

I am enclosing some speeches I made regarding this agency and, in fairness to me, I ask that you publish same, that is, if your paper still carries the motto: "The Truth."

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that my colleague the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BENDER] may be permitted to extend his remarks in the RECORD and insert a series of articles by Mr. Bellamy. I am informed by the Public Printer that they will exceed two pages of the RECORD and will cost $255, but I ask that they be inserted notwithstanding that fact.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, notwithstanding the cost, the extension may be made.

There was no objection.

Mr. HAVENNER asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include therein a digest of veterans' legislation.

Mr. SABATH asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD in three instances, and include in one an article from the Chicago Sun, and in the other an article from the Chicago Times.

UNFINISHED BUSINESS

Mrs. DOUGLAS of California. I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute, and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from California?

Mrs. DOUGLAS of California. Mr. Speaker, last week within the borders of this democracy—for the preservation of which nearly a quarter of a million young men laid down their lives in the recent world war—four American citizens, two of them women and one a veteran of 5 years' service in the Army—were brutally shot by an armed and apparently disciplined band of unmasked men.

This week we learned that at almost the same time another American citizen in another State, was lynched. And the press carried stories about still another, who served 15 months in the Philippines and New Guinea, being dragged off a bus in another State by two policemen, who beat him and gouged out his eyes.

These people were Negroes. Had any of the crimes against them been committed by our enemies in the war, the perpetrators would have been summarily sought out and punished.

For nearly half a century—46 years—antilynching bills have been brought, one after another, before the law-makers of the United States. Even now, in the Seventy-ninth Congress, seven such bills have been before the Judiciary Committee of the House of Representatives, since January 1945.

And now we are about to adjourn and go home, leaving this unfinished business.

They say that lynchings have decreased in the United States in recent years. But so long as one lynching is committed in this country—that one is too many.

We cannot legislate against the right of free speech which permits people to make inflammatory statements that foment prejudice and contribute to lynchings—any more than we can legislate against prejudice itself.

But it is within our power—and it is our responsibility, a responsibility that Congress has shirked too long—to enact legislation that will stop these murders.

The Attorney General of the United States and his staff have acted in these recent lynchings with a promptness that is to be highly commended. The President of the United States has expressed himself forcefully on the horror of these acts of violence. He has again gone on record—as he did when he was a Member of Congress—for the passage of Federal antilynching legislation.

The Federal Government, through the Attorney General, is doing all that it is now empowered to do. FBI agents, invited by Governor Arnall, are in his and other States where the crimes have been committed. The local district attorneys are working closely with the Attorney General's office. The Civil Rights Section of the Attorney General's office is studying all complaints for any sign or evidence which will permit the Federal Government to step in.

But right here we come up against States' rights. Murder is a State affair, though it is the shame of the entire Nation.

The Federal Government—the Attorney General's office—can interfere only where it is proved there has been negligence on the part of the State officials. That is why we need a Federal law, making that kind of mob violence a Federal offense.

VETERANS' ADMINISTRATION

Mr. DURHAM submitted the following conference report and statement on the bill (H. R. 5626) to authorize the Veterans' Administration to appoint and employ retired officers without affecting their retired status, and for other purposes:

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5626) to authorize the Veterans' Administration to appoint and employ retired officers without affecting their retired status, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendment and agree to the same.

CARL T. DURHAM,
ROBERT L. F. SIKES,
CHARLES R. CLASON,
LESLIE C. ARENDS,
Managers on the Part of the House.

WALTER F. GEORGE,
DAVID I. WALSH,
EDWIN C. JOHNSON,
ROBERT M. LA FOLLETTE, JR.,
ROBERT A. TAFT,
Managers on the Part of the Senate.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5626) to authorize the Veterans' Administration to appoint and employ retired officers without affecting their retired status, and for other purposes, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon and recommended in the accompanying conference report.

The Senate amendment added a new section to the bill which provided under certain conditions an increase in the Federal share of old-age-assistance payments under the Social Security Act to the aged, the dependent children, and the blind. The House bill did not deal with the social-security laws but authorized the Veterans' Administration to appoint and employ retired officers of the Army and Navy without affecting their retired status.

The conference believed that, inasmuch as the subject matter of the Senate amendment is being amply considered by the Congress in connection with the House bill (H. R. 7037) to amend the Social Security Act and the Internal Revenue Code, and for other purposes, the amendment should be stricken from this bill.

CARL T. DURHAM,
ROBERT L. F. SIKES,
CHARLES R. CLASON,
LESLIE C. ARENDS,
Managers on the Part of the House.

Mr. DURHAM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the conference report on the bill (H. R. 5626) to authorize the Veterans' Administration to appoint and employ retired officers without affecting their retired status, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman explain this legislation?

Mr. DURHAM. This legislation gives the Veterans' Administration the privilege of hiring these retired doctors. General Bradley is very much in favor of it and urges the passage of the bill.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. He needs it because of the shortage of physicians?

Mr. DURHAM. Yes. There are something like 200 of them, and under the law at the present time they cannot be rehired.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

SILVER CREEK RECREATIONAL DEMONSTRATION PROJECT, OREGON—VETO MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following veto message from the President of the United States:

To the House of Representatives:

I return herewith without my approval the bill (H. R. 2423) to authorize the exchange of lands acquired by the United States for the Silver Creek recreational demonstration project, Oregon, for the purpose of consolidating holdings therein, and for other purposes.

The bill authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to exchange lands for other lands of approximately equal value when, in his opinion, such action is in the interest of the United States.

While I am in accord with the general purposes and objectives of this measure, it contains the same objectionable type of provision which prompted me to withhold my approval recently of the bill S. 1273. The bill S. 1273 provided, as does section I of the present measure, that the title to any lands acquired thereunder shall be satisfactory to the Secretary of the Interior. This provision is objectionable and represents a material change in existing law involving an unwarranted deviation from the long-established and manifestly sound practice under which the Attorney General is charged with the duty of examining the validity of titles to lands acquired by the Government. This duty has for more than a century been vested in the Attorney General with respect to the vast majority of acquisitions and I see no reason to change this general practice which has proven so satisfactory through the years.

An advantage of this long-standing policy has been that the agency of the Government acquiring the land has the independent checking of the title by a disinterested agency. Moreover, there can be no question that the maintenance in the different departments of the Government of staffs of attorneys for the purpose of examining title to land will result in duplication and additional expense, as well as less efficient administration. It is to avoid duplication of this character that the Congress passed and I approved the Reorganization Act of 1945.

For these reasons, I am constrained to withhold my approval from the bill.

HARRY S. TRUMAN.

THE WHITE HOUSE, August 2, 1946.

The SPEAKER. The objections of the President will be spread at large upon the Journal.

Without objection, the message and the accompanying bill will be referred to the Committee on Public Lands and ordered to be printed.

There was no objection.

GEORGIA POWER CO.

Mr. DURHAM. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Military Affairs, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (S. 2306) to authorize the Secretary of War to grant Georgia Power Co. a 100-foot perpetual easement across certain land in the State of Alabama constituting a portion of the military reservation designated as Fort Benning, Ga.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

Mr. MICHENER. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman explain the bill?

Mr. DURHAM. Mr. Speaker, this simply reinstates a former right of the Georgia Power Co. which was taken over by Fort Benning and replaced in another part of the camp.

Mr. MARTIN of Iowa. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, this bill has for its purpose only the reinstatement of a right that was taken over for use during the wartime?

Mr. DURHAM. That is correct. The line has already been replaced.

Mr. MARTIN of Iowa. There is no objection from this side, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. MICHENER. I withdraw my reservation of objection, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and empowered, under such terms and conditions as he may deem advisable, to grant to the Georgia Power Co., its successors and/or assigns for transmission-line purposes, a 100-foot perpetual easement over, across, in, and upon certain land in the State of Alabama constituting a portion of the military reservation designated as Fort Benning, Ga.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

KARL E. BOND

Mr. FERNANDEZ. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (H. R. 783) for the relief of Karl E. Bond.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the conference report.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 783) for the relief of Karl E. Bond, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the sum inserted by the Senate insert "$5,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

A. M. FERNANDEZ,
E. H. HEDRICK,
Managers on the Part of the House.

H. M. KILGORE,
KENNETH S. WHERRY,
Managers on the Part of the Senate.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 783) for the relief of Karl E. Bond, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon and recommended in the accompanying conference report:

The bill as passed the House appropriated the sum of $7,500 to Karl E. Bond, of Shiprock, N. Mex., in full settlement of all claims against the United States for personal injuries and all expenses incident thereto, resulting from an explosion in the basement of his home caused by leakage of gas from an Indian Service pipe line running from wells at Rattlesnake, N. Mex., to the Indian Service power plant at the Indian agency, Shiprock, N. Mex., on May 26, 1943.

The Senate amended the bill reducing the sum to $2,464.28, and at the conference the sum of $5,000 was agreed upon.

A. M. FERNANDEZ,
E. H. HEDRICK,
Managers on the Part of the House.

The conference report was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KNUTSON] may extend his own remarks in reply to Representative CANNON of Missouri on taxation.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

JOINT COMMITTEE ON ATOMIC ENERGY

The SPEAKER. Pursuant to the provisions of Public Law 585, Seventy-ninth Congress, the Chair appoints as members of the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy the following Members on the part of the House: Messrs. THOMASON, DURHAM, FORAND, HOLIFIELD, PRICE of Illinois, ELSTON, THOMAS of New Jersey, HINSHAW, and Mrs. LUCE.

DEAN OF OKLAHOMA'S DELEGATION SAYS FAREWELL; PRAISED BY COLLEAGUES

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 5 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, as we come to the closing hours of this the second session of the Seventy-ninth Congress, and Members are saying their good-byes and farewells, I have asked the indulgence of my colleagues for this brief time to say what is commonly called my swan song.

During my rather extended service in this body it had never occurred to me what I should say should the occasion ever arise that would necessitate words of farewell to my colleagues in the Congress. As I have listened to swan songs from others who "also ran," after every primary or election during the past 20 years, I have determined that one thing that I would not say or do if and when my hour for such a speech came—that I would not show a bitterness in my heart either against my successful opponent or any of those who contributed to my political demise.

At the closing hour of this session I do not propose to spend the valuable time of this body in discussing the various factors that contributed to my recent defeat, even though they were factors over which I had no control. That is all of little consequence now. Rather than to point out the forces that operated against me, the sizable sum of money that was sent to the district to bring about my defeat, of the unfair smear articles of alleged columnists and others against me, both before and since the primary, I much prefer to think of the many loyal, devoted friends who have remained steadfast during all of these years and who were loyal and true to me at all times. Despite the rising tide of opposition against the ins, the fact that so many friends remained steadfast and loyal is a source of considerable satisfaction. To those real tried-and-true friends I shall ever be grateful and to those who opposed me I hold no malice nor ill will.

Let me make it plain, Mr. Speaker, that I am not angry with anyone. Especially do I desire to emphasize the fact that I have nothing unkind to say about the gentleman who defeated me in the recent Democratic primary and who I am assuming will succeed me in Congress. Strange as it may seem to some I have not the slightest ill will toward him and am not embittered in the remotest degree by the action of the people of the Sixth Congressional District of Oklahoma. The people have been extremely kind to me for the past 20 years and I shall always be grateful to them for the opportunity of representing them in the greatest legislative body in the world. Moreover, they have permitted me not only to think as I please but also I am glad to say to vote as my conscience dictated. That I have done at all times and under all circumstances.

I might add that my successful primary opponent is not only a splendid gentleman, an able lawyer, with a fine personality, but if elected will no doubt in time become an outstanding Member of this body. My wish for him would be that my friends here extend him the same courtesy that you have given me as a Member of this great body where I have been privileged to serve during the past two decades.

Within a few hours after the results of the run-off primary were known, I sent a telegram of congratulations to my successful opponent. The same day I gave out a statement to the newspapers of the district as follows:

The voters of the Sixth District have spoken. I have no excuses to offer. The reason I was not reelected for the eleventh consecutive time to Congress is that I didn't get sufficient votes.

I have sent my successful opponent my hearty congratulations, and wish him well. I might add that I have no bitterness nor ill will toward anyone. It was impossible to buck the rising tide of opposition and resentment against the "ins."

I shall always be deeply grateful to my devoted friends for their faith and confidence in me and for the opportunity of serving the good people of the Sixth Congressional District. I am also thankful to the newspapers of the district that, almost without exception, have been extremely kind to me. The consciousness of knowing that I have given the people the best that is within me is a source of genuine satisfaction.

In leaving this Congress I also want my colleagues to know that I have the kindest feeling toward every Member of this body. Without exception Members of this House have been kind and considerate of me. I have made some close friendships during my life—in college, in the Army, in the State Senate of Oklahoma and finally during my rather extended period of public service in Congress. I can truthfully say that I have never met a finer nor more patriotic group of men and women than those with whom I have served in the Congress nor do I have better friends anywhere than in this House.

The public hears considerable about the sharp political division in this body, how the Democrats sit on one side of the center aisle and the Republicans on the other. It is true that sometimes that division seems sharp and important; but as I stand before you today the much-talked of division between Democrats and Republicans appears almost obliterated. That center aisle before me seems misty and indistinct. The truth is that some of the dearest and best friends that I have formed in this House are among those of the opposition party.

That is especially true in connection with the Committee on Appropriations which I have had the honor to serve for the past 10 years. I have first hand knowledge that Members of that committee have worked faithfully and well and I am sure that what I say about the Appropriations Committee applies to other committees of this House. I have heretofore mentioned Members of my own Subcommittee on Appropriations that have worked so harmoniously and effectively in our determination to drastically reduce expenses of government without impairing the efficiency of any department or agency of government. The fact that we were able to reduce expenditures in the last annual supply bill for the Interior Department more than $100,000,000 is best evidence of that spirit of cooperation and teamwork. I shall always have a warm spot in my heart for those fine patriotic, courageous men with whom I have had the pleasure and honor of serving and who did their duty without flinching despite carping criticisms and obstacles that were thrown in their pathway.

In paying my respects to all the membership of this House, not only the leaders on both sides and Members in responsibility, I cannot conclude without paying my special tribute to the great Speaker of this House, the Honorable SAM RAYBURN. I have served under a great number of Speakers. They include the late Speaker Longworth, of Ohio; the Honorable John Garner, of Texas; the late Henry T. Rainey, of Illinois; the Honorable Joe Byrns, of Tennessee; and the late brilliant and eloquent William B. Bankhead, of Alabama. As I say, they were all able men and outstanding Speakers. I knew all of them personally and some quite intimately, and was fond of each of them, but I say in all sincerity that the present Speaker of the House, the Honorable SAM RAYBURN, who has served with such distinction and honor as the Presiding Officer of this body during the dark days of the war, measures well in stature with any of the several Speakers who it was my privilege and good fortune to know. In fact, SAM RAYBURN has won a place in the hearts of the Members of this House and the hearts of his countrymen that no other has yet attained. He is not only the soul of honor, but he has been so fair and just in his ruling, so considerate of the rights of others that Members on both sides of this aisle respect and honor him. When the story of the Congress is written and the great Speakers of this House have been listed by the historians, the name of SAM RAYBURN will stand high in the galaxy of fame, among those great men who have been accorded this high honor.

As long as we shall have the Congress of the United States elected by the vote of the sovereign people of America, just that long will democracy live and the rights and liberties of our people be secure. Long live the Congress of the United States.

Mr. MONRONEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. MONRONEY. As a Member of Congress who came in as a freshman to receive the splendid and efficient help of the dean of the Oklahoma delegation, I deeply regret, personally and for the State, to see him depart from the House of Representatives. I am fully aware of the great contribution that he has made through the years of his long service here. Particularly have I watched him fight vigorously through the years for the things that benefited not only Oklahoma and its people but the people of the entire Nation. It will be difficult to imagine the House of Representatives without JED JOHNSON engineering important legislation through this House, as he has so ably done in years past.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I thank my distinguished colleague from Oklahoma for his generous statement.

Mr. PETERSON of Florida. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I yield to my colleague from Florida.

Mr. PETERSON of Florida. I simply want to express my deep regret at the fact that the gentleman from Oklahoma is leaving the House of Representatives. He has rendered fine unselfish public service. Shortly after I came here he very greatly assisted me as I know he helped many other new Members. I deeply regret his departure and commend him for his fine spirit. I wish him and his good family happiness and prosperity which they so richly deserve.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I thank the gentleman from Florida for his kind words.

Mr. RIZLEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I yield to my colleague.

Mr. RIZLEY. I join with my colleague from the Fifth Congressional District, and I am sure all of the other members of the Oklahoma delegation, in saying that we deeply regret that the gentleman is not to return when the new Congress convenes. I want to personally express my appreciation for the many kindnesses extended to me by the dean of the Oklahoma delegation during the 6 years I have been in the Congress. I wish for him and his family the very best from this time on.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I thank the gentleman from the bottom of my heart.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma has expired.

Mr. JENSEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for a minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa?

There was no objection.

Mr. JENSEN. Mr. Speaker, I have had the pleasure and privilege for the last four sessions to be a member of the Subcommittee on Appropriations, of which JED JOHNSON has been chairman. I have had an opportunity to know JED JOHNSON, and with a mixed feeling of regret and pleasure I stand here before his colleagues, who hold him in the highest esteem, and say to them and to all who read these remarks that I have never known a more noble patriot, a more honest or a finer man than JED JOHNSON of Oklahoma.

I deeply regret that this House and the American people will not have the benefit of Jed's services in the next Congress. Those in his district who took stock in the smear campaign waged against him will, I am sure, live to regret it as days go by and they learn the truth. But JED JOHNSON of Oklahoma will have peace of mind in the knowledge that he called them as he saw them.

THE PHILIPPINE ARMY

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, before we get to the special orders——

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman permit the Chair to make a statement?

The Chair is going to recognize Members for consent requests to call up legislation but will recognize on no rule, because it would be futile.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 2235) to provide a system of relief for veterans, and dependents of veterans, who served during World War II in the organized military forces of the Government of the Commonwealth of the Philippines while such forces were in the service of the armed forces of the United States pursuant to the military order of July 26, 1941, of the President of the United States and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. I object.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, will not the gentleman withhold his objection for a moment? I wish to call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that——

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. If the gentleman wishes to make an explanation I will yield for that purpose but I am reserving the right to object.

Mr. RANKIN. I want the gentleman to yield for that purpose. I wish to say to the gentleman from Ohio that the standing Philippine Army was made a part of the armed forces of the United States by the President's order of July 26, 1941. Certain guerrillas, who so courageously carried on the war against the enemy after the fall of the Philippines, were recognized as members of the Philippine Army, and, therefore, a part of the Army of the United States.

The bill provides benefits commencing on July 26, 1941, with respect to those members of the organized military forces and from December 7, 1941, with respect to the guerrilla forces. With respect to both groups the eligible period for benefits under the bill terminates on July 4, 1946.

It is estimated that the number of individuals whose service may be certified by the proper officials of the War Department will be excess of 300,000 and possibly may exceed 350,000.

It is a reasonable estimate that there will be a saving of approximately $5,000,000 per year over the cost under existing law due to the provisions of title I. Hospitalization for service-connected cases only, under title III might, because of backlog cost approximately $5,000,000 the first year and $1,500,000 thereafter, subject to reduction because of mortality. Burial under title IV would cost approximately 15 to 20 million spread over a long period of years, conditioned on mortality rate of such veterans. Therefore, the saving will offset the cost of the benefits in titles III and IV.

The benefits provided in the bill S. 2235 as passed by the Senate are: One, pensions for service-connected disability on a peso basis; two, pensions for service-connected death on a peso basis; three, hospitalization including medical care and necessary supplies and appliances in service-connected cases; and, four, burial benefits. It will be noted that benefits under the Servicemen's Readjustment Act of 1944, as amended are not included in the bill. The bill also contains important administrative provisions necessary for administrative purposes under existing law and for efficient administration of the bill in the Philippine Islands.

Provision is also made for the hospital care and medical treatment in the Philippine Islands of American veterans residing there.

Before the enactment of Public Law 301, Seventy-ninth Congress, February 18, 1946, First Supplemental Surplus Appropriation Rescission Act, 1946, service in the organized military forces of the Government of the Commonwealth of the Philippines was considered active military service for the purpose of all benefits under laws administered by the Veterans' Administration. The Rescission Act approved February 18, 1946, constitutes the present law providing benefits for these veterans and restricts such benefits to the following:

First, as to national service life insurance only such benefits under contracts entered into before the enactment of Public Law 301, Seventy-ninth Congress; and, second, those benefits under laws administered by the Veterans' Administration providing for the payment of pension on account of service-connected disability or death. This law provides that the payment shall be made at the rate of one Philippine peso for each dollar authorized to be paid under the law providing for such pension. The act further validates certain payments made before its enactment.

The existing law is more liberal, by far, than the bill S. 2235 as to benefits for service-connected disability or death in that the former authorizes the application of liberal presumptions both as to sound condition at the time of entry into service and service connection of chronic diseases such as tuberculosis.

Eligibility requirements under the bill are made more restrictive, first, by requiring a screening through new certificates by the War Department and, second, requiring that disability must have resulted from disease or injury or aggravation thereof directly resulting from the performance of active service.

Under existing law, and the bill S. 2235, the same general group of persons is involved. However, due to the screening process employed the load of potential eligibles would be considerably reduced under the bill.

Under existing law hospitalization is not authorized for these persons. This bill would authorize hospitalization of such persons only where they are suffering from disability found to be due to service under the restrictive provisions just mentioned. The Congress has, at least since 1917, recognized hospitalization as an incident to compensation for service-connected disability.

The bill provides a burial allowance not to exceed 100 pesos and the United States flag to drape the casket and thereafter to become the property of the decedent's next of kin.

The bill provides necessary flexibility in order that the benefits may be administered properly taking into consideration the special circumstances existing in the Philippines.

It is provided that the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs be authorized to continue and to establish and maintain in the Philippines such offices, hospitals, and other field installations as he may deem necessary and to purchase land and purchase, construct, and maintain such buildings as he deems necessary, including hospitals and buildings which will be required to house officers and employees of the Veterans' Administration and their dependents. The administration of this authority will be subject, however, to the scrutiny of the Bureau of the Budget and the approval of the Congress in connection with any appropriation requested therefor.

The bill authorizes appointment and employment in the Philippine Islands of persons who are not citizens of the United States and to establish pay scales commensurate with such positions. Under existing law there is no authority which would authorize permanent employment of noncitizens. This provision is thought desirable because of the living conditions in the Philippines which makes it improbable to secure the services of enough citizens of the United States to administer properly all of the provisions of this measure.

The bill provides that while in the Philippine Islands, employees of the Veterans' Administration and members of their immediate families, if citizens of the United States, shall be eligible for hospitalization and medical care at the charges and rates established by the Administrator. The bill has provisions designed to integrate the administration of the measure with the system of laws and veterans regulations presently administered by the Veterans' Administration insofar as the unique conditions in the Philippine Islands make it feasible and desirable.

Successful administration of these benefits will be dependent on the cooperation of the Philippine Government to a large extent and accordingly, it is provided that the President may suspend by Executive order the benefits provided by the bill when it is found that the Government of the Philippine Republic has failed to cooperate in the administration, enforcement, and execution of the act.

Under present law there is no authority for providing domiciliary, medical, or hospital care including treatment, to any person who resides outside of the continental limits of the United States or its Territories or possessions, except hospitalization, including medical treatment, for veterans of the United States who are citizens and who are temporarily sojourning or residing abroad, for disability due to war service in the armed forces of the United States. Accordingly, unless this provision is enacted, all United States citizen-veterans who are permanently residing in the Philippine Islands will be deprived of such benefits.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, it is of no use for the gentleman to proceed further; I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is heard.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. LECOMPTE asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include an editorial from the Union Republican, of Albia, Iowa.

Mr. FOLGER asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and insert a short newspaper article.

RETIREMENT OF HON. MICHAEL J. BRADLEY FROM SERVICE IN THE CONGRESS

Mr. BRADLEY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 5 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. BRADLEY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, this will probably be my last opportunity to address my colleagues of the House of Representatives, for, as many of you know, I am not a candidate for reelection in the forthcoming congressional elections. I had no thought until a few moments ago of saying anything in the nature of farewell remarks, but even now as I sit here there is a bit of a feeling of nostalgia in my heart, knowing that I shall not return to this great body when it reconvenes for the next Congress in January; so I wish to say briefly for the RECORD that I am grateful to the people of my district who for 10 years honored me by selecting me as their Representative in Congress.

I shall carry with me to my home in Philadelphia a sincere feeling of affection for all those with whom I have served in this Congress. If at times in the heat of debate I have appeared to be unduly emphatic in the presentation of my views, I would only ask those of whom perhaps I have appeared to be critical to realize that there was nothing personal in my attitude, but that I was animated solely by the intenseness of my convictions in expressing what I thought were the sentiments of the people of my district.

I deem it a great honor to have served under the Speaker of this House, the gentleman from Texas, SAM RAYBURN. It was my privilege as a freshman in the Seventy-fifth Congress to vote for him as the majority leader of the House, from which position he was subsequently elevated to Speaker of the House, which to me is the greatest legislative body in the world. I shall also always recollect with pride my association with his distinguished predecessor, the late Speaker Bankhead.

So, my friends, to those not only on my own side of the aisle but also to my Republican colleagues with whom I have had such an intimate friendship, I want to say that I have an abiding affection for all those with whom I have had the honor and privilege of serving in the Congress of the United States.

Mr. EBERHARTER. Mr. Speaker, I wish I had the eloquence to adequately portray the great sense of loss that we feel by the retirement from this body of my colleague and friend the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BRADLEY].

Mr. Speaker, MIKE BRADLEY need not apologize for the emphatic manner in which he presented his views on the floor of this House. There is not a Member of this body who does not positively know that when BRADLEY spoke he was advancing views arising purely from the utmost sincerity of conviction and with the highest of motives. This would be a sorry body were there no differences of opinion insofar as legislative policy is concerned, and it is only by the forthright expression of our various and contending views that this country can continue under a true democratic form of Government. There is no man who has served in the past 10 years in Congress who does not have the highest respect and regard for our departing colleague from Pennsylvania. We all feel sorry that he made a decision which will deprive us of not only his comradeship, but of his knowledge, experience, and practical wisdom. He leaves this body with the heartiest wishes from every Member that his future may be happy and contented in every respect, and all that any man could wish.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may be permitted to extend their remarks in the RECORD at this point on the subject of departing Members of Congress.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. HARLESS of Arizona asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

RETIREMENT OF HON. JOHN S. GIBSON FROM SEVENTY-NINTH CONGRESS

Mr. GIBSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

Mr. GIBSON. Mr. Speaker, this will probably be my last address to you as the beloved Speaker of this House, and to the membership constituting this august body, that it will be my privilege to make. As it is known, my services as a Member of this House will terminate at midnight on the 2d of January 1947. It might be said that this was a farewell address to you and to the membership of this House, but this is far from being true. Some of the finest, warmest, deepest, and most cherished friendships of my life have been made through my associations here, and I will never have a farewell for my friends until the last sunset. I would term what I have to say on this occasion as my parting remarks, realizing full well that if it should not be my good fortune for my path to cross that of the membership of this House in the future, that we will meet many times in pleasant memories of our close association here. What I have said and may say, applies to both sides of the Hall; there is no distinction, as I speak not as a Democrat nor as a Republican, but as an American, and I speak to you not as Democrats nor as Republicans, but as Americans who are my friends and in whom I have abiding confidence. I love you as my friends and as great and good Americans. I have since my entry into the Congress realized that it had never been my privilege to associate with more outstanding people than those who constitute the membership of this House.

On many occasions my governmental philosophy has not coincided with that of some other Members, but even on such occasions I have found those disagreeing with me to keep their disagreements on an elevated plane to where personalities were not involved and where friendships were not marred. I feel much richer by having had this association, and the association with the fine ladies and gentlemen who make up this House has broadened me and added much to my perspective of life.

Having been a strong advocate of Jeffersonian democracy throughout my life, I have naturally held as sacred this body and its functions. My associations here have given me new faith in the honor and integrity of this body and new hope for the continuation of our way of life. The Congress of the United States stands as a sea wall against all waves of destruction that seek to dig into the heart of this democracy. As long as this body is made up of men and women of the character and convictions that now occupy these seats before me the heritages we love will be preserved.

With regard to the termination of my services here, I could have but one regret—that is giving up the fine association with my friends to whom I am devoted. It is unfortunate that the populace of the United States are not more mindful of the sacrifices made by one serving in our capacity. I have sacrificed financially, physically, and of my personal privileges and pleasures to serve in this body, which I do not regret.

There is an element working under cover in this country today whose every aim is to destroy the confidence of the American people in its Congress. It is pitiful to know that in too many instances the press and radio commentators have been either willing or unwilling partners in this conspiracy. The purpose is not to hurt any individual, but to destroy the confidence of the people in its legislative body. If this can ever be accomplished, then, of course, our democracy crumbles like snow before a blistering sun.

Finally and at last, the responsibility for the future course of this Nation rests with the people of the United States. The electorate must take the responsibility for the conduct of public officials and the public business. After all, they have a right of choice in that they choose those who are to discharge the public trusts imposed in them by the electorate. The progress being made by the CIO and the Communist Party of this country through the CIO-PAC, which is nothing short of a front organization—yes, a spearhead for communism—is the most alarming and most dangerous force in this country today. It is amazing to see how they can go through the South and literally take over the destiny of the South by the control of the ballot by the underhanded means used by them and by the inexhaustible supply of money they use.

When they can go into Georgia, Alabama, and Oklahoma and take complete control of the ballot, the situation becomes alarming. Frankly, they are meeting with much more success through the South than through the North. The most pitiful spectacle presented is the fact that the poor old southern Negro, the first time he has received the ballot, has permitted this gang to take them over and vote them like cattle. The will of the people would have been just as fully expressed by permitting the CIO to have voted the cattle in Georgia as it was by the colored vote strictly controlled by this gang. How a people, even with the intelligence of the colored people through the South, on their first chance to express themselves at the polls, take the long step they did to sell themselves back into slavery of a more vicious type than that known to the old South is beyond me.

Recently Ilya Ehrenburg, a Russian writer, traveled through the South and wrote most distorted articles tending to create race prejudice and inflame the Negroes against the whites who have proven through the years to be their best friends. • One expression used was with reference to Mississippi, describing it as a place where whites—I quote—"shiver with fright thinking about the mass of unfortunate, angry people who may become tired of singing 'Hallelujah' while waiting their turn to be hanged."

Unfortunately, southern newspapers have seen fit to feed this kind of stuff to our colored people. How any Negro can be gullible enough to swallow such filth, copied from a Russian newspaper where human rights are totally disregarded, is beyond me. I wish that the colored people could see the absolute misery of the slavery and serfdom in which the Russian people live, and compare it with the lives they enjoy in the South.

God pity this Nation and its future unless the people of the United States become awakened to the crisis this democracy now faces.

With faith yet in mankind, and with high hopes for the future of our Commonwealth, I say to you that I bid you adieu, undefeated, and that I will never be defeated until the principles for which I have fought are defeated, and these principles will never perish so long as the hearts of freemen continue to beat.

CONGRESSIONAL REORGANIZATION

Mr. MONRONEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 2 minutes and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

There was no objection.

Mr. MONRONEY. Mr. Speaker, the President today signed the congressional reorganization bill and it has now become law. At this time I want to express my deep appreciation for the great contribution that was made to this proposal to modernize the Congress by our beloved Speaker the gentleman from Texas, SAM RAYBURN, by our majority leader the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK], and by the minority leader the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN]. Without their conscientious and effective help this bill could never have reached the floor of the House nor become law.

This law is not the product of any one man or two men or even the 12 members of the Reorganization Committee, it is the product of almost 100 Members of the House and the Senate who helped to build it by testifying on the various matters that are necessary to modernize our procedure.

Particularly, I want to pay my sincere appreciation and tribute to the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN]. He was one of the moving spirits in this reorganization of Congress from its very inception more than 2 years ago. Without his valued and powerful help we could not have even established the committee to study the reorganization of Congress. As every Member within the sound of my voice knows, we could not have carried it through the floor of the House to its final passage without devastating amendments had it not been for his superb work, his excellent debate, and his ability in engineering the bill through to final passage.

And last, but not least, I want to pay a tribute to the help that the members of the press, both daily and special writers, have given to this move to modernize the Congress. They helped immeasurably in acquainting the public with the need for legislative reform, and kept them fully informed as to the provisions of the plan. Much of its support throughout the country has been due to the splendid reporting job that they did in this regard.

The President, in signing the bill, issued a splendid statement regarding the measure which I am printing in the RECORD herewith.

The President's statement is as follows:

STATEMENT BY THE PRESIDENT

The Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946, which I signed today, is one of the most significant advances in the organization of the Congress of the United States since the establishment of that body.

Both as United States Senator and as President, I have had occasion to observe some of the outmoded organizational and procedural traditions that have burdened the legislative branch. The problem of reorganizing and modernizing the Congress has been a peculiarly difficult one, and session after session the Members of the Congress found themselves unable to take decisive steps in tackling the problem.

The Seventy-ninth Congress, however, approached the task with vigor and in a sound and orderly manner. I have nothing but admiration for the way in which the investigation of congressional organization was conducted and particularly for the leaders who formed the special investigating committee and who wrote and sponsored the bill.

I realize that in the process of congressional consideration, compromises and adjustments had to be made and some desirable provisions were deleted. However, the passage of this act shows that progress can be made, and I anticipate that the Congress will continue to pay attention to those parts of the legislative reorganization problem not yet solved.

The present act should permit easier and closer relations between the executive agencies of the Government and the Congress. The expanded staff of the congressional committees and of the agencies in the legislative branch can become a valuable link between the policy-making deliberations of the Congress and the practical administrative experience of the executive branch.

The legislative budget and the provisions on the handling of appropriations will undoubtedly result in clearer and more realistic relationships between the income and expenditure sides of the budget. Further, the changes in the dates for the transmitting of the President's economic report and the report of the Joint Committee on the economic report, required under the Employment Act of 1946, will result in proper integration between the legislative budget and the national program for maximum employment. The Joint Committee will now present its findings and recommendations to the Congress before February 1. The four revenue and appropriation committees in carrying out their new responsibilities under the Reorganization Act, therefore, will have the benefit of the Joint Committee's report for their over-all appraisal and recommendations on Federal receipts, expenditures, debt, and surplus. This timing is essential today when Federal fiscal policy is so closely related to the Nation's economic conditions.

One other provision of the bill deserves special praise—that which raises the salary of Members of Congress from $10,000 to $12,500 plus an expense allowance of $2,500. This is a long overdue step in providing adequate compensation for our Federal legislators.

CONTROL OF RIVER POLLUTION

Mr. CANFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. CANFIELD. Mr. Speaker, when H. R. 6024 was debated on July 10 the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. MUNDT] claimed to have seen rank instances of pollution in the State of New Jersey early that month, and he made the following statement:

I regret that a great State like New Jersey should have what virtually represent open sewers coursing through its fair commonwealth and misnamed streams and rivers. I believe legislation of this type could help to correct that very serious situation, and I believe that if you good New Jersey people during the week will go back and stand on the banks of those streams with a clothespin on your nose and dark glasses on your eyes, looking at the disgraceful misuse of the water courses which is permitted in New Jersey, you can come back in a better mood to vote for pollution control legislation.

Mr. Speaker, since that time I have returned to New Jersey, and I did not need a clothespin nor dark glasses to look on New Jersey's waterways. Nor have I come back any more inclined to vote for this bill, which is a gratuitous invasion of the rights of the State of New Jersey and every other State.

We of New Jersey do not claim that our streams are free of all pollution. They are not, and possibly they can never be, because New Jersey is an industrial State, and our navigable waters are used by vessels of commerce more than any other such waters in the United States, as they serve the great ports of New York and Philadelphia.

The gentleman from South Dakota overlooked this, no doubt, when he saw our waterways, and perhaps he compared them with those of his State. He should have borne in mind that New Jersey ranks forty-seventh in land area in the United States, and South Dakota fourteenth; New Jersey ranks ninth in density of population, and South Dakota forty-first. Yet New Jersey ranked seventh in war contracts awarded, and South Dakota forty-seventh, so the gentleman from South Dakota, when speaking of the relatively clean waters of South Dakota in contrast to the alleged polluted waters in New Jersey should realize how densely populated and heavily industrialized New Jersey is compared to the sparse populations and practically no industrial activity in South Dakota.

We of New Jersey, who have spent and are spending millions of dollars annually to combat pollution do resent the unwarranted and untrue charge that our streams and rivers are open sewers. We are combatting pollution and we are winning despite the interruptions of pollution control already caused by the United States Public Health Service and other Federal agencies.

Yet even with the pollution that went with New Jersey's industrial contributions to the war efforts, it might be pointed out that during the year 1944, the last year in which Bureau of Census reports on the subject are available, the death rate in New Jersey declined 3.4 percent, while the death rate in South Dakota was rising 3.1 percent. One of the most dread diseases arising from impure water is typhoid fever, yet New Jersey in 1944 had a death rate of only two-tenths per 100,000 from this cause, a figure identical with the rate in South Dakota, and it can be added that while New Jersey's rate had been consistent at that figure for the past 4 years, South Dakota's during the same period always exceeded that of New Jersey.

Another foul water disease is dysentery. The death rate in New Jersey from this cause is only one-tenth percent per 100,000, and is steadily declining. There were only six deaths from dysentery in the entire State during 1944, a period when considerable infection from this disease was being brought in by men who served overseas in infected areas.

None of the six leading causes of death in New Jersey can be attributed to diseases caused by water pollution. They are heart diseases, cancer, intracranial lesions of vascular origin, nephritis, and pneumonia, and influenza; five of them identical with the leading causes of death in South Dakota, the other, nephritis, dropping behind accidents in the West.

In New Jersey we are controlling pollution, which we admit does exist to some extent, but the State department of health, which has power under existing laws to rectify these conditions, is working diligently on the subject. There seems to be no question in the minds of Jerseymen that eventually this agency will have rectified these conditions. New Jersey has adequate laws—chapters 10, 11, and 12 of the Revised Statutes of 1937—to preclude pollution of its streams, and this measure, this infringement on our State's rights, might not only nullify but might tie the hands of our State department of health. Insofar as streams within the State of New Jersey and interstate streams bordering on the State are concerned, there is no need for Federal interference.

One of the largest streams in the State is the Passaic River, on which the port of Newark is located, and which carries a great number of oceangoing vessels. In its lower reaches, much of it in my district, it passes through an area of dense population, with hundreds of industries. This river and its tributaries have been cleared of pollution principally by means of the Passaic Valley intercepting sewerage system, operated by the Passaic Valley Sewerage Commission. This system was constructed with moneys appropriated by municipalities in that area in the amount of approximately $23,000,000. The area served by this system has a population of about 1,000,000, or about one-quarter of the population of the State.

The chief engineer of the Passaic Valley Sewage Commission, J. Ralph Van Duyne, in a recent report advised that the river was in "very excellent condition for the month of July," said to be the worst month from the standpoint of pollution. Purity of the river is gaged by the amount of dissolved oxygen in it, the engineer's report stated, and the present percentage is high, thus insuring that the river would not go bad or get smelly.

The next largest stream in importance is the Hackensack River, which has been considerably polluted. However, at the behest of the State department of health, the 1945 session of the State legislature passed an act known as "An act creating the Bergen-Hackensack sanitary sewer district, creating an authority to manage the same, and prescribing the powers and duties thereof and of other public bodies in connection with the construction and operation of sewers and sewage-disposal facilities in said district, and providing ways and means for paying the costs of construction and operation thereof." This act was approved by Gov. Walter E. Edge on May 3, 1945.

In pursuance of this act the authority has been created, and a firm of sanitary and hydraulic engineers has been retained to evolve a comprehensive plan of a sewerage system and sewage-treatment plant to collect the sewage and other polluting matter from the contributory municipalities and convey the same to a treatment plant of adequate capacity and degree of treatment. This report has been approved by the State department of health, and the engineers are now in the process of preparing the details of the design. Manifestly, the program to clean up the pollution of the Hackensack River is actively in progress.

In the Rahway River Valley, the collection and the treatment of the sewage and other polluting matter contributed by the nine municipalities above the point at which the city of Rahway derives its potable water supply from the Rahway River, is controlled by a Rahway Valley joint meeting, which is an organization composed of the nine participating municipalities. Owing to the accleration and increase in production of needed war materials, and the corresponding increase in population, the volume of the sewage and industrial wastes arriving at the sewage treatment plant increased beyond the capacity of the treatment works. At the insistence of the State department of health, the Rahway Valley joint meeting retained a hydraulic and sanitary engineer, who has prepared a report for the expansion of the treatment to care for not only the present but the future demands. This report being acceptable to the Rahway Valley joint meeting, the engineer was directed to prepare the plans and specifications for submission to, and approval by, the department. This is another accomplishment to the end of controlling pollution in the State of New Jersey, and it also is presently very active.

Dr. J. Lynn Mahaffey, director of health for the State of New Jersey, who is doing an excellent job in leading the fight against pollution in our State, says:

> The pollution control in the lower Raritan River Basin is, in my opinion, outstanding.

In this densely populated area, directly in the heart of the State, industrial activity expanded greatly during the war, new manufacturing enterprises were established and the population increased correspondingly. Yet, by reason of the New Jersey State Department of Health's enforcement of pollution laws, municipal sewage treatment plants and such industrial waste treatment plants were installed as was possible with the construction materials made available by the Federal Government. The result was that the Department held control of the pollution in status quo, thus preventing the river from becoming an open sewer. Now that materials and manpower situations show promise of relief many antipollution projects in the Raritan Valley area are again active.

The waters of the Cohansey and Maurice Rivers basin are relatively clean, by reason of the fact that the sewage and other polluting matter discharged into said waters are first subjected to a method of treatment consisting of, as a minimum, sedimentation and chlorination.

Sewage and other polluting matter in the Elizabeth River Valley is presently being collected and treated. This sewerage system serves 11 municipalities in the counties of Essex and Union. The treated effluent discharges into Arthur Kill, the waters of which are under the control of the Interstate Sanitation Commission, and it is significant to note that the treatment provided by this joint treatment plant produces an effluent not only meeting but bettering by far the requirements set forth in the Tri-State compact.

This compact was ratified by Congress in 1935, and creates the Interstate Sanitation Commission for the purpose of controlling the future and abating the existing pollution in the tidal and coastal waters of the adjacent portions of the signatory states of New York, New Jersey, and Connecticut. This commission, pursuant to the powers vested in it by the compact, has issued citations or orders to municipalities contributing to the pollution of said waters, requiring the cessation of same.

As a result, the joint outlet sewer district comprising the municipalities of Weehawken, West New York, and Union City has submitted a preliminary report describing the sewer-collecting system and treatment plant it proposes to build in order to comply with the terms of the compact. The State department of health approved the basic design factors and the joint outlet is now in the process of preparing detailed plans and specifications.

The Borough of Carteret has submitted to the State department of health for approval detailed plans and specifications for its proposed sewer-collecting system, and a preliminary report relating to the proposed sewage-treatment plant.

The municipalities of Bayonne, Hoboken, and Jersey City have retained a hydraulic and sanitary engineer to prepare plans for a comprehensive sewer-collecting and sewage-treatment works. The preliminary proposal relating to the Bayonne system has already been submitted and conferences held respecting the design factors.

The municipalities of Fort Lee, Roselle, and Linden have also retained consulting engineers for the purpose of preparing plans and specifications for a comprehensive sewerage system designed to abate the pollution of the interstate and/or intrastate waters.

There is considerable pollution of the waters of New York Harbor at present, but the above outlined steps, being undertaken by the States involved, will do much—as much if not more than could be done even if this measure were passed—to correct the situation. The conditions in the harbor now are not generally obnoxious to the sight or smell, and the Interstate Sanitation Commission has moved and is moving aggressively and effectively to purify the waters of New York Harbor and the adjacent streams within the metropolitan area.

As to the waters of the Atlantic Ocean extending from Sandy Hook to Cape May, which are constantly policed by the New Jersey Department of Health, particularly during the period of recreational activities, these waters are practically devoid of harmful pollution in spite of the fact that scores of municipalities discharge their sanitary wastes, after treatment, of course, into the ocean. The evidence proving this to be a fact is that millions of vacationists from all parts of the country and foreign lands patronize these waters, and yet there is no recent case where any bather has been affected in his health owing to bathing in these waters. As further evidence, it can be pointed out that New Jersey ranks second among the 48 States in the shellfish industry, with a $7,000,000 annual business that could not exist if there were excessive contamination and pollution.

In that portion of the Delaware River adjacent to the cities of Camden and Gloucester, N. J., and Philadelphia, Pa., the waters are grossly polluted. Realizing this fact the State department of health instituted chancery court proceedings against the cities of Gloucester and Camden, and with the assistance of the Interstate Commission on the Delaware River Basin obtained a decree commanding each municipality to cease pollution of the Delaware River. As a result, consulting engineers were retained by these communities for the preparation of a comprehensive collecting sewer system and sewage treatment plant. In the case of Camden a preliminary report relating to the proposed sewerage system has already been submitted to the department for review, conferences have been held, and the basic design factors and the method of sewage treatment have been agreed upon. This is another indication that the program of stream pollution in the State of New Jersey is actively in progress.

Respecting Philadelphia, which unquestionably exerts a pollution load on the river many times that emanating from the Jersey side, plans for a collecting-sewer system and sewage-treatment plant are reported to be practically completed. However, should it be that the New Jersey municipalities are menaced by the pollution from Philadelphia, New Jersey can have recourse to the United States Supreme Court for injunctive relief.

Manifestly, it ill-behooves the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. MUNDT] even to imply that the State of New Jersey is lax in its pollution-control activities. It is true that in some instances the abatement of stream pollution in New Jersey did not, during the war years, keep pace with the increase in volume of pollution discharged into its waters, but this was not due to any relaxation of the State department of health's requirements or its activities in respect to pollution. It was interference by the Federal Government which retarded progress. If any charges are made for the retardation of progress in the matter of stream pollution in New Jersey the responsibility for the suspension of pollution control should be placed where it belongs, that is, upon the United States Public Health Service and other Federal agencies, as has been pointed out in the brief stating the reason for the State department of health's opposition to H. R. 6024.

That the United States Public Health Service has hampered the State of New Jersey in its pollution-control campaign is shown by these examples of actual instances in which the Public Health Service fostered water contamination:

The State of New Jersey proceeded against the Deerfield Packing Corp. with a view toward causing the cessation of the pollution of the Cohansey River, the waters of which are used by the city of Bridgeton, N. J., for potable purposes. The corporation submitted plans and specifications, which the State department of health found satisfactory and in accordance with its rules, regulations, and policies, for treatment of sewage and industrial waste. The State department of health issued permits authorizing the construction and operation of such a treatment plant, but the plant was not constructed because the War Production Board, upon the advise of the United States Public Health Service, questioned the need of the project.

Another example is the case of the United States naval station in Ewing Township, N. J., which is located on the Delaware River watershed above the point from which the city of Trenton derives its potable water. The State department of health required that the station install the highest degree of treatment; sedimentation, oxidation, and chlorination, with a view to safeguarding the health of the public consumers of the potable water. The State required three degrees of treatment. The United States Public Health Service for the same case recommended:

> We feel that under a wartime criteria one of the following minimum degrees of treatment should be employed to protect against excessive pollution of the creek or the creation of nuisance conditions.

This recommendation also stated:

> A review of the available records indicates that the filtration plant is adequate to handle the existing pollution in the river.

It was thus indicated again that Federal standards of pollution control are lower than the State standards in New Jersey.

Still another instance where the Federal Government has interfered at the expense of lowering standards in New Jersey: When a housing development was completed in the Borough of Bellmawr, the State Department of Health required and issued permits to the Borough authorizing the construction and operation of a sewage treatment plant, consisting of sedimentation, oxidation, and chlorination. However, before the War Production Board could authorize the release of materials for the construction of the plant it required the recommendations of the United States Public Health Service as to the need of the project. This service reported the recommendations that a lesser degree of treatment be approved, and recommended that instead of carrying out the full construction plan of the State Board, that the outfall discharge point of the sewer merely be moved further into the creek, below the low-tide level.

State Health Director Mahaffey says:

> It is my considered opinion that no other State in the Union has been as progressive in abatement and control of stream pollution as the State of New Jersey, as a result of its aggressive enforcement of its pollution laws, which I believe are sufficiently adequate. There is nothing the Federal Government could do that is not now being done or for which there is not presently ample remedy.

It must be borne in mind that countless municipalities of New Jersey have in the aggregate spent countless millions of dollars to eliminate pollution. They have in large part been successful. They have done this by means of existing regulatory agencies and under existing laws. There is no need for this bill. It will only mean that an army of inspectors, agents, and clerks will invade the State to duplicate what is already being done. It should be defeated.

INVESTIGATION OF EXCESS PROFITS AND RENEGOTIATION OF CONTRACTS

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 3 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Speaker, I have taken cognizance of the recent declaration made before the Mead investigating committee by our former colleague, Lindsay Warren, now Comptroller General of the United States, that the American taxpayer has been imposed upon by unscrupulous and unpatriotic wartime profiteers to the extent of untold billions. He made other and startling charges which I cannot gloss over lightly because I have every confidence in the actions and opinions of Lindsay Warren. He has both feet on the ground at all times and is not given to looseness of expression. When he states that from his own experience he knows of leakages and losses due to loose practices on the part of the renegotiation authorities, then I say to you, Mr. Speaker, that the time has come when the Congress, and more particularly the Committee on Ways and Means should take cognizance and go into the question of renegotiation more thoroughly so that we may tighten up the procedure under the law and recapture all unwarranted and excess profits.

In my speech on renegotiation in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, volume 91, part 5, pages 6080–6081, I voiced my opinions affecting repricing, renegotiation, and excess profits. It was thought at the time legislation intended to skim off unwarranted profits was ample but whether it is or not, I think that it should be the first order of business of the Eightieth Congress, meeting in January 1947, to reexamine the entire problem and to authorize the Comptroller General to make a thorough audit and, wherever justified, excessive profits should be recaptured and returned to the Treasury of the United States. It is an ineffectual method which on the one hand imposes an excess profits tax while on the other hand permits a nullifying advantage to the war contractor by way of a loose Renegotiation Act. In view of the revelation made by Mr. Warren the entire question of excess profits and renegotiation requires the most careful scrutiny of the Congress at the earliest possible date.

FAREWELL TO OUR COLLEAGUES

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 5 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I join with other Members in regretting that we should be deprived of the services and fellowship of our friend from Oklahoma, JED JOHNSON, with whom I have served for over 20 years. We regret also losing that splendid and aggressive Democrat from Pennsylvania, MIKE BRADLEY, whom we all admire for his desire to be of great service to our country at all times. I congratulate his State and the Democratic Party for selecting him as their leader. I feel under his leadership the party will gain the victory that it deserves. I also regret losing our other Members with whom I have had the pleasure of serving. I regret, too, the unfortunate remarks of the gentleman from Georgia assailing organized labor. I feel that organized labor supports and helps those who support and help them. If he did not have their support, I regret that perhaps they felt he was not entitled to their support upon his record. I also regret, Mr. Speaker, that we have not been able to consider and vote on legislation that the country urged and demanded, such as the Wagner-Ellender-Taft general housing bill, the minimum wage bill, the St. Lawrence waterways bill, and several other measures that the country demanded, and which legislation I feel was entitled to favorable consideration at our hands.

Mr. Speaker, I hope we all come back, myself included and though I may say a few harsh things at times about my friends on the left, I do so because I do not possess the ability of expression that other gentlemen have, and put my thoughts into words that may not be pleasing, because I have always felt if I could not say something good about one, I should say nothing. But if I have said anything that might be offensive to anyone I ask his forgiveness. It is never my intention to hurt the feelings of any one. Of course, when I speak of the Republican Party I speak of it as a whole which I believe I am justified in criticizing, because it does not come up to expectations and does not carry out the pledges and promises that it makes to the American people before election day.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. I yield.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I appreciate very deeply the remarks of the distinguished gentleman from Illinois, the dean of the House and chairman of the Rules Committee. As chairman of that Rules Committee he has presided over the committee of which I have had the privilege to be a member, and we have had many notable meetings. I think we have put on some pretty good shows, as we say in the parlance of the day. I will say that the gentleman has fought valiantly for his party, many times successfully. Frankly, too often he has been successful in his attempt to take care of his party. But I rose, Mr. Speaker, to say to the House that my distinguished friend, the chairman of the Rules Committee, was kind enough to say to me earlier in the day, and to one or two other Members, that whenever we should happen to be in Chicago to just ask the nearest policeman where we might find the gentleman from Illinois, Congressman SABATH, and we would be welcome to his hospitality. I am sure the gentleman meant that to include every Member of this House.

Mr. SABATH. I do, and I mean it.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Of course, it is understood that the policemen will escort the visiting brethren from Congress to the gentleman's residence or club, rather than to the Chicago jail.

Mr. SABATH. Or to the office. I do not think anybody here would be entitled to be taken to jail.

I have confidence in the membership, and including even Republican Members, and should they visit my city they will not need the guidance of any law officer or policeman, because I am sure they possess sufficient resourcefulness and ability to be able to find their way around. My city and I are happy to receive distinguished visitors and we shall at all times try to make their visit a pleasant one. It is my personal hope that you will have an opportunity to visit the metropolis of the Middle West and to become better acquainted with its people.

Mr. Speaker, in conclusion, I wish the membership on both sides of the aisle well in returning to their homes and I hope all the sitting Members will come back to continue to serve our country, and that the Republicans especially will continue under the minority leadership of our distinguished colleague from Massachusetts, the Honorable JOSEPH W. MARTIN, after next January. I know the Democrats will come back again with determination to lead and to aid the administration and the party in serving the people and safeguarding their interest and the country's interest, and to further our democratic form of government.

I appreciate that the membership is aware that in my position of chairman of the Committee on Rules my task was an arduous and difficult one and that I was unable to give some of them a hearing for a rule on some measures, but I have tried to be of service and have endeavored to expedite the business of the House.

We have had extremely exacting sessions during the past 6 years in passing on legislation for defense and for war itself and you are deserving of this vacation to rejoin your families, your friends, and your neighbors, and it is my hope that you will come back with renewed determination and vigor to serve our beloved country.

Mr. Speaker, we were fortunate in having in you such a fair, kindly, and capable presiding officer who, unlike a Speaker of not so many years ago, ruled the House only with his eye to the left. Godspeed to you and the membership.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

BENEFITS TO FORMER MEMBERS OF WOMEN'S ARMY AUXILIARY CORPS

Mr. DURHAM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (S. 1560) to amend the Service Extension Act of 1941, as amended, to extend reemployment benefits to former members of the Women's Army Auxiliary Corps who entered the Women's Army Corps.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. DURHAM]?

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman from North Carolina explain the bill?

Mr. DURHAM. The gentleman will recall that when the Women's Army Auxiliary Corps was in existence it was some year and a half before we made it a permanent part of the Army and there were some 40,000 WAAC's transferred to the WAC's when it became a unit under the War Department. They are not entitled to reemployment benefits. This simply gives to them the benefits that any ordinary soldier gets under the Selective Training and Service Act.

Mr. MARTIN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. I yield.

Mr. MARTIN of Iowa. I just want to add to the comments of the gentleman from North Carolina that this bill has for its purpose an effort on the part of Congress to do justice to the loyal girls who served in the WAAC's, who continued their service under the WAC later in the war. Those girls should have the privileges and protection of the reemployment rights provided in this legislation.

Mr. DURHAM. That is correct.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, this is a good bill and I withdraw my reservation of objection.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 7 of the Service Extension Act of 1941, approved August 18, 1941 (55 Stat. 627), as amended (50 U. S. C. App., Supp. IV 357), is further amended by inserting "(a)" after "SEC. 7." and by adding at the end of such section a new subsection (b) to read as follows:

"(b) Any former member of the Women's Army Auxiliary Corps who, within 90 days after termination of her service in that corps, entered active military service by enlistment or appointment in the Women's Army Corps without having accepted a position, other than a temporary position, in the employ of any employer during such 90-day period, shall be entitled to all the reemployment benefits of section 8 of the Selective Training and Service Act of 1940, as amended, with respect to a position which she left to enter service in the Women's Army Auxiliary Corps, to the same extent that a person inducted under said act is entitled to reemployment benefits with respect to a position which he left in order to perform training and service: Provided, That, in the case of any such former member who has been discharged from or relieved from active duty in the Women's Army Corps prior to the effective date of this subsection, application for reemployment may be made at any time within 90 days after such effective date. The provisions of section 8 (b) (A) of the Selective Training and Service Act of 1940, as amended, shall be applicable to any such former member without regard to whether the position which she held shall have been covered into the classified civil service during the period of her military service or during the period of her service in the Women's Army Auxiliary Corps."

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

TRANSFER OF PAINTING FIRST FIGHT OF IRONCLADS, MONITOR AND MERRIMAC

Mr. DURHAM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 186) to provide for the transfer of the painting First Fight of Ironclads, Monitor and Merrimac, now stored in the United States Capitol Building, to the custody of the United States Naval Academy.

The Clerk read the title of the joint resolution.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. DURHAM]?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the joint resolution, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the painting First Fight of Ironclads, Monitor and Merrimac, by William Formby Halsall, now stored in the United States Capitol Building, be, and the same is hereby, transferred to the permanent custody of the United States Naval Academy. The removal and transport of this painting from the Capitol to the United States Naval Academy at Annapolis, Md., shall be effected at the expense of said Academy, and the Architect of the Capitol shall act for the Joint Committee on the Library in carrying out the provisions of this joint resolution.

The Senate joint resolution was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

RACKETEERING IN SETTLEMENT OF GOVERNMENT CONTRACTS MUST BE STOPPED

Mr. REES of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 2 minutes and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas?

There was no objection.

Mr. REES of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, a very unsavory situation has recently been called to the attention of this Congress and to the people of the country. High commissioned officers and high-ranking officials in Government who during the war period were engaged in procuring contracts on behalf of the Government and in the renegotiation and settlement of contracts for the procurement of war supplies, have after being separated from the Federal service, become engaged in prosecuting claims against the Government arising out of contracts and agreements for supplies to the Army and the Navy and other Departments of Government. Hearings recently held before congressional commitees have disclosed that this thing has become a real racket. Former military and Government officials have taken advantage of information and of connections they acquired while in Government service. It is a shame and a disgrace that such thing should be perpetrated against the people of this country. It should have been stopped long ago.

Mr. Speaker, I have introduced a bill in this House to prohibit commissioned officers of the military or naval forces of the United States, or any officer or employee of this Government, who has been engaged in the negotiation or settlement or adjustment of contracts on behalf of the Government, to solicit employment in the presentation or the prosecution of claims against the United States, for a period of at least 2 years after he is discharged or released from Government service. Violation of the act is punishable by imprisonment for 1 year or a fine of $10,000.

Mr. Speaker, I realize this legislation will not have a chance to pass during the present session, but I have submitted it so that the Congress can be placed on notice and with the intention of asking for this legislation to have immediate consideration when the Congress convenes again.

In the meantime, I am calling upon the President of the United States to use the War Powers Act granted him by Congress, to issue an Executive order forbidding any Federal employee, military or civilian, from taking part in the settlement or renegotiation of any contracts for a period of 2 years after his separation from the service.

Mr. Speaker, the great majority of Army and Government officials, as well as contractors dealing with war property, are patriotic and have tried to do the right thing. It is indeed a disgrace that a few individuals who have been in Government service, as well as a minority group who obtained contracts during the war, have taken advantage of their own Government at a crucial time in its history, by lining their pockets with millions and hundreds of millions of dollars that belong to the people of this country.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. JENSEN asked and was given permission to extend his own remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include therein a letter from the Commissioner of Reclamation and a table.

Mr. RANDOLPH asked and was given permission to extend his remarks on three subjects in the Appendix of the RECORD.

Mr. KEE (at the request of Mr. BAILEY) was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include a copy of a telegram from former Congressman Mitchell, of Illinois.

ACTING CLERK OF THE HOUSE

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following communication from the Clerk of the House:

AUGUST 2, 1946.

The honorable the SPEAKER,
House of Representatives.

SIR: Pursuant to the provisions of House Resolution 753, adopted by the House today, I have designated Mr. Harry Newlin Megill, an official in my office, to discharge the duties contemplated by said resolution.

Respectfully yours,

SOUTH TRIMBLE,
Clerk of the House of Representatives.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the President and the Senate will be notified accordingly.

There was no objection.

RECESS

The SPEAKER. The House will stand in recess subject to the call of the Chair.

Thereupon (at 4 o'clock and 19 minutes p. m.) the House stood in recess.

AFTER RECESS

The recess having expired, the House was called to order by the Speaker at 5 o'clock and 32 minutes p. m.

FURTHER MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A further message from the Senate, by Mr. Gathing, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment a concurrent resolution of the House of the following title:

H. Con. Res. 165. Concurrent resolution providing for the sine die adjournment of the second session of the Seventy-ninth Congress.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed a concurrent resolution of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

S. Con Res. 76. Joint resolution authorizing the signing of enrolled bills and joint resolutions after adjournment of the present session of Congress.

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. J. Res. 390) entitled "Joint resolution making additional appropriations for the fiscal year 1947, and for other purposes."

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the amendments of the House to the amendments of the Senate, numbered 1, 12, 13, 14, 15, 20, 22, and 24, to the foregoing joint resolution.

The message also announced that the President pro tempore of the Senate had appointed Mr. MCMAHON, Mr. RUSSELL, Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado, Mr. CONNALLY, Mr. BYRD, Mr. VANDENBERG, Mr. MILLIKIN, Mr. HICKENLOOPER, and Mr. KNOWLAND as members on the part of the Senate, of the Atomic Energy Committee created by (S. 1717) entitled "An act for the development and control of atomic energy," approved August 1, 1946.

COMMITTEE TO NOTIFY THE PRESIDENT

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Speaker, I offer a resolution (H. Res. 758) and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That a committee of two members be appointed by the House to join a similar committee appointed by the Senate, to wait upon the President of the United States and inform him that the two Houses have completed the business of the session and are ready to adjourn, unless the President has some other communication to make to them.

The resolution was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Chair appoints the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BULWINKLE] and the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER] as a committee to wait upon the President.

SIGNING ENROLLED BILLS

The Speaker laid before the House the following resolution (S. Con. Res. 76):

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That notwithstanding the adjournment of the second session of the Seventy-ninth Congress, the Speaker of the House of Representatives and the President pro tempore of the Senate be, and they are hereby, authorized to sign enrolled bills and joint resolutions duly passed by the two Houses which have been examined by the Committee on Enrolled Bills of the House of Representatives and the Secretary of the Senate and found truly enrolled.

The resolution was agreed to.

RICHARD MORFORD

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to announce that pursuant to House Resolution 752, Seventy-ninth Congress, he did, on today, August 2, 1946, certify to the United States Attorney, District of Columbia, the willful and deliberate refusal of Richard Morford to produce before the Committee on Un-American Activities for its inspection certain books, papers, and records which had been duly subpenaed.

GEORGE MARSHALL

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to announce that pursuant to House Resolution 749, Seventy-ninth Congress, he did, on today, August 2, 1946, certify to the United States Attorney, District of Columbia, the willful and deliberate refusal of George Marshall to produce before the Committee on Un-American Activities for its inspection certain books, papers, and records which had been duly subpenaed.

SENATE BILL REFERRED

A bill of the Senate of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and, under the rule, referred as follows:

S. 1250. An act for the relief of certain claimants who suffered losses and sustained damages as the result of the campaign carried out by the Federal Government for the eradication of the Mediterranean fruitfly in the State of Florida; to the Committee on Claims.

S. 1439. An act to amend section 2 of the act of January 29, 1942 (56 Stat. 21), relating to the refund of taxes illegally paid by Indian citizens; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS SIGNED

Mr. ROGERS of New York, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee had examined and found truly enrolled bills and joint resolutions of the House of the following titles, which were thereupon signed by the Speaker:

HON. SAM RAYBURN

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman from New York [Mr. HANCOCK] kindly take the chair?

Mr. HANCOCK assumed the chair.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER].

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, I offer a resolution (H. Res. 759), which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the thanks of the House are presented to the Honorable SAM RAYBURN, Speaker of the House of Representatives, for the able, impartial, and dignified manner in which he has presided over the deliberations and performed the arduous duties of the Chair during the present term of Congress.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, I am sure that this resolution speaks the sentiment of every Member of the House, regardless of political affiliations. We all realize the difficulty of dispensing exact justice under the rules of the House, especially when the Members are oftimes in such different and beligerent frames of mind. You have done your job well. You have the respect and confidence of every one of us, and the Members on this side of the aisle are in unison in wishing for you a pleasant, restful, and profitable vacation.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the resolution.

The resolution was unanimously agreed to.

The SPEAKER resumed the chair.

The SPEAKER. Members of the House of Representatives, and to you Mr. MICHENER especially, for this high tribute I offer to you the thanks of a grateful heart. There have been many times when we have had disagreements in this Chamber, but I have not known of a time in all the many years—now more than a third of a century that I have served in this body—that when the supreme test came we have not thought and acted together. There has never been a crisis in all of these years when with practical unanimity the House of Representatives has failed to demonstrate not only its patriotism but a high order of wisdom. It is going to be said that many things have been left undone that should have been done. In a few instances that is true. But many times it is better to leave undone some things than to rush and do them in too great a hurry. Always just out ahead is another session of Congress. Sometimes it does not hurt for some proposal to ripen a little while. I have said in your presence before that the House of Representatives has been my life; and next to family and friends, it has been and is my love. Everywhere and at all times I shall defend your patriotism, your love of country, and I will always say that you are as wise a group of men and women as could possibly be assembled in the United States of America. To each and every one of you I return my heartfelt thanks for your manifold kindnesses and courtesies. If it had not been for your helpfulness and your friendship and your loyalty to me personally, the duties that I have had to carry would have been even more arduous and onerous. Again, let me say, I thank you. I wish for each and everyone of you a safe return home, that your surroundings may be pleasant, and that you will find your loved ones and friends well and happy. Again, I thank you.

REPORT OF JOINT COMMITTEE TO NOTIFY PRESIDENT

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Speaker, your committee appointed to join a committee of the Senate to inform the President that the Congress is ready to adjourn, and to ask him if he has any further communications to make to the Congress, has performed that duty. The President has directed us to say that he has no further communication to make to the Congress, and he wishes to have his kindest regards expressed to the Members.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; thereupon (at 5 o'clock and 43 minutes p. m.), pursuant to House Concurrent Resolution 165, the House adjourned sine die.

DISAPPROVAL OF BILLS AFTER SINE DIE ADJOURNMENT

The message also announced that the President had vetoed the following bills of the House on the dates indicated:

SOUTHEASTERN SAND & GRAVEL CO.

H. R. 6536. I withhold my approval of the bill H. R. 6536, "For the relief of Southeastern Sand & Gravel Co."

The bill provides for the payment of the sum of $10,631.12 by the Federal Works Administrator to the Southeastern Sand & Gravel Co., or its assignee, in full satisfaction of all claims of the Southern Bitumen Co., the Southeastern Sand & Gravel Co. and Roberts Blount, arising out of the construction of an outfall sewer in the city of Anniston, Ala., under a Federal Works Agency project No. Ala. 1–160 (F).

It appears that in 1942 the Southern Bitumen Co. contracted with the United States through the Federal Works Agency to build an outfall sewer in the city of Anniston, Ala., a project which was considered essential to the war effort by reason of war activities located in that area. The Southern Bitumen Co. encountered unforeseen construction difficulties and defaulted on the contract. Roberts Blount, a guarantor on the contract, arranged for the completion of the project by the Southeastern Sand & Gravel Co. The construction was completed in 1943. The Federal Works Agency withheld $13,685 from the contract price of $267,387.59, on account of liquidated damages for delay in completion and on account of an alleged defect in workmanship resulting in water seepage into the sewer main, which defect has since proved in actual use to be of no material consequence.

By agreement dated December 30, 1944, between the Southern Bitumen Co., Roberts Blount, and the Southeastern Sand & Gravel Co., the latter company became the assignee of the Southern Bitumen Co., for all recoveries and refunds which might be due or arise in connection with the project. Thereafter, Private Law 27 (79th Cong.), approved April 16, 1945, directed the Federal Works Agency to relieve the contractor, Southern Bitumen Co., of all claims of the Federal Works Agency, amounting to $13,500 covering liquidated damages for delays due to "labor shortages, low priorities, failure to obtain rights-of-way, and exceptional inclement weather conditions." The claim was then forwarded to the Comptroller General for settlement and payment in accordance with the private law. However, certain tax indebtedness of the Southern Bitumen Co. to the United States was set off against the $13,500, leaving a net balance of only $3,053.88 which was sent to the Southern Bitumen Co. and ultimately to the Southeastern Sand & Gravel Co. as assignee under the aforementioned agreement. The purpose of the instant bill evidently is to compensate the Southeastern Sand & Gravel Co. for the difference between the liquidated damages, $13,685, originally withheld by the Federal Works Agency on the contract price, and the $3,053.88 which the Southeastern Sand & Gravel Co. received as a consequence of the private law. This difference amounts to $10,631.12, the identical sum payable under the instant bill.

It appears that the Government, by paying the $3,053.88 and erasing the tax indebtedness of the Southern Bitumen Co., has fully discharged its obligations under the construction contract. Should this bill be approved, the Government would be paying twice for a portion of what it received. While it is to be regretted that the Southeastern Sand & Gravel Co., because of the tax liability of its assignor, the Southern Bitumen Co., did not receive the full relief which Private Law 27 would have otherwise provided, there seems to be no legal or moral reason on the part of the United States to correct this misfortune. Any remedy which the Southeastern Sand & Gravel Co. may have would appear to be a matter between it and its assignor.

Accordingly, I am constrained to withhold my approval of the bill.

MARGARET DUNN

H. R. 957. I am withholding my approval of the bill, H. R. 957, Seventy-ninth Congress, "An act for the relief of Margaret Dunn."

The purpose of this bill is to grant a pension to the daughter of a Civil War veteran, in addition to a monthly pension of $20 which she has been receiving under a special act of Congress since 1929, for a period prior to that date, to which she has been found ineligible under general pension laws.

For some years enactment of special legislation to individual veterans or their dependents who are ineligible for pension under general laws has been discouraged, and Congress has undertaken to eliminate inequalities and inequities in public pension laws by amendatory legislation applicable to all persons under identical circumstances. This bill constitutes an exception to this policy. A comprehensive report on the facts by the Veterans' Administration indicates that there are no circumstances which would warrant exceptional treatment in this case.

Enactment of the measure would discriminate against numbers of persons, similarly situated who have an equal right to seek gratuitous benefits from the Government.

HARRY S. TRUMAN.

THE WHITE HOUSE, August 8, 1946.

EDWARD PITTWOOD

H. R. 1570. I withhold my approval of the bill H. R. 1570, for the relief of Edward Pittwood.

The bill would confer jurisdiction upon the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Washington to hear, determine, and render judgment on the claim of Dr. Edward Pittwood, of Spokane, Wash., to recover damages for the loss of rent, depreciation, and loss of his warehouse property in Spokane, Wash., by action of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

It appears that in 1890 Dr. Pittwood bought a lot from the land comprising the right of way of the Northern Pacific Railway Co. in Spokane, Wash. In 1907 he built a warehouse on this lot for the purpose of renting it to the public. In 1917 Dr. Pittwood remodeled his building into a modern fireproof warehouse. Dr. Pittwood claims that warehouse properties owned by the Northern Pacific Railway Co. were leased at such low rentals that he could not compete with the lessees and as a result was unable to rent his building profitably and finally lost it through judicial sale.

At one time Dr. Pittwood instituted a proceeding before the Interstate Commerce Commission to recover damages from the railway company for depreciation of the rental value of his warehouse as a result of this condition, but it was held by the Commission that because he was not a shipper he was not being discriminated against within the meaning of the statute (51 I. C. C. 535). Upon further complaint from Dr. Pittwood, the Interstate Commerce Commission made a general investigation of such warehouse leases in Spokane and rendered a decision in October 1922 declaring that it had no authority to prescribe the terms under which carriers may lease their lands to shippers. In 1924 the Commission again made investigations to ascertain if the warehouse rental conditions in Spokane would warrant legal proceedings. The Commission referred the report of its investigation to the Department of Justice on October 18, 1924, without recommendation.

As a result of this last mentioned investigation, the grand jury at Spokane returned an indictment against the Northern Pacific Railway Co., charging concessions to certain shippers in violation of section 1 of the Elkins Act. The Government also filed a civil action against the railway company seeking to enjoin the operation of the leases on the ground that the railway company was thereby committing discriminations in violation of section 3 of the Elkins Act. It was agreed that trial of the criminal case should await the outcome of the civil suit. After protracted litigation the civil action was dismissed without prejudice to the right of the Government to institute new proceedings if warranted after impending readjustment of the terms of the leases. The court held that in view of the situation as it then existed, the question of the reasonableness of the rentals was only academic. The leases were subsequently readjusted by increasing the rents in some instances and reducing them in others and the indictment against the railway company was dismissed.

Dr. Pittwood now bases his claim for relief upon the alleged failure of the Interstate Commerce Commission promptly to enforce the law. He claims that if the Government had forced the railway company to charge reasonable rentals for their warehousing properties, he could have remained in business in competition with warehousemen who were lessees of the railway company and could have saved his property. He claims losses aggregating upward of a half a million dollars.

There is no legal liability upon the part of the Government to compensate Dr. Pittwood for his losses, and there likewise appears to be no moral obligation to recognize this claim. Dr. Pittwood's losses appear to have been suffered more as the result of an improvident investment and subsequent mismanagement of his business. Assuming, without admitting, that agencies of the Government did fail immediately to terminate the condition which is alleged to have caused Dr. Pittwood's losses, when it was first called to their attention, it would create a most undesirable precedent to recognize a right of judicial review of the reasonableness of the dispatch with which a particular administrative agency acted upon a complaint received by it.

Accordingly, I am constrained to withhold my approval of the bill.

HARRY S. TRUMAN.

THE WHITE HOUSE, August 8, 1946.

NORMAN ABBOTT

H. R. 2736. I have today withheld my approval of the bill H. R. 2736 for the relief of Norman Abbott.

It is the purpose of the bill to pay the sum of $10,000 to Norman Abbott, of Baltimore, Md., in settlement of his claims against the United States by reason of personal injuries, and medical and hospital expenses incurred, and loss of earnings sustained as a result of having been struck by a Coast Guard vehicle on March 26, 1944, while standing at a street intersection in Baltimore, Md.

It appears that on the date in question a Coast Guard vehicle, operated by an enlisted man on official business, was proceeding in a westerly direction on one of the streets in Baltimore, Md., and was approaching a street intersection; that at a distance of approximately 80 feet before reaching the intersection the Coast Guard vehicle passed on the right side of a streetcar on the same street and moving in the same direction as the Coast Guard vehicle; that as the Coast Guard vehicle reached a point approximately 5 or 10 feet from the intersection the driver suddenly noticed a group of three pedestrians standing alongside the streetcar tracks, waiting for the streetcar; and that, although the driver of the vehicle applied his brakes and turned sharply to his right, the left front fender and headlight of the vehicle struck one of the pedestrians—the claimant.

As a result of the accident, the claimant, who was 31 years of age at the time, sustained a laceration about 1½ inches in length on the left of his forehead and a laceration about 3 inches in length in the left middle third of the thigh, with a third laceration about 1½ inches in diameter on his thigh, which was classified by the examining physician as an abrasion. For the period November 30, 1938, to January 9, 1942, Mr. Abbott was employed as a grocer-order filler at $21 a week. From the date of the accident until May 1945 he apparently was unemployed. Since May 1945 he has been working for his board and room at a dog farm. He was employed at a substantial wage in war work just prior to the accident. While he is married and has a 7-year-old child, apparently he and his wife are separated, his wife having returned to her mother's home to live.

Since the accident the claimant has been examined by a number of doctors, some of whom were attached to the Public Health Service, and finally by a doctor of Johns Hopkins Hospital. The earlier examinations following the accident indicated that the injuries were superficial and that within a short time he had fully recovered from the physical injuries sustained. There was an indication that he had disability of his right ankle which medical evidence attributed to an attack of infantile paralysis when the claimant was 12 years of age. It was concluded, therefore, that he was suffering more from a mental than from a physical disability. The final examination of the claimant at the Johns Hopkins Hospital resulted in the conclusion that the patient's condition was the result of several factors, namely (1) the patient's own personality as reflected in his previous difficulty in adjustment; (2) trauma incident to the accident; and (3) marital difficulties, which had been in operation before the accident, but which came to a decisive head several months later; and that it was not possible to evaluate the relative significance of these factors, insofar as his present incapacity is concerned. The claimant has incurred medical and hospital expenses in the amount of $253.90. On the basis of his earnings of $4,607.42 for the year 1943, when he was engaged in war industries, he sustained a loss of earnings from the date of the accident through May 1945 of approximately $5,493.42, but there is considerable question as to whether the physical disabilities sustained by the claimant were responsible for this wage loss.

There appears to be no question but what the accident and resulting personal injuries sustained by the claimant were not caused by negligence on his part but were caused by the negligence of the Coast Guard driver in failing to maintain a proper look-out for the pedestrians, including the claimant, who were preparing to board the streetcar.

While, therefore, the claimant is entitled to an appropriate measure of relief, the award of $10,000 proposed by the bill appears excessive.

I would be glad to give my approval to a measure which would provide relief to the claimant commensurate with the injuries and loss of earnings sustained and the expenses incurred due to this accident.

HARRY S. TRUMAN.

THE WHITE HOUSE, August 8, 1946.

EASTERN CONTRACTING CO.

H. R. 1088. I return herewith without my approval the bill H. R. 1088, for the relief of the Eastern Contracting Co.

The measure proposes to authorize and direct payment to the Eastern Contracting Co. the sum of $86,545 in full settlement of all claims against the United States for damages occasioned by reason of delays caused by the United States Government in carrying out the terms of a contract entered into by the company and the United States Government on June 8, 1934, for the construction of highway approaches to the Bourne Bridge, Cape Cod Canal, Bourne, Mass.

It appears that on October 5, 1942, the Court of Claims found against the Eastern Contracting Co. in an action for damages growing out of the delays set forth in this bill (97 Ct. Cls. 341). The court held that although the plaintiff was damaged, it had failed to furnish evidence by which such damages could be measured. Motion for a new trial was overruled.

It appears that the case was fairly tried in the Court of Claims and was decided against the claimant for failure to sustain the necessary burden of proof.

During the first session of the present Congress, I withheld my approval from legislation (H. R. 2518), to confer jurisdiction on the Court of Claims to hear, determine, and render judgment upon the claim of the Eastern Contracting Co. against the United States for damages arising under the same contract. The pending measure, H. R. 1088, now proposes to authorize and direct an appropriation in favor of the claimant. I find no reason for receding from my previous position in regard to such legislation. Accordingly, I am withholding approval of the measure.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT NATIONAL PARK

H. R. 4435. I have withheld my approval from H. R. 4435, "To establish the Theodore Roosevelt National Park; to erect a monument in memory of Theodore Roosevelt in the village of Medora, N. Dak.; and for other purposes."

The area that would be established by this bill as the Theodore Roosevelt National Park does not possess those outstanding natural features or scenic qualities that would justify its establishment as a national park and has no direct historical association with Theodore Roosevelt. Neither the Maltese Cross ranch, in which President Roosevelt had an interest, nor the Elkhorn ranch, which he owned, are embraced within the proposed park area. The Maltese Cross ranch is situated some distance south of Medora, N. Dak., while the proposed national park area is situated north of Medora. The Elkhorn ranch is situated 35 miles north of Medora, and is a considerable distance from the proposed park.

The land within the proposed national park area is now a part of the Theodore Roosevelt National Wildlife Refuge, and is best fitted for use as a wildlife protection and management area. Prior to its inclusion within the refuge, it was a part of the Roosevelt recreational demonstration area, which consisted of submarginal land acquired originally by the Resettlement Administration for recreational demonstration purposes. The area is largely of a badlands character, the formations being rounded, mostly dark red in color, and interspersed with grass-covered flats and plateaus. It is not of national park caliber.

Existing or authorized national parks contain or relate to areas that possess scenic, scientific, or historic features of outstanding national significance. The same high standards should be maintained whenever national parks are established in the future. I feel strongly, therefore, that to confer national park status upon the area described in H. R. 4435 would be an unwise departure from sound policy. If a national park is to be established in honor of Theodore Roosevelt, it should more fully measure up to the standards developed and maintained in the past for national parks.

I may add, in this connection, that the bill contains a provision with respect to the determination of the validity of the title to the lands in question, which provision I would have considered sufficiently objectionable to justify a disapproval of the measure, entirely aside from the above indicated reasons for its disapproval. I refer to the provision for the determination, by the Secretary of the Interior instead of by the Attorney General, of the validity of the land titles in question. This duty of examining the titles of lands acquired by the Government has, for more than a century, been vested in the Attorney General with respect to the vast majority of acquisitions, and I perceive no reason to change this general practice which has proven satisfactory through the years.

Accordingly, I am constrained to withhold approval from H. R. 4435.
